This is his language; it is ours. Here is a basis of union with our Church not to be elsewhere found. It is self-evident that a Civil Government, having such a "high and holy faith" in Millennial principles, that will eventually exterminate sensuality, poverty, slavery and war, can form no permanent union with any of the churches of Babylon, Christendom—churches who believe in, and have, for 1260 years, practised war—holding their prisoners as slaves—thus creating poverty, rich and poor, bond and free, male and female, Jew and Gentile, who, vociferously denouncing the brotherhood of Humanity, never agree except when baptised into, and whilst bathing in the stagnant waters of the "Social Evil:" in that they are one flesh.

"What concord hath Christ and Belial, or what fellowship hath light with darkness?" What union can there ever be between a civil Government that "believes" in the Powers of Peace—the Millennium—and fighting churches, who carry the "Bible in one hand, and Sharp's rifle in the other?"

By all means, let us have a union of Church and State. But let it be between a peace-"believing" Government on the one hand, and a peace practising Church, on the other. This will follow: The Shaker Church, "rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," will let the Civil Government, then to be composed equally of male and female officers, the executives of laws protective of person and property, without discrimination of sex, color or nationality, attend to all civil matters between one citizen and another, relating to "the life that now is," and the Shaker Church will, under the influence of Spiritualism, regulated by religious inspiration, occupy itself with the far more important affairs of "the world to come." And at the same time knowing, as none others can know, that the "price" of good, once gained, is "eternal vigilance," it will see to it (geese did once on a time save the Roman citadel), that no one of the adulterous, worldly churches, that "believe" in war, its causes, and sequences, shall ever intervene between itself and the Civil Government of these United States, which is a home for persons of all kindreds, tribes, peoples, tongues, nations, and races, with all their antagonizing theologies and diversities of Bibles.

"Let us have Peace."

SHEPHERDS.

"I am the good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine; and they shall hear my voice.

I CAN indeed testify to the truth of these words.

Christ's Spirit is "known" and felt by my hungry soul. I rejoice to find him in so many. Some time back, he was not to be found in any man or woman upon this earth. But now we are blessed with the presence of the heavenly Bride and Bridegroom.

The kind, loving Shepherds in Zion, possess the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ and Mother Ann, and are worthy of their inheritance, because they have lain down their lives just as did Jesus. They are true followers of Christ. They do not go behind, and drive their sheep, but they go before, and all the good sheep follow.

It is something of a cross to follow Christ; yet I rejoice that my lot is cast among faithful cross-bearers.

Larz Erickson, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

DOES THE WORLD MOVE?

As a whole or a part, is humanity moving on an up-grade?

Much depends on the standpoint from which the view is taken. Go down into turmoils—the scrambles for place and for pelf—go down into the condemned little difficulty yclept "the social evil"—stay there long enough to get your percepts obfuscated—and should you be asked, Does the world move? you might say, as did Ezekiel when asked, "Can these dry bones live?" "O Lord, Thou knowest."

But here let us quit these regions and go up—higher up—up to the highest parts of the earth—the parts that come nearest to the heavens—nearest to angels and God. Now cast about, and what do we see?

We see some splendid specimens of the race Homo—intellectual, political and moral. Compared with the 'homos' of former periods, these specimens we see now are almost divine.

Herein lies the grand secret of the differences, to wit: In olden time 'homos' got up gods in their own likeness; now, these 'homos' get themselves up in the likeness of God. This makes a difference, we see.

What though these approved editions are not yet the many? we must confess they are not. They are the few. But they are prophecies of the future many—the poetic few.

Now just look ahead a few centuries. What do you see?

We see this planet peopled with the likeness of God as the waters cover the sea; this is what we see.

O. P.

THE Duke of Somerset in his "Christian Theology and Modern Skepticism," thinks that the gender of words has a great deal to do with our religious beliefs. He insinuates that if the word for spirit, which is feminine in Hebrew, had not become changed to masculine in the Latin, one or more of the Trinity would be of a different sex.

KNOWLEDGE VS. RELIGION.

Religion is the salvation or the curse of mankind. What is religion, but the inpouring or outpouring of the soul—action, motion? All the actions of a man or woman is his or her religion. Every action that brings happiness—heaven—is true religion; while every act that results in unhappiness—hell—is false religion. There may be as many degrees of heaven and hell, as there are of heat and cold.

Knowledge is the saving or Christ principle, which deters human beings from doing what ignorance would leave them to do, wrong. The great cross of to-day, for mankind, is work; to work for their bread, and to work for knowledge that will bring lasting happiness. Men work for knowledge to get money, to obtain land, to secure the notice of other persons, and to be honored one of another; to become politicians, lawyers, doctors, preachers—any thing that is popular with mankind.

But to seek and work for that combination of physical, moral, intellectual and spiritual truth, which would result in human happiness—heaven—is a cross that not many can bear. So few are willing to find heaven here upon earth, that they seek not for it; but look away into the future, to some great place above.

Friends, heaven is no particular place, but a condition as attainable on earth as in any other place, or sphere, or world. Reason and experience teach me that the only way to heaven is right living; and that the knowledge and practice of right living is religion.

RESPONSIBILITY.

EACH Contributor is accountable for his or her own sentiments or ideas. It is the duty of Editors, being responsible to Authors, to prepare matter for the press. Writers should be "A little deaf, a little blind,

If happiness they'd surely find."

Or, otherwise, write only what has been well thought out. Better write two or three short articles, than one too long.

It is no more advisable to "catch the hare before you cook it," than it is to have something to say before you say it. Yet, as the only way to prepare a population for a republic, is to establish one; as there are no means by which a child can learn to talk, except prattling; and as only those who go often into the water, at the risk of going under, become good swimmers, so it is with composing—putting ideas into words. Therefore write, that you may learn to write; first being certain that already you do not know how.

All Contributors, whatever become of their contributions, have our CORDIAL THANKS. Each one is expected to do better next time.

We quote, or copy, for information.

And never indorse by implication.

No one who has honestly endeavored to express his thoughts in prose, and failed, should be censured too severely for resorting to poetry.

DUAL.—The latest originality in the way of newspaper titles is found, of all places in the world, among the Shakers of New Lebanon. For two years they have issued a journal called The Shaker, which was the organ of their sect throughout the country. Lately, however, they have recognized the Woman's Rights doctrine, by terining their paper The "Shaker and Shakeress." This is certainly a striking, if not a euphonious title.—Buffalo Express.

INFIDELS.

"THE new infidels have nothing whatever in common with Voltaire or Paine, probably do not sympathize at all with either the spirit of their writings or the separate opinions they advocated. They are not controversialists any more; they are not theologians. They make no war on particular dogmas—such as Trinity, atonement, depravity, perdition, literal inspirations. Those of them who profess hostility to Christianity, do it on grounds that neither Paine nor Voltaire would have comprehended—that even Parker did not occupy. Those who profess themselves Christians, do so for reasons peculiarly their own; they decline to receive Christianity as a doctrinal system, and but partially accept it as an ethical system. They regard it rather in the light of a symbolical illustration of their own moral sentiments, of sentimental value purely, or as the natural and legitimate development of one line of history. The rest classify Christianity among the great religions of the race, give it its place in history, appreciate what it has done, commend it for what it is doing, but seek elsewhere for their guidance and authority."

"Between 'French Infidelity,' therefore, and American Rationalism, there are worlds of difference. They scarcely touch each other at any point. In spirit, method, aim, principle, conclusion, they are essentially unlike. They start from a different goal, proceed along a different track, issue at a different point. The atheist does not copy Diderot; the materialist turns his back on Helvetius; the deist forsakes the ways of Thomas Paine; even the mocker has a fashion of his own, quite unlike Voltaire's. There is no excuse for naming them in the same breath but partisan bitterness; and whether or not that can be accepted as an excuse, we leave our readers to judge."

TWELVE REASONS WHY NO RATIONAL BEING SHOULD USE TOBACCO.

1. THE habit is at war with temperance. Tobacco is an intoxicant. It is a part of the merchandise of dram-shops and an incentive to drunkenness. The toper, rebuked by a professed teetotaler, with a quid or a cigar in his mouth, might pertinently respond: "Physician heal thyself."

2. The habit is a self-indulgence in flagrant conflict with the self-denying spirit of the Divine Founder of Christianity. It numbers among its slaves more than 150 millions of human beings. It hinders moral reform, and it impedes progress.

3. The habit is essentially filthy, and "cleanliness," says the proverb, "is next to godliness." Ladies of refinement involuntarily shrink from the man who chews, or snuffs, or smokes, unless custom has rendered them indifferent to these vile practices.

4. The lips of a tobacco chewer, or habitual smoker, are swelled and saturated with a disgusting poison, the gums are spongy and tender, and the whole mouth and throat affected by its use.

5. The habit of using tobacco is inconsistent with the character of a Christian gentleman. "St. Paul," Bishop Hooker tells us, "was emphatically a gentleman." Would he have poisoned the air with sickening smoke, or deluged the floor with liquid filthiness? Never!

6. The habit injures the voice. The smoker articulates huskily. The chewer often croaks. The snuffer speaks through his nose.

7. The habit is costly. Official statistics show that more money was spent for tobacco in the United States during 1871 than for bread—the staff of life. $350,000,000 for tobacco in its various forms. $200,000,000 for flour within the year!

8. The habit often lowers the self-respect of those who practice it. "I love my pipe," said a clergyman, "but I despise myself for using it."

9. The habit disturbs the regular pulsation of the heart. Tobacco users are thus in constant danger. Many fall dead suddenly.

10. The habit weakens the mind. It enfeebls the memory, paralyzes the will, produces morbid irritability, diseases the imagination, deadens the moral sensibilities, and is, therefore, an "assault and battery" on the nervous system, the intellect and the soul.

11. The habit is a rebellion against Conscience. Those who indulge in it know that it wastes time, money, strength, and life, and tramples on the laws of Nature, which are the laws of God. Hence it is a sin.

12. The habit is as contagious as the cholera. Every mature smoker or chewer infects dozens of youths with a desire to follow his pernicious example. Thus the evil spreads.

Bondsmen of "tobacco," break your chains! After a month of abstinence you will not care for the poison, and within a year after your self-emanicipation, you will loathe it. It is God's command that you do yourself no willful harm. For this reason, added to those already placed before you, give up the use of tobacco forthwith and forever.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

PROPHETS.

MODERN prophets have read and re-read the predictions of the ancient Seers, and inhaled the breath of inspirational life from them; and have so much admired the high-toned eloquence and purity of thought and language flowing through them, that they have bowed and done them reverence. Many, while perusing the touching Bible story of Abraham, when he journeyed with his beloved son Isaac from Beersheba to mount Moriah, have honored him for his firmness of purpose in yielding obedience to the call of God to him, and have admiringly followed him at a distance, and beheld his courage and faith, when he set his face toward the land to which his God was about to lead him. Slowly, but firmly, step by step, he ascended the mount, ready to sacrifice his dearest loved one on earth, to evidence the greater love that he felt to his God, whom he professed to serve. But how many, in our own time, possess faith enough to sacrifice their Isaacs, when called to do so?

Ah! says one, "We have fallen upon different times! Our God is tender and compassionate! He saw Abraham's faith and felt his sore trial and grief, while proving his integrity to principle." And God said "I will make a great sacrifice once for all!" And He sent his only Son into our world as a ransom for the race of man, and thus released us from the performance of such painful duties. Now, all that remains for us to do is to believe on his Son, and rely upon his atoning blood that was shed on Calvary, and chant requiems of praise to him, and all will be well; for he loves us so well, he will wink at all our transgressions, and cancel all our debts for us. Our earth-life is short, and we purpose getting all the pleasure out of it that we possibly can, and trust to his merits for the future."

Many have revered the character of the Leader and Deliverer of ancient Israel, as they have traced the history of his travels through the wilderness, and his patient endurance and perseverance with that murmuring and oftentimes rebellious people. He was possessed of human frailties as well as they; and was a partaker of all the trials and temptations to which they were subject, which he resisted, and encouraged his people to do the same; and he became a practical law-giver by carrying the principles and laws, which he enunciated, into effect in his own life.

There is grandeur and beauty in the account of his approach to mount Sinai with the seventy elders, who were commanded to worship afar off, while Moses, alone, was allowed to draw near; how, in vision, they saw the God of Israel, whose feet were placed upon sapphire stone like unto the body of heaven in clearness; and the communings of the Spirit with Moses on the Mount, the burning bush; the voice of the trumpet; the thunderings and lightnings, and the cloud which rested there.

But we would ask: Have those signal manifestations of power any particular bearing upon the people of this generation? Have we nothing to do but to read, wonder, and admire? Or, were the dealings of the God of the Jews with the people, at that time, written and preserved for the admonition and benefit of succeeding generations? How much easier it is to think well of covenants that were made with our fathers, a long time ago, than it is for us to make new covenants, which require new sacrifices. The code of laws given through Moses, still possess great power; and there is a spirit at work, seeking to infuse new life into them, that they may take practical effect in a physical and moral point of view upon the habits and lives of the people of our own time. The Mosaic Dispensation is the basis upon which the Christian Dispensation must rest. If we destroy the one, and render it ineffectual, we shall do the same by the other.

And, when we acknowledge God's power in ages past, and profess to believe in the fulfillment of prophecy in the future, yet are unwilling that those prophecies should be fulfilled in our time, and take effect in us, because of some sacrifice that we must make, and a cross that would follow as a sequence, then we give evidence of the want of living practical faith and true honesty of purpose. God will not be mocked with vain and empty professions. If we cry "Lord! Lord!" we must have corresponding works, or He will not know us in the covenant of redemption. He will own and honor only those who, through a spirit of unselfish devotion, honor Him.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Sister Capen: How do you and yours prosper, and how in particular does your soul prosper? For I do not believe you are one who ever can become so absorbed in worldly cares as to forget its interests; although, like all human beings, you may mistake in the manner of protecting and advancing those interests.

You and I were well acquainted in time past, as you may remember, holding in common much experience and many opinions; but it is a long time since we met. You thought at that time (if I mistake not), that you, by a transient visit, knew some little about Shakers, sufficient to justify you in rejecting their principles and practices.

Since I became acquainted with both the one and the other, I have not ceased to be astonished that so many good, honest, piously-disposed people, as far as I can see or know, decide about and pass over this important question: "What can this people mean by their profession and practice?" On my first and last visit to Dorchester, my old and much-loved home, I called upon a sister occupying a prominent position in the Church, expressing to her the delight I felt in finding a people who were really Christians. She said, "Oh, wait, sister, till you have lived with them a while; you will not stay long after you really find them out." Well, I have tried it twenty-five years, and have failed to find any thing of what she darkly hinted. Do you remember what you once thought of a married life, as to its effect upon the spiritual life, and the text you gave me, when I urged you to take care of Brother Capen's children? You told me very truly and wisely, that Paul said, a married woman would care for the things of the world, how she might please her husband, but the unmarried was free to care how she might please the Lord, and keep herself holy in body and spirit. You also reminded me how women, we had both known and honored, had counted themselves as having fallen from their high state of holiness, when they entered on a married life, or at least as maintaining their profession with increased trial and uncertainty. Yet, with all this, how slow have I and others been to discern the truth. It would ill become me, who have been in darkness so dense, to fault my friends because they may be slow to see light; for notwithstanding my zeal and earnestness in those days, looking back upon them it is plainly to be seen, that, in spiritual things, I did not know my right hand from my left; and can only be thankful that I had as little influence and did so little evil.

Whatever may be thought by those who count themselves good and wise, it will be seen in the end, to be a great attainment to really know the flesh from the spirit, and to which we are really giving in our adhesion; for the word is, if we sow to the spirit we shall reap life eternal: but, if we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption. If, instead of crucifying, we will persist in cultivating, the crop will be abundant and sure; for, whatever man may be, God is not mocked or deceived. You, my dear sister, may think it passing strange that I should name this plain scripture to one who has quoted it so often in public and in private, as I have heard you. Still you are aware that it is the experience of yourself and others, that we may read and quote Scripture and imagine ourselves familiar with its meaning. Yet, after awhile, the heavens may open and a ray of light fall upon the subject in question, giving it a significance and importance not seen before.

What, let me ask, in all humility, are the affections of the flesh, if not those originated and fostered by its ties? And how came we to be so blind as not to see it? I think no soul can understand this matter until they clearly know that the light and call of the Gospel concerns the body as well as the soul, the former called to be a fit temple for an indwelling holy spirit. This (it seems to me) must be something very different and opposed to the uses to which the flesh consigns it, i. e. a prey to the lusts of men, I grant you, in many cases, a willing prey. Justice requires that we admit this truth, but does this fact lessen the degradation? Surely not! On the contrary, it has been maintained, by wise men and thinking women, that the darkest feature of slavery was that it rendered some of its victims willing to remain slaves!

There, sister dear, I have written what was in my mind, and prayerfully hope it may do no harm. It is a blow aimed at the root of all sin; and, in this day of the world's history, it seems not best to spend much time or strength lopping branches, if one has any hope of reaching the root.

A more pleasant subject upon which to write might be found: could there be a more important one? The loss and consequent misery of humanity is a sad subject, but it looks to me that, if tongue and pen be consecrated to the highest use of this hideously-fallen world, delicacy and modesty, which have been so long and persistently ignored in the commission of sin, must of necessity be laid a little on one side, while we grapple with the deadly monster. If the veil cast over the face of all nations is ever effectually rent, every son and daughter of the second Adam should feel like contributing their mite dismissing forever overweening delicacy and worldly mock-modesty.

Nancy Fairbanks. Harvard, Mass.

Now that woman begins to protest, she will not be so much oppressed as heretofore by her stronger half.

MEDITATION.

—o—

DAVID said, "the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding." Many benefits are derived from serious and candid meditation, and much is lost for the want of it. Those who, without due reflection, eagerly rush forward in pursuit of pleasure are often surrounded by difficulties and dangers from which they cannot extricate themselves. Bitter regrets and remorse of conscience have fallen to the lot of those who have yielded to the impulse of evil passions instead of giving place to calm deliberation upon cause and effect. A proper use of the reflective powers of mind would prevent atrocious crimes, would stay the murderous hand, restrain the fraudulent heart, and lead to works of virtue and love, which would not only give individual happiness but would be a blessing to others. How often we see the young and inexperienced, who are self-reliant, move on in their own will, regardless of the counsel of parents and the cautions of their dearest friends, until they plunge themselves into irretrievable ruin, bringing guilt and shame upon themselves and blighting the fond hopes of their best friends.

O that all would learn to heed the voice of conscience, and reflect and consider wisely, and let the monitor within warn them of danger, and assist them to examine the motives which prompt to action! In thus doing, integrity might be maintained, unblemished morals preserved, and direful effects averted.

There is peace and serenity in calm meditation. In the hour of reflection and contemplation, we enlarge our conceptions of the Creator of the universe, and of the laws which govern the creation. Those who are thus exercised can say, as did one anciently, "O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." The beauty and harmony of God's works unfold to the view as we study his laws, from which we learn the practical duties of the present life, and how to prepare for that life which is eternal. Hallowed and blest is the hour of meditation! Our hearts would expand, and our conceptions of the Divine would be enlarged, were we to frequently consider his unbounded beneficence in giving to mortals a rational, understanding mind, capable of infinite expansion and reflecting the likeness of our Eternal Parents.

Elizabeth Sears, Mt. Lebanon.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.

—o—

INSPIRATION from the higher spheres should be ever welcome to our hearts, whether pertaining to the work of the present time or to the greater glory of the advancing Millennial Day. In this way, how often do we feel the Spirit witnessing with our spirits that the promises of God are sure, and that to the increase of his work there will be no end. He hath purposed to have a people on the earth who will do his will, and live in obedience to, and in harmony with, the original laws of their own being, and keep pace with increasing light, and who will from principle perform every duty.

Prophets in all ages, when under the guidance of true inspiration, have pointed to such a people and work. How earnestly did the prophet Isaiah testify of a coming people, who should be washed from all filth and be purged by the spirit of judgment, and be refined by the spirit of burning, until all that remained in Jerusalem should be called holy, and have their names written among the living. And, for her glory and defense, the cloud should overshadow and form a covert by day from the heat and storm, and the fiery pillar should be her defense by night; and a tabernacle should be formed, whereunto those who were weary of the conflicts of life, and (through prolonged struggle) had battled against error, could flee for safety and find rest.

Why should we fear to meet the shaking work promised through the same Prophet, and flee to the craggy rocks for a hiding place? The strongholds of sin are destined to be shaken, and Babylon must fall! Her walls will crumble; the elements are already at work, and the process of disintegration is going on. And, as human efforts cannot thwart the purposes of God, would it not be wiser and better to co-operate with the Divine will, and bless the agencies sent to pull down the false, and to establish the true; and thus help to hasten the time when science and religion will walk hand in hand, that order may be established in the world of mind and matter, and that pure and undefiled religion, which will mold the character, and fit the soul for the society of redeemed spirits in regions supernatural, may triumph over all?

Jane D. Knight, Mt. Lebanon.

FRUGALITY.

—o—

How infinitely wise and bountiful, is the great Creator of the world; yet in all his bounty He allows no waste. Of the four elements earth, air, fire, and water, of which the world is composed, there is nothing wasted. Man may make use of these elements, but he cannot destroy them. The decomposition of matter in the vegetable kingdom is a preparation for giving life to another growth. The majestic trees of the forest derive strength and vitality from their own foliage, and in all the works of Nature we see this important truth verified, that nothing is lost. Jesus when on earth went about distributing blessings. His example of feeding the five thousand with five loaves and two fishes, and when the meal was passed, of commanding them to "gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost;" is one worthy of imitation and attention.

Mother Ann was remarkable, both in principle and practice, in regard to prudence and economy. She was frequently known to wait until others had finished their meal, then go to the table and make her repast of the fragments, and say, "It is good enough for me; it is the blessing of God, and must not be lost!" Her counsel to her children was, "You must be prudent and saving of every good thing." Let us follow her beautiful example of frugality, and gather up the fragments.

For this was the pattern which Jesus did set, and his good example we should not forget. The practical Believer in Christ will heed the counsel of the Apostle, who said, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." A modern poet says:

"We find of those bounties which Heaven does give,
That some live to eat, and some eat to live;
That some think of nothing but pleasing the taste,
And care very little how much they may waste."

VIRGINITY.

—o—

WE hail the "Shaker and Shakeress," as a Life Boat to the shipwrecked mariner, giving to every honest passenger a safe passport to a higher and still higher sphere. I beg a seat in some corner, for I am a life passenger, bound heavenward. May'st thou plough on and o'er the surging billows of darkness, bigotry, and superstition, until thou hast reached a haven in the great universal heart of humanity.

I realize that I am enjoying the great privilege of being one of the Latter-Day virgins, and am called to form a true Christian character, to live pure, as do the angels in heaven. In sincerity of heart, I pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Virginity, Honesty, Chastity, and disinterested Benevolence, are the great and good principles which rule in that kingdom, and they whose characters are conformed to those principles, will possess it.

Virgin Purity is the first principle upon which the Christian or Shaker Church is based; but it is not gained, nor maintained, without heart-struggles and soul-sufferings.

The natural man is groveling and selfish. His tendency, without spirituality and the cross, is downward; but, in a true virgin state, he is continually reaching forward, looking upward, aiming higher.

To great heroes and conquerors of nations, what a shocking disappointment, when, by self-examination, they learn the important truth, that "the least in the kingdom of heaven," who govern themselves, are greater than they.

Though the greatest of sages and heroes of fame, Have left on record an immortalized name, Yet the greatest achievement that mortals can gain, Is over themselves in victory to reign. And such of all nations, from beggars to kings, The Lord hath decreed shall inherit all things.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Also, 'the pure in heart, for they shall see God.'" Those who are truly meek, and form the pure virgin character, realize the truth of those beautiful promises. Such are able to see the source from "whence come wars and fightings;" that those who are "pure" will be "peaceable."

The only way to become true subjects of the kingdom of heaven is by an honest confession of all sin, accompanied with repentance; and to crucify the sensual nature, in thought, word, and deed, by denying every animal appetite. By thus doing, the soul is clothed in vestal robes, and the Christian, virgin character is formed, whose love is pure, unselfish and never-failing!

O, I will prize my glorious call,
For life eternal give up all,
Make straight my path in purity,
For truth alone can make me free.
If I possess superior love,
'Twill elevate me far above
The vain and transient ties of earth,
Where I can find the second birth.

But, where is one of common sense
Who would, but for a recompense
Of life eternal, peace and joy,
Their carnal life and loves destroy?
No others can; 'tis those alone
Who make the cross of Christ their own,
Who daily in his footsteps move;
Such reap the fruits of virgin love.

—o—

"And the earth helped the woman."

Triumphant at last, O, frail portion of man,
Herald thy vict'ry through God's holy plan;
Earth shall assist thee; thy virtue shall reign;
Stand by man's side and its power maintain,
Hearest thou not the wise Prophet declare,
Arise, Virgin Daughter, thy garments prepare!
Kings shall adore thee, thou heavenly Bride:
Emblem of Purity, stand by his side.
Riches and honor, with blessings unseen,
Emanate from thee, thou glorious Queen.
Sound it aloud, — "Now salvation hath come!"
Seek it through Father and Mother as One.

Although seasons vanish, flowers perish,
Luminaries disappear,
Other flowers will bloom as fragrant,
Other lights will shine as clear.

And those past and present seasons
Tell of others yet to come,
Bringing with them untold blessings,
Far surpassing those now flown.

Time is passing; but Progression
Moves along with lightning speed:
Though great nations live, and have lived,
Others yet will those exceed.

Yea, the long sought-for Millennium,
Though its star we dimly see,
Soon o'er earth will spread its mantle
"As the waters do the sea."

May we leave to our successors
Foot-prints on the shores of time,
Of good deeds and noble actions:
Be their mission more sublime.

THE FAMILY RELATION.

—o—

It has always been surprising to me that Bible Christians—those who profess to take the Bible for their rule of life and practice, should be so tenacious of minor points, while this subject—the Family Relation—on which so much of their own happiness, and that of their posterity depend, is treated with such neglect.

When a child is born into this world, it comes under the law of its parents. The first commandment given to the child is, "Honor thy father and mother"—"Children obey your parents." The law of the parents is binding on the child while it is a minor. If the parents are law-abiding, and bring up their children in the fear of God, if they provoke them not, if they forbear threatening, and set a godly example, then they may with confidence look for a blessing to crown their efforts.

When children arrive at maturity, they come under another law, which frees them from the law of their parents. By mutual agreement, they take the relation of husband and wife. Now the man is to "forsake father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." In the book of Malachi, the question is asked and answered, "Wherefore one? That he (God) might seek a godly seed." If none had children but those who produce "a godly seed," surely there would not be so many more mouths than bread to fill them.

The race has become wonderfully degenerate; and, as the curse comes not causeless, would it not be well to seek for the cause, and if possible find the remedy? Are men and women living according to either Law or Gospel, in their family relations? If not, will they not be held accountable? Suppose you, that there was a requirement made which it was of no consequence whether it be complied with or not? Let us see what the requirement is. (I am speaking to those who acknowledge Bible authority). St. Paul said, "Wives submit yourselves to your own husbands, as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the Church. Therefore, as the Church is subject to Christ, so let wives be to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands love your wives even as Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it." The Apostle, after stating what Christ has done for the Church, and for what purpose, goes on to say, "So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies; and let their wives see that they reverence their husbands." And St. Peter tells them "not to let their adorning be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing gold and putting on of apparel, but let it be the hidden man (woman) of the heart, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Likewise ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge [according to science—scientifically], giving honor unto the wife as unto the weaker vessel, and being heirs together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not hindered." References could be multiplied to a much greater extent, but these may suffice, to show the vast difference that exists between the Bible requirements, and the practice of those who profess to be governed by Christian principles.

The above are some of the requirements by which people should be governed in the natural or generative order; and were these precepts religiously observed by both parties, we should soon see a very different state of things. Divorces would be less frequent. And if the results of divorcement, as stated by one superior to Moses, were observed, there would be but few who would be willing to marry her who had been put away: "I say unto you, whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery. And whoso marrieth her that is put away, doth commit adultery."

But there is a holier state than that of matrimony; for even those who were said to be "holy women of old," when in the works of generation, had to bring their sin offering after being excluded from the congregation for a prescribed length of time; thus showing the need of regeneration and obedience to a higher and holier law. But so long as the wife's desire [lust] is to her husband, so long will he rule over her; for this is the marriage covenant, and is and will be binding so long as she remains on that plane.

The "law of Christ makes us free from the law of sin and death." There was a "new covenant" spoken, which was to supplant "that which was old and ready to vanish away." It was said of Christ's second appearing, "that to those who look for him, he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation." In that day, they who were not able to bear a full cross were tolerated; but the Apostle said that he "could not speak to them as spiritual, but as carnal." And he told them that the time was short when this indulgence could be allowed. "It remaineth that both they that have wives be as though they had none. I would," says he, "have you without carefultness. He that is married careth for the things of the world, how he may please his wife. He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord. There is a difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit. But she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband."

Now, those who have lived up to the requirements given to those in the natural order, have had a discipline which will be of great benefit to them when they advance to the higher (or spiritual order), or to the work of regeneration, where it is required to give up all, and make an entire consecration, according to the words of Jesus Christ, when he said, "Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." On one occasion, the disciples said to him: "We have left all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?" He replied that they who had followed him in the regeneration, should have "a hundred fold more in this world; and, in the world to come, eternal life."

Under the first law the man was to "forsake father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and they twain were to be one flesh," with the injunction, that "what God had joined together let not man put asunder." Let us consider how they were joined together. They mutually agreed to live together as man and wife, and were pronounced such by the officiating party.

Now, have they not the same right to agree to live no longer as husband and wife, but as brother and sister, that they may rise to a higher plane, and, by the cross and self-denial, devote themselves to the cause of God and humanity? Where is the "putting away?" By the first agreement they became one flesh, by the second, one spirit, by being joined to the Lord. When we have consecrated our substance, time, and talents, to the cause of God, and the salvation of our own and other souls, then can we with confidence pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven;" for then our prayers and efforts will correspond, showing that we pray in faith.

WASTE BASKET.

—o—

I AM pleased to learn through the "Shaker and Shakeress" that there is a waste basket ready to receive contributions, and I am encouraged to make an offering therefor, lest it may not be well filled. Were I able, I would gladly aid the little sheet on its mission, for I feel a deep interest in it. It is always welcome as it makes its monthly visits to our mountain home, so richly laden with treasures of wisdom, and good, wholesome truths, so essential to the life and growth of all true Believers.

It has come to us as a bright-winged Angel of Peace, and the mature thoughts and new ideas, fresh from spirit spheres, which have found expression through its columns, have given strength, hope, and comfort to many weary but patient travelers up progression's steep ascent.

And, when I reflect that the "Shaker and Shakeress," on its errand of love, is visiting so many towns and hamlets, and is read by thousands of people, not only in our own country, but also in foreign lands, I regard it as the most important missionary enterprise ever engaged in by Believers, and one that all should feel an interest in sustaining by every means within their power. If, by self-sacrifice and individual effort, we can advance the cause, and aid in the great work of human redemption from the thralldom of sin, and from the blinding and deafening influences of anti-christian errors upon the spiritual senses of the unenlightened, how thankful we should be to give our best efforts in this direction. We may plead inability; but shall we, dear Shaker friends, take our ease, and act the sluggard's part, and cast all the responsibility upon others, who are already struggling and toiling to the extent of their powers? Nay, let us all work together for the upbuilding of the Gospel of Christ, which breathes peace and good will to the sons and daughters of earth. By so doing, we shall manifest our love to God and to humanity, and an appreciation of the noble efforts which many have made, and are still making, to carry forward the work of soul elevation.

Rhoda R. Hollister, Mt. Lebanon.

"SHAKERESS."

—o—

To the "Shakeress," we send Sisterly greetings, acknowledging your important and glorious mission. We hail the new Captain of the "Shaker." It fits admirably. Now the "daughters of Zion have come forth, clothed in needle work, finely wrought with gold;" and, in those spotless garments of purity, are, by their most glorious "Queen," presented to the King.

"The Lord will create a new thing in the earth; a woman shall compass a man." Glorious era! What a theme for reflection! What a realm of light is revealed for exploration! Millions have sought thee in prayer and anguish of soul, but were not thus favored in time. May the blessed "Shakeress" prosper and be true to her most needful duty, which is to seek out her poor fallen sisterhood, and bind up their many wounds, and, upon their sensitive, emotional spirits, pour the balm of hope and consolation, to dry up those numberless unseen tears that are dripping, dripping away the physical lives, and impairing the spiritual growth of their souls. Up, then, thou favored of the Lord, there is work to be done. The stroug must bear the infirmities of the weak, and Heaven requires all your talents. "Where there is no vision the people perish." Virgin daughter, tune the inspirational harp of Purity. May the cords thereof be touched, and the new song of the "hundred and forty and four thousand" be re-echoed from pole to pole. And may the portals of Heaven never more be closed to mortals, or hidden from their comprehension.

FAITH is not merely belief, but it is the confidence derived from love to the Lord. The devils believe, but they have not faith, because they love not the Lord; they are not willing to intrust all to him. There can be no faith without love or charity; and the effort to get into a religious life by trying to believe that God will save us by so-called grace or the atonement of Christ, is not the right way. Learn first to love God, which is to love that which is good, and then you can trust Him, which trust is faith.

KEROSENE.

—o—

Danger from fire.

Never fill a burning lamp.

Fill lamps by daylight.

If obliged to fill at night, have the light a yard off and not in a current of air.

Never pour oil on the fire.

If burning oil gets upon the floor, smother with blanket, rug, or clothing.

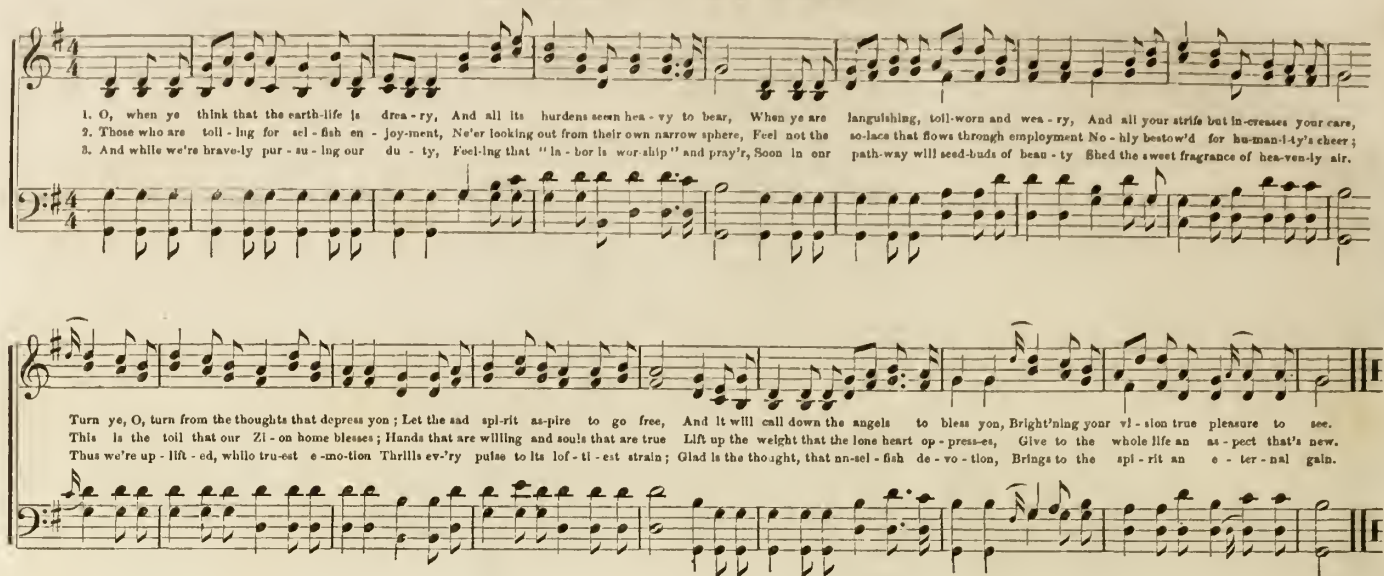

If the clothing takes fire, wrap a blanket or rug about the person, or roll upon the floor.

Never run about, or scream more than once; for motion fans the flames, and in screaming they may enter the lungs.

Keep the can closed and in a safe place.

All kerosene oils (including naphtha, benzine, benzoline, etc.), are highly combustible; as a rule, the high priced oils are less explosive than the cheaper ones; better pay a few cents more a gallon, and buy of respectable dealers, than run the risk of losing life and property.

A CALL TO THE WEARY.

1. O, when ye think that the earth-life is dreary, And all its burdens seem heavy to bear, When ye are languishing, toll-worn and weary, And all your strife but increases your care,
 2. Those who are toll-ing for selfish enjoyment, Ne'er looking out from their own narrow sphere, Feel not the so-lace that flows through employment No-hily bestowed for human life's cheer;
 3. And while we're bravely pursuing our duty, Feeling that "labour is worship" and pray'r, Soon in our path-way will seed-buds of beauty Shed the sweet fragrance of heavenly air.

Turn ye, O, turn from the thoughts that depress you; Let the sad spirit aspire to go free, And it will call down the angels to bless you, Bright'ning your vision true pleasure to see.
 This is the toll that our Zion home blesses; Hands that are willing and souls that are true Lift up the weight that the lone heart oppresses, Give to the whole life an aspect that's new.
 Thus we're uplifted, while true emotion Thrills every pulse to its loftiest strain; Glad is the thought, that unselfish devotion, Brings to the spirit an eternal gain.

TELL ME WHERE.

MANY times while attending the funerals of our dear departed friends have I been impressed with the thoughts, Where is the heaven that the spirit enters when death has claimed its mortal part? Where is the spirit's abode? From which the following lines were suggested to my mind:

Vale of shadows, soon I leave thee;
 Pleasures false and treasures fair,
 Lose their power to deceive me;
 I am going! going where?
 Who, O who, can solve the question?
 When we see the curtain fall,
 Then we know the soul's departing;
 But we do not know it all.
 Earthly hopes and prospects waning,
 Things divine grow bright and fair;
 Days but few to me remaining,
 I am going; tell me where.
 Sorrow views a far-off heaven,
 Joy beholds it near at hand,
 Rapture gives the soul a foretaste
 Of the blessing in that land,
 Fair Elysium, who can find thee,
 Where located, high or low?
 They who say The Lord design'd thee,
 Have not told us where to go.
 Poets sing of glorious heavens,
 Myriads chanting praises there;
 Paradise, with bowers lovely,
 Yet they do not tell us where.
 What is heaven? Where is heaven?
 Saints and sages, tell me where.
 I must go! I know I'm going,
 And I trust it will be there.
 Christ declared, saith an Apostle,
 Heaven's kingdom is within.
 Dear to me is that sweet heaven,
 Here my hope and joys begin.
 Like my Saviour, I am dying—
 Conquering every inward foe;
 By a life of self-denial,
 Forming heaven here below.
 But this transient world I'm leaving,
 Going to Eternity,
 Fair and happy clime celestial;
 Tell me then where it may be.
 Shining throne of Lord Jehovah,
 Where the angels doff their crowns,
 Vell their faces from his brightness,
 While in reverence bowing down.
 Who hath seen those realms so glorious,
 Happy myriads dwelling there,
 Reigning over death victorious?
 Ye who've seen them, tell me where.
 Satan too, hath he a region
 Where the evil-minded dwell?
 Condemnations burning legions,
 In the awful pit of hell?

From the Lord and all his angels
 Banish'd! doom'd to black despair?
 If there is such woe, I'm sorry;
 And you will not find me there.
 There is not where I am going;
 I am bound for Eden fair.
 Sighings hush'd, and blessings flowing,
 All I ask is, tell me WHERE.

Hannah P. Agnew, Mt. Lebanon.

"ON EARTH PEACE."

WHEN war's baptismal scourge was o'er,
 We heard words blest as evening dew,
 Reverberating from the halls of State,
 Till far and near the echo flew—
 "Let us have Peace."
 We heard, and grateful hoped them true,
 And that the world to'rd progress turn'd:
 Our vision was of Peace and Brotherhood;
 And full of trust our bosoms burn'd,
 To greet sweet Peace.
 We saw the other half of man
 Upraised, and queenly at his side;
 Not less he shone, but all the more,
 That righteousness was not denied,
 But brought true Peace.
 In ev'ry trust she took her part,
 And guided with a helping hand,
 In lifting to a better state,
 Those who pollute themselves and land:
 And help'd grow Peace.
 But, while we mused, we heard of ships,
 And increased armaments of war,
 And fear that swords must still be swords,
 And nations keep on learning war,
 Instead of Peace.
 And then we wonder'd who could dare,
 To tamper with the dial-plate of time,
 And turn the hands of progress back,
 And stay the bright Millennial clime,
 Which is true Peace.
 We wonder'd, but we inly thought
 Of what a wiser one had said:—
 "First pure, then peaceable!" Is it Corruption that stands between Fair earth and Peace?

THE SKIN.

There's a skin without, and a skin within,
 A covering skin, and a lining skin.
 But the skin within is the skin without Doubled inwards and carried completely throughout.
 The palate, the nostrils, the windpipe and throat,
 Are all of them lined with this inner coat;
 Which through every part is made to extend—
 Lungs, liver, and bowels, from end to end.

The outside skin is a marvellous plan
 For exuding the dregs from the flesh of man;
 While the inner extracts from the food and the air
 What is needed the waste in his flesh to repair.

While it goes well with the outside skin,
 You may feel pretty sure all's right within;
 For if any thing puts the inner skin out
 Of order, it troubles the skin without.

The doctor, you know, examines your tongue,
 To see if your stomach or bowels are wrong;
 If he feels that your hand is hot and dry,
 He is able to tell you the reason why.

Too much brandy, whisky, or gin,
 Is apt to disorder the skin within;
 While, if dirty or dry, the skin without Refuses to let the sweat come out.

Good people all! have a care of your skin,
 Both that without and that within;
 To the first you'll give plenty of water and soap,
 To the last little else beside water, we'll hope!

But always be very particular where
 You get your water, your food and your air;
 For if these be tainted or render'd impure,
 It will have its effect on your blood—be sure;

The food which will ever for you be the best,
 Is that you like most, and can soonest digest;
 All unripe fruit and decaying flesh
 Beware of, and fish that is not very fresh.

Your water, transparent and pure as you think it,
 Had better be filter'd and boiled ere you drink it,
 Unless you know surely that nothing unsound
 Can have got to it over or under the ground.

But of all things the most, I would have you beware
 Of breathing the poison of once breathed air;
 When in bed, whether out or at home you may be,
 Always open your window and let it go free.

With clothing and exercise keep yourself warm,
 And change your clothes quickly if drenched in a storm:
 For a cold caught by chilling the outside skin
 Flies at once to the delicate lining within.

All you who thus kindly take care of your skin,
 And attend to its wants without and within,
 Need never of small-pox feel any fears,
 And your skin may last you a hundred years.

OUR JOY AND HOPE.

WHEN Christian faith and love abound,
 No threat'ning clouds arise;
 When grace within the heart is found,
 All starlit are the skies.
 Life comes not then in dreary shape,
 But beauteous, bright, and fair;
 The golden sands, as they escape,
 Most worthy record bear,

Safe in our Parents' home of bliss,
 What glory we shall feel,
 When deeds of Christian holiness
 Shall be our spirits' seal.
 May our account be full and bright,
 Perfected through Christ's love;
 And we be crown'd with holy light,
 To reign with him above.

MOTHER'S DAY.

—o—

A WRITER, in the Peace Advocate, proposes to set apart one day in the year to be observed by the women of the nation assembling together, "in hall, church, or parlor," as should best suit their numbers and inclinations, and to be called "Mother's Day." "They should hear a sermon, an oration, an essay or an ode. They should sing hymns and offer prayers. But the one theme should be how to bring God's peace on earth. A record of proceedings should be sent to a central committee, charged with the publication and circulation of an appropriate report. As far as possible, women should be the speakers and writers on these occasions."

Julia Howe says: "Let us emulate, not only the industry, but also the harmony of the ant, the bee, and the coral insect; and our efforts, insignificant in isolation may build up institutions and sentiments which shall bless and protect the whole human race."

A good suggestion! better than holding tea-parties. Let the mind of the people once settle down to the conviction that they—not the Rulers—are the source of power, and that they can create a Government that will execute, through the laws that they shall enact, their most interior moral and religious convictions; and we shall have a "Mother's Day."

A "Mother's Day" can be made a day of power—a day on which conscience can hold high carnival, before a Lent, in which no blood shall be shed.

All women have been earth mothers long enough. Now, if a large number of them will form themselves into a superior order—arise, and become "nursing mothers" to human souls, who shall be born into the kingdom of heaven upon earth—the fulfillment of Millennial prophecies will have commenced.

One prominent argument for war, is, that it is a means of checking population; the practical result of which is, that, in England, there are a million and a half more women than men on that island. And, in our own New England, they are fast approximating the same proportion of disparity between the sexes.

The formation of a new order, whose members should live in "Platonic love" with each other, is just the thing needed, as a substitute for war. From its ranks, women-rulers—legislators, judges, juries, advocates, physicians, etc.,—could be chosen, without being obnoxious to the charge, that the children at home were being neglected while they were caring for the children of the Republic. And the male humans would be no longer under the necessity—instigated by their generative passions—to kill each other in order to make room for their posterity; as, in that Paradise of innocence, there would be room enough for all, who should be properly born, to live until they died a natural death; even if the doctors should, with the soldiers, become an extinct species, in that Prophetic Garden of plenty and physical health.

Having been accustomed to observe one day in the year, in commemoration of Mother Ann, the Founder of our Order, we can easily enlarge our conceptions, and keep the day in the name of the great Mother in Deity.

What more acceptable offering to the "Mother of us all" could we there bring than a covenant signed and sealed with our consecrated lives, in keeping "God's peace on this earth?"

Hail to the time when all of "earth's warring children" shall keep, and keep forever, a universal "Mother's Day."

N. B.—The 2d day of June next is proposed as the first to be observed.

FOLLOW ME.

—o—

WHEN, in our childhood's leisure hours, we used to steal off into the groves, ramble among the ever-greens, woodbines, honey-suckles, and wild roses, climb the lofty mountain's cliff to catch the inspirations of Nature, as we viewed, in the distance, the variegated landscape, dressed in vernal bloom, the wondrous beauties of creation, in the skies above, and on the earth beneath, we became pensive, and caught mental visions of heaven, and greatly longed to soar away from earth to that fancied happy land; but no practical conveyance appeared to present itself for the journey, and we always had to return from these pleasant reveries earth-bound, still wondering which was the prettiest way "to go to heaven;" not yet having learned that the way to enjoy heaven was to bring it home to us.

Thus onward we wended in one of the myriad paths of life trodden by earth's restless throng of weary travelers, busily seeking the way "to heaven;" when, lo! a call beat upon our ears in clarion tones, "I am the way; follow me." We sought its source, and found it was the voice of "Christ, the Saviour." We now inquired for his authority, when, from Jordan's banks a voice re-echoed, "This is my beloved Son; hear ye Him." A voice from heaven, though re-echoed from the banks of Jordan, was just the kind of authority that recommended itself to our understanding and desires; at once we accepted it, and resolved, not only to hear the "Son of God," but to follow Him, whithersoever He goeth, though it be through self-sacrifices, perils of false brethren, persecutions, prisons, or death.

Since that eventful hour, we have been a constant inquirer of all whom we met on the heavenly pilgrimage, of those who have tidings from others still on before, aye, and from the worldly throng: Whither traveled Jesus? We called at the vestibule of self pleasures' temple, Multitudes—people of every tongue and nation—were congregated here; we asked, Has "Jesus Christ," the "Saviour of men" worshiped at this shrine? Not one averred he had seen Jesus bowing there!

We next entered the gilded halls of fortune, where Mammon lay at ease, reclining on luxury's sunny banks, with the entire contents of the horn of plenty in his lap. A selected number of earth's busy millions were seeking heaven here. Of them we inquired, Have you met here "Jesus Christ, the Son of God?" But none could answer that they had seen him reclining here. In anxious agony of spirit we paused, when lo! his voice, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, but lay up your treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal."

Through a mediator (for we feared to enter their abodes), we next inquired of the residents of the haunts of sensual pleasure, if they had seen Jesus, the Son of God, harbored in their domain, participating in their lascivious feasts? But, not one had seen him there. An Angel of heavenly type now pointed his finger to the door of these parlors, and, on the lintels thereof, we saw the handwriting of Jesus, thus, "Whoso looketh on a woman with intentions to gratify lustful desires, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart."

Next, we entered the political arena of ambition's fearful strife, only, however, as a visitor on inquiry; for we had witnessed so many myriad fortunes spent fraudulently to attain to the goal of power and fame, that we had no desire to join the throng. Here we inquired of emperors, kings, potentates, of all the regal powers of earth, if Jesus, the Son of God, had run a race for these goals. But none had ever met him in these fields of fame. But, they naively remarked, Jesus Christ declared, "My kingdom is not of this world." In short, we found

He spoil'd the laurel wreath of fame,
Made vain ambition blush with shame,
Taught, to be truly great at all,
The secret lies in being small.

"Except ye become as a little child, ye shall in nowise enter the kingdom of heaven;" that is, innocent and teachable, subject to heavenly tutors.

We next visited the closets of the world's philosophers and sages, and inquired if the Son of God obtained the wisdom of godliness, and the power of salvation at these schools. A voice, which we recognized as the words of the Saviour, replied, "The world, by wisdom knew not God."

Now we inquired of the chivalrous and vain-glorious armies of earth's kings, nobles, and generals, on the gory fields of battle, if Jesus Christ had marched beneath their gaudy banners? A general replied, "We have heard his instruction," "He that hath no sword, let him sell his coat and buy one." But, the voice of Jesus rang out upon the air, "Put up thy sword into its sheath; for, he that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." "I came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

We visited the thrones of earthly kingdoms, inquiring if Jesus Christ was regnant there. But, while wondering at their splendor, and contemplating the immense degradation, suffering, and woe, produced by the wringing of this wealth from the poor and toiling subjects who bowed at these shrines, we heard a voice, it was the cry of Jesus, "My kingdom is not of this world," "He that would be greatest among you, let him be your servant." Then we saw him with a napkin, washing his disciples' feet, and one of these proclaimed, "God hath chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

We then desired to know if Jesus ever became tributary to those worldly kings; for we began to feel weaned and lifted up from earth; her governments and thrones ceased to tempt our ambition; her riches had taken wings; her fame was vanished; and we sought a higher life. But now the voice of Jesus, as of yore, beat upon our ears, saying, "Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

Jesus here appeared so careful to give to every one his due, we sought him among the judges of earth's kingdoms, to learn his wisdom in the dispensation of justice; but, lo! Jesus was not here, and again we heard his voice, after the manner of authority, "Bless them that curse," "do good to them that despitefully use you and persecute you." We went to the judgment hall; for we would know if Jesus dispensed capital punishment, according to the manner of our civil rulers of earth's kingdoms. Behold a woman was brought before him taken in adultery; he inquired, "Doth no man condemn thee?" She answered, "No man, Lord." "Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more," said Jesus, for "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father in heaven forgive your trespasses."

Now, with the professed Christian throng we went with the multitude, to the nuptial hall, to witness the climax of the lover's vow. We inquired, Has Jesus, the Saviour manifested his sanction here? The throng replied: "He attended a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and turned water into wine for the feast, thus celebrating the marriage." We asked, was the marriage celebration the object of this miracle? The sacred Record answered, "This beginning of miracles of Jesus, was to manifest his glory, that his disciples might believe on him." Thus the object of Jesus' attendance was to get the audience of the multitude to the miracle, to make converts and disciples, not to justify marriage as an institution of his kingdom; he would leave that tribute to Cesar. Concerning marriage, he condemned divorce, except for adultery; and when his disciples replied to this, "If the case be so, it is not good to marry," Jesus replied: "All men cannot receive this saying; there be eunuchs that have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake (that is, they deny themselves sexual indulgences); he that is able to receive it let him." "I am the resurrection; in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are (present tense, while here on earth), as the Angels of God in Heaven." We now heard the echo of an ancient voice; it was that of a Prophet, saying of Jesus, "Who shall declare his generation? (for he had none) his life was cut off from the earth" (the generative plane). Now we were caught away with St. John in vision, and saw Jesus as an Angel with a sickle in his hand, and we saw him reaping men from the earthly works of generation and selfishness, and we heard his ancient word, "The harvest is the end of the world." "My kingdom is not of this world," but is established in this world, in answer to my prayer "thy will be done on earth as in heaven; thy kingdom come" (on earth as in heaven). Marriage of the flesh is necessarily a worldly institution; but a celibate life, and the "marriage of the Lamb" (Jesus Christ), spiritual union, is a heavenly institution, inaugurated now on earth.

Now we visited the saloons of the voluptuous, and inquired if Jesus set this gluttonous example. An Angel showed us his simple fare, and we heard him say, "the life is more than meat:" he did not join those feasts.

We then visited the halls of fashion, where gayety, wealth, and pride, swallowed up the thoughts of the multitude, and inquired if Jesus thus lived. But Jesus was not, had not been here, but he remarked to his disciples, "The body is more than raiment."

Having vainly sought in worldly societies, and the ways of the world, for the "way, the truth, and the life," and believing Jesus to be a religionist, we next visited the so-called Christian Churches of the multitude, where Pride is worshiped, and where Fashion is umpire; we listened to the long prayers made to be "heard of men;" to learned, studied, theological sermons of the so-called "divines" who preach "for hire," and inquired, if thus taught Jesus; but sorrowfully we heard his admonition, "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouths, and honoreth me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me." "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men!" These churches all taught salvation, not as the fruit of good works, but by the merits of Christ. But we heard the voice of Jesus above the roar and clamor of the multitude, saying, "My reward is with me, to give to every one according as his works shall be."

We turned from these temples of fashion, pride, and folly, and inquired for the instructions of Jesus, and lo! his voice sounded aloud, saying to this babel throng of worshipers, "Why do you transgress the commandments of God by your traditions?" "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

CONVENTION.

—o—

ELDER JAMES S. PRESCOTT, of the Shakers at North Union, Warrensville, delivered a short address, which we print in full:

We are pleased to meet with the Spiritualist Association of Cleveland, and with the children's "Progressive Lyceum," to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of "Modern Spiritualism" to the world. In celebrating this event we have a sentiment to offer: "Modern Spiritualism! We hail its advent as the harbinger of the Millennium; based upon the law of progression, co-operating with and through visible agencies, the last and only hope for the redemption of the human race."

When it first went to the world, it took the inhabitants by surprise. It commenced on the animal plane in the rudimentary sphere, and progressed rapidly until it reached the intellectual, and is now the all-absorbing topic, and delightful theme of seers and sages, poets and philosophers, extending to all classes, ranks and conditions of people, from the crowned heads of Europe, down to the humblest individual that walks our streets.

And still the subject is not exhausted. It is beginning to assume a new form, or phase, and that is the evolution of the moral and spiritual faculties which will lead to a moral reform—a virgin life. This is what the world needs more than any thing else—men have been governed by the back-brain region long enough. Is it not time that Spiritualists took another step higher on the ladder of progression? This can only be done by co-operating with the "spirit world;" as saith the poet:

"Let us grasp the hands of the angels,
As they spread their shining wings,
They are singing, Come up higher.
Reach after heavenly things."

It is said there is something very revolutionary in the character and mission of "Modern Spiritualism." A late writer says that "the world is now upon the verge of birth into the era of moral growth, of which we have as yet had no scientific formulation." This is what is needed—moral growth, moral reform, in every department of human society, beginning with the priests and rulers of the people, the heads of the civil department not excepted.

We are living in the days of the fulfillment of prophecy: "And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations." Isaiah, 25: 7. Mountain signifies a high place. It means wickedness in high places, of honor, emolument and trust, under the covering of a veil of dishonesty, hypocrisy and deception, which is about to be taken off and destroyed. It means the "social evil," and legal prostitution, cloaked under the covering of marriage, and a false religion, which will be destroyed by the exposition and testimony of living witnesses.

This is what is needed—moral growth—supposing it should lead to a virgin life; and there should be an army of seven thousand volunteers, who will never more bow the knee to the Baal of lust, of equal number of both sexes, enjoying the society and companionship of angels claiming an equality with them, having no intercourse but such as the angels approve, which is social, what could be more desirable, and in accordance with the great law of progress, and in the full glow of the evolution of the moral and spiritual faculties, man's highest aspiration?

We will now attend to answering some questions. The Yankees, you know, are very inquisitive. Are the calamities sweeping over the earth the fulfillment of prophecy? They certainly are. What prophecy? A certain prophecy given in 1843. Where? In every Shaker community in the United States. Do you not think they will cease soon? Never! until the cause is put away. What is the cause? The cause assigned is the wickedness of the inhabitants; in living in constant and perpetual violation of natural laws, which are the laws of God. Why did you not tell us of these prophecies before? We did tell of them; "these things were not done in a corner;" they were made public at the time, and the world did not believe our report, neither do they now believe, except a very few. Is there no way to avert these calamities? Put away the cause and the effect will cease. Cease to do wickedly. Return to the law of nature—keep that law unviolated—learn to do right; live up to your highest convictions of right, regardless of a false public opinion.

"For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness," Isaiah, 26: 9. They will learn to do right from principle, if they learn at all, not because they are compelled by the civil law. Therefore, we object on this ground, to having the terms God, Christ, and the Bible, ever put into the Constitution of the United States. We protest against this Trinity ever being inserted in that instrument. We believe the wise fathers who framed it were inspired men, and their inspiration holds good yet, and will to the end of time.

If Christianity cannot stand upon its own merits, without calling to its aid the arm of the civil and ecclesiastical powers combined to sustain it, we say, let it go down!—the sooner the better! The world has had enough of the union of Church and State, during the dark ages. The freedom of speech and of the press is already assailed in New York, and, "if these things be done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry?"

We never swear; but, in the language of Thomas Jefferson, we affirm "upon the altars of God, eternal hostility to every form of tyranny over the mind of man," and woman too. Where now is George Francis Train, one of earth's noblest men? In the Tombs of New York! Ah! What was his crime? Why, for quoting obscene language from the Bible, and circulating it through the United States mails. Is that all? That same Bible, too, that is set up as a Christian standard to be recognized by all as such, by putting it into the Constitution of the United States. What a paradox!

Human organizations are good and indispensable, so far as they go to facilitate and promote human progress; but, when they operate against, and stand in the way, and say, Thus far shalt thou go, and no further, they ought to be reconstructed immediately on a more liberal and scientific basis. Not in the lower, but in the evolution of the higher, moral and spiritual faculties. Then will the Shakers and Spiritualists co-operate together, occupying the same platform.

"How has the gold changed, and the most fine gold become dim." The pagan Gentile Christian Church of to-day has failed to reform the world. It is not what the Jewish Pentecostal Church was eighteen hundred years ago. Then the Gospel of salvation was preached free, without money and without price, and a poor man stood as good a chance as a rich man. Now it is preached for "manhood and money." Then "the poor had the Gospel preached to them." Now it is preached to the rich in a special manner, and the reason assigned for this change is, that the rich need it more than the poor and are better able to pay for it, because "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and the cattle upon a thousand hills."

"My ways are equal saith the Lord—your ways are unequal." We will conclude by reading one of our inspired poems:

"From the dark shades of earth,
I'll away! I'll away!
To my home is that better land.
Through the trumpet that's sounding,
I hear the angels say,
Hasten on, there's a better land,
Toll on, struggle on, fear not the conflict,
There is rest in the better land.
If the cross you will bear,
A crown you shall wear,
In heaven, the better land."

OUR SHAKER HOME.

—o—

How lovely our mountain home appears in the calm, still morning! All is so quiet; the sun looks down so joyfully on the beautiful landscape, that gladly responds to its smiles. Whence comes its beauty, if it be not from the peace that reigns over it, and from the sweet influences that element throws over all it can reach and touch? No wonder that we love it, when we see the manifestations of its presence in Nature. And still more does it attract our admiration, when we behold it operating in the higher realms of human existence; when pervading the social life and relations of beings endowed with mental and social powers, and exercising those powers for mutual good and happiness.

Doing good is the essence of life. The feelings of the heart cannot go out in love and tenderness toward our fellow-men, our brethren and sisters, whether in Nature or in God, without the good we thus do, reflecting back upon ourselves, and making us better, nobler, purer, happier than we were before. In a community life, based upon true Christian principles, this is realized better than anywhere else. For the sake of these principles, we have sacrificed all of a lower nature; we have secluded ourselves externally from the world with all its influences, and from our own hearts and minds we are constantly expelling those elements that would otherwise produce among us the same conditions that cause the troubles and sorrows of life there.

Thus the will of God is done here on earth, as it is done in heaven. It directs all who subject themselves to its guidance, onward and upward to higher degrees of goodness and truth, but further and further away from every thing opposite to its own nature. As a reward, it brings the satisfaction of a justified conscience, a power of self-control, unknown in any other condition, and a measure of that peace, which overshadows even the least one of God's children. Under the reign of this divine power, all is love and harmony; like always produce like. Jesus Christ said: "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men to me." It is not recorded of Ann Christ, that she ever spoke those same words, but she did what they indicated; and so do her followers to-day. They draw to themselves all souls, who come to them to be attracted, and they do it by love. Beaming from the eyes, speaking from the lips, radiating from the features of the countenance, manifesting itself in the smallest actions, inspiring through good and virtuous examples, does this love perform its work of lifting up those who are fallen, of saving those who are lost. Like fishes in a net are they caught; many are the meshes, and strong; tighter and tighter are they drawn, till no escape is possible. The fish must give up; he is conquered. Here is the end of the figure, borrowed from nature (I would not like to carry it further; I wish they were forever done away with, both the catching of fish and the destroying of other animal life, by human agency); but in the case of spiritual growth, of which it represented only one feature, this is merely the beginning, the first steps of a long march, reaching onward through eternity, and ending in God. It is the peace-maker's first victory in the conquest of a human soul.

Why should there not be joy, where there is peace? Why should there not be sunshine where there is purity? When clouds arise over our heads, hindering the rays of the physical sun from bringing us their sweet messages of cheer and comfort, where do they come from? From the earth are the vapors exhaled, and back to it they return, whenever they find an opportunity. It is the same in the minds of men. From the earthly nature, ascend all influences that becloud and darken the spirit, and shut out the higher light; the workings of the carnal and selfish elements in the inner being, bring forth their corresponding results on the outward stature,—gloominess, stupidity, insensibility to the feelings and conditions of all around. While the fruits of a purely spiritual and heavenly life are love, peace, and joy forevermore.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mt. Lebanon, Columbia Co. }

April 9, 1873. }

To THOMAS HULL, England:

DEAR FRIEND: Elder Frederick has just mentioned your case to me, and thinking you might like to hear from some one who has recently entered the Community, I concluded to take the liberty of writing you. Perhaps you may have seen my name mentioned in the Medium, in connection with the Spiritual movement in Bromsgrove, Worcestershire. I came here some six weeks ago, and, up to the time of leaving my native place, was a worker in the cause of Spiritualism. The time I have spent here has been the happiest period of my life, and I have enjoyed a continual feast of spiritual things.

To me Shakerism is Spiritualism reduced to order, thus avoiding the various anomalies to be met with in Spiritualism of the current sort. The joys I experienced in Spiritualism have been increased a hundredfold in Shakerism, and my Shaker home daily becomes more precious to me.

I have lived in the town and the country, but it has never been my lot elsewhere to be among so many truly religious and loving souls as are to be found in this Community. Peace and purity reign throughout our domain. The history of how I became a Shaker is as follows:

Many years ago I was impressed with the idea that for a man to be spiritually perfect he must lead a celibate life.

When Elder Frederick lectured in London, I learned from the Spiritual periodicals that the Shakers held views similar to my own, and some time afterward, in November, 1871, I was impressed by a spirit friend to write him. I resolved to come to Mt. Lebanon, but was detained by business matters until last February, when I came over here with my mother and sister. Although we had a comfortable home in England, and a fair prospect of "getting on in the world," yet we feel glad we elected to come here.

The more we see of the confusion and strife prevailing throughout society, both in temporal and spiritual matters, the more do we appreciate the peace and joy of the Shaker Order.

The country round here is mountainous like many parts of England, and the locality of the Shaker village is very healthful. The houses are built in good style with every modern contrivance for convenience and health of the inmates. In this family (North Family) we have six English Brothers and several Sisters, while other European nationalities are represented among us. Our food is of the most wholesome kind, properly cooked, and in short, no pains are spared to secure the good health, physically and spiritually, of all members of the Shaker Society.

In conclusion, I would say, that I am acquainted with (Mr.) Burns and other London Spiritualists, also the Birmingham Spiritualists, Franklin, Hawkes, Smith and others.

Trusting we may at some future time meet face to face, and with kind regards,

I remain yours sincerely,

ERNEST J. WITHEFORD.

TROY, April 11, 1873.

EDITORS OF Shaker and Shakeress:—I have just received the first four numbers of your publication for this year (having subscribed last Sabbath), and having eagerly devoured their contents, I hasten, before it fades, to give the impression they made upon my mind. I am of the "world's people," to be sure, but a man may be magnanimous enough to concede the good contained in theories and systems to which he cannot fully subscribe.

You, doubtless, have heard, to nausea, the objection to Shakerism; that it is unnatural, a monkish and nunish mode of living; but you answer it, if not convincingly to us weak, passion-ridden mortals, who have not attained the sublimity of self-control, you indicate to us, yet, in such lofty and earnest terms as to excite the deepest respect in every worthy bosom.

Dedicated to purity, commencing with the spiritual, and reaching upward to the ideal, you are a glorious anomaly in this age of corruption, materialism, and groveling aims. Every page of your little paper is elevating in its tone, so full is it of the spirit of self-abnegation. You not only proclaim, but faithfully practice the principle of heroic duty, and thus set a unique and much needed example in these days of utter selfishness and vice. Whether or not you have properly embodied it, remains to be seen. But your organization is founded upon a grand idea; and, in your isolated communities, is unfolding a germ of promise whose full blush shall be the race's regeneration. Continence chastest love, universal brotherhood; what better destiny can we wish than that their empire be established over us?

While all mankind seeks for its own, you, the pioneer exponents of the Millennial Era, are far ahead on the upward pathway, and, though conscious of your higher plane, exhibit remarkable liberality toward other sects and doctrines. If morality has an impregnable refuge on the globe, it is among you, where true and changeless religion (not fickle theology) has erected her temple. Goaded and begrieved, in this busy turmoil of existence, I shall value the monthly visits of the Shaker and Shakeress, as would a traveler in a hot desert appreciate a cooling gale, or a limpid and gelid spring. Though we never anticipate a conversion to your technical tenets, thoughts surcharged with so much that is ennobling cannot fail to influence and help any right-intentioned individual. As one reads he feels his nobler nature quickened and expanding within him. Heaven bless Shakerism, at least for its honorable motives, its undefiled aspirations, and its exemplary life!

Theo. Williams.

DANBY, VT. March 8, 1873.

I LIKE the independence and nobleness of the "Shaker and Shakeress." Of course, I do not see the exact application of some of your peculiar principles. I cannot appreciate every identical tenet of those with whom I come in contact; yet I feel that the spirit of kindness, manifest in the "Shaker and Shakeress," toward those who honestly differ with it, is a high recommendation of those who conduct it. And, as an exponent of Shakerism (I use the term in its noblest sense), I think it carries an influence upon its very face commendatory of its high purpose and aim.

Certainly, it is not so much what we believe as what we do, that commends us to the kind regards of the good in all communities. Belief is not a matter of choice, but of evidence. We must needs believe, when the evidence of a fact, or proposition reaches our comprehension. Consequently, belief, or disbelief, does not determine the moral character of a human being.

With best wishes for your health and prosperity, I remain, with great respect,

A. S. BAKER.

EVIDENCE.

It is for lack of evidence that men do not believe in a future state of existence, and that those who do believe have such vague conceptions of it, because their minds are so engrossed in the pursuit of pleasure, ambition, or the cares of this life, that they do not attend to the evidence existing in their own souls. Franklin, reasoning from principle, or the angel side of his nature, was induced by humanitarian considerations of the cruelty and injustice done to animals, to abandon a meat diet. He afterward adopted it again, from observing that animals ate each other. Thus, reasoning from the animal side of his nature, and the habits of an inferior order of creation, over which man was appointed to rule in the spirit of goodness and mercy that comes from above, he let go the restraint which the latter placed upon appetite. Which was the superior wisdom, that which taught restraint, or that which removed it? The wisdom from above is first pure, and then peaceable; full of mercy and good fruits to all of God's creatures. Man forsook his own mercies by loving the thing that is not good, and, by neglecting the wisdom from above, he has created false and unnatural appetites and conditions, in which the image or reflection of true wisdom cannot be found. Still blinded by continuing the original perversion, or unwilling to accept the treatment necessary for a radical cure, he seeks a remedy in expedients—outside cleansings or whitewashings—local applications, and the excision of excrescences from the social system; leaving the cause, which exists in the life, untouched. Consequently the disease when reduced in one form, breaks out in another, until it may be truly said that society is full of wounds and bruises, and putrefying sores, from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet.

Jesus adverted to the same state of things when reproving the hypocrisy of his countryman. He said: "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.* Ye make clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but within are full of extortion and excess. Thou blind Pharisee, make clean the inside of the cup and the platter, that the outside may be clean also."

The last clause points out the divine method which descends to us through the revelation of Christ. This Anointing Spirit, directed by a wisdom that comprehends all, and sustained by a power that overrules all, to the destined final righteous adjustment of all, commences by cleansing the inside—changing the life of the individual—eradicating the poison from the centre—purifying the fountain from spiritual disease—thus plucking out the evil plant by the roots, and changing conditions, until restored to the image or reflection of the Divine Law. This introduces harmony, co-operation, and that unity of spirit which excludes conflict and disturbance, by its very compactness of order, and the power with which it invests the individual. Consequently, by this channel the peace and love of God can flow into vessels fitted to receive and retain, and also to diffuse it when needful.

This method uproots the world from its foundations, and turns it upside down. For the world is made of individual lives, and when all are redeemed that can be induced to work with the wisdom from above, there will be nothing left of the world that any rational being can desire or enjoy. The peace and justification, without which there can be neither heaven nor happiness, will all be withdrawn to build up the new and supernal creation, of which this natural world, as well as the natural soul of man, is but the shell or husk.

Blessed and happy beyond all others will those be who secure a place in this rising building, while still encased in the earthly form. "All such offer to God the first ripe fruits of their souls, and thereby secure that honor and crown of glory which no other souls can ever obtain." They will everlastingly increase in goodness and purity, and draw perpetually nearer the eternal fountain of all happiness and peace.

But the fruits of a life of sin, and disobedience to the voice of wisdom, must all be burnt up, and those who bear such fruits will suffer irretrievable loss. What are a few short-lived pleasures, that place the receiver in the power of the enemy—Death—when compared with the eternal glories, and ever-increasing joys of the righteous? If thou art wise, thou art wise for thyself. If thou art otherwise, thou alone must bear the final result.

A. G. Holtster, Mt. Lebanon.

THE GOSPEL RACE.

PAUL, in his exhortations to the Corinthians, alludes to the Grecian games, which consisted of running, leaping, etc. "Know ye not," saith the Apostle, "that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain." 1 Cor. 9: 24.

According to history, the celebration of the running match excited great interest, and the preparation for these races was very extensive. All who presented themselves as candidates for the prize, were required to submit to very strict regulations: Their diet consisted of very coarse, unpalatable food; each candidate was to bear a good moral character, and to practice severe exercises, etc., according to certain prescribed rules, for twelve months before racing; all who participated in the race divested themselves of all needless clothing. The successful runner was greeted with shouts and cheers by the people, and crowned with a laurel wreath or a garland of flowers.

The Gospel is compared to a race. The course marked out is the straight and narrow path of self-denial, which leads from this world to the world to come. All professors of religion are candidates for the prize, which is a crown of salvation. When starting in this Gospel race, all are required to lay aside every weight (by honest confession), relinquish the besetting sin, and run the race with patience, etc. Some run well for a time, then fall, overpowered by their besetting sin. A few persevere to the end of the race, and win the prize.

Observe this: In the Grecian race, only one could win the reward, which was a crown of fading flowers; and the judge was sometimes partial. In the Gospel race, all may run so as to win: And the Judge is righteous, and gives crowns of righteousness that fade not away.

CARPETS.

CARPETS are injurious to health, so far as the lungs are concerned. They accumulate dirt, and hold it as a reservoir. Every motion of persons, things in the room, or even of the air, causes it to rise in an impalpable powder, to be seen only in the rays of sunshine that may chance to get into the room to fade the colors of the carpets. Therefore, to preserve the carpets and the accompanying furniture in their beauty, carefully exclude the light; and, to exclude the dust, keep the windows closed; and, to preserve the health of the family, let them live in other rooms, with no carpets, plenty of air, and floods of sunshine.

This arrangement would keep things even between the family and friends visiting, inasmuch as they pay, for a generous hospitality, with the most precious of all coin—their own health.

EVERY good desire and feeling, whether uttered or unexpressed, is prayer. It is converse and communion with unseen guardian friends by which we are spiritually educated, and we feel a tranquillity while in this element that the tumultuous waves of passion cannot reach, for our hearts, through prayer, are lifted into angel spheres.

SUBSCRIBERS.

ALL new subscribers (50 cts.) will receive the paper from January 1st, 1873, until January 1st, 1874. Those whose subscription expires in July next, may remit 30 cts. to pay until January 1st, 1874.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

GOLD KING.

WE are accustomed to look upon those who hoard up silver and gold, and who add one pile to another and feast their eyes with the sight thereof, as idolaters. Some would say, such persons were extremely selfish. But it is usually the case, that, through an excessive thirst for more gold, they deprive themselves of even the necessary comforts of life. Hence a miser, in the estimation of an enlightened public, will be deemed a slave to avarice.

But we would ask, are there not many kinds and degrees of slavery existing in society at the present time? Gold is the crowned king of to-day, and holds out a glittering scepter to the warrior, to the ambitious man, to the sensualist, to the devotee of fashion, and to the wine-bibber. "Wealth is power." By it, the nation's warring armies upon the land, and her fleets upon the seas, receive their support. Gold aids the wine-bibber, who seeks to satiate his raging thirst, and he drinks, and drinks again, till the dregs are bitterness, and demons mock him! And the sensualist, by the same means, finds easy access to the foul pools from whence he draws his supplies. The devotee of fashion bows before the throne of king Gold, and throws her all at his feet; while he, in return, bedecks her with jewels and costly pearls, and clothes her with scarlet and fine raiment, and helps her to seek out many inventions through which to gratify desires that never can be satisfied; for the more they are indulged, the stronger they become, and the greater are their demands. Is not this slavery?

Can we marvel, when we hear the low murmuring, the discordant sounds, and the loud wail of grief, so often borne along on the "wings of the wind," which come up from all ranks of society? While self is the center around which all the thoughts and feelings revolve, and to which all the labors and efforts are directed, there can be no real happiness; for, unless the physical powers co-operate with the social, mental, and moral attributes of the being, there must be inharmoniousness; the better part is enslaved, entombed, and shut out from the light of true science, which shines upon the natural man and woman who stand in moral integrity on the earthly plane.

In the natural order, the family relation is an indication of a desire which inheres in the human soul to expand beyond selfhood; and, although the circle thus formed is narrow and partial in its bearings, yet it is an advance from individualism toward universality: Toiling for others, even if it be for kith and kin, is better than concentrated selfishness. And, when individuals go outside of the family circle, and extend aid and influence to friends and neighbors, or, going still farther, they work for the nation's weal unselfishly, just in proportion as they enlarge their sphere of usefulness to bless humanity, they will receive a blessing in return, whether it be in a temporal, intellectual, or moral point of view. The world's benefactors never fail of receiving from the great public heart, a grateful response to their labors, though many have waited a long time before their efforts were appreciated. And if there are some who, for conscience God-ward, and from love to truth and humanity, have left the natural, generative plane of life altogether, with its partial relations and selfish professions, and are rising into a new life, seeking the order of angelic beings, and striving to be like them, consecrating their substance and gains, temporally and spiritually, to the "God of the whole earth," and of all souls; do not such give the greatest manifestation of unselfish love possible to mortals? And will not such lay up treasures in the heavenly kingdom, and secure a great reward?

TRIUMPH OF TRUTH.

ALL truth is from God. Truth is the embodiment of every principle in religion and science, revealed to man and woman through chosen mediums whom God appoints. Those principles were more clearly illustrated and exemplified in the life of Jesus, and in the lives of his immediate followers, than in any mediums or teachers who had preceded them. The life of Jesus was the opposite of falsehood and error. He said: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life;" showing that the Spirit which is able to lead into all truth, had taken up its abode in him, by which he was enabled to set the most perfect example of godliness that the world had ever witnessed. Inasmuch as he lived the true life and walked in the light, he could say: "Follow me; I am the way." As the Christ Spirit has baptized me, and become my Leader, so will I baptize and lead you.

"The Law was given by Moses," and he prepared the people for the more spiritual work of "grace and truth, which came by Jesus Christ." But only those who were thus prepared received his testimony. The world, those who loved the sensual life, and chose darkness rather than light, rejected him, because he testified that their deeds were evil. And they imagined that, by crucifying the man Jesus, they would put an end to the truths which he uttered, and they would hear no more of those principles which he inculcated, that were so distasteful to them; but in this they were disappointed; for the good seed which he had sown had taken deep root in the hearts of his followers. Nor could they, by a long course of malignant persecution of his followers, eradicate truth from the earth.

But the spirit of antichrist finally gained access to the primitive Church, and did its work, and a long night of darkness, error, and superstition ensued. A few witnesses, scattered here and there, clothed in garments of mourning, kept the lamp of truth burning, which made the darkness more apparent. The prince of darkness swayed the scepter over his willing subjects. In Scriptural language, "Darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." Liberty of conscience, and freedom of speech, were almost unknown. And those who dared to dissent from the Church of Rome were subjected to torture and death in many ways; religious bigotry and intolerance seemed to have reached their climax. But, in the fullness of time, a way was prepared, through suffering witnesses, for the second advent of the Christ Spirit, through a female (Ann Lee).

Again the spirit of persecution was aroused, and the enemies of the cross seemed determined, if possible, to suppress the truth which was revealed through her. This they were unable to do; but, through divine agency, she was directed to come to America, which was then seeking to free itself from the yoke of British tyranny. And, when liberty of conscience was established, she and her little band found a freedom to live and promulgate their religious faith that was denied to them in their native land. It was to them a safe "refuge from the storm."

We believe that the principles of truth, as contained in the Gospel, which Mother Ann lived and taught, will continue to advance and gain strength, until all man-made creeds shall be level with the dust. Truth will out-live error.

We would not set bounds to Truth. New spiritual truths will be revealed from time to time, and souls will be led from "faith to faith," till all true Believers shall be of one heart and mind, which will be to know and do the will of God. Souls who are under the influence of truth, will be led to confess and forsake all known sin, and make reparation for all wrong done to others. This will enable them to become new creatures—live a new life. They will become simple and teachable as little children, and thus gain an entrance into the kingdom of heaven.

M. Johnson, Canterbury, N. H.

LIBERTY.

"The sweet sound of liberty now is rolling;
May it extend over mountain and plain!"

THAT "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free!" how it echoes and vibrates through the heart of every true Shaker! O the glorious Liberty of the Gospel!

While reading the views of the Press, my soul breathes forth in prayer to Him "who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," to strengthen and support the brave souls who dare to raise their voices against the evils of the present generation.

The seed of the enemy is sown, and is rapidly bearing fruit. Yet, although mankind, in their natural wisdom and understanding, have followed in the paths of sin and wickedness, partaking of the fruits of evil, to which our first natural mother yielded, there is, at the present time, no excuse for continuing any longer therein. The day has dawned, when a spiritual Mother comes to our rescue; and we behold, in her, one who rooted out every evil seed from her own heart, thereby giving us a perfect example of purity, to guide us onward through all the labyrinths of iniquity.

Now the question arises: "Have we not a right to proclaim our freedom throughout the length and breadth of the land, that others may hear the sweet sound, and gather to the standard of Liberty?"

I hear the loud tones of response from our lovely "Shakeress," YEAL And my earnest prayer is, that the truths poured forth through your columns may ultimately find an abiding place in the heart of every woman; for I believe there are many women writhing beneath this "yoke of bondage," who, were it in their power, would gladly shake off their fetters.

Lovely "Shakeress," I feel and know that I have a right to rejoice and dance—and will—"with those that make merry;" for whereas I was bound, NOW I AM FREE.

PURE LANGUAGE.

IGNORANCE is blind to right judgment; but intelligence throws light on all solvable problems.

How important, then, is the necessity of attention to the proper unfolding, education, and training of every faculty of the mind in the various departments of knowledge which develops the understanding to a clear comprehension of those fundamental principles which are the basis of all true science, ethics, theology, religion, and progress.

Commencing with the a b c, or first principles, and carefully analyzing each successive lesson of a subject of mind or matter, to learn or ascertain the elements of which it is composed, and the quality and significance of each; then again compounding into a variety of forms, substance or consistencies, to answer the use and necessity of the occasion. By these processes many things are brought to light which were before veiled in mystery. What was thought to be incomprehensible miracles, is shown to be the outgrowth and unfolding of God's immutable laws, which are in harmony with all his works, and underlie the diversified revelations of the wonders of creation in every form and feature.

Is this knowledge to be obtained from books only? By no means. As mind is superior to books, being their creator and author, so is it capable of much culture without their aid. Yet very much can be learned from the writings of the investigator and experienced authors in any department of life. Hence a necessity of the study of books when the mind is sufficiently matured to comprehend the arbitrary signs and significance of written language.

Education commences with the infant when it opens its eyes to behold the tangible objects by which it is surrounded. From this period should the careful attention, guidance, and assistance of parents, or other authorized guardians and educators, be employed to give proper direction to the growing and expanding intelligence and understanding which follow the movements and absorb the examples of those with whom they are associated or connected, to be made manifest at times and in manners least expected, and frequently to the astonishment of those who have unguardedly done or said that which was improper in their presence.

If all adults, who hold themselves as members of civilized or cultivated society, would pay due regard to propriety in conduct and conversation, teaching the same to their immediate posterity, not many generations would pass before a marked improvement would be perceptible in the elevation of the human race.

The inmates of dens and resorts of vice and crime would become decimated, and the moral atmosphere of cities and villages clear and healthful.

Above all, will those who come into the Christ-sphere—the resurrection life—adopt and exclusively use that pure language which God, by his Prophet, has promised.

"For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." Zeph. 3:9.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR ELDERESS A.:

I DROP this line that you may know I have not fallen asleep, or passed into the spirit land; but still live to work, and to bless.

The undying love of kindred hearts, made pure by self-denial and obedience to the principles of truth, we cherish as a "pearl of great price." But who can know its worth save those who have sold all selfish and partial love to obtain it? Those who give but part, receive accordingly. Our consecrations are made to God, and not to mortals; and we cannot hide the defects in our characters from Him, nor from the eyes of immortal guardians, who are sent to keep their vigils around us. We must all receive the just reward of our doings; we cannot deceive nor rob God; neither will He withhold our just dues. If we are untrue to ourselves, we commit a wrong against our own well-being, and we must suffer the consequences. This principle is illustrated by the Bible story of Ananias and Sapphira, who, through love of pelf, reserved a part, and sought to evade the truth; and their reward quickly followed.

How important it is that all who profess the Christian religion, should be true to that profession: If we "name the name of Christ to depart from iniquity," walk in the light, and be willing to be seen and known just as we are; then we shall have confidence toward God, and can draw nigh unto Him in prayer, and ask for what we need. If we live in purity like the angels, we shall rise where we can stand with them on the pure plane of spiritual truth, and travel the "highway cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in;" Where we shall feel the gentle dews descend, and the healing zephyrs of heavenly influences blow upon the vineyard of the Lord; so that every branch therein may become fruitful. After the wintry winds have passed, and spring time returns, all Nature is glad, and wears a cheerful aspect, and seems to feel new life, strength, and vigor. We watch the opening buds, and rejoice when the flowers appear. Thus may it be spiritually. Let us leave the cold regions of "the world" and sin, and dwell in light and love, which will warm and vivify the heart, and cause the seeds of truth to grow, and flowers of innocence to bloom. This will be an eternal spring time to the soul.

Nancy Riley, Hancock.

DEAR ELDERESS A.:

Is the testimony borne by the Shakers of today the same as that borne by Jesus and his apostles eighteen centuries ago? And, in their daily lives, do their profession and practice agree? These are simple propositions for discussion by those who are interested in the growth and spread of true principles. If the underlying principles of the institution are true, they will bear strict scrutiny; if they are false, let it be proved by honest investigation.

We claim that Shakerism is not only a revival of Christianity, as preached and practiced by Jesus and his Apostles, and also practically exemplified in the primitive Church; but that it is the revelation of the Christ Spirit, through the female, which has given new impulse and strength to all its parts.

May I be permitted, through the columns of the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, to express my gratitude for the great privilege that I am enjoying in my beautiful Shaker home. Here I can live a pure, chaste life, through which I receive a plenitude of spiritual and temporal blessings. I feel that my life is so free! O that those of my sex who are in captivity could realize this as I do! how gladly would they flee the false pleasures of the animal, sensuous life, and, of their own volition, accept the straight path into which truth would lead them. Then would they know how good is the power of truth that is able to make souls "free."

My heart is drawn out in love and gratitude to the guardians and teachers of my early days; my thanks are due to them for their timely discipline. By love, they guided my feet in Virtue's paths, and led me in Wisdom's ways, which are safe, peaceful and pleasant. I am now able to see that "what we associate with we become like," in a great measure; and, if we would be pure in spirit, we must keep our bodies pure; for it is impossible that any person can be a true follower of Christ while living in sensual pleasure. Only those "Who govern their passions with absolute sway,

Will grow wiser and better as life wears away."

Betsy Johnson, Tyngsboro, Mass.

Dear Editress:—We are pleased with the new form your much admired paper has assumed. We have ever cherished the idea that woman possesses God-given faculties; and that she has an inherent right to exercise her powers of body and mind freely. And, in this day of Christ's second appearing, it becomes her duty to take a firm stand in aiding the great work of progress in its onward march, which must, sooner or later, revolutionize all man-made systems and creeds; and your little paper seems to us the best exponent of the dual principle, recognized by the Shakers, of any thing that has yet appeared. And coming, as it does, fresh from the intellects, and warm from the hearts of its contributors, it enlivens our feelings, while we increase in gratitude to God that we are numbered with the little flock who are receiving such bountiful blessings.

Great coldness is manifested in this section of country in regard to religious matters. Religion is of secondary importance. But in our Zion home we earnestly pray to God for the protection of His heritage, and for the advancement of truth throughout the land.

We believe that His hand is not shortened, but He is still able to save all who call upon Him—to open eyes that are blind, and unstopped ears that are deaf.

And we wish your little craft much success, now that she is loosed from her moorings, and launched upon the waters, freighted with golden treasures. God grant that she may bear light and truth to this sin-darkened land. And should she, at times, be tempest-tossed on the billows of opposition, we have faith that she will out-ride all storms, and come safely into port; and that each successive trip her value will be enhanced, because she will be better appreciated. We would hold up the hands of those who are so nobly defending the cause of purity and righteousness; for the zeal manifested is worthy of all commendation and support from every Zion traveler who loves God more than mammon; and who, from his or her heart, desires to perpetuate true principles and that living faith which will elevate and regenerate fallen humanity.

And we will renew our pledges to battle for the right with increased zeal, and to move straight forward in duty with unbroken ranks, and to renounce all that is self pleasing, that we may do the will of God. "Our work is before us, and our reward will be with us;"—we shall reap what we sow. And may we leave behind us, as the poet aptly said,

"Footprints on the sands of time;
Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,—
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother
Seeing, may take heart again."

Jane Cowan, South Union, Ky.

BELOVED ELDERESS A.:

SINCE the first appearance of the "Shaker," we have hailed with joy, and perused with interest, each succeeding number; at the same time, wishing it might be enlarged, or be issued more frequently.

And our love and interest is now doubly increased, since our good Mother, the "Shakeress," is introduced, thereby enhancing its beauty and completeness, and more fully representing the dual forces, Wisdom and Love, which are at work in the spiritual kingdom of Christ, co-operating together, seeking to elevate Zion's sons and daughters, and to send forth rays of light and truth to erring humanity.

We have strongly desired to add our mite to the little craft that is sent forth so richly freighted with goodly treasures; and now that an opportunity is so kindly offered (thanks to the "Waste Basket") we will gladly improve it; for if nothing more, it will tend to our own growth and spiritual improvement.

We believe that the higher faculties should all be cultivated and brought into exercise, for the special purpose of developing within our own being, the glorious image of the Divine; thereby fitting us to become messengers of Love and Light, that we may diffuse blessings to other souls.

We love the beautiful, the good, and the true. We love the flowers, the fragrance, and the fruit—aspersion, effort, and success—in every direction which leadeth God-ward. And we resolve to work patiently, and struggle on to the end, and win a crown immortal; that palms of victory may be ours, and that we may join in the sweet song of triumph with those who stand on the heights of Mount Zion, and have gained the victory over sin and death.

Dear friend—we thank you for those beautiful soul-stirring expressions of thought in your "Appeal to the Sisterhood," which we appreciate, and will endeavor to turn to good account.

May your life be full of health, joy, and prosperity, throughout the present year, and be spared many years that are yet unborn, for the strength and comfort of your friends both at home and abroad. In love—most kindly adieu. Yours ever,

Julia Johnson, Hancock, Mass.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR.—The few short years of our earthly pilgrimage should be spent to the honor and glory of God, and in doing all in our power to promote the happiness of our fellow-beings, whom we should love as we love ourselves. What a wide field of labor stretches out before us! Shall we not enter, and work diligently to sow the seeds of truth, love, and kindness, which will, in due time, with proper cultivation, spring up and grow, and yield an abundant harvest? By the simple transactions of every-day life, we practically show how we keep the command to "Love thy neighbor as thyself." If we were really so unselfish that

"we sought not our own, but another's wealth," or good, and would rather spend and be spent for others than to live by unjust gains, or upon the labors of others, how pleasant would be our reflections while reviewing the events of each passing day. Instead of feeling that we have injured our brother, or sister, by an unkind word or deed, we should feel that we have strewed flowers in their pathway. We have the means of doing this placed within our reach; let us wisely improve them; it is a duty we owe to God and to each other, as we journey through time, nearing the heavenly home. Let us resolve, by acts of kindness, and by words of encouragement and love, to comfort the afflicted, bind up the broken-hearted, and pour the balm of consolation into the sorrowing spirit. Then we shall show, by our works, that we keep the commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Mary C. Settles, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

PRAYER.

PRAYER is as sweet as the distilled dews from the skies which canopy the heavenly Paradise. Can it be that any intelligent being has lived on this earth, and passed to the life beyond, without having felt the pure influence of the spirit of prayer, and who has not at times found relief for his or her troubled spirit, in supplicating the Father of all mercies for his tender care?

If, amid the tempest of wild temptation, or the flood of unanswerable doubt, and in the chill of cold indifference, a soul can only bow beneath the sweet, yet potent influence of prayer, the victory is half won; for, when the better impulses of the soul gain the ascendancy, luring temptations and blinding doubts will dissolve like frost-work before the morning sun.

In the silent hour of prayer, when ministering angels are gliding down the golden ladder, and are filling the air with the essence of true humility, and the spirit bathes in its beautiful wave, and drinks of its electrified waters, there is joy inexpressible; and it gives pure delight thus to blend with angels, and commune with them through the beautiful door-way of prayer; and is productive of pure and delightful satisfaction of soul.

But there are hours, when life or death seems wrapped up in prayer that trembles on the lips; and, in deep anguish, the soul "prays because it must." The great fruition of such offering, is its own reward. The prayer for others' sorrow, prompted by sympathy and love, and the earnest, unselfish supplication which the pure in heart offer, in behalf of the weak and erring, penetrates the clouds of doubt, disarms the foes to purity, calms fear, inspires love, whispers forgiveness and restoration to happiness, and is as sweet as honey in the comb, and as musical as the song which was sung by the "Morning Stars."

We read of one who prayed in the garden of Gethsemane, when his deep agony wrung drops of blood from his pores; yet he arose calm and subdued, with those beautiful words falling from his lips: "Not my will, O Father, but thine be done." And she whom we call Mother, when in the prison cells of Manchester (England), Albany, and Poughkeepsie, through the long, dark watches of night, gave her soul to earnest supplication, and came forth with songs of praise on her lips.

And, although human pride may often stand as a barrier in the way of prayer and contrition of spirit, yet every one who has felt the holy and inspiring influences induced by this heavenly gift, realizes that "sacredly blest is the hour of Prayer."

EATING WITHOUT HUNGER.

THIS is a very foolish and injurious habit, one which almost every one is more or less subject to. Hunger is the signal which nature gives to indicate the necessity for a supply of food. When the system requires food, and is in a condition to make good use of it, it will call for it in its original way. There are some exceptions to this rule in certain diseased conditions, but they are very few. The digestive organs are in the best possible condition for digesting food when the sensation of hunger exists, and they can then do it far more easily, thoroughly, quickly and with less effort than at any other time. Most people pay little attention to this; they are sure to eat whenever they are hungry, if it is so that they can; and they are just about as apt to eat when they are not, if it is convenient for them to do so, or they chance to see any thing which "tickles their palate." Especially is this rule—never eat unless you are hungry—violated in sickness. In acute disturbances of the system the sensation of hunger is seldom manifested, for the simple reason that the system does not require food. If food is eaten at such times, as it usually is, for everybody thinks the patient will surely starve if he does not eat just so much and so often, it becomes a burden to the system which must be got rid of, for there is no use for it; and as it will not do to let it remain in the stomach, the vital powers, which are engaged in the reparative process termed disease, are called from the work upon which they are engaged to remove the substances which are creating the disturbance.

Thousands of persons have been prematurely laid in their graves simply by eating heartily when the system was not in a condition to properly digest and appropriate the food. Let this rule be observed by those who desire health with all the untold blessings which always accompany it; whether sick or well, do not force food into the stomach unless there is a demand for it. No fears need be entertained of starving, for a desire for food will be manifested long before the starvation point is reached.—Ex.

HOW TO BE HAPPY I am well aware is not a new subject; but, as it is one that interests us all, I give my experience, which is simply this: To live up to the highest light given, and obey the purest convictions of duty. I cannot conceive of true happiness short of this. But lest it should be thought too brief, I will add:

As all for happiness aspire,

I know no wiser way
Than do by others as I would

That they should do each day:

The Saviour's rule, when well lived out,

A blessing rich will prove;

Our words will be the words of peace,

Our works the works of love.

We do not live for self alone,

But have a higher call:

Not me and mine, but we and ours,

A bond of good for all.

By consecration unto God,

A holy life to live,

Our time and talents, great or small,

Our all to freely give.

I know of nothing that doth yield

Such perfect joy and bliss,

As when to others we can be

A source of happiness:

When we can soothe the troubled mind,

Assuage another's grief,

Unto the aged be a staff,

To orphans give relief.

A gentle word, a loving smile,

Though all we have to give,

Which costs us nothing, yet to such

Diffuse a hope to live.

Henceforth I will my time improve,

And all my powers bestow,

To shed new sun-beams all around,

That brighten as they glow.

Laura A. Prentiss, Watervliet, N. Y.

SIGN OF THE CROSS.—This much despised symbol, bears within it a weighty meaning. The hand presses the forehead, the throne of thought; then the heart, the center of the affections; and then the shoulders, which typify manual labor. Thus, by a few motions, a full consecration is emblemized; and a prophecy is set forth; yet they who present it "know not what they do."

NATURE AND GRACE.

—O—

I'd rather be a quarried stone,

And be disrobed of all disguise,

Than cover'd with the prettiest moss

That in the shady woodland lies;

Hewn out from nature, carved and smooth'd,

A pillar in the house of God,

A "polish'd stone" which can't be moved,

Or fitted for the tents abroad.

Blest Zion be my dwelling-place,

Though pitying turn my eyes away,

To see the suffering human race

Grope darkly in the light of day.

And oft my cries ascend to Thee,

O God of love and holy pow'r,

That thy salvation, full and free,

May triumph at no distant hour;

May bring thy wand'ring children up

From degradation, sin and strife,

To Nature's order; thence above

To Grace the higher Angel life;

And make this earth a place of peace,

Where none shall give or take offense;

But all shall stand redeem'd in love,

In purity, and innocence.

Mary Whitcher, Canterbury.

EXTRACT.—I am pleased with the "Shaker and Shakeress Monthly." I think the ideas expressed are all of an elevating nature; even the appearance of the paper, pleases me, as it is the whitest of the white, and the ink the blackest of the black, and nice size type to read readily.

The piece of poetry entitled "The Churches of our Land," written by Cecelia Devy, I think contains excellent sentiment. The piece of music "Beautiful Shore," I will get D. to play for me. I hope to visit the Society some time when the pleasant weather comes again.

THE RELIGIOUS PRINCIPLE.—The principle in human nature from which religion springs is the desire to establish relations with a Being more perfect than itself. The fact is as remarkable as it is incontrovertible, that the human race, all but universally, has conceived of some Existence more exalted than man. If there is one principle, indeed, that may be declared to be essential in human nature, it is this unwillingness to shut itself up within its own limits, this tendency to aspire after intercourse with some Divinity. It is true that men at various periods have formed most unworthy conceptions of their objects of worship. Still, by selecting the qualities which they esteemed most highly in themselves, and by enlarging and exalting them without bounds, they have showed, as plainly as have more enlightened ages, the spontaneous longing of the human spirit to rise above itself, and to ally its destiny with a Supreme Power. Discourse of William Ellery Channing.

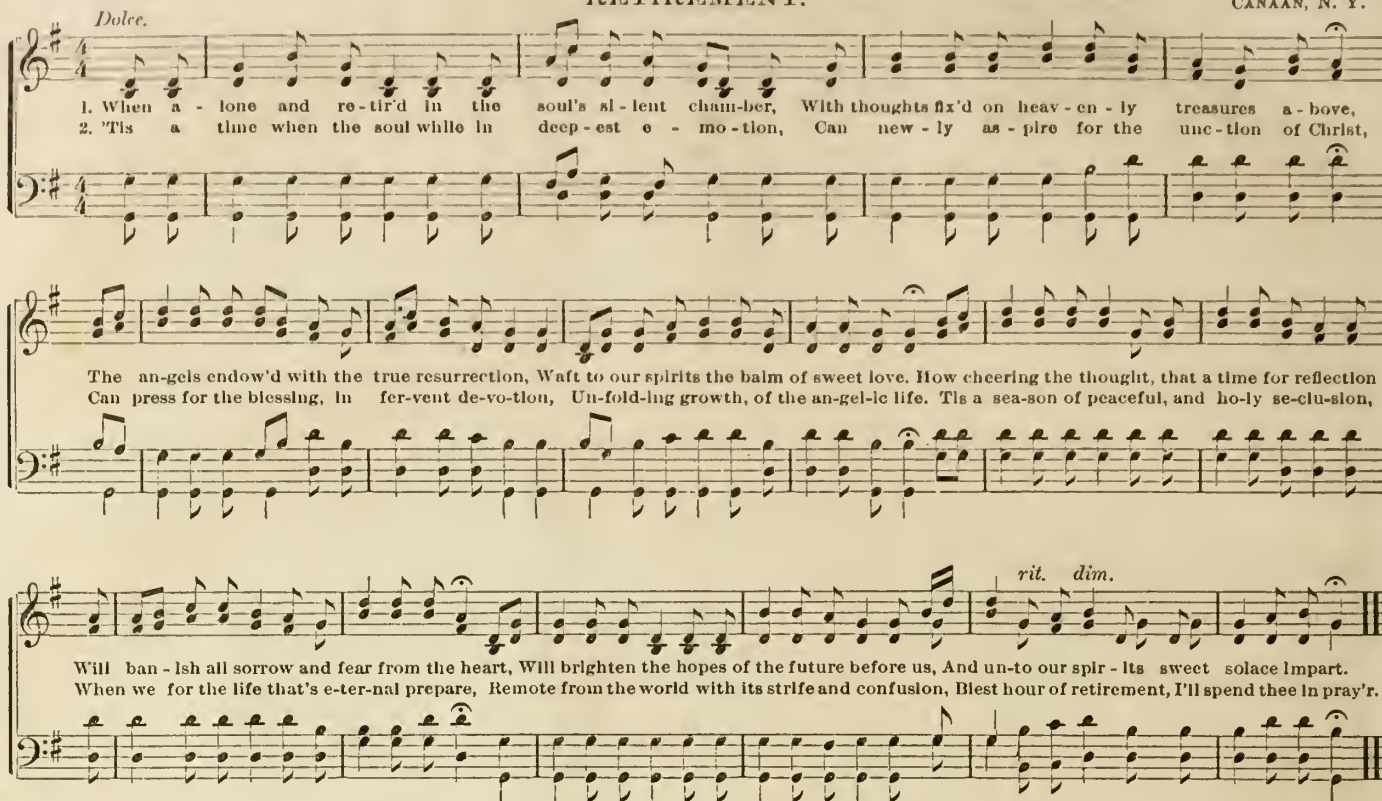

HUMAN happiness depends upon general exertion for goodness. The spirit which incites to harmony and universal love is the product of self-denial. Discordant elements come from unsubdued passions raging in the human soul, while kindness and gentleness are from angel spheres. Self-indulgence is the producing cause of the former; self-denial of the latter. Who would not prefer the lamb to the lion for a companion? O, it is beautiful to mark the footsteps of the lowly. Truth is their motto; love, their shield.

By an act of his Majesty James II, the penalties attached to witchcraft were declared applicable to every woman who, by means of cosmetics, false hair, padding, stays, hoops, high-heeled shoes, or other feminine devices, should seduce and betray into matrimony any member of the opposite sex, and a marriage contracted under such circumstances was pronounced null and void. Were such a statute in force now-a-days, there would be little need for Indiana divorces, and mothers-in-law would become the most transient of life's fleeting ills.

LOST BIRTHRIGHT.

—o—
If ten thousand years were due me,
And I held the globe at cost,
What, pray what, would all avail me,
If by it my soul were lost?

Said the Lord, the great Exemplar,
Not a night shall pass from here,
Till the soul, whose life is endless,
Will be in another sphere.

Hold ye fast your claim — your birthright —
To a life in endless bliss;
All this world, with all its treasures,
Cannot be compared to this.

Should I misimprove my calling,
Waste my summer-time in sin,
Where, or when, or how, O tell me,
Can I get my time again?

Who will run and overtake it,
Chain and bring it back to me?
Place me in the same surroundings
Just as all were wont to be?

I've refused the good Physician,
Scorn'd the balm she offer'd me,
Set at nought her kindly counsel,
Till I'm left to sink, you see.

All my light has turn'd to darkness,
All my comrades gone on by,
I am left alone to perish;
But, alas! I cannot die.

All the past comes up before me,
All my work to do again!
None to help me, none to pity!
None to cure or share my pain!

Though I cry with heartfelt sorrow,
Howl in bitterness of soul,
None to hear me! dread dilemma!
No companionship in hell!

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

—o—
O YE who strive for outward forms of Law,
That statute books may flaunt the sacred Names,
You do not press and cavil for a straw;
You are not making merely wordy claims.
Nay, never, since the young Republic's hands

Stretch'd forth with welcome for the earth's oppress'd,
Were forged for her such life-destroying bauds,

Such poison'd arrows pointed at her breast.

For, whether motives selfish or sincere

Impel your hearts to such benighted zeal,

You draw Inquisitorial terrors near,

And whet anew the persecutor's steel.

Of form-observing Pharisees beware,

Who cry, Lord! Lord! while yet they crush

the poor;

For pride, pretense, and solemn, lengthen'd

prayer,

Shall, as of old, but reprimand secure.

They would rebuild old Babel's dusky tower,

And prove her sequel efforts brought to nought;

But ne'er again shall Superstition's power

Defeat Progression, or repress new thought.

Yea, they would make a graven name of God,

To bow before, or cover public stain;

Truth thunders like mount Sinai, far abroad,

"Thou shalt not take the name of God in vain."

The foul adulteries of the Church and State,

Whose fiend-like progeny have cursed the earth.

It is not theirs again to consummate,

Or give to tyrants all that life is worth.

There was but one who trod the "press"

alone,

And twelve dispensers of the heavenly wine:

Had you their "gift," your numbers (so outgrown)

Might draw baptismal floods of life Divine.

O, when the nation's needful work is done,

When sins of Government shall be no more,

When Christian love shall shine out as the sun.

And God can bless the land from shore to shore,

You will not ask for empty names, to bring

The heart's acknowledgment of heavenly care.

Men do not write a label for the Spring,

When blossom'd trees are breathing on the air.

Take from the books the penalty of death,

And laws which hold fair womanhood in thrall;

Let Freedom breathe, with Inspiration's breath,

Life, liberty, and happiness for all!

Yea, honor God yourselves, in deed and word,
Teach the pure lesson of the "golden rule,"
Strip all your creeds of ev'ry thing absurd,
And be as Angels at Bethesda's pool.

Cecelia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

PARABLE.

—o—
THEN shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco-seed; which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew, and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad, so that huge and vile worms found a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sons of men looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hand, and did chew thereof.
And some it made sick, and others to vomit most filthily. And it further came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said: We are enslaved and cannot cease from chewing it. And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul, and they were seized with a violent spitting; and they did spit even in ladies' parlors, and in the house of the Lord of hosts.
And the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby. And in the course of time it came also to pass that others snuffed it; and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty sneeze, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly. And yet others cunningly wrought the leaves thereof into rolls, and did set fire to one end thereof, and did look very grave and calf-like; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever.

And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth; and the merchantmen waxed rich by the commerce thereof. And it came to pass that the saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith; even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith, and said: Wherefore this waste; and why do these little ones lack bread, and shoes, and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat, and put this evil thing far from you; and be separate, and defile not yourselves any more; and I will bless you and cause my face to shine upon you.

But with one accord they all exclaimed: "We cannot cease from chewing, snuffing, and puffing;
we are slaves."—Ex.

THE HEAVENS.

—o—

THAT the heavens are plural, is as generally an admitted fact as any that can be named. How many heavens there are, is an open question. But the number seven would probably gather to it the greatest number of believers, both within and outside of our Order. "Ye know not what spirit ye are of," said Jesus to his disciples, when they proposed to do as Elijah had done before them, bring from the spirit-world, through the agency of spirits in the second or Jewish heavens, primitive fire to consume the villagers who would not receive and entertain them over night.

How was this? What had these people done, or not done, deserving of death, even at the hands of angels, and by fire coming down from heaven? The disciples at the time were professing to be Christians, to be under the ministrations of spirits of the seventh sphere; and were being instructed in "the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," which was the dawn of the seventh heaven upon this earth.

The angels of the second heaven were still in the life of generation and war. Their Zion on earth was the Jewish temple; and, under the influence of the religious revival inaugurated by John the Baptist, those angels helped Jesus, by inspiring and using him as a medium, to cleanse the temple of the thieves and robbers, together with the money and the animals, which had turned it into a house of merchandise, instead of "a house of prayer for all nations."*

That was war on the Jewish plane, and in the degree represented by Elijah. It was right on the part of those angels in the order and heaven they were in. But it was wrong on the part of Jesus, in the order and heaven under which he was called; and, in the cool of the day, when Jesus came out of his mediumship, and began to feel after the angels of his higher mission, he was humbled by their presence, and fell under judgment and condemnation, which the disciples observing, the prophetic saying came to their remembrance: "The zeal of thine house," in the lower order, "hath eaten" up his life in the Christ heaven; until, in his "humiliation" and repentance, "his judgment was taken away" by a renewed baptism from the seventh heaven, and a restoration to union with his proper ministering angels, which he received, not as a Jew, but as a Christian. Thus was Jesus instructed in the Christian sphere of warfare, which is not physical or carnal, but is "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

It was not carnal, even as pure Jewish wars were not carnal, where no physical violence was done by those in the body, death being inflicted by disembodied warriors.

Reproduction of the highest order was the same in the children of promise or premeditation, where offspring was the sole object of sexual intercourse. It was, then, simply as a Jew that Jesus was a medium in the temple for the angels of the heaven who inspired Elijah. And as Jews, his Apostles, who had thus seen Jesus exercise war on the Jewish plane, essayed, in the case of the Samaritans, to follow his example, not yet having attained to the Christ sphere of war. Jesus having received reproof and instruction himself, administered by the Christ angels, administered the same to his Apostles, saying, "The son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

That was not to them entire redemption from one sphere to the other; for they would alternate between the two. When the Christ cross was too heavy, they would drop it, and take up the Jewish cross, as the more natural and bearable of the two. Anon, they would repent, and rise again into their proper order, until they learned to know what spirit they were of, and from which of the heavens their ministering spirits had come to them from their old heavens, which were fast passing away from them, or from their new heavens, in which they were called to form a permanent inheritance.

It is the same to-day with the representatives of the various sects and opposers of sects in Babylon, who are called to be Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, and to receive ministrations from the same Christ-heavens from which Jesus and his Apostles received their ministrations; "God having concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all;" it being a law, that none in an inferior dispensation can sin beyond the power of redemption by that which succeeds and is superior to it; as it is also a law, that those who have attained to the highest degree of spirituality in an inferior dispensation, when conjoined to a sensual, animal life, are more difficult of resurrection than those who live an equally sensual life, but whose spiritual powers have not been quickened to the same degree. In the superior dispensation, the constant tendency of old habits and modes of thought is to attract and bring back their former ministering and guardian spirits; and the last end of such persons is worse than the first, because it is more difficult to convict them of the fact, and convert them the second time; even as it would be more difficult to cause fire to pass over the burnt forest of the West than it was previous to the conflagration. This is one of the stratagems of the enemy, of which the Apostles declared themselves to be not ignorant.

"There is a way which seemeth right to a man, the end whereof is death." Nothing so confirms a person in the correctness of his ideas, or positions, as the impress of the spirit who is in the same mental and spiritual condition. It becomes "confirmation strong as proofs from Holy Writ." "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits," and seek to know to what order they belong, and from what heaven or hell, or intermediate sphere they have proceeded — whether from the old heavens, from which you used to be inspired when living in the world, or from the new heavens whence alone inspirations may come that will create you anew — make you a new creature. As of old, the spirits that acknowledged that Christ had come to men and women in the flesh, in the persons of Jesus and Peter and his successors, until the Church fled into the wilderness; so also, in our day, those spirits who acknowledge that Christ has come in Ann Lee with equal power, and to her successors with as great authority as they appeared in those whom Jesus sent, are true Christ Spirits.

COMMUNITY.

—o—

A Shaker Society is not one great Community of temporal interests, as is so generally supposed by outsiders.

In each Society there are several Communities, or Families. The members of every Family have "all things common" secured by Covenant. Agreeable to its provisions, executive officers are appointed from Elders and Trustees down to the minor officers — care-takers and burden-bearers, "helpers in Government." In it, there are no invidious distinctions of rich and poor, male or female; all fare alike in food and clothing, and all are equally eligible to office, the government being dual.

Families in a Society may differ in their temporal conditions, from fortuitous circumstances, such as location, the business they chose to adopt, the ability to conduct affairs, the number of members, and from many other causes of a temporal and spiritual nature — the same contingencies as those to which Societies are subject.

Hence Families, or Communities, and even Societies, which are aggregations of Communities, may be, comparatively, rich or poor. But, in a poor Family, the poverty is entirely nominal, inasmuch as, so long as the organization lasts, the physical wants of such are quite as amply provided for as are those of a rich Family or Society.

* It was at the instigation of the same Jewish spirits, that Jesus attended a wedding, and that he commanded his Apostles to sell their clothes, to buy swords with the proceeds.

Indeed, as a general rule, the poor among Shakers are those who live the fullest, and that is one means of their poverty. And the worst that can happen is, that the waning Family becomes broken up, and its members absorbed in other Families of the Society. Then they are as rich as any other of the members.

"And the children of Israel gathered some more, some less of the manna; and, when they did mete it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. They gathered every man according to his eating." (Ex. 17: 18.)

Consequently, it is not the county-house door that stands open before the poor Shaker, but the door of and into some other of the several Communities, where they are made heartily welcome as to their own. It is thus that the abstract idea of equality is realized throughout the Order, consisting of some sixty Communities, and that the fear and dread of poverty, of sickness, and of old age, so potent in the world, is entirely removed from every true and faithful member of the Organization.

ZION'S YOUTH.

"Young men (and women) be strong; for ye are able to overcome the wicked one."

—o—

FROM observation and experience we are inevitably led to conclude, that this is a world of rudiments. All things, including religion, seem to be in an incipient stage of development. When we first become conscious of existence, as moral and spiritual beings upon this earth, what very rude and crude patterns of men and women we find ourselves to be. With this painful discovery comes an inward longing for something better and more happy; and we look about us for some path by which we may reach that better and happier estate. This uneasiness and discontent are the good soil wherein the seeds of a holy inspiration from on high may be sown; and, if carefully watered by the tears of a salutary repentance, and cultivated by a sincere discipline of the mind in practical holiness—personal righteousness—will yield harvest after harvest of permanent peace—continual atonement—with God forever.

It is of the utmost importance that an individual commencing such an existence, which must be eternal, should know, and solemnly ponder these things as early as possible. For, without this knowledge, one may go on for many years in a path directly away from permanent happiness and peace; every step of which must finally be retraced with godly sorrow, as so much time and labor lost, before the spiritual journey, which should have been undertaken long ago, can even be commenced.

This is not the worst. Habits of thought and action, which have been contracted in the wrong direction, and greatly to the disadvantage of persons so unfortunate as above stated, often cling to them for long years after they have found, and sincerely entered upon, the bright path of regeneration. How happy and fortunate, then, are those who can say, in the words of the sacred hymn:

"The holy Redeemer arrested my soul,
When ruinward I should have gone, [roll'd
And calm'd the high waves of temptation that
And beckon'd me lovingly on."

Now, if the giddiness of youth, and "the pleasures of sin for a season," are allowed to take precedence of the higher interests of man in the commencement of his career, then, when years shall have been wasted and gone, to return no more forever, he will look back upon them with bitter grief, and will remember a fearful catalogue of sinful derelictions, words and acts, blasted hopes, and a wounded conscience, which will be as so many broken reeds upon which he cannot lean, and will find himself "pierced through with many sorrows" and agonies which will not be hushed.

O what an asylum from evils is a sweet, pure home among Believers, if it is wisely appreciated. I know this by experience, having been in the enjoyment thereof for over half a century, and ever since I was five years old. I began quite early to think of these things. There was something floated across the disk of my mind—a kind of awful, ominous shadow. My conscience seemed to anticipate the terrible wreck of all my peace, should I yield myself to sensual delights. An undefinable terror seemed to seize me, whenever any image of impurity opened the door of my mind, and looked in upon me. For a long time, I was daily in tears, agitations, and prayers, lest I should one day fall by the hand of one of these Sauls of sensuality. But, after a time, I was enabled to fully triumph over them. I rejected the temptation, and, from that day to this, I have never yielded.

The great and all-important inference to be drawn from this, which I desire should be received by every youth in Zion is, that, if he or she would take the shortest and least sorrowful road to invulnerable and solid peace, let him or her, after commencing the conflict, resolve firmly to never yield to the enemy one single time.

In rolling a heavy stone up a steep hill, if we let it get out of our hands and roll to the bottom, or only part of the way, we not only lose all, or at least, a great portion of what we had gained, but must be at the expense of immense fatigue to regain what we have lost; and the consequences of this vacillating manner of operation are, a vast accumulation of sorrow, weakened resolutions, and waste of time. Not that we would have any become discouraged at any amount of halting, or even yielding, for a time, to adverse influences. For, as Father James once said, "Howsoever low we may fall, it is never too late to cry to God." Blessed sentiment of everlasting charity! Worthy indeed of the Son of a God whose prime elements are sovereign Love and supreme Wisdom! We only sincerely wish to encourage all our youths to take the easiest, shortest, and most successful path to a state of perennial spiritual serenity and peace—eternal life.

And let us all remember, that we have no continuing city, therefore let us seek, among the bright fields of Progress, a better and more enduring habitation; one where joy and happiness, and the peace that passeth our present understanding, may not be shaken to pieces by every misfortune, or adversity of life, as is the fate of all earthly pleasures. Let us not forget that beautiful Bible precept:

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come, and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." And that sweet inspiration, breathed by the rapt Seer of Babylon: "They that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

ORTHODOXY vs. SCIENCE.

—o—

"I AM now advised that a new astrologer is risen, who presumeth to prove that the earth moveth and goeth about, not the firmament; the sun and moon, not the stars—like as when one sitteth on a coach, or in a ship that is moved, thinketh he sitteth still and resteth, but the earth and trees do move and run themselves. Thus it goeth; we give ourselves up to our own foolish fancies and conceits. This fool (Copernicus) will turn the whole art of astronomy upside down; but the Scripture showeth and teacheth another lesson when Joshua commandeth the sun to stand still, and not the earth."—Martin Luther quoted in "Exeter Hall."

OTTO has a new jury law, omitting the word "white."

BI-SEXUALITY OF GOD.

—o—

IT is a very strange thing to the outside world, that the Shakers, who have never made much pretension to a knowledge of Hebrew and Greek, should have lit upon the idea of the bi-sexuality of God, manifesting Himself in the flesh, first in the male, and then in the female—Jesus and Ann. The Hebrew word "El" is the radical meaning of God the Creator. The word "Ann" signifies a Mother. If, then, the word "Elohim," God, is a compound of these, it expresses the idea of Bi-Sexuality—Father and Mother God.

The Greek word "Theos," God, according to Bretschneider's Lexicon, is both masculine and feminine, and conveys the idea of the Hindoo theology, the oldest on earth, that the sexes unite in the great First Cause.

It may seem to strengthen this conception of the Divine Bi-Sexuality, when we contemplate the fact, that the Shakers never got it from books. It seems to have been breathed upon them by the Spirit of God, through Angels and glorified spirits, according to the Greek word "theopneustos," which expresses this very thing.

You are aware that Mr. Darwin maintains that the human race was once androgynous; that is to say, the two sexes were united in the same person. Physiologists find proof of this in the rudimental organs; those organs which, in both sexes, are of no use to them now, but which were in use in those far back times, when the race was in its primitive condition of development. However this may be, it cannot be doubted, that the finest human characters among men, are those which blend the strength of the male with the purity and gentleness of the female. And the finest female characters are those which blend the conscious self-reliance and self-respect of the man, with the instinctive gentleness and delicacy of the woman. A man all male does not command our sympathy and confidence. A woman all female has always been the symbol of weakness, and an object of commiseration. Yet it does not take away from the manliness of a man, that there is a broad stripe of the woman woven into his character. Nor does it rob a woman of her chief glory, because she has the firmness, the perseverance, and self-reliance, of her brother, joined with the loveliness that is essentially feminine.

VITALITY.

—o—

I HAVE turned my attention to the consideration of the circumstances under which seeds will retain their vitality; and to ascertain the length of time in which they will remain dormant without losing their power of growth. I have read some very interesting cases of seeds which have been brought to the surface of the earth from 300 feet below, and yet germinated, and which, it seems, were buried some thousands of years. I quote from Professor Gray:

"It is well known, that seeds which have been kept for sixty years have germinated; and, it seems, that grains of wheat, taken from the ancient mummies, under circumstances which leave little doubt of their high antiquity, have been caused to germinate; but in these cases, there are several sources of possible deception."

"Dr. Lindley records the remarkable cases of some raspberries raised, in the garden of the Horticultural Society, from seeds taken from the stomach of a man, whose skeleton was found thirty feet below the surface of the earth, at the bottom of a barrow, which was opened near Dorchester. He had been buried with some coins of the Emperor Hadrian; it is therefore probable that the seed was sixteen or seventeen hundred years old. Most seeds, when buried deep in the soil, where they are subject to a uniform and moderate temperature, and removed from the influence of the air and light, are in a favorable state for the preservation of vitality, and will germinate when brought to the surface, after a long interval."

If it should hereafter be demonstrated, that the vegetable and animal kingdoms were only organized to propagate a specified number of generations; still, we need have no immediate fear of our cultivated plants failing for a long time, if due care be taken to hold a sufficient quantity of seeds in reserve for future use. It is, therefore, particularly recommended that a proper understanding of this subject be cultivated by Believers.

So much for the propagation of plants. I will now introduce another subject.

The generations of mankind pass through the same regular course of changes as do individuals; and, therefore, as an individual is "once a man, and twice a child," the same condition of dotage is destined to befall mankind as a generation. For, in his generations, man has passed through the stages of childhood, youth, manhood, etc., and it would now seem that he is nearing the stage of old age.

In early days and times, he had not the capacity of comprehension that he now has. So that, if an angel who was master of the arts and sciences, as now understood by the literati, had, at that period, come down to earth to teach them, he (the angel) would have found the capacities of the human race too weak and feeble for the study. But now look at the capacity of man; see what great discoveries he has made, and what understanding he has acquired! Think of the telegraph, the railroad, and the numerous other inventions extant; and thereby obtain an idea of his development. But old age must put a stop to his inventions; and he, as a race, must depend on the acquirements and knowledge that have been gained during his manhood state.

I will now bring this article to a close; but will, perhaps, resume it in a short time.

WORK.

THE parable concerning the servants to whom certain talents were delivered, is very instructive. When they had received each their talents, their lord said, "Occupy (or improve) till I come." He did not say, "occupy till you get tired, and then lay by;" but, "occupy till I come" and call on you.

This teaches us, that we are not to lay down or give up any talent, or gift given us to improve; but that we must hold on and faithfully and patiently work, till the authority which bestowed the gift shall release us. Self must not dictate in this. To him who had received five, and gained other five talents, that is, doubled his capacity and gift for usefulness, it was said: "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things;" thou hast established thy character for faithfulness and integrity, and at the same time hast so improved thy gifts and capacity for further usefulness, that thou canst now take and bear a much heavier burden. I therefore now appoint thee to take the burden, care, and government of "ten cities." Thus we see that the good lord of this good and faithful servant did not now release him, saying, You have done very well; go now and loil, and take your ease! Instead of this, you see, he appointed him a tenfold burden, and a more arduous duty; and this, for the very good reason, that his increased experience and skill well qualified him for the performance of this extra service. The same is true of the other servants who had faithfully improved their gifts, however small. Each received additional burdens, in proportion to what had been given and improved. What is remarkable, and most worthy of imitation in all those who are called good and faithful servants, we do not hear of their ever complaining or expressing any disappointment. Each took his increased burden and went on cheerfully doing the will of his lord. They did not say, "Why, I think I have served long enough; and I certainly expected that you, my lord, would release me now, and let me take my ease." No such talk as that proceeded from the mouths of those devoted servants, who had no motive nor any higher source of joy than to be employed in promoting the work and kingdom of their lord. It was their meat and drink to do his will. And they did not wish to be released from sitting at their lord's table, nor did they desire to cease from doing his work. This looking for releasement and ease would have approached too near to the character of that lazy servant who buried his talent. All the difference there seems to be in the two characters, is merely of time. The slothful servant buried his talent and commenced his life of idleness and ease immediately, while the other went to work only for a time, and then quitted labor and his lord's interest, and commenced the same life of ease and indolence that the other did in the start. Neither of them devoted himself to his lord and his work, soul and body, for time and eternity, like the good and faithful servants.

In the Church of Jesus Christ, there is, substantially, but the two characters: The good and faithful servant, who, without reserve, devotes himself wholly and forever to his Lord's service, and goes on improving his talents for usefulness, and increasing his burden and service as his talents increase; and the slothful servant, who either refuses to work, or, if he begins, reserves the right to quit when he pleases; and, consequently, soon demands to be released, and joins the other in a life of ease and idleness. Or, if he works at all, must do his own will, and pick and choose for himself what he will condescend to do! He who takes this latter course is not serving his Lord and doing his will, but serving himself and doing his own will.

There may be some who will readily agree with all that has been said, and with great liberality give it all away to the official members of the body—the Ministry, Elders, Trustees and Deacons. They must all stand up to the work, and never flinch, or lay down their gifts! But the ox driver, the horse teamster, the cow tender, the carpenter, shoemaker, farmer, or gardener, or broom-maker, they may all, or any of them, throw up their work just when they please, and say: If the Elders and Deacons don't release me, I'll do something else! Who made this line of distinction between those called officials and others, that the first should be bound always to do their Lord's will, and the latter to do as they please? Is the Gospel requirement partial? We do not believe that. Every one of us, from the least to the greatest, is equally bound to improve the gifts committed to us, whether few or many, great or small. If you faithfully improve, and steadfastly continue to go on, you will gain and deserve the character of "good and faithful servants." If you refuse to do this, and set up your own wills and lay out for yourselves, you will inevitably be classed with the slothful servant, and share the awful fate apportioned to him.

CHURCH PROPERTY AND TAXATION.

WHEN a principle is set in motion, we may not find it stopping when we order a halt, says one of our exchangers. It goes on, embodying itself in new forms, and suggesting fresh applications. We have protested against the union of Church and State. We have insisted that the State should not support sectarian schools. Now the question comes up, Should the State show special favors to religious corporations? And a negative answer seems to imply that Church property, in the form of meeting-houses, parsonages, etc., ought to be taxed like any other real estate, since declining to lay a tax of $100 on a meeting-house is substantially the same thing as giving the society that holds it the sum of $100 a year to aid it in its general and special religious work.—Ex.

OBSCENE LITERATURE.

Is it not a novel idea to commence the suppression of obscene literature, by incarceration in the Tombs those persons who, of all others, except the Shakers, are the most fearless and unselfish expositors and denouncers of the "social evils," from which the obscene literature proceeds?

This is akin to the St. Louis legislation where men enact the most abominable obscenity, enforced by the most outrageous violation of individual rights, that it is in the power of men to inflict upon women, who, in all respects, except physical might, are their equals. In both cases the "social evil" is increased, and its abettors, who occupy high places, shield themselves by persecuting their prosecutors.

THE MORMONS

Are one step in advance of popular Christianity, in solving the sexual problem. They have gone back to Judaism, out of which Christianity arose. Marriage, combined with the "social evil" practices of the popular Christians, is further from Christianity—Shakerism—than is the polygamy of the Mormons, combined with the absence of the "social evil" habits of Washington, New York, or Boston. Prostitution of adults, and masturbation of juveniles, being unknown in Utah, except so far as they are introduced by the influx of monogamic Christians.

Wherewith is the moral superiority of the St. Louis Christians, who legalize prostitution and raise revenue from it, over the Mormons, who legalize polygamy and suppress all other forms of the "social evil?"

The servant of God should be of "quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." Is. xi. 3 & 4.

EFFECTS OF BAD HABITS.

WE have the fullest assurances from our spirit friends that the effects of bad habits in life, and of some diseases, linger on the spirit after the body dies in which they were engendered. The burning hankering after liquor, that is the effect of drunkenness, we are assured, does not stop suddenly at death, but, for a time, torments the spirit as it did while in the body; and we are also assured that it is the same with a love of tobacco, and that it is as easy to break off and conquer these habits here as in the spirit-world. Whenever any effect is wrought into the mind, as a consequence of indulgence in any injurious, pernicious, or wicked habit in life, that effect has to be outgrown, even after the cause that first produced it has ceased, as in the case of drinking or chewing tobacco. Profane swearing, also, which unfits a person for refined society, does not always stop at death, and the spirit is thereby left out of that refined society which rises and lives above its use. If all people could fully realize the necessity of fitting here for the society they would choose in the next life, we feel sure more would reform and refine themselves, and more would cure themselves of the injurious effects on the mind, arising from the teachings of a false theology, that has taught us that it is not that which enters in at the mouth that defileth the man, and that death would wholly and totally change us from our earthly wants and habits, etc.

FARMECOPŒIA.

LATEST in the series of the Detroit Tribune's very characteristic "Farm Ballads" is this autograph of the medical country practitioner upon the assumed professional wisdom of some folks:

THE DOCTOR LOQUITOR.

I.

Good folks ever will have their way —
Good folks ever for it must pay.
But we, who are here and everywhere,
The burden of their faults must bear.
We must shoulder others' shame —
Fight their follies, and take their blame;
Purge the body, and humor the mind;
Doctor the eyes when the soul is blind;
Build the column of health erect
On the quicksands of neglect;
Always shouldering others' shame —
Bearing their faults, and taking the blame!

II.

Deacon Rogers, he came to me;
"Wife is a-goin' to die," said he;
"Doctors great and doctors small,
Hav'n't improved her any at all.
"Physic and blisters, powders and pills,
And nothing sure but the doctors' bills!
"Twenty old women, with remedies new,
Bother my wife the whole day through;
"Sweet as honey, or bitter as gall —
Poor old woman, she takes 'em all;
"Sour or sweet, whatever they choose,
Poor old woman, she daren't refuse.
"So she pleases who'er may call,
An' death is suited the best of all.
"Physic and blister, powder an' pill —
Bound to conquer, an' sure to kill!"

III.

Mrs. Rogers lay in her bed,
Bandaged and blister'd from foot to head.
Blister'd and bandaged from head to toe,
Mrs. Rogers was very low.
Bottle and saucer, spoon and cup,
On the table stood bravely up;
Physics of high and low degree;
Calomel, catnip, boneset tea;
Everything a body could bear,
Excepting light, and water, and air.

IV.

I open'd the blinds; the day was bright,
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some light.
I opened the window; the day was fair,
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some air.
Bottles and blisters, powders and pills,
Catnip, boneset, syrups, and squills;
Drugs and medicines, high and low,
I threw them as far as I could throw.
"What are you doing?" my patient cried;
"Frightening Death," I coolly replied.
"You are crazy," a visitor said;
I flung a bottle at her head.

V.

Deacon Rogers, he came to me;
"Wife is a-comin' around," said he.
"I re'lly think she will worry through;
She scolds me just as she used to do.
"All the people have poohed an' slurr'd —
All the neighbors have had their word;
"Twas better to perish some of them say,
Than to be cured in such an irregular way."

VI.

"Your wife," said I, "had God's good care,
And his remedies — light, and water, and air.
"All of the doctors, beyond a doubt,
Could not have cured Mrs. Rogers without."

VII.

The deacon smiled and bowed his head;
"Then your bill is nothing," he said.
"God's be the glory, as you say!
God bless you, Doctor! good day! good day!"

VIII.

If ever I doctor that woman again,
I'll give her medicines made by men.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE A SUCCESS.

WYOMING Territory was almost the pioneer in making the experiment of woman suffrage, and now comes testimony of the most important character, as to how the thing works in that Rocky mountain region, from an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court of that Territory, Hon. J. W. Kingman. He records his observation (says the Boston Journal), for the benefit, it is true, of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association, but his judicial character ought to save him from the suspicion of coloring his account out of compliment to his correspondents. "It has been three years (he says) since the political rights of the women of Wyoming have been made equal with those of the men; and, although some do not yet approve of it as a principle, none will deny that it has exerted a purifying and beneficial effect in practice. For instance, everybody in the Territory used to carry arms, and altercations were frequent, while juries of men never convicted either party for shooting at each other, even in a crowded room, if no one was killed; or for killing any one, if the victim was armed. But (says Judge Kingman) with two or three women on the jury, they have never failed to follow the instructions of the Court. So, too, with regard to the enforcement of the laws against drunkenness, gambling, houses of ill-fame, and the like, neither grand nor petit juries could be relied on, 'but a few women on either panel changed the face of things at once.'"

The Judge affirms that not a single verdict, civil or criminal, has been set aside, where women have composed a part of the jury; and that they make more attentive and impartial jurors than men, on the average. Another thing, which may be of less importance, but is still worthy of being taken into account, is the influence women have had on deportment in the court room. "The spectators come there better dressed, chew less tobacco, and spit less, sit more quietly in their seats, walk more carefully over the floor, talk and whisper less; and in all respects the court room assumes a more dignified and business-like air." The same improvement is witnessed at the polls, the women voters being uniformly treated with respect, and the old scenes of noise and disorder having disappeared. Many women refuse to vote as their husbands do, but, says the innocent Judge: "I have not heard of any domestic discord or trouble growing out of such a course." — Ex.

HOW TO BREAK OFF BAD HABITS.

—O—

UNDERSTAND the reasons why the habit is injurious. Study the subject till there is no lingering doubt in your mind. Avoid the places, the persons, and the thoughts that lead to the temptation. Frequent the places, associate with the persons, indulge the thoughts that lead away from the temptation. Keep busy; idleness is the strength of bad habits. Do not give up the struggle when you have broken your resolution once, twice, a thousand times. That only shows how much need there is for you to strive. When you have broken your resolution, just think the matter over, and endeavor to understand why it is you failed, so that you may be on your guard against a recurrence of the same circumstances. Do not think it an easy thing that you have undertaken. It is folly to expect to break off a habit in a day which has been gathering strength in you for years. — Ex.

DR. CHALMERS beautifully said: "The little that I have seen in the world, and known of the history of mankind, teaches me to look upon their errors in sorrow, not in anger. — When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it has passed through — the brief pulsation of joy; the tears of regret; the feebleness of purpose; the scorn of the world that has little charity; the desolation of the soul's sanctuary, and threatening voice within; health gone; happiness gone — I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellow man with him from whose hands it came." — Ex.

WHY DO WE TAKE MEDICINE?

—O—

BECAUSE the doctors prescribe it. But why do they prescribe it? It is none of our business to ask. And yet it is very refreshing to hear the doctors themselves asking each other, as Dr. Robert Bartholomew does in his recent introductory address before the Medical College of Ohio: "Cui bono? What is it all worth? What is the value of the work in which we are engaged as students and practitioners? Is this business of ours a mere sham?"

It is really hopeful for us who are alive and well, but expect some time to be sick, to see a doctor come out of that owl-like inscrutability of wisdom which characterizes the average physician, and talk right out in meeting with common sense, frankness, and lucidity of statement. After showing how "fallacious medical 'experience' is, when nothing more than 'the expression of preconceived opinions, or the prejudices engendered of fixed professional usages and current belief," Dr. B. declares that 'ignorance renders the most persevering observation nugatory. If a man does not know what it is he sees, of little value to him is experience. The sympathetic power of Sir Kenelin Digby, the elixir of Paracelsus, the thirtieth potency of Hahnemann, have been supported by the experience of vast numbers. The former unanimity in favor of the efficiency of blood-letting in fever, of calomel in certain inflammations, is only equaled by the present disbelief in the reality of those experiences.'"

"How then," Dr. Bartholomew inquires, "shall we ascertain the worth of our remedies?" His answer is, that the doctors must apply the scientific tests, which in other departments of knowledge, yield exact results. He ingenuously confesses that "if our so-called therapeutical facts do not respond to scientific questions; if we have no other arguments in support of them than faith, and an experience, as vague as it is uncertain and delusive, then may our souls be possessed with the fear that drug-giving is a hollow mockery." That is just the uncomfortable fear which does sometimes possess the souls of us laymen who have to send for the doctor. — Ex.

CHURCH AND STATE.

—O—

I VERY largely attribute the decline of religious interest in some directions to the interest which has been taken in the questions which naturally arise out of the adulterous connection at present existing between religion and the state in this land. We should never be satisfied until we stand upon an equal footing, all of us in matters of religion. An Established Church is an established tyranny. We wear upon our wrists each one of us, as dissenters, fetters that gall us worse than if they were made of steel. We have to support a church whose business it is to oppose the truth we try to preach; we have to maintain an institution which tries to pull down that which we would be willing to die to maintain. Popery is this day paid for in this land; that which our fathers died and rotted in prison to put down, we have to contribute to support, and we cannot help feeling indignant — we should be less than men, certainly less than the sons of the Puritans who made the Cavaliers feel the strength of their right arms, if we do not feel in our souls that we cannot long submit to the tyranny which galls us every day. Down with it! Down with it! We will be free, as God lives. This question must be answered and settled once for all, and the sooner it is done with, the better; and we mean that it shall be done with, by God's help, ere long. — Mr. Spurgeon on the Disestablishment of the English Church.

WHAT WE WANT. — We want an atmosphere of pure, solid truth. We want preachers who will tell what they think without reserve. We want physicians who will disclose the laws of health in the simplest words. We want lawyers, who will execute law with a leaning all the time to justice and morality. We want politicians who love our republican institutions, and sincerely desire to preserve and improve them; who will not falsely, or allow others to do so in their behalf, without instant correction. If we can have these things, our liberties are assured forever. If we cannot, they are endangered every day. — Ex.

CONSCIENCE.

—o—

Is there any thing that an intelligent human being should desire more than a healthy conscience? The Creator of the Universe, of mind and matter, the great Designer of all things in the visible and invisible worlds, subjected all things to law and order, and placed conscience in the human soul as a guide and dictator of the actions of life. However lengthy the period of time may have been in bringing the component parts together, so as to form a perfect whole in the macrocosm or microcosm, it is evident that a superior Power and Intelligence comprehended the end from the beginning, and had one object and purpose in view.

Some of the ancient Seers, when under the beautiful inspiration of the Spirit, said, "Just weights and measures are the Lord's. He measured the waters, weighed the mountains in scales, balanced the hills, and meted out the heavens;" from which, we may understand that there was an original design to bring all parts together into a compact body, that they might be fitly joined together, every joint supplying its proper place; thus forming one glorious temple in which God should dwell as the central Light—the Soul and Animus of all things.

We read of defiled, and evil, and weak consciences; and also of pure and good consciences. If the conscience be pure and good, then reason will take its proper place, and act in consonance: Reason will suggest and conscience decide. If conscience be right, the reasoning powers in man and in woman will be turned Godward. In this they have the pre-eminence over the lower orders of the animal creation, which are ruled by instinct. Conscience and reason are God's crown and seal to humanity, and the express manifestation of his love. How can we ever be guilty of abusing such noble gifts, and of turning such blessings into curses? That there has been a great departure from the original design; that conscience has been violated, reason dethroned, and statutes broken, none will undertake to deny. Yet there is hope for humanity! The spirit of prophecy is again poured out upon the present generation to an extent never before known. The condensed history of the ancient Prophets that has been handed down to us, extended through long periods of time. It would appear that there were seasons when the prophetic spirit was rife among the ancients, and that it was not exclusively confined to those who were the most holy in life and character. Instance: At the same time that the seventy elders, whom Moses gathered about the tabernacle, prophesied, Saul's messengers caught the spirit and prophesied also; and even Saul, himself, was found among the prophets.

At a later period of time the prophetic spirit was confined to a few mediums. When the persecuting power, justly called "the reign of the beast," bore rule, then sorrowing witness prophesied in sackcloth and mourning. But the ages have rolled on, and the spiritual forces have been at work preparing the way for the present time, in which the spiritual progressive elements, could give birth to a New Era; and it is a most marked epoch in the world's history. And, as the rain-clouds when formed in the natural heavens, descend upon the just and the unjust; so it is in the spiritual elements; the gifts of God are given without repentance, to lead souls thereunto that all may be left without excuse. Some receive the gifts of the Spirit and consume them upon the animal, sensual appetites, and thereby "turn the grace of God into lasciviousness;" and light in them becomes darkness, which is dense. Such gather around them false, deceiving spirits, who prophesy falsely, and fill the minds of many with doubt and confusion.

Water, to be sweet to the taste, must be conveyed to us in clean vessels. However pure it may be when it issues from the fountain, unless the channel through which it flows to us is pure, it is neither healthful nor pleasant. So it is with the gifts of the Spirit. If mediums of communication from the inhabitants of the Spirit-spheres to mortals are truthful, just, and pure in their lives, then messages borne by them will be reliable, and will give life and health to the receiver, and will be like pure water through a clean vessel to the parched lips of the thirsty soul. Messengers sent from the higher spheres will always shed a Divine influence that will elevate and guide the feet of the Heaven-bound traveler into the highway cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in, and will aid them in keeping a good "conscience, void of offense toward God and all men."

UNDEFILED RELIGION.

—o—

To live righteously, love mercy, to exercise charity one toward another, to withdraw our affections from all inferior objects, and to love the Lord our God—"our Heavenly Father and Mother"—with all our mind, might, and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves, is practical Religion. And when under the influence of this pure spirit, we shall, under all circumstances, do by others as we would have them do by us.

Those who form the true Christian character, must rise above the work of reproduction, and become "holy in both body and mind," keeping their physical bodies pure—"fit temples for the Holy Spirit to dwell in; and they will meditate on those things which elevate the mind above sensuality. Those who thus turn their thoughts and feelings from earthly to heavenly things, will go out in spirit, seeking draughts of inspiration from the Fountain of goodness, to water and keep alive the germ of immortality which is placed in every human soul. The living spirit in man and in woman yearns for immortal food to sustain it; it "cannot live by bread alone," nor be content to feed on material things; but it must have the "living bread which cometh down from heaven" to subsist upon; and it needs the breath of Divine inspiration to fan the celestial fires of truth, that they may ever keep burning in the soul.

There are different degrees of goodness and truth on the natural plane of life; and they who live the nearest to the Moral Law, which was given to regulate man and woman in the work of reproduction, approach the nearest to the spiritual and Divine Order. But those who possess "pure and undefiled religion" will keep themselves unspotted from the world. The world here alluded to, is the "lusts of the flesh and of the mind," and are the foundational principles of the worldly life which all human beings inherit from their earthly progenitors; but they never came from our Heavenly Father and Mother.

There is a plain line of demarcation drawn by the Apostle Paul, in his epistle to the Galatians, between the worldly and the Christian life. The manifest works of the flesh are "adultery, fornication, idolatry, hatred, envyings, murders," etc., etc., with a long train of evils too numerous to mention in our space. While the fruits of the Spirit produced by those who live clean, chaste lives, are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering," etc., with other accompanying virtues. They who "live in the flesh cannot please God," because they are under the influence of "the carnal mind, which is enmity against God."

Jesus said to his disciples, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. How did he overcome the world? Was it not by a total abnegation of the generative, lustful nature within? When tempted by the adversary, he bowed not at the shrine of sensual indulgence; but persistently said to his enemy, "Get thee hence, Satan."

His religion was "pure and undefiled;" and all his true followers have done, and are doing as he did; i. e., "crucifying the flesh with all its affections and lusts"—keeping their bodies and souls pure; and are making room in their hearts for the Holy Spirit, the Heavenly Dove to dwell in.

So let none become weary in well-doing, nor grow faint or feeble while running the Gospel race; for if in "patience we possess our souls," all will be well. "Whatever we sow we shall 'certainly reap.' If we are careful to 'sow to the Spirit,' and reject all that is false and vain, and hold fast "pure and undefiled religion," we shall "reap life everlasting."

Eldress Polly Reed, Mt. Lebanon.

WOMAN.

—o—

PEOPLE have glanced carelessly at the question of woman suffrage, and turned away with the idea that it would give undue influence to women of impure lives; but the reverse is the case. Women of impure lives govern us now, through their impure influence of legislatures, judiciaries, and juries, exclusively masculine; and nothing but women in authority can remand them to their proper sphere, if they have any. The influence they could exert through the ballot by force of numbers would be unappreciable, being more than neutralized by the votes of decent women, who would make a point of consigning to political graves all politicians known to be influenced by them, and only juries composed wholly or in part of women ever will do them justice. Were the political influence now wielded by courtesans of this country divided into as many equal parts as there are women in the United States, it would give every one a vote, and place the regulation of the dram-shop and social evil questions under the control of the decent portion of the community. It is only when men consult with women whom they respect, that we can hope they will be influenced by those they do not.

READING.

—o—

KNOWLEDGE is essential to the growth and development of the human intellect, its proper aliment and nutrition; yet it is as possible to gorge the mind as the stomach; the result is as deleterious.

"Man cannot live by bread alone" (physically); nor can he live by books alone (mentally); variety of food is required, to stimulate the normal action of all his faculties. He who always feeds on the thoughts of others, is sadly neglecting the use of his own, thus stifling the sources of mental vigor and unfoldment. Book-learning is merely a matter of memory, only calling into requisition one of the many God-given powers possessed by all intelligent beings. Observation and reflection are stepping stones to independence and strength of character; it is the prerogative of every individual to use them, and thus preserve their own identity and originality.

Human nature is an ever open volume, for study, analysis, and discernment, requiring the exercise of the perceptive faculties.

First "know thyself," then is the grand mystery unsealed, and we can read, understand, and judge correctly of the motives and actions of others. Every day brings us rare and gifted opportunities for the acquisition of such knowledge as books can never give, and which those who seclude themselves in a library never acquire. Life is fraught with useful lessons that we need to learn preparatory to entering a future state of existence. If we have no definite object or aim in reading, what shall it profit? If merely for amusement, to pass away the time, or for sensual pleasure, then it would be infinitely better to put our hands to work, and engage our slumbering faculties in some noble and useful pursuit, or calling; thus fitting ourselves for a sphere of activity, in which we can be a blessing to others, and not continue as mere drones in the hive of creative existences.

We live in an age of reading; books are multiplied as the sands on the sea shore. All classes have access to the means of knowledge, that was only granted the privileged few, less than a century ago. Public libraries, free schools, and daily prints, proffer the boon of education to the lowest and most ignorant; but, with the good, there comes a greater evil. A light, trashy literature, in the form of cheap novels and low love stories, floats upon the surface of society, like scum on a stagnant pool, which is exceedingly pernicious, and as infectious as a deadly miasma; especially to the minds and morals of the young and inexperienced; increasing the "social evil" to a great extent, withdrawing their interest from high mental culture, ennobling discipline, and objects of intrinsic moral and spiritual worth. Very few young persons, in this day, will confine their attention to solid reading; it is irksome, dull, and uninteresting; they want something sensational, and exciting, the very tendency of which, is to arouse passions that ought to be subdued, to set on fire lusts of their lower nature, the products of which, are haunts of vice, misery, a prostitution of virtue, and an increase of crime, not only in low, but in high places.

Some time since I was particularly impressed with this fact. We were traveling by rail a short journey eastward. Two young women entered the car and were seated opposite, in front view; the youngest (of rather prepossessing appearance) drew from her valise a large pamphlet, and commenced reading with apparent absorption of mind. The book had the appearance of a novel; a glance revealed it. "Foul Play" was the startling title, clearly intimating its contents and character. I watched her as her interest deepened; and, on that would-be lovely face, traced the imagery of pictures base, that were stamping an indelible impress on her very soul.

I turned away with saddened thought and feeling, having read a lesson of life blighted while yet in blossom. A few moments after, a news-boy threw into my lap an illustrated paper; a cursory view disclosed the fact that it contained little else than nonsense; it was cast aside in disgust, with the sober conclusion, that good thoughts were better company than unprofitable reading.

I love good books, they are companions in solitude, and shed a light in dark places; but, would forever forego the pleasure of reading, rather than cover the chamber walls of my soul with reflective pictures, that will pain the spirit in future, when life's drama shall be reviewed; or poison the fountains of existence with the foul infection of mental and moral disease.

O that youthful minds would consider well the injunction of the wise man: "Buy the truth (not fiction), and sell it not, also wisdom, instruction, and understanding;" and desire, above all things, knowledge that will result in future happiness, rather than momentary pleasure; discerning between right and wrong, good and evil, through the exercise of the superior endowments of reason and conscience.

Martha J. Anderson, Mt. Lebanon.

CHAFF.

—o—

BELOVED EDITRESS: I know it is true that, "without the chaff there can be no wheat;" and I have been ruminating in my mind, whether I was willing to be used as such. It is, you know, a fundamental principle in Shakerism to pay all just dues. I am indebted to many dear friends who have contributed so freely to the maintenance of our little Monthly which is sent out from the Gospel Ark over the dark and turbid waters, bearing the olive-branch of hope and peace to struggling sin-bound souls. I would gladly cancel this debt were I able, but the question is, What have I to give? Have I nothing but chaff to give in exchange for good wheat? I have concluded to give the best I have to-day, and will try to gain something better for to-morrow.

I feel a great interest in the prosperity of this truth-bearing messenger; and those who are willing to forsake the natural, and rise above the animal plane of life, into the superior heavenly state, will welcome it as a harbinger of blessing to their souls.

I remember that, when I was a child, I read and heard much about the judgment day, when a separation would be made between the righteous and the wicked; that the righteous, in that day, would be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and that the wicked would be left to the flames which would continue to burn without consuming them. The thought to me was terrible! I knew that I was a sinner, and was glued as it were to the earth by unhallowed desires, and strong selfish affections; and I could not see how I could find power to break those ties, or get angel wings to rise above them. In this condition I remained many years.

But at length I was led, by the providence of God, to this people; this Zion of God upon earth. Here I found a home for both body and soul; and by confessing and forsaking sin, the judgment thereof was taken away; and, by receiving the truth in the love of it, I found that it contained enough of the Refiner's fire to consume the dross that remained; and the belief in, and dread of, a literal fire, was banished from my mind; and I also found that, by faith and good works, I might rise with the saints into the divine life; which, before, I had thought an impossibility.

And, should there be any in the dreary wilds of error and false teaching, who are suffering as I have suffered, and who desire to escape therefrom, I would kindly invite them to our Zion home, where they will find the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, to lead and guide them; and where they can commence the immortal life, and enjoy the liberty of the sons and daughters of God, and join in the song of redemption, sung by those who are washing their robes and making them white by living as Jesus lived, and bearing the same cross that he bore.

Sarah Hollister, Canaan, N. Y.

SALT "losing its savor," and being "trodden under foot of men," arose from the fact that the salt that was used by the ancients did lose its savor, and was then used for walks.

"SHAKER AND SHAKERESS."

—o—

Go forth, thou heavenly messenger, into all the earth, bearing glad tidings of truth and life to all people. Say to those who make idols of earthly riches, and who suffer worldly treasures to gain control over the mind, and blind the sight to things of supreme worth, thus paralyzing the forces of the whole being, "It is impossible to serve God and mammon."

Those who turn all their energies to accumulate wealth for selfish indulgence and aggrandizement, and who neglect to lay up treasures for the immortal part, which must exist in the life beyond this, will be dwarfed in spirit.

Some think that a religious life, by reason of the cross imposed, is hard, and that a worldly life is easy; but the yoke of Christ, to those who are reconciled to wear it, is far easier than the yoke of sin. Those who profess the Christian life and character, should give a practical illustration of their profession in all their acts and walks of life, and beware of the deceitfulness of sin, whether in riches, or in the lusts of the flesh or mind, which, if entered into, will choke the word of life in the soul. Jesus said to those who were bound by earthly riches, "Sell that thou hast, and give alms, and lay up treasures in heaven." Those who do this will find that they have made a sure and safe investment. But very few are willing to trust the Bank of Heaven! God has entrusted the perishable things of time to mankind to use and not abuse, and as a means to prove his integrity; not as a power to oppress and grind the poor, and to exalt and glorify self, by defrauding his neighbor.

The earth and all that is therein belong to God; the gold, and silver, and precious stones, all belong to Him; and the cattle upon a thousand hills are his own. Man holds them in trust; they are blessings lent, and he will be held to a strict accountability for the use of them.

Those who possess the means to relieve the destitute and suffering, and thus use them, will be a blessing to humanity, and will draw down blessings upon themselves, till "their souls are as a watered garden whose beauty fadeth not."

Christ's sermon on the Mount plainly shows the line of the blessing. Those who are "poor in spirit (humbly relying on God, seeking aid and strength from Him), theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "The mourner (the penitent soul who sorrows for sin) will be comforted." "The meek (those who are loving and forgiving) and the pure in heart" are all promised a special blessing. The more we perfect the Christian character, which can only be attained by earnest effort, the better able we shall be to intelligently understand the real worth of the above-named blessings.

Little by little we gain self-control; step by step we march onward to the heavenly goal, where the victor dwells. A full surrender of the soul to God is the Christian's duty; it does not profit to retain part for self. "They who sow sparingly shall also reap sparingly;" our reward will be according to our works. Self-denial and the cross is the pathway that leads to eternal life; because of this, few will seek it; for self will always strive for the mastery, and always stands in opposition to the searching power of truth, that will bring the affections and the very thoughts into obedience to the law of Christ, who said "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

But, O how blessed, how noble and glorious, are those who come forth to the judgment-work in this life, showing their deeds and washing in Jordan's river till they become clean and pure, that the Divine image may be formed in them. Long live the "Shaker and Shakeress!" and may it afford a healing balm, and be a guiding star to suffering humanity.

Joanna Randall, Shirley, Mass.

If we would not blush when reading the record of our lives, let them be in harmony with divinity; have our deeds wrought in purity. Then they will be daguerreotypes in beautiful colors that, beneath the golden rays of the sun, will not fade, but blend with those of the spheres above, and upon our hearts will be reflected their glorious shades, causing us to glow with angelic beauty, and show forth the image of the heavenly. — Charlotte B.

LOVE.

—o—

WHEN Jesus was about to part with his disciples, he gave them a "new commandment," that they should love one another as he had loved them. He said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

The love which Jesus felt for his disciples was pure and unselfish; it was not emotional and circumstantial; but he loved from principle. At times, his language to them was gentle and persuasive. He also manifested his love toward them by stern rebukes, for lack of faith; and James and John for the spirit of retaliation they possessed, when they thought to call down fire from heaven "to consume" the Samaritans who would not receive him. To Peter, when he reasoned as a natural man against the revelation made to Jesus, he said, "Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offense unto me; thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."

Probably all persons feel it difficult (more or less) to extend love and sympathy where it would not be appreciated. But, by reflecting on the goodness of our Eternal Parents, we shall clearly see our duty — not, indeed, to do other persons' work in their stead; but to willingly become helpers, or co-workers with Divine Wisdom, in redeeming our fellow-beings from sin and misery, by practical kindness and love.

True love is eternal, enduring, and as unchanging as the sun in its course. Amid joy and sorrow, clouds and sunshine, prosperity and adversity, it remains unshaken, unblemished by the stains of selfishness, and unsullied by the blight of envy and jealousy. Ever mindful of the best interests of others, true godly love is anxious to relieve every affliction, even though surrounding circumstances may render it difficult and discouraging; and it will manifest itself in various ways, in order that its great object may be accomplished.

The grace of God in the heart will teach us how to love; and the words we speak will give unmistakable evidence of sincerity. If we would be God's "peculiar people," we must zealously show our "faith by our works," and manifest our love to our brethren and sisters by relinquishing all kinds of selfishness; and, in the true spirit of consecration, be willing to toil for the general good.

By suitable reflection upon this subject, we may so direct our words and actions, that they shall convey the true love and interest existing in our hearts for our loving Gospel kindred and friends, as well as for the erring, who most need a helping hand; and that thereby they may be inspired with courage to withstand temptation, and become victors over all the powers of evil.

Thus, in our social and religious communings, we shall feel peace and satisfaction, and shall drink, from the pure Fountain of heavenly love, the crystal waters of eternal life, which will flow to our souls, baptizing us into one spirit, that we may be of one heart and mind. If we really love, in full accordance with the "new commandment," as Jesus loved, that is, have our love grounded in the principles of truth, purity, and goodness, then it will endure, and even death itself cannot destroy it.

Lucy A. Haskins, Mt. Lebanon.

JESUS OF NAZARETH, who once dwelt in a tenement of clay, and walked on the earth among men, was undoubtedly the chosen Medium to receive the Anointing Spirit — the Christ of God. And, by steadfast adherence to that anointing power bestowed upon him, he traveled into the life Divine. Since his day, thousands, by the power of the same Spirit, and in obedience to his precepts, and through the influence of his holy example, have also attained unto the Divine life, and are now with him in the kingdom of heaven. The principles which constitute the kingdom of heaven are eternal, and admit of an everlasting increase, whether commenced on the earth or in the heavenly world; and the will of God may be done on earth as really as in heaven.

And all who are called into this kingdom — this Zion of God on earth — should wisely consider their high and holy calling, and the great responsibility which rests upon them to be faithful; for they are not only called to work out their own salvation, but are also called in relation to the whole human family; and they should so live and walk that they may become Saviors to other souls, and be truly "a peculiar people, zealous of good works," and possess the inheritance promised to the meek. Every Christian virtue will shine forth in their lives, and, by obeying the behests of conscience, they will indeed be a "city set on a hill, whose light cannot be hid," raising an ensign of freedom.

May the good Spirit hasten the time when the banner of Freedom from Sin shall wave gloriously over Columbia's soil, is the prayer of Hortense Hooser, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

INSPIRATION.

—o—

As we trace the Scriptures from Genesis to the Revelation, we see that, from time immemorial, there has been a constant stream of inspiration poured out upon those who were so organized as to receive it, and they were commissioned to impart it to others. The portals of heaven have been opened to mortals, and rich stores of Divine love, and rays of heavenly light, have been given to mankind, as a beacon, to guide and direct their footsteps.

The Prophets of old were chosen vessels, or inspired mediums, through whom God revealed his will. And, at a later period, Jesus and his disciples were chosen mediums; and, as they were ministered unto by spirits from a more interior sphere than were those who preceded them, so they became mediums of higher truths. Inspiration did not die, or cease to flow, when they passed from the earth-sphere, and the Church of their day was disorganized; but God continued to raise up witnesses, who testified to the truth, down through a long night of spiritual darkness.

According to Sacred Writ, there was a promise given, that Christ would appear again on the earth, and, as Jesus was visited by the male Christ Spirit, and anointed to be "the first-born among many brethren," so was Ann Lee visited and anointed by the female Christ Spirit, to be the first-born among many sisters. And why not? If Jesus was Divinely inspired, why could not Ann Lee also be thus inspired? Their teachings were the same, and the fruits brought forth by their followers are the same.

All religion has its origin in Divine inspiration, and all true doctrine is derived from the same source. And those who follow Jesus and Ann — live the same life, and bear the same cross which they bore — "will know of the doctrine" which they taught. Jesus declared his mission to be, to reveal the Father; Ann also testified that it was her mission to reveal the Mother. If the fruits brought forth by them were the same, and we are to judge a tree by the fruit that it bears, then, why should we doubt the cause, when the effects produced are one in kind.

There has been a continuation of Divine and heavenly gifts, from Mother Ann to the present time, operating both internally and externally, in the Church of Christ's second appearing, to enlighten the understanding and strengthen the feeble, and to confirm the weak in faith, and to edify the faithful; which has enabled them progressively to move forward in a united body and grow in grace and in knowledge, and gain the treasures of the Gospel of salvation for themselves and other souls.

We know the great Eternal One
Has not seal'd up the gates of heav'n,
That man no more of truth may learn
Than what one sacred Book has giv'n:
Nor has pure Wisdom's mighty fount
Exhausted all her precious store;
Nor is man deem'd of less account
Than in the brightest days of yore.

Union Village, O.

Heavenly wisdom is a talent from above which must be improved to make it abiding. In so doing it confers a happiness that satisfies the soul.

SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.

—o—

BLESSED Angel of comfort, I welcome you here;
Your mission is holy; O be of good cheer:
The tidings, so truthful, you bear on your wings

A halo of gladness around the heart flings.
Move on through the land, diffuse light as you go,

Alleviate sorrow, assuage pain and woe;
Give joy to the mourning who're bow'd down with grief,

Who fain would from sin and its bonds find relief.

A blessing on all, do most freely bestow,
As 'round on your errands of mercy you go.
O bless all truth-seekers who listen to hear
A voice from the throne, saying, Come ye up here.

O bless the truth-loving, and guide them along,
To feed in green pastures with Mount Zion's throng.

I love you, blest Shaker, to me you are dear;
I love your companion who's standing so near
The Shakeress Virgin! may she at your side
In her comely raiment and meekness abide.

For since you are dual, you've surely become
A New Thing of Beauty to gladden our home.
And should I outlive you, I'll weep at your tomb,

There, cull the sweet flowers that over it bloom.

Ride on in your majesty, power, and love;
Bear with you the message received from above,

That Saviors have now on the earth-plane appear'd,

And thousands of souls by their presence are cheer'd.

The saints have ascended to clouds of pure light,

And still will mount higher to view Heaven's sight.

Jane Emily Smith, Mt. Lebanon.

INHERITANCE.

—o—

THE Spirit spoke by the Prophets, and again by Jesus Christ, saying, "The meek shall inherit the earth." Now we have the perfected order of the revelation of God through the Shepherd and Shepherdess of Zion, and the text is read thus: "Blessed are the meek;" for they shall have an inheritance in the mansions of the pure.

We have also received additional blessings, which will happily and adorn the receivers of the word, who alone are doers of the work.

Blessed are those who have a continual controversy with the powers of sin and darkness; for theirs is eternal life.

Blessed are those whose eyes are fixed on the mark of the prize of their high calling; for they shall inherit the true riches.

Blessed are those who abide in the truth; for they shall be the light of the world, and the glory of heaven.

Blessed are those who watch, that no concealed evil or wrong habit mar their uprightness; for they shall be clothed with honor and beauty.

Blessed are those who seek wisdom; for their lips shall communicate excellent things.

Blessed are the prudent, in whose storehouses are garnered treasures with which to help the needy; for out of their abundance shall the multitude be fed.

Blessed are those who are slain by the sword of the testimony; for they shall live, and never die.

Blessed are those who are baptized with the power of repentance; for their iniquity shall be blotted out.

Blessed are the wise virgins who are ready, and who come when called; for with such the Lord is well pleased.

Blessed are those whose kindred and relations are the followers of the Lamb; for they shall move in the Angelic ranks, and sing the song of the redeemed.

Blessed are those who bear the rod of correction and endure; for out of the bosom of their souls proceed strength.

Rhoda Blake, Mt. Lebanon.

EDEN OF TO-DAY.

MOTHER'S DAY.

—o—

O let it be, throughout the whole fair land,
A day whose shining shall illumine the year;
A time of aspirations pure and grand,
Of thoughts unselfish, and of vision clear.

The costly robe from human fiber spun,
And gems condensed from sorrow's briny flow,
Let them not glisten in that equal sun,
Whose healing wings shall no distinction know.

Let Pride and Fashion (cowering) stand apart,
While Woman, clothed in majesty and grace,
Brings forth the jewels hidden in her heart,
To wear them calmly with uplifted face;
With face uplifted by the power of hope,—
That hope which conquers in its onward way,
And gives the present all its narrow scope,
Nor from the past subtracts one single day,
But turns to profit all that is and was;
Draws from the future pure, prophetic light,
To aid and strengthen Truth's ennobling cause,
And fill her vanguard with angelic might.

The road of Woman is a thorny steep,
And she has climb'd it, borne with heavy chains,
When only dews have help'd her soul to weep,
And midnight moanings echo'd back her pains.

The vulture's eye hath never seen her there;
Nor hath the lion's foot her pathway trod:
Her balmless anguish, and her voiceless prayer,
Have reached the Spirit of her Mother—God.

'Twas man that sought Divine Paternal lead,— Ask'd light and wisdom at His throne above;
But woman, through her soul's unanswer'd need,
Hath found her Mother, the Maternal Dove.

No more half-orphan'd shall the race he made:
Beneath our Mother's standard, Home shall rise:
May its foundations on this day be laid,
Before the Angels' glad approving eyes.

O Day momentous! may thine altar's fire
Consume the hurdens of the sore oppress'd:
May ev'ry noble soul with pure desire
Approach thy shrine, to be inspired and bless'd.

If some should come with spikenard and with tears,

O may their off'rings be in love received,
And Woman, as their Savior, quell their fears,
And guide them upward till they are relieved.

There is no human ill beyond control;
No dark decree of unrelenting Fate;
For God hath made provision for the soul;
And we will toll, and for the harvest wait.

Cecilia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon.

HOUR OF PRAYER.

—o—

LISTEN from the higher spheres,
Angels whisper "we are near;
We've come to raise your souls from earth,
To taste the joys of greater worth,
In this the hour of prayer."

Come, leave awhile all toil and care,
With God commune who heareth prayer;
For He who doth the ravens feed,
All humble souls will bless indeed,
While they bow low in prayer.

We hail your influence, angels bright,
While looking to the Source of light,
It gives us courage by the way,
To constant watch, and hourly pray;
To keep the gift of prayer.

'Tis prayer that keeps the soul from sin,
And makes it light and pure within;
Then let us watch and pray forever,
Ceasing not from strong endeavor,
In this, the hour of prayer.

What consolation prayer imparts,
How sweet the peace that fills our hearts,
When we can meet in that pure love,
Which blends the angel hosts above:
Thrice blessed hour of prayer!

O righteous Father, may we be Forever clothed with purity:
Only the pure thy glory see,
Dwell in thy light continually,
And seek the hour of prayer.

Lucy A. Haskins, Mt. Lebanon.

PAST AND PRESENT.

—o—

IN the region of Jewry, and coasts round about
The river of Jordan, did come
A people, to be in its water baptized,
Confessing their sins unto John.
But a greater than he in their midst then did stand;

The same has come forth unto us;
Who baptized their souls with the spirit of fire,

And gave them the true Holy Ghost.
In that dark, cloudy day, although great were his works,

Were many the Lord did not know;
While sunny our day, and quite equal its
work,

Yet many are ignorant now.
As then, so it is now; they the water did choose,

And shunn'd the baptism of fire;
They, John and the Prophets did very well know,

But Jesus they did not desire.
They then persecuted, and persecute still;
E'en 'mong the disciples found place

That spirit which now maketh desolate homes,
And many a heart layeth waste.
There is no more a willingness now to admit
The truths of a progressive day,

Than was found when Jesus did walk upon
earth,

And taught man the new living way.
Man is obstinate now, as in days that are past
To oppose and resist ev'ry law

Subserving to bring the subversion of sin,
From destruction his aid to withdraw.

From this age of the world, and the light which is given,

How much can humanity boast?
There is more cause to-day to hide in our shame,

Than glory in such depths of loss.
God's work must go on, we have bided it long;
And what has been found by the way?

A curse or a blessing awaits ev'ry soul:
That's final—the great judgment day.
In a summary manner, with every man,
The work of decision is left;

Heaven's offers accepted, the kingdom is his;
Rejected, of mercy bereft.

Elder A. Perkins, Canterbury, N. H.

DEEDS OF KINDNESS.

—o—

Will deeds of kindness perish,
And fall unheeded by the way,
Like flowers early gather'd
That droop before the close of day?
Or like the young child's picture
Impress'd upon the snow's white crust
That warming sunbeams (kissing)
Blend snow and picture both in dust?
Are words of love, once utter'd [heal'd,
Which like sweet balm some wound has
Of little worth—to perish;
Nor yet their own soft incense yield?

Nay, verily! Such sowing
Of seed immortal cannot die;
But life, in rich profusion,
Will bloom to greet and cheer the eye.

Each act of kindness given,
Each utter'd word of tender love,
Each injury forgiven,
Gleams like the golden rays above.

A sigh for others' sorrow,
A smile when frowning glances fall,
Are pearly tear-drops gleaming.
These write a true reward for all.

The instruments of heaven,
Whose strains vibrate through courts above,
Give forth their sweetest music
When gently touch'd by deeds of love.

The song of grateful praises
That wafting breezes bear aloft,
Floats out o'er fields Elysian,
And mingles with their music soft.

'Tis angels' work we're doing,
When ministries of love we fill;
'Tis angel strains we're swelling,
When breathing forth "Let come who will."

Be mine the mission ever
To pour sweet balm on hearts distress'd,
And, o'er life's stormy ocean,
In his name whisper "BE AT REST."

LITERATURE.

EVERY spiritual—religious—Dispensation creates its own Literature. The first call of the Spirit, whenever a new Divine influx flows to humanity, is, to repent, i. e., forsake; for that is repentance. When the dispensation was external, like that of the Jewish, the forsaking was external. The Jews heard the voice of the Spirit: "Israel shall dwell alone, and shall not be numbered—mixed—with the nations." "Get thee out from thy kindred and country, unto a land that I will shew thee of," was the imperative command to Abram, the "father of the faithful" to the Spirit's call.

When his posterity had multiplied into a tribe, they went down into Egypt; and, when these had become twelve tribes, and had increased into a nation, the Spirit repeated the same command: "Go up out of Egypt into the land I promised Abram that I would give to his descendants." When they obeyed this call, it was by forsaking all that they had acquired in Egypt. And the whole nation emigrated from Egypt, the garden of the world, as literally as Abram emigrated from Mesopotamia, the garden of Asia.

In thus moving from Egypt, in a body, it is evident that they left its literature as truly as their ancestors forsook the literature of the East; and, in both instances, the very highest art, the deepest science—the most profound literature of the then known world—was what the Spirit of Truth—God—required them to abjure, and to utterly destroy and leave behind them.

It may also be observed, that, in both instances, the justifying reason—the causes—were similar; that is, the literature had been created by the Dispensation—was the product and expression of the real mental, physical, and spiritual condition of the people—was imperfect and wicked—idolatrous—the "old heavens," that must "pass away." Hence, to break the images, throw down the sacred altars on which their religious sacrifices had been offered, cut down the groves, kill the priests who officiated, and trample under foot the mementoes of the whole Order, were common occurrences under the law of progress. Abram did it; Moses did it; and Gideon did it. Indeed it was the universal practice of Avatars. Consequently, the charge of ignorance, from learned worldlings, was invariably preferred against them—woe to Alexandrian libraries.

Was not the charge well-founded? The Jews cut themselves off from the sources of knowledge known to the Egyptians, plunged into a wilderness where there were no schools, and where even agriculture could not be practised. The Spirit who led them supplied their every need of food and clothing.

RESULT.

The result was as unlooked-for as it was extraordinary and world-wide wonderful. For, behold, the traditional journal kept by those twelve tribes of wandering, vagabond slaves, who were self-emancipated, is, to-day, the foundation of the literature of Christendom.

What a comment this is upon the wisdom of man, in competition with the "wisdom that comes from above"—by revelation—the learning, arts, science, and literature of the passing-away cycle.

Nor is this marvelous; it is not a solitary or isolated instance; but a law looms up in our spiritual horizon, that is as universal in its application as it is in its effects: each Dispensation of God to man, and each cycle in a Dispensation, create their own literature.

In the cases of Moses, we have a man who was "learned in all the learning of the Egyptians." Not so the general rule. Of Jesus it was asked, with astonishment, "Whence hath this man this wisdom, seeing that he knoweth not letters?" He was ignorant of the learning of the Dispensation and cycle to which he had belonged. "Except a man forsakes all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple," included the literature of the past and passing-away Dispensation.

The twelve Apostles are known to history as ignorant fishermen. The early Christians were charged, by Celsus, with preferring the unlearned and low to the more cultivated and refined classes, as converts to, and members of, their system. "Not many wise, not many noble, not many strong, are called." Hath not God called the opposite to them? the ignorant to confound the wise; the weak to oppose the strong; and the off-scouring of the earth to compete with the learning of the polished Greeks, and Roman philosophers, until it converted them?

What again was the result? As before, these simple Christians, who, in passing through the Hermit Age, spent a generation in the deserts of Egypt, in caves or holes of the earth, without books or human society, as Israel spent a generation in the wilderness, separated from the civilized world; and, like them, left a posterity—monks and nuns, who founded and formed the Monastic Orders of Christendom.

For, truly, more have been the children of those "eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake," than of the married Israelites in the wilderness; albeit they confined physical commerce to the use that Nature designed. And those celibates have produced a literature that, to-day, is the literature of Christendom. And as, "by reason of use," the Law becomes more possible to the race, we now have, in twenty-five years time, a new literature, of mesmerism, phrenology, biology, psychology, electricity, rappings, table-tippings, dreams, visions, prophecies and revelations, created by the Spiritualists; not so distinct from the old as in the preceding instances already cited, for the simple reason that they have not been so much a new spiritual—religious—people, but rather a scientific people, an outgrowth from the order of Christ's first appearing—a John the Baptist epoch—to bring the old and new, the First and Second Christian Churches, together.

Query? Will not this Second Christian, or Shaker, Church—this Gospel of Christ—create its own literature? I tell you Yea, and that right speedily!!!

REVELATION v. EXPERIENCE.

REVELATION is the unfoldment of truth from the infinite to the finite mind—a means by which the ignorance of the finite is supplemented by the knowledge of the infinite.

The experience of human beings upon earth should agree with and confirm the revelation of God through the heavens. The scope of revelation is comprehensive—vast—connecting time and eternity. Individual experience is limited—incomplete; but the experience of the race collectively is full of confirmations of divine revelation.

A pure crystal stream gushes forth high up some mountain side, free from adulterous mixtures, as it flows over the clear rock-bed, until it reaches the rich alluvial soil of the lower lands, when it becomes surcharged with particles of earthly matter, and enters the sea as a dark and turbid river; the limpid fountain, changed to the conglomerate waters that go to make the sea, shows the nature of the passage through intervening channels between the fountain and the ocean.

Is it not thus with the spiritual fountain—Revelation—as compared with the records termed Bibles? Sacred and profane history interblended; the inspiration of the Prophets, and the divine mission of the priesthood, interwoven with the history of kings and despots, and the chronicles of the bloody wars attending the rise and fall of nations, that darken and almost obliterate the beautiful primal

Yet, notwithstanding the blindness of the mental, and the confusion of the physical condition and surroundings of the earthly recipients of revelation, its pure abstract truths will stand through all coming time as being applicable to the final improvement of humanity; and future human experience will demonstrate that they underlie the basic foundations of the civil and religious governments of a perfected God-governed race.

If the veil, or rites and ceremonies connected with the Mosaic Dispensation, be drawn aside, we shall discover principles involved in that system — an aggregation of truths — adapted to the amelioration of present social conditions, and to the removal of society ills, not elsewhere to be found. Although revealed thousands of years ago, they are the germs of all the reformatory agitations and projected modern improvements in physiology, the equalization of property (by co-operation and communism), land reforms — republicanism in general; the equal rights of the sexes, of labor; the distribution of accumulated wealth, by bankrupt and homestead laws, and freedom of the public lands. These all had their actualized antetypes in those long-ago revelations and human experiences which constitute the backbone of Bible history.

Men search the foundations of the earth for the testimonies of the rocks. They analyze all known substances in their pursuit of physical truth. The starry heavens are pierced for hidden knowledge. The works of Nature declare the truths of Nature's God, as do not the perverted passions and distorted affections of purblind humans.

So it is with true revelation in spiritual things. The founders of our infidel civil government turned back to the Mosaic epoch for the model of human rights which they introduced in the Declaration of Independence. Each advancing revolution in society centers around some one or more of these revealed principles of the past.

As well attempt to erect a building without foundations, as to build up society, in natural or spiritual things, upon any other basis than the truths of the past.

Thomas Smith, Canaan, N. Y.

THE WORD OF GOD AND THE BIBLE.

A VERY common, if not the almost universal understanding of professed Christians, is that the Bible and Word of God are not only synonymous terms, but synonymous facts. But the revelations of God's truth, whether made cycles of ages past, or in the days of Jesus Christ on earth, or in the present time, do not thus declare it.

The "Word of God" is a power that has stirred the pulse, warmed the heart, exalted the humble, humbled the exalted, inspired the faithful, bound up the broken-hearted, comforted the afflicted, invigorated the feeble in spirit, and "given to the righteous beauty for ashes, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

The great Hindoo reformer, Babboo Keshub Chunder Sen, who visited England in the year 1871, to determine whether it would be advisable to introduce Christianity among the Hindoos, as he was about to return home, made this significant remark: "There is a striving everywhere to find God externally, in forms, ceremonies, dogmas; that the mind wants spiritual food is very little thought of." So there is a striving to find the "Word of God" in books; and the SPRIT—GOD—in incarnations; apparently not awakened to realize that the "Word of God" is revealing a God-character infinitely superior to the Jehovah of the Jews; a living SPRIT CHRIST, illimitably transcending the crucified and worshiped human form of Jesus; and an ever-evolving testimony of living truth; making more of the "Word of God" than is contained in all the Bibles of the nations combined.

The "Word of God," as defined by the English Bible, is a testimony, "sharp, powerful, piercing, to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, the joints and the marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." But who ever conceived the Bible to possess this power?

The "Word of God" is light, life, and the power of salvation. It is a revelation of God's will and purpose concerning the evolving destiny of man. It is a baptism of divine power in such manner and measure as to magnetize and vivify the whole man — body, soul and spirit — with an intense interest in, love for, and devotion to, the salvation, development, and glorification of the human race. It is a ministration of love so endearing and soul-thrilling as to cause its recipient to sacrifice life for the salvation of the object of the soul's affections and beatitude.

But all the Bibles in the universe never produced — never can produce — these effects. The Bible of the so-called Christians, as well as the bibles — sacred books — of all nations and religious beliefs, when spoken of in their best estate, are nothing more than records; and more or less sacred, as they more or less record God's Word unadulterated by the policy, ambition, cupidity, or wickedness of man.

Though this statement may grate harshly on the sensibilities of those Bible adorers who consider that "every word embraced between the lids of the Bible is the 'Word of God,'" an inspired utterance, and necessary for the salvation and redemption of man, yet darkened humanity needs the utterance of truth. It is not our purpose, however, to rob the Bible of its meed and coronal among books; nor to detract from it that sacred regard which it justly claims in the estimation of those who have, through the perusal of its records of the "Word of God," been ushered into the gushing baptisms of its power; far from it; our purpose is precisely the reverse of this. We would woo souls to the perusal of its sacred pages, in search of the utterances of truth, the power of which might become the "Word of God" for their salvation.

The "Word of God" is being spoken by spirits who are under the baptisms of the fire of truth, and whose utterances are coals from off its burning altars. Under these baptismal inspirations, minds are being enlightened to see the Bible in its real character as a book, stripped of the delusions of a false theology, which has been spreading saintly robes over the records of base, sinful deeds, for centuries, and calling those records the "Word of God."

The character of the Bible, spoken of as a whole, is as multiform as is that of the authors who wrought in its production; and, to speak of it wisely, one needs continually to heed the admonitory proverb, "Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice." Nothing is gained to the glorious cause of salvation and redemption of the human race, to which the Bible is religiously consecrated, in the vain effort to harmonize the multitudinous contradictory texts thereof; or in the attempt to reconcile its allegorical Genesis with the more substantial and undeniable geological records, penned by the finger of God in the everlasting rocks innumerable ages before the writers of Genesis had a being. Our race is not benefited by the miserable effort of theological (not ritual) Christianity to canonize as sacred history those secular records of the Bible which possess no more claims to inspiration than do the writings of Flavius Josephus, and which, with reference to modesty and purity, when judged by biblical injunction, as a "tree known by its fruits," need expurgation.

It does not contribute to the cause of truth, to stamp as "sacred" and the "Word of God," those biographical biblical records which portray the life-characters of men and deeds so base that all the veils of theological Christian charity could never cover sufficiently to withhold the blush of shame from the cheek of modesty while perusing them; and the effects of such records, though compiled with sacred Bible, has, no doubt, immensely contributed to the production of immorality, vice and crime, inasmuch as the actors in this drama of shame have been held as sacred exemplars for pattern; but, without doubt, it would have been better for humanity had the biblical records of such characters been consigned to oblivion by the flames, rather than canonized as "The Word of God."

It has been very truly said, "There is not only no statement in the Scriptures that the whole Bible is the 'Word of God,' but there is no one of the writers thereof who claims that his particular book, or books, is or are such;" and we would show that not one, even of its most precious and ever-to-be-hallowed records of inspired truth, is the "Word of God," but is simply the record of that "Word." Paul, indeed, declared, "All Scripture* is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction," etc. But, if we are to try Paul by his doctrines, this remark, and this "all" must be understood in a very limited sense — in much the same sense as where it is said, "all the region round about Jordan went to be baptized of John, in Jordan;" for Paul says: "Sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence." This certainly was not very "profitable." Again: "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak, through the flesh, God, sending his own Son, condemned sin in the flesh." But, when Paul thus spake of the Scriptures, the New Testament was not written; and it was not possible for him to refer to the hundreds of translations of the Old as well as the New Testament which have since been made; in the English translation of which, the American Bible Society's Committee of Examination and Comparison with the original manuscripts found "twenty-four thousand errors!" and of which the British and Foreign Bible Society, after having circulated millions of copies thereof, has declared that "a faithful examination of it, gives rise to serious doubts whether it can be called the Word of God," *

* This should be rendered, All Scripture that is given by inspiration of God. And Adam Clarke says: "This sentence is not well translated. The original should be rendered, Every writing that is given by inspiration of God." Ed.

And, taking Paul's testimony for the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, and trying his testimony by himself, we have no reason for supposing that he referred to every word of those thousand translations of the Scriptures into all languages, whether concerning secular, historical, or religious matters; or that he considered them all plenary inspired, and equally Divine truth, whether those words set forth the contradictory statement, that King David was a "man after God's own heart" at the time he was reveling in the contemplation of the murder of Uriah, and when he was committing adultery with Bathsheba; or whether they were recording the Divine behests of the Law of Moses, or (which had not then been recorded) Christ's Sermon on the Mount; thus claiming a full and continuous baptism of Divine light, illuminating every scholar in every language who ever assisted in the translation of the Scriptures, whether they were contending with each other about Greek, Hebrew, and Latin verbs, or combining to introduce an interpolation of a paragraph (as all prominent scholars admit the seventh verse of chap. v. of John's First Epistle to be, and which cannot be found in more than three of the three hundred ancient manuscripts, and only one of these deemed at all reliable, besides numerous others), or even interpolations of whole chapters which can as easily be proved.

As much as Paul had to learn and unlearn in the school of Christ, he is not justly chargeable when inspirationally understood, with being the head of that band of theological religionists who would throw together, into one common sink, secular and sacred history — the records of the criminal prostitutions of some of the ancients, with those of ancient Prophets and holy men, and their Divine revelations — calling them all the infallible "Word of God."

The effect of biblical theology, unaccompanied by the rays of the sun of revelation, has been, to establish a belief, that, while continuous manifestations of greater truth in natural philosophy, science, and art, are vouchsafed to man, in religion, the revelations of truth were sealed up with the final book of the Revelation of St. John; and that an utter end of progress in revelation has been Divinely ordained.

On the other hand, the effect of modern spiritualistic revelation, added to the scholastic and scientific researches of "free religion" of these latter days, upon the juvenile, the unsectarian, the unreligious, and the novitiate Christian portions of society, is to throw to the winds the entire Bible as a worthless book; to ridicule it, and its devotees as worshippers of "they know not what."

This antipodal swing of the pendulum was, ages ago, anticipated by the Spirit: "He that killeth you, will think that he is doing God service," has been fulfilled to the letter, by both Greek, Catholic, and Protestant churches. The devilish Inquisition, the Duke of Alva's wars, and the St. Bartholomew's massacre, produced reactionary powers — "horns" — which brought forth the French Revolution, the utter abrogation of the falsely-called Christian religion — its priesthood, sabbath, and Bible; the enthronement of the goddess of Liberty, Reason, and Fraternity, which finally culminated in the founding of a State without a Church, giving to every individual an absolute right to assume the entire responsibility of choosing or forming his own theology; but utterly estopping even the most pious and godly from "killing" each other to do their fighting gods good (or bad) service.

Hence the American Government is not a Christian Government; its powers being solely derived from the people, and do not extend beyond civil matters. And its Constitution expressly disclaims any authority in matters of theology or religion.

Elder Giles B. Avery, Mt. Lebanon.

"THE SHAKERS."

FROM "THE CHURCH BELLS," AN ENGLISH PAPER.

THE denomination commonly known by this nickname prefers to be called "The United Society of Believers, or Millennial Church." The nickname was given them in consequence of their violently agitating their bodies while engaged in religious exercises, under the impression that the body ought to take an active part in all true worship, and should express outwardly the inward emotions of the spirit; an impression undoubtedly true, and only mistakenly applied in the mode of its manifestation. In the worship of God, the whole man, body, soul, and spirit, should be engaged; but true spiritual worship is ever subdued and solemnized by a feeling of reverence, and does not consist in wild excitement of feeling; and the attitude of the body should be such as to express outwardly and assist the inward reverence of the soul. The Shakers have got hold of a true principle, which is too commonly lost sight of by Protestant denominations, who, in their pseudo-spirituality, would have men worship "God," who "is a Spirit," as if men were also merely spirits, ignoring the body's share in worship. The injunction to worship God "in spirit and in truth" certainly does not exclude the body from its proper share in worship, but simply implies that worship must be sincere, not hypocritical, and with the spirit lifted up to God, not merely mechanically performed, drawing nigh to Him with our lips, while our heart is far from Him.

This is not a sect of yesterday. The Shakers trace their origin to the Camisards of the seventeenth century. These Camisards, or French Prophets, originated in a certain "School of Prophets" in Dauphiny, conducted by Du Serre, a Calvinist. These prophets, professing, like the Irvingites of our own day, to be inspired by the Holy Ghost, began to appear in Dauphiny and Vivarais, France, in 1688. The "utterances" were not confined to the male sex, but the prophets were both male and female; and from being on their first appearance numbered by hundreds, they soon amounted to thousands. When they received what seemed to them, and what, no doubt, they honestly believed to be, "the spirit of prophecy," their bodies were greatly agitated; they quivered in every limb, staggered like drunken men, fell down, and lay as if they were dead. After a while they recovered, twitching, shaking, and crying for mercy. It is impossible to account for such manifestations; they attracted then, as kindred manifestations and high pretensions do now, a number of persons of credulous disposition, whose restless minds, dissatisfied with the existing condition of the Church of Christ, are ever craving for a restoration of Pentecostal privileges and gifts, and yearning for the realization of their ideal of a Christian Church visibly guided by the Holy Spirit, and free from all human fallibility and imperfection.

About seventeen years after their first appearance in France, three of their leading men left France and migrated to England. With such success did they "prophecy," that they soon inspired others with a like enthusiasm, and before the end of the year (1705) there were two or three hundred of these "prophets" in and about London, of both sexes and of all ages. The great subject of their prediction was the near approach of the kingdom of God, the restored spiritual powers and privileges of the Church, and the advent of the Millennium. About the year 1747, a society was formed, without any established creed or particular defined ritual, professing perfect resignation to be led and governed from time to time as the Spirit of God might dictate. Their leading members were James Wardley and his wife Jane, John Townley and his wife, both of Manchester, and John Kattis, a distinguished scholar. This latter gentleman, however, seems to have had his eyes opened after a time to the extravagance of their pretensions, and retired from the society; as Mr. Baxter left the Irvingites of our time. Wardley and his wife Jane conducted their meetings. Jane, having the principal lead in meeting, was called "Mother." Some years after the formation of this society, a personage of no ordinary importance in the history of the United Believers connected herself with them, and became known as Mother Ann. Her full name was Ann Lee. She was born in 1736, and when arrived at a marriageable age she married one Abraham Stanley. She joined the society in 1758. In consequence of receiving a special revelation in 1770, Ann was received and acknowledged by all the faithful members of the society as their spiritual mother in Christ, and the true leader whom God had appointed for the society. A few years after receiving this extraordinary revelation, Mother Ann received a revelation that it was the will of God that she should go to America, where, as she prophesied, there would be a great increase and permanent establishment of the "Church." Accordingly, as many as firmly believed her testimony, and could settle their temporal concerns, and furnish necessities for the voyage, agreed to follow her. They procured a passage at Liverpool, and arrived at New York in 1774. In 1776 they settled in the town of Watervliet, seven miles from Albany. Here they remained in retirement till the spring of 1780. In the beginning of this year the society consisted in all (in America) of but about ten or twelve persons, all of whom came from England. There was a gradual increase of numbers until the year 1787, when "those who had received faith" began to collect at New Lebanon. This still remains as the "Mother Church."

In a regular meeting, where nothing extraordinary appears, they exercise in a regular dance while formed in straight lines, and sometimes in a regular march around the room, in harmony with regular songs sung on the occasion. Yet, "shouting and clapping of hands, and many other operations, are frequently given, all of which have a tendency to keep the assembly alive, with their hearts and all their senses and feelings devoted to the service of God."

They defend these practices by quoting Holy Scripture. Is there any form of Protestant error which does not appeal to the Scriptures, or, rather, to some isolated texts, in support of their delusions? The texts which they allege are Exod. xv., 20; Jer. xxxi., 4, 7, 13; 2 Sam. vi., 14; St. Luke, xv., 25.

For all their extravagances, the moral life of the Shakers must be most exemplary, if it is at all in accordance with the following code of "Faith and Principles of the Society at New Lebanon:"

1. Abstinence from all carnal and sensual passions, and a strict life of virgin purity, agreeable to the example of the Lord Jesus and the recommendation and example of the Apostle Paul.

2. Abstinence from all the party contentions and politics of the world. "My kingdom is not of this world," said Jesus.

3. Abstinence from wars and bloodshed. "Follow peace with all men," is a Divine precept; and hence also the necessity of abstaining from all acts of violence toward our fellow-men, and from all the pursuits of pride and worldly ambition.

4. Perfect justice and honesty in all our dealings with our fellow-creatures.

5. A faithful discharge of all just debts, and all legal and equitable claims of every

* See address of Dr. T. S. Bell, before the Bible Revision Association, 1858.

nature, as soon and effectually as possible; thus fulfilling the Apostle's precept, "Owe no man any thing but love and good-will."

6. Do good to all men, as far as opportunity and ability may serve, by administering acts of charity and kindness, and promoting light and truth among mankind. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

7. Agreeably to the example of the first Christian Church, let the object of our labors be directed to support and maintain a united and consecrated interest, as far and as soon as preparatory circumstances will admit. But this is to be done by the free will and voluntary choice of every member, as a sacred privilege, and not by any constraint or undue persuasion.

Of course, all that is true and excellent in this code is to be found in the summary of our duty to our neighbor in the Catechism of the Church of England. The Shakers seem to lay almost exclusive stress upon that part of man's duty which respects his neighbor; but they have no creeds or sacraments. They are far more numerous in America than in this country, and are deserving of notice on account of their origin and remarkable performance at their meetings for "Divine worship."

Pretty fair for an organ of the Established Church of England, the eldest daughter of the Great Mother of Sects—the Catholic Church. There is no Shaker organization outside the United States. And, should the rising God-in-the-Constitution party succeed in their wicked designs, the first demonstration of their power will be to strangle religious liberty. And religious persons, being persecuted in one nation, will flee to another, as heretofore has been their wont. The Shakers would go back to the mother country, where they originated. For, about that time, England will have completed her "disestablishment," having then effectually separated Church and State; and her past history will eternally bar a reunion. Thereafter, while grass grows, and water runs to see it, the civil and theological institutions of the British Isles will be after the pattern of the present free, liberal, and independent Government of the United States of North America.—Ed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

—O—
PORTLAND, ME., May 21, 1873.

ELDER JOHN B. VANCE.

FRIEND AND BROTHER: Through the brotherly love of some one, whom I suppose to be yourself, I have, for several months, received the "Shaker and Shakeress." It is a welcome visitor, in several respects. The articles by the Brethren and Sisters are beautifully expressed, and abound in good common sense and true sentiments. It has helped me to appreciate and better understand the basis of your organic system of community.

Your doctrine of celibacy in a regenerate plane, I consider favorable to spiritual growth. But this is a great subject. I only intended to say, I thank you for sending me the little pure-minded monthly, and herewith forward 50 cts. to pay for it. I am not afraid to allow my sons and daughters to read it. It is good.

Truly your friend,

L. F. Pingree.

NEW YORK, June 13, 1873.

FRIEND F. W. EVANS: I have received (per mail) your monthly for June. I see no falling off in its articles. It is a New Testament of Gospel Christianity to Christism, and bears the same relation to modern Christianity that the four Gospels bore to Judaism nearly two thousand years ago.

The "Shaker and Shakeress" bears a civil and religious testimony to the truth as taught by Jesus of Nazareth, who, while upon earth, was the Exemplar of Shakerism, which is a resurrection of his life and teachings.

What has been the civil and religious history of Christendom, for all its centuries, but war, bloodshed, cruelty, and all conceivable kinds of criminality and barbarism? Hell has existed more in Christendom than in all the world besides. Is there not more antagonism between the jarring sects of Christianity than can be found outside of its blood-stained precincts?

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Exhortations for peace and good-will among men, in Europe, are vain, whilst wars and slaughter, robbery and devastation, are the works of its people.

Your "Shaker and Shakeress" for June is very good, indeed. The articles, "Mother's Day," "Follow Me," "Convention," are excellent, and "Our Shaker Home" cannot be surpassed. The other articles make an interesting variety.

Eldress Antoinette is not idle as an editress. Indeed, the "Shakeress" for June is rich and entertaining. I see, also, that the daughter of my friend Devyr is a poetess, and contributes some choice pieces of poetry.

In short, the monthly is to the Shaker world what the New Testament is to outside Christianity. It is the modern Scriptures—a God-spell to the religious world; and its editor and editress are Christian Apostles.

P. S.—Love to my daughter. Her father often thinks of her, and is thankful to Divine Providence that she is among godly people, and living in quietude. * * *

TO THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

My feelings are warmly enlisted in the cause you are bringing before mankind. I am emboldened to write of my feelings of sympathy with you from the consideration that the union of every earnest soul, however humble, will at least not retard the cause. As my soul emerges from the petrifying influence of sin, and begins to appreciate the glorious liberty of the Gospel, so does your divine mission become dear to me. The literature of the world, which formerly delighted me, has now lost its savor, and such pages as yours can alone supply the food my soul craves. You are primarily endeavoring to make plain to humanity the distinction between flesh and spirit. You are pointing out the discordant results that spring from the former, the peace and good will of the latter. You are doing this in an effectual, but by no means bigoted, way. Your words carry the weight of experience more or less extensive. As Jesus told his great truths in serious and loving language, to the truth-seekers of his time, so do you to those of yours.

Intertwined, as outward signs to the principle of a problem, as the body to the soul, are spiritual and physiological truth. I gratefully unite with your testimony in this respect. I have derived, during the past few years, physical and spiritual benefit, by adopting a vegetable diet, and from the discontinuance of the use of tea and coffee. Surely there is a significance in the fact that the food of the prophets of God has always been simple. As to tobacco, I cannot conceive how rational beings can consume such nauseous poison. I can but conclude that its use was instigated by the wily powers of evil as a torment to their unconscious devotees. Many who use it understand its injurious effect. I have eagerly looked at agricultural pieces, for comments on the cultivation of tobacco by Believers. The Jewish law required frequent bathings of the whole body. Mother Ann said that, unless the body were kept clean, the gifts of God would not flow. Other points of your testimony on the relation of physical health to spiritual life, such as punctual manual labor, I fully unite with. Desiring to be a humble follower in every progressive movement, which originates in the true gift, it is my aim to live out each successive development of truth.

Thomas J. Stroud, Enfield, Conn.

SELF-CONSECRATION is not a single act, or fact in the past—a definite thing to be referred back to; it is not an act, an impulse, an emotion, a sentiment; but a principle brought and laid upon the altar of service, to be constantly replaced, re-sanctified, as the shew-bread of the table before the altar.

TOBACCO.

As high as I can remember, in the year 1825, there was a religious movement, or reformation, on the Darby Plains, in Ohio. It did not originate with any of the sectarians, but was, in some measure, led by a man who seemed much inspired to do good, and denounce Orthodoxy, being quite independent of the sectarian clergy. The subjects of this work met together, sang and prayed, exhorted, told their experiences, and, what was a peculiar feature, confessed their private sins in public. Among others, there was a quiet little man of the name of Joseph Atsett who was drawn into the whirlpool of the revival. The writer was among them as a missionary at the time. In a lively prayer meeting Joseph came forward to tell his experience. He informed the meeting that he went among the hazel bushes for the purpose of secret prayer, and when he kneeled down the Spirit said to him "Open your mouth and I will fill it." "And," said he, "I gaped open my mouth like a young robin, and the Spirit said 'What is that in your mouth?'" Said he "I had a great cud of tobacco in my mouth! And I made haste to spit it out, and again opened my mouth. But the spirit said, 'What is that in your pocket?'" And I had almost a whole plug in my pocket. I took it out and throwed it as far as I could send it among the hazel bushes. Then both my mouth and my soul was filled with the Spirit, and I experienced a joy and peace I had never felt before. I have never touched tobacco since, and I never will use it again."

Twenty-five years after that, the writer lived in the Society at Watervliet, O., five miles from the city of Dayton. And in those days a revival, or religious awakening, took place in that city. It began with the lower class, both in point of wealth and morals, and operated more especially among the inebriate class. The sectarian clergy, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, etc., pitched in; and each tried to gather the dear lambs into his own fold. These lambs were found to be uncommonly refractory and independent. The writer had the following account from the mouth of one of those converts from the ranks of the inebriate class. "I was," said he, "a hard drinker, and had degraded myself nearly to lying in the gutter. This spirit of reformation got hold of me, and I could not shake it off. I finally closed in with it, and resolved never to use any thing that would intoxicate. But I could not stop at that. I was led by the same Spirit to see the pernicious effect of using tobacco, and was required to quit its use; and I did so. I felt the more like a man for it, and seemed to myself somewhat cleaned up. When this movement began to die away a little, the clergy of the several sects began fishing, each with his own net, trying to get the most. The Presbyterian called on me, and invited me to join his church. I told him I would attend his meeting the next Sabbath, after which I would be prepared to give him an answer. Sabbath came, and I attended the service; a day or two afterward, the clergyman called to know how I liked the meeting, and how I had made up my mind. I said to him: Sir, I attended your worship and discovered that many of your congregation chew tobacco, and cannot afford to refrain even during the hour of worship. They squirt out the filthy juice, and the floor was so unclean that I could not find a place to kneel before God. And, sir, you use the poisonous weed yourself, and you have got a cud in your mouth now! Spit it out and quit its use, and get your congregation to quit it. I will never join a church which indulges in a practice that the Spirit of God requires me to abstain from. The same spirit that required me to abstain from whisky, urged me to quit tobacco; and if I should join a church that used it, I should be in constant danger of being dragged down to the same level, which, by the grace of God, I never will be." This man informed me that the clergyman never called upon him again.

In conclusion, I will observe: At the time I received this narrative, I lived at Watervliet, O., and there was not then a single member of that society that used tobacco in any of its forms, which was to me a great consolation.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

WEALTH.

WEALTH, as defined by Webster, is "large possessions of money, goods, or land." "All souls are mine, saith the Lord." The earth, with its fullness, belong to Him. If God is just and without partiality, has not every human being an inherent right to as much land as he needs, from which to derive his daily sustenance? Have not all an equal right to God's sunshine, to the pure breezes which come from the mountains, and to the cooling streamlets that meander through the vales and woodlands? Would it not be just as much the prerogative of the few to shut out the sun's rays, and to bottle up the winds, and dam up the streams of water (had they the power) as for them to monopolize the land? Whence came the right for one man or woman to possess a "large amount of land, goods, or money," by which means they oppress and hold in vassalage other of God's creatures? If the answer is: "We have wrought diligently with our hands—have toiled honestly and earnestly—while others have been indifferent and idle; and we have only received the just reward of our works;" then is God's justice vindicated, and man's ways justified. "It shall be well with the righteous;" they who do right in temporal as really as in spiritual things; and they will eat the fruit of their own toil; while the sluggard, who will not work, must suffer hunger, for "the reward of his hands will be given him;" those who "sow sparingly" will reap accordingly.

Wealth that comes through honest industry, is God's gift and blessing to man, and is his lawful inheritance; but, if he so remembers his riches that he gathers them into his heart, and carries them in his best affections, until they are formed into idols, to be worshiped, then is God robbed and dishonored, and man becomes a degenerate being, by abusing proffered blessings, instead of using them as a means to uplift the erring; that the strong and more perfect might in that way be instrumental in aiding the weak and less perfect.

The corporeal body being composed of the elements of the earth, must of necessity derive its sustenance therefrom, while in a physical state of existence. But, is it not a marvel (when intellect and conscience awake from lethargy) that sentient beings, who believe in an endless existence in a life beyond the present, and who know that time will soon carry them where earthly riches, honors, and pleasures will be beyond their reach, should turn all their energies of mind and body to grasp and hold those uncertain riches, which in one short hour may come to naught? If the angel who rides the pale horse should delay his coming for a few short years, yet the earthquake, which opens its mouth and swallows up cities and hamlets, and buries thousands in one living tomb, may occur in an unexpected hour; or the mighty flood tide may sweep, as it has often done, over thickly inhabited portions of the land, destroying life and property; and fire, that fierce devouring element, may lay waste great and populous cities, like Chicago and Boston, in a brief period of time, then the people stood aghast, and "cried with a loud voice: Alas! alas!" these great cities containing so much riches, are laid in ashes, and ruined! Tongue would fail to utter, or pen to paint, the fears, the weeping and wailing of the people in that momentous hour, as they saw their costly edifices, one after another devoured by the merciless flames; while men, women and children fled for their lives, without daring, as it were, even to cast one lingering look after the household gods—their ornaments of gold and silver, and precious stones—which they had left behind them.

What lesson has been learned from such visitations? Have we learned humility and dependence, and gained a knowledge that pride and haughtiness are precursors of the destructive elements? We may remember that the proverb is just as true to day as when it was first uttered; that "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye;" and, we add, an evil intention also. The love of power, and a desire to live in luxury and ease, cause men and women to be unjust, and to bind heavy burdens upon the poor, and to monopolize the elements of subsistence, until their riches is oftentimes their greatest source of vexation, anxiety, and fear. "The abundance of the rich will not suffer him to rest, but the sleep of the (honest) laborer is sweet."

Many of the ancient philosophers so feared the snares of sin, through the deceitfulness of earthly riches, that their strong love of virtue, and desire to consecrate themselves to a life of chastity, induced them to resort to extreme asceticism, and, in solitude, on some lone mountain, or in a desert-place, remote from the haunts of vice, from earthly friends, and every temporal comfort, they performed their vows far from mortal ken. As Gregory said of himself, "he endured the rays of the sultry sun until his skin was parched, and dark as the skin of the Ethiopian, and his limbs were made rough by the friction of coarse hair-cloth."

When the power of the holy people was scattered, and there was no organized body of true Christians on the earth, the prophetic spirit rested with those faithful servants of God, who were clad in sackcloth and mourning; for the true spirit of prophecy has never left the earth, but continued with suffering witnesses through the long night of spiritual darkness. They were God's stars. But, in the fullness of time, according to prophecy, the gathering of the latter-day saints commenced, and the kingdom began to be established, in which the "will of God is done on earth as it is done in heaven."

We rejoice that the time has come when the power of salvation is given to those who desire it, and strength to commence the heavenly life. And that brethren and sisters can dwell together in unity, bearing aloft the banner of virgin purity, and can mingle together in a pure social relation, and in all the duties of life, and preserve their continence without resorting to deserts and mountains, or to monasteries. By the power of truth we are made free! We have engaged in the Christian warfare, and the God of battles is with us, and teaches us how to use those spiritual weapons which are powerful in destroying the strong holds of sin in the human heart. And those who are true in this strife, are not disposed to use carnal weapons to wound or kill their brother man.

We have peace and plenty. We plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, and receive the reward of unselfish toil. "We ask for neither riches nor poverty." If, by diligently putting our hands to work, and applying our hearts unto wisdom, we gain more than we need for our own support, we cheerfully dedicate it to the upbuilding of the Church of Christ on earth; while our greatest concern shall be to lay up treasures in the heavens—the future home of the souls of those who love and walk in the truth. The riches of Christ's kingdom are the riches which we covet.

THE CHRISTIAN'S REST.

"COME unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words, uttered by the Divine Master centuries ago, are still new, and possess great power. He also said, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." What excellence and pathetic sympathy we find in that beautiful and loving invitation! From those few sentences might be written volumes, well filled with instruction that would enlighten the understanding of those who are seeking eternal life—the heavenly rest.

Sometimes those teachings are spread out before us like a map, or chart; and again we view them as a broad field of labor; not for the mind only, but also for hands that are willing to work early and late in the Lord's vineyard.

The voice of paternal tenderness and love that is heard through those words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," touches the tender chords of sympathy and soul affection in the heart of the weary pilgrim, and causes them to vibrate anew. We are not sent to roam in distant lands, as strangers, alone and uncared for, in search of the desired rest; but he stands with open arms ready to infold those who will hear his voice. His language is full of inspiration and soul-stirring eloquence; and, to the earnest seeker after truth, it feels like the breath of heaven.

It may be asked, "How is it that he calls upon us to work in his vineyard, and yet promises a rest? We answer: It is rest from the turmoils of a worldly life—from its fashions and follies—its sorrows and vain pleasures; for, how true it is, that, in our earth life, roses and thorns grow together; and we tire of earth-born pleasures; and most assuredly does the soul who is seeking for heavenly joys, grow weary of a life in sin, and loathe its vain pleasures. And they who strive for earthly gain, and for those things which are self-pleasing, will continue to love the world, with its friendships and pleasures, and all its alluring charms. Instead of being crucified to the world, as was Jesus, they are alive to its baneful influences; and their sinful natures are constantly crying, "Give us more and more;" for a sinful appetite cannot be satisfied.

It is only to the sin-sick soul that those beautiful words, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me," &c., are acceptable. Do we feel that putting on and wearing the yoke of Christ is a hard and grievous task? if so, then are we unworthy of the sacred and hallowed rest that is promised.

"Learn of me," said the Savior. How shall we learn, except we deny ourselves of all ungodliness and every worldly lust; take up the cross, and put off the old garments of self-love, pride, and ambition; and by confession and repentance, wash our robes and make them white, and walk with our Father and Mother in Christ whithersoever they lead? Then, even though it should be through the soul-trying furnace of affliction that we may be called to go, we shall be preserved; or if we pass through deep waters, we shall not be overwhelmed; nor will death, the great king of terrors, have any power over us. Come then, dear Gospel-friends, let all who have heard the heavenly call, "Come unto me," and who have seen the light descend from the Resurrection heavens, and have "tasted of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come," be living souls! Let us enlarge the chambers of our hearts, and live not for self alone, but for the good that we may do to our brethren and sisters in our home circle, and throughout the Zion of God. Then shall our light shine abroad, and the Holy Spirit will clothe our souls with Divine love, that will refine all the senses, and perfect us in the "image of the heavenly," and will fill us with purified joy and peace. Then shall we sing the song of Redemption full and free. And the one prayer of Zion's children will be, "Lord, thy kingdom come, thy will be done throughout the whole earth, as it is done in heaven!"—the glorious kingdom of Righteousness and Peace.

Eldress Mary A. Gillespie, West Gloucester, Me.

BELoved ELDRess ANTOINETTE:

Your kind appeal to the "Sisterhood," in the January No. of the Shaker and Shakeress, seems to be looking us steadily in the face this morning, and still demanding a reply.

As we sit thinking of its claims upon us, and of our obligations to the cause which we hope to honor, we mentally pledge loyalty to both, and would give proof thereof by many simple tokens.

We have been an interested reader of the Shaker ever since its advent, and heartily thank all contributors for the favors which they have conferred on so large a class of readers in this section, as we have been not only edified but instructed; so much so, that we sometimes think, after perusing the pithy articles penned for its columns, that the whole story of our peculiar belief has already been admirably told; that nothing new can be written on this subject.

Again. When taking into consideration the boundlessness of the theme to which we have pledged our lives, it would seem that an army of writers of the Esdras type could not exhaust it. And, further, when contrasting the size of our little sheet with the voluminous publications of the scientific and religious world, it is, comparatively speaking, but a mote in magnitude to what it would be, were it possible to put into language the manifold excellencies which emanate from the virgin life which we aim to interpret.

But, anon, we are reminded of the youthful hero of bible history, who accepted the challenge of Philistia's champion, and who also, refusing to wear Saul's armor (preferring rather to trust in God), successfully vanquished the mighty foe with one smooth stone from out the brook. Hence, may we not predict that similar results will follow the missiles of truth brought to view in the Shaker and Shakeress, if aimed at the champion of our modern Philistia, alias "social evil?" And if God is our support too, we certainly have no need to wear the brazen armour of popular theology to meet this foe, nor to convict the world that there is a God in Israel, through our present humble medium, even the Shaker and Shakeress. We find that, with all that has been written concerning our religious belief, many questions are still being proposed by strangers and friends not of our persuasion, with regard to the practical workings of our community system, its advantages, its benefits, and the like. This is not strange, though we know that the principles upon which it is founded are eternal, and that several societies embodying these have survived the ravages of time for nearly a century, and resisted alike the waves of opposition, and the insinuations of false doctrines, without any signs of decay; that they have stood while scores of man-made institutions have risen and declined. Still, the world wonders and prophesies failure, while questions similar to what we here insert often meet us. Some of these we do not remember to have seen very elaborately treated in our late publications; we therefore solicit the aid of experienced writers of our Order for more satisfactory replies to the same, in future numbers of the paper, than we are able to give.

1st. Can children, adopted by your communities, and subjected to your peculiar modes of discipline, ever become symmetrically developed in an intellectual point of view? In brief, Did this system ever produce a well balanced mind?

2d. Is the quiet routine of duties daily imposed, calculated to develop energy of character, or give breadth and soundness to judgment?

3d. Are individuals thus reared, self-reliant and able to cope with difficulties of a complicated nature?

4th. Is it possible that minds thus apparently fettered by surroundings, and controlled by one system of influences, ever rejoice in that expansion of ideas, and that independence of thought which constitutes them free agents?

These are a few of the many queries which seem to puzzle the multitudes who stand as spectators, apparently waiting to see how successfully the singular problem of a virgin life is to be solved by human beings. We do not propose to answer these questions analytically, but will give a general opinion.

Would say, with regard to question first, that most children adopted by us, in these days, belong to that class of individuals whom Christ came to save; hence wholesome discipline and quiet occupation, are the grand counter-influences to which we must resort, to check the growth of inherent propensities which are so glaringly apparent. If they yield to these means, we have some hope of balancing the future mind, morally, at least. Our strife is, however, to create a taste for such healthful, intellectual and moral pursuits, as will raise them above their former gross appetites.

We find that Satan has already taken them "up into an exceeding high mountain," and they have discovered the glories of the whole earth; and, shall we say it? only the wisdom of a God is equal to the task of reforming and elevating them from their low estates. We further claim, that the principles of the Christ-life, when fully accepted, will not only elevate men and women, but will, in a certain sense, reconstruct the minds of those who are wedded to the cause of spiritual progress. In other words, "They who put Christ fully on," become gradually and radically changed in many respects, for "God helps those who help themselves."

Still further, with regard to the moral growth of children adopted by our communities, we think that they have many advantages over their companions abroad, if the "one system of influences" mentioned, is pure; for, remarks an able writer, in one of our Educational Journals:

"The soul addressed constantly by the highest possible influences, will have pure and lofty purposes, will aim at highest ends." Again: "It is safe to say, that the moral character of the mature man will depend more upon the education which the conscience shall have received in early days, than upon any other agency."

But what of intellectual growth? Simply this: that the young Shaker and Shakeress are not only permitted, but urged to educate themselves in those branches of science which will aid them in becoming useful members of society. Nor are they (as stated in "Science of Life," February No.) obliged to suspend mental growth as a result of marriage, as is the fact of young women abroad. With us we can see no reason why the mind should not continue to expand and increase its powers, as long as it exists in the form; and who can limit its capabilities when freed from an earthly tabernacle? That there have been well-ordered minds, and noble specimens of men and women developed within the confines of a Shaker home, we truthfully aver. And why not? since destroying the animal proclivities does not fetter the more exalted attributes of the soul.

History informs us, that John Bunyan, one of the most celebrated of English writers, was imprisoned for twelve years; and while thus incarcerated wrote his popular "Pilgrim's Progress." Did this exalted mental effort prove that being secluded from the world for a time, the mind ceased to act or to expand?

It is clear to us, that "the mind grows from what it feeds upon;" and that that mind, absorbed in the desire to do the will of God, becomes God-like in its capabilities, loves, and interests.

The facts are, that those who feel themselves called to this work of self-denial, recognize God in the whole plan; and, while professing to leave the worldly order, the plane upon which perfect natural men and women are developed, choose rather to be perfected in the angel life, aspiring most to develop the angel character, which is to exist when earthly attainments have passed away.

Asenath C. Stickney, Canterbury, N. H.

WHEN men are called into the Christian life, they do not come in as experts and veterans; they come in as recruits, to be drilled. And all their campaign lies before them. The victory of our faith is gained step by step; and the great personal epochs in our history are those in which the good principle, after severe conflict, gains the ascendancy over the evil that is in us.

Communications from J. M. Peebles and A. B. Bradford in September number.

FORBEARANCE.

THE spirit of persecution is often keenly felt in many petty ways through life, sufficient to fully test the fidelity of the striving Christian. Those only who meekly bear unmerited censure, or injustice in its many forms, still maintaining a calm, forgiving spirit, and continuing to do good to their enemies are, indeed and truly, Christian. Genuine forbearance is a virtue, beautiful, noble, and Christ-like.

How many professing Christians can meet the insults of scoffers, or hear slanderous reports of themselves or their friends, without a retaliatory answer in their hearts, and who (if practicable) would not turn the weight of the offense upon the offender?

May we never forget the lovely example of our Pattern, who bore so meekly the malice of the vile; when scourged, spit upon, stoned, scoffed and jeered, his lofty spirit could not stoop to pour out a revenge. How noble the breathings of his soul, "Father forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Let each follower of our Savior ask himself this question, — In how great a degree do I practise this Christian principle?

Elizabeth Martin, Canterbury, N. H.

PRAYER.

THE readers of the "Shaker and Shakeress," who believe that the Bible is the Word of God, and that the Apostles of Jesus Christ were under the immediate inspiration of the Holy Spirit in all they said and wrote, from the time he called them to leave their fishing nets on the banks of the sea of Galilee, and follow him, will pardon us for dwelling upon the subject of Prayer, when they remember that one of the best injunctions the Apostles ever gave was, to "Pray without ceasing." — ED.

PRAYER is sometimes called the "sheet-anchor of the soul, when tossed upon the tempestuous sea of life;" and "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, unuttered or expressed." Formal, wordy prayers, that do not proceed from the heart, are only "lip service." But how much to be desired is a dependent, child-like spirit, which will lead souls, in times of need, to apply for help, and draw life from the Fountain that is never dry.

Mortals are so short-sighted, that they frequently ask for those things they want (or desire), instead of seeking to have their real needs supplied; and, in that condition of mind, may sometimes think they receive a "stone for bread," or, "for an egg, a scorpion," and be led to exclaim (as did Jacob of old), "All these things are against me." But, if such will patiently wait on God, they will eventually see his wisdom in withholding as well as in giving.

When (as Believers in Christ's second appearing) we pray for the spread of the Gospel testimony, and that souls may be gathered to our Zion, would it not be well for us to consider, and ask ourselves, How much individual sacrifice are we willing to make for the good of others? and, Are we willing to share with them our temporal and spiritual substance?

We know how hard, or difficult, it is for those who have spent their time and energies of body and mind in acquiring wealth, to consecrate it to the good of others, and unselfishly share it with them. And, indeed, those who have no possessions in houses, or land, or riches of any kind, find it exceedingly crossing to their selfish natures, to sacrifice, or give up, or "forsake" their fathers and mothers, their brothers and sisters, and the pleasures of a carnal life; yet all this must be done before they can realize the truth of the promise of a "hundred-fold more in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting."

Our faith and confidence is in God, who hears and answers prayer. Our faith may be tried; but we will continue to watch and wait, to pray, and not faint; for his work will go on, and no power on earth can stay his hand.

A few years ago, thousands of souls, who saw and felt the great evil of slavery in the United States, devoutly prayed that the slave power might be broken, and the oppressed made free. The number who prayed and worked in the cause of freedom were few in comparison with those who upheld the slave power; yet they knew they were on the side of justice and right, and were firm in their faith that the right would prevail. The truth in respect to slavery worked (for a time) like leaven in the community, until the people were sufficiently imbued with a sense of justice to rise and strike the blow that severed the captives' chains.

R. Webster, Union V., O.

THE Prayer taught by Jesus, inculcates all the duties pertaining to the Christian life. He taught us to say, "Our Father, who art in heaven." This implies a Divine Parentage; for, if we have "a Father in heaven," we must also have a Mother there, through whose pure Spirit we become purified, and made fit subjects for that blissful state that enables us dependent children to say — our Father and Mother; and their sacred name can be honored by those only who have "washed their robes, and made them white."

In this simple, child-like spirit, we say, "Give us this day our daily bread; not the stale bread of our forefathers," who ate their manna, and are dead," nor the spiritual food that was distributed to the primitive Christians; for they also have passed away; nor even that of yesterday; but the new and living bread of to-day; those glorious truths which, day by day, unfold to our understandings, the will of our "Father and Mother in heaven," and fill our souls with that beautiful spirit of "forgiveness" that we can in confidence ask to be "forgiven." Then we shall not be left in the hour of "temptation;" but our souls will be "delivered from evil;" and, in this purified state, we can humbly and devoutly ascribe all the glory, honor, and power to our Father and Mother — God.

"The fervent and effectual prayer of the righteous," is not the bending of the knee to a set form of words; it is not the empty pharisaic prattle, to be "heard of men;" but the Christian's prayer is the Christian life. Simple desires are good; but they avail us nothing, unless we work with them. Then let us live under the heavenly influence of Divine love, that we may devote our whole life to the beautiful work of prayer — that of ministering the healing balm of comfort to the afflicted, and pouring the "oil of gladness" into the wounded heart; thus lifting humanity from the dismal pit of a sinful life, into the glorious sunshine of our Parents' love.

HOME.

"Mid pleasures and palaces, wherever I roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home!"
THESE lines were written by one who, a stranger and alone, was wandering through the streets of a gay and populous city, and, feeling homeless and sad, composed a poem that touched a chord so deeply implanted in the human heart, that it has been copied and sung in every civilized country throughout the world.

The love of home is coeval with the race; from the monarch to the peasant, from the sage to the savage, all are (more or less) imbued with this instinct, according to their degree of development.

It is also seen in the animal creation: "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, were the words of an inspired Prophet long ago; none so stupid, that they do not know the source whence their needs are supplied.

Our Savior recognized this principle, when He said: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head;" and, perhaps, this may have been one of the causes that combined to make him a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Being called to separate himself from friends and kindred, he was not even permitted to have a home, where he might, when weary and oppressed in spirit, seek an interval of rest, and find a momentary relaxation from the great work to which he was consecrated.

And what is home? Does it consist merely in the supply of the natural and physical wants of our being, without any reference to the moral culture, the spiritual growth, and that sympathy of feeling which bind heart to heart? Where these are wanting, there may be opulence, grandeur, and an outward semblance of happiness; but it is not home, and cannot fill the yearnings of an immortal spirit.

A Shaker home is quite a different thing. Many admire the neatness, order, and air of repose that mark our outward surroundings; but they do not discover the hidden springs that produce this outgrowth, and make it, of all others, the most attractive. For, while they pity our self-imposed seclusion from worldly society, with all its selfishness, pride, and love of distinction, together with what they call our religious fanaticism, they might indeed envy the peace, love, and harmony, that pervade our humble home, and form a paradise on earth.

Here self-love is not the ruling influence; but each one labors physically and spiritually for the good of all; and the perverted passions of human nature do not bear the sway over the intellectual and spiritual faculties of the soul; but are brought into subjection to a higher law, which controls the body, even the law of Christ. This makes the "golden rule" a possibility; and it becomes comparatively easy to prefer one another in love, rather than to indulge in the opposite spirit, that would lead the strong to usurp authority over the weak, and to allow the love of greed to be the only incentive to action.

As the principles that constitute this blessed home are eternal, we believe that it is emphatically the home of the soul, where all its higher aspirations must center; therefore we will cleave to it; for we know that purity, genuine friendship, and hallowed love, possess the hearts, and form the characters, of the inmates of this our Zion home.

Rhoda R. Hollister, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

SCANDAL.

If all be true that Beecher, Tilton & Co. are charged with, by some meddlesome women, who is there, amongst the magnates of Babylon, that can rightfully cast the first stone?

Are they not all under the influence of perverted generation, or suffering from it antenatally? Wisdom would seem to dictate that the accused and accusers come to terms, shake hands, and, like Pilate and Herod, be friends; lest the Shakers come forth from their seclusion and inaugurate the Day of Judgment.

UNANIMITY of action is the order of Heaven. All of God's creation expresses perfection in unity and co-operation. The worship of Believers is symbolical of the ultimate attainment of the soul, when the whole being shall be in harmony with the Creator — God — and with associate intelligences living and moving in the element of pure love. This is the doctrine that the Christ taught, and that Jesus accepted; and this was the Spirit that prompted him to renounce his individuality and selfish life, with its prescribed interests, for the good of his brethren, whom he served in love. He said, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." And, in a spirit of true consecration, he said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God!" And those who are baptized into the same spirit, are lost to selfhood, and help to inaugurate the reign of "Peace on earth," and of love to God, "and good-will to man."

J. D. Knight, Mt. Lebanon.

THE secret of health: First, keep warm. Second, eat regularly and slowly. Third, maintain regular bodily habits. Fourth, take early and very light suppers, or, better still, none at all. Fifth, keep a clean skin. Sixth, get plenty of sleep at night. Seventh, keep cheerful and respectful company. Eighth, keep out of debt. Ninth, don't set your mind on things you don't need.

THE TEST. — Whoever would put "God" into the Federal Constitution discovers a plentiful lack of that element in their own constitution.

TWILIGHT REFLECTION.

1. When the soft shades of twilight drop over our way, Like curtains let down from on high, When life's busy scenes that have crowded the day,
 2. O, this is the sea-son when calm, holy thought Like tide-waves our spirits o'er-flow, While truest of pictures our life-deeds have wrought,
 3. Then oft let us pause mid the con-flict and strife, The coun-sel of wis-dom to heed, To ask for a fore-taste of heav-en-ly life,

Have pass'd with the light from the sky; 'Tis then that the spi-rit should rise and take flight, From tu-mult of earth and its care,
 Re-flec-tion shall o-ver us throw, Till clear-ly por-trayed on the vi-sion with-in, Each mo-tive and ac-tion will be,
 To sa-tis-fy im-mor-tal need; And when the deep sha-dows of time close around, When life's fair-est day-beams are past,

And seek sweet re-pose on the sha-dow-less height, Com-mu-nion with an-gels to share.
 The glo-ry of good-ness, the dark-ness of sin, In joy or in sor-row we see.
 May light from be-yond us our path-way sur-round, For ev-er and ev-er to last.

THE SWEDISH EMIGRANT.

It may be news to many subscribers, that, in Kentucky, connected with the Pleasant Hill Society, there is a Shaker Family composed of emigrants from Sweden. Its Elder, John Barnett, has sent the following Poetic Lines, and says:

"The correspondence with Sweden shows that the fire is not smothered. Numbers speak of faith, and expect to come; others wish to come, but have not the means.

"I have sometimes thought that the Eastern world being (as termed by you) masculine, and the Western, feminine, the next cycle of progress of our Gospel will open in England. But to me it seems impossible for Believers to travel successfully, while so fettered by inexorable 'fashion' in aliments and beverages, which belong exclusively to the dominion and kingdom made 'desolate.'"

A blessed country, far away
 From tumult, war, and pain!
 O light the price that I must pay,
 Its righteousness to gain.

I leave my native land, and kin,
 And life, so dear to me;
 All pride, and selfishness, and sin,
 To there he pure and free.

Its genial clime, and fruitful soil,
 Yield rich abundant food.
 There, honest sacrifice and toil
 Return a lasting good.

The precious olive, wheat, and vine,
 To cultivate with care,
 The law of heaven shall make it mine,
 That I their wealth may share.

The worldly-minded are not led Unto this blest abode;
 The false and covetous but dread
 Its strait and narrow road.

The vulture's eye hath never seen,
 Nor ravenous beasts of prey,
 Nor trall of wily serpents, been
 Along this holy way.

No fell disease, to interrupt
 The flow of life and zeal;
 No moth or rust can there corrupt,
 Nor thieves break through and steal.

No famine's death hath there appear'd,
 But fruitful fields abound;
 And Peace her temple bright has rear'd
 Upon this sacred ground.

Her simple laws, like Noah's ark,
 Will save all from the flood,
 Who will in honesty embark
 To find eternal good.

Lo, from the East and West they'll come,
 From North and South afar,
 All tongues and kindred find a home
 Where many mansions are.

John Barnett, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

OUR PARENTAGE.

Lord, kindle thy burnings, and quench not the flame
 That consumes the nature of sin;
 Light up the dark places with Truth's piercing beams,

'Till all hecomes glorious within.
 Thy heritage, Father, we'll ever adorn
 With emblems of beauty and peace;
 O chasten and cleanse us, till we become pure,
 And grow with eternal increase.

And then to thy honor we temples can build,
 Wherein thy pure Spirit can reign—
 A clean habitation with holiness fill'd—
 All enmity there being slain.
 And sweet songs of praise through these temples shall ring,
 As we in thy knowledge expand.
 And learn that thy gifts are all righteous and good,
 Dealt out with a bounteous hand.

We'll worship Thee, Father, on Zion's high hills,
 Where beareth the Sun's golden rays;
 Our Heavenly Mother, so gentle and dear,
 Down in her low valleys we'll praise.
 'Tis there her sweet voice, from the angelic spheres,
 In love's soften'd tones we can hear;
 Like music it floats on each heaven-born breeze,
 And bringeth the sound of good cheer.

The female Messiah in glory hath come,
 And now we have Saviors indeed,
 A Parentage perfect to guide us along,
 A blessed and heavenly Lead.

We'll follow in meekness, through Time's shady vale,
 To regions of beauty and light,
 There, praising these Saviors through Heaven's high spheres,
 Shall be our eternal delight.

Through their holy unction, our souls have been raised
 From Nature's dark, unhallow'd plane;
 We'll worship these powers, and how at no shrine
 But that of the heavenly twain.
 Our Father and Mother are Wisdom and Love,
 They're seated on Heaven's "white throne;"
 And down on the earth, so benighted and drear,
 Their wisdom and glory have shone.

They've lighten'd and cheer'd it with radiant smiles
 Of kindness, affection, and love;
 And open'd the way of salvation and peace,
 Which leadeth to glories above.
 Blest land! fraught with bliss and with blessings divine,

We're hast'ning to thy pure abode,
 And, as we advance, we will loudly proclaim,
 Our FATHER and MOTHER are GOD!!

MAN v. EARTH.

—o—

THE First Cause of all things is Spirit—God. The material worlds are the last procedure—the ultimates—from this Primal Cause. The Spirit of God is, in a low degree, in the natural worlds, and is exhibited in the creation of human beings—the representatives of Deity. Man and Woman is the Lord of this planet. The vitalizing power of the human body is the soul; the vitalizing power of the soul is the spirit. Body, soul, and spirit, are the product of the earth, and of its soul and spirit. In other words, the spiritual world is as soul to the earth; and the inner heavens as spirit to it. Human beings are the earth elements in their highest form of organization; and that is why Swedenborg declared the earth and the heavens to be in the form of a man; and man and woman in the form of Deity—Wisdom and Love.

When we contemplate the fact, that the human race use the constituent elements of a country—fire, air, water, land, mineral, vegetable, and animal, it becomes evident, that, in a nation like China, where 400 million men and women have lived, generated, and died, during countless ages, the whole nation, in general and particular, is humanized.

Is it unreasonable, or illogical, to assume that the people control these elements; and that, if they were permanently in a Divine life, every thing would be under their jurisdiction and manipulation; and that, in conjunction and co-operation with the myriads in the soul of the earth—the world of spirits—directed by the Deific Spirits in the inner heavens, they could realize the position, that God would “withhold no good thing from those who love and serve one another”—which is to love and serve God?

Inference. That the saints of all ages and races are but as drops before the shower, in their power over the physical elements—signs of what the whole race will attain to in the coming Millennium.

History abounds in miracles that are no miracles at all, having been wrought under law. “Elias was subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.” (James, 5: 17, 18.) The great power possessed by Moses over the material elements is latent in the entire human family. He “was the meekest man” that existed at that period. His humility, simplicity, devotion, and spiritual-mindedness, rendered him an eminent medium of occult forces. He was in the life of God in Nature—a creator. In power over the mere earthly elements, in their unorganized condition, Moses exceeded Jesus. But, in power over the human body—those elements highly organized, Jesus exceeded his predecessors. All power in heaven and earth was his, as a type of what all men will or may become and possess.

The whole nation of Egypt—its land and water, its air and fire, and the very souls of the people—seemed plastic in the hands of Moses. Even the sea obeyed the touch of his magical wand, and was his weapon of war, and instrument of instruction and destruction. The whole body of Israelites acted efficiently upon the food-producing elements of the country through which they were forty years in passing, into a land of milk and honey. There, food was more the product of labor.

MANNA.

WHAT have we here? What was this manna, and how was it produced? Was it of the same chemical substances in the atmosphere, and in the soil upon which it gathered, that under other conditions would have assumed the form of wheat? It must have been thus; for law could not have been any more violated in its creation than when bananas, or any other kind of fruit, is the result. As to the how, I have not yet found a teacher to instruct and make me understand the origin of rice or oranges; nor do I know the process of the growth of a blade of grass, or of the California Washingtonian Gigantica. “The soul of things” is in the spirit world; “for there the Lord God formed every herb and every plant before it grew” on the earth—before it was externalized.

The earth is the mother of us all—of the various races of humans—in a far more real and practical manner and sense than any but poets have thought or imagined.

As the body of the mother of any animal, man included, naturally and spontaneously produces food for her own offsprings, so is food for man and beast equally spontaneously produced—eliminated from and of the elements of which man and the earth itself, and all the genera of animals are constituted.

To my mind the historical fact that for forty years manna-food (“what is it?”) assumed the form of a deposit, like coriander seed, on the surface of the ground, is as simple and as scientifically understandable—as natural—as is the analogous fact of the deposit of honey-dew, which is very nutritious, sometimes sufficiently so to sustain life.

On this earth man and woman, standing in a normal relation to the lower spirit sphere, would need to “take no” more “thought as to what they should eat and drink, and wherewithal they should be clothed,” than do “the ravens” or “the lilies of the valley.”

But what of the ethics—of the moral aspect of this great question of Nutrition? The Scotch have their oatmeal, the Irish their potatoes, the Asiatics their rice, as Israel had their manna. What was the effect of this one kind of simple food, so long continued as to extend beyond that generation to their posterity, who went over Jordan?

Why this was the physiological effect, that, when the Israelites, as slaves, came out of Egypt—the richest food-producing country upon the then known earth—the granary of the world—they, as a people, were precisely in the same physiological condition as American Christians; i. e., they were utterly given over to their physicians, unto whom they had “turned,” and not unto their Lord, “the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,” who would have taken “all sickness and diseases” and physicians “away from the midst of them.” And they were filled with Egyptian maladies, “from the crowns of their heads to the soles of their feet.” From every one of those diseases they were healed and delivered by the daily use of their God-given manna; by the exercise necessary to secure this food; by the pure air breathed consequent upon living in tents, and while at work early in the morning, to gather it before it melted; conjoined to the pure water from the rock of Horeb, and from other spring-producing rocks in the Wilderness.

By these means not only were they cured of their physical ailments, but there ensued a sensitive, psychical, magnetic condition of body and soul throughout the whole camp of Israel. And they informed Moses that “Eldad and Medad prophesied in the camp” among the people; and they sought of him authority to suppress them. And Moses replied: “Enviest thou for my sake,” because the common people are exercising my peculiar gifts? Why, “I would that all the Lord’s people were prophets.” That is just what I am trying to make of them, even as a schoolmaster is intent upon making learned men and women of his scholars, and as a good father and mother desire to have their children become even superior to themselves. Such, in substance, was the nobly grand response of this archetype of the first real living Shaker, Jesus of Nazareth.

Jesus was a scholar, and Moses, whom (in vision) he saw personally from time to time, was his schoolmaster, to bring him to Christ; and Elias, who was a Christ Prophet, came with Moses to the mount; and, while Moses brought Jesus near to John the Baptist, his successor, Elias, brought him to the Christ Spirit, with which John baptized him.

Thus we have the Law and the Prophets until John, and then the kingdom of heaven was preached.

J. M. PEEBLES.

—o—

WE are in receipt of letters and communications, written in April, from this well-beloved friend, who accompanied us in our English Mission, and who is now on a flying trip around the Earth planet.

From New Zealand, he writes, that man, as a religious animal, is polygamic and promiscuous; as a spiritual being, he is monogamic in marriage, and chaste in marital conduct; and, as an angel, he is a celibate. The embryo angel is within. Men may become angelic on earth. This is the resurrection, with God’s “will done on earth as in heaven.”

The ancient inhabitants were called Maori. He thus writes of

MAORI SPIRITUALISM.

Relation to, and communion with, a world of spirits, are beliefs almost, if not completely, universal. The native tribes and clans of these islands are not only aware of holding intercourse with the so-called dead, but they understand the abuse, often using their mediumistic privileges for selfish ends. During their wars with the English, they were uniformly made acquainted, by vision, clairvoyance or clairaudience, with the movements of the British troops before action in battle. Not a plan of Her Majesty's officers could be kept from them. The leading chief of the Hau Hans was a noted medium and medicine-man. He distinctly said that the "spirits of the dead" guided him to his victories. The Maoris in the north islands still own much territory, have their king, and hold but little intercourse with pakeha, the white man.

The medium-priest in a tribe is called Tohunga. They meet in close apartments, and chant their songs till the flickering fire fades away, when the Tohunga goes into his ecstatic state, and the spirit controlling tenders counsel, describes his new habitation in spirit-life, gives the names of those whom he has met, and bears messages in return to kindred in the higher life. That these Maoris of New Zealand talk with immortals, no intelligent man having lived among them disputes.

From Hong Kong, China, May 27th, we have the following sermon:

(The Shaker and Shakeress-)

PACIFIC OCEAN, April 25, '73.

ELDER FREDERICK: The other day, on the clipper barque Harriet Armitage, bound to Hong Kong, China, from New Zealand, we crossed the equator in longitude east 166°, 20". We have passed a great number of islands, between two of which we were becalmed for five days. Several sharks surrounded our ship. The weather was intensely hot, the southern cross shining beautifully each night. The voyage reminds me of our trip to England only in this — the unfathomed depths of waters beneath and the infinite expanse of blue above us.

On the "Atlantic," White Star Line, we had excellent accommodations, and intelligent associates, with essays, lectures, and the mirth of the eccentric George Francis Train. On this vessel, we have accommodations and food not easily described, with 107 noisy, homeward-bound Chinamen, a portion of whom occupy the cabin. Confucius may have been a most eminent sage, but these, his disciples, are dirty, ignorant, and selfish specimens of humanity. They are properly "Coolies." Seeing them in their own country may improve my opinion of them. There is no line of steamships from Australia or New Zealand to China; neither is there at present between the English Colonies in the Pacific and California. The line started by Webb & Co. proved an abortion. I gave the reason of the failure in one of my letters to the Banner of Light.

By the way, I fear that two or three of these "letters of travel" have been lost either through postal mismanagement, or the Boston fire.

Traveling, I find that Spiritualism has believers and representatives in all the enlightened portions of the world. The Pacific Islanders are no exception. Surely it is the "angel having great power."

Time, you may well know, hangs heavily. Dr. Dunn constitutes my most intimate companionship. I have heard him say, "knowing the treachery and wickedness of the world," that, if he should be called to spirit-life, he would desire to have his children brought up Shakers.

Having nothing else to do on Sunday last, I fell to preaching. You know I was ordained a preacher some thirty years ago, by the laying on of hands, which hands had about as much influence as so many dry chips. It was a church form, nothing more. But I fell to preaching pen-and-ink sermons the other day; and although decidedly dissatisfied with them, I venture to forward the gist of them to you, to dispose of as the spirit moves. They may not abound in the right kind of theology, according to your conceptions of "sound doctrine." But I remember the circumstance of the English churchman coming to you in London to inquire about "Shakerism." You informed him that believers, constituting the Millennial Church, had no crafty creed, no hireling priesthood, and no ecclesiastic yoke of theological belief to fasten upon men's necks. "But," you added, "those joining us must be good; must plant their feet firmly upon the platform embodying these principles, purity, peace, and 'all things in common.' 'Faith without works is dead.'" But to my preaching.

SERMONS AT SEA. NO. 1.

"I am the good Shepherd. The good Shepherd calleth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out." John, 10: 3-11.

If rational in the ancient Greek to put over the portal of the temple, "Know thyself;" if justifiable in Whitman the poet to write, "I celebrate myself," and in our favorite Emerson to "affirm" himself, it certainly was not egotistic in Jesus to say, "I testify of myself." And this he did when he said, "I am the good Shepherd." The words were born out of a conscious consciousness of his divine mission, or a realization of the fact that his "kingdom was not of this world."

The symbol of the Shepherd is beautiful. Eastern Shepherds knew and named each sheep of the flock. And in early morning they led them out into green pastures, watching them by day, and carefully guarding them by night. Jesus, conversing with the spirits of Moses and Elias, and aflame with the "baptism of fire," was pre-eminently "the good Shepherd." Every man anointed or baptized into the Christ-spirit of love and purity is a good Shepherd, and every such woman is a good Shepherdess. These, by the logic of circumstances, are leaders. It is embodied principles that naturally constitute them such. The "body-politic," as well as the human body, must have a head, the office-work of which is to lead or rightly direct. An organization without competent officers to govern and direct would be comparable to a headless body, or idiocy, fruiting out into shapes as monstrous as ungovernable.

Jesus "leadeth his own sheep out;" leads them by love, or love and wisdom combined. These dual principles run like golden threads through the realm of universal being. Love, void of parasitic attendants — passion, suspicion, and selfishness; love, acting in concert with wisdom and power, is the mightiest redemptive force in the universe.

Every human being has something good within; some qualities to admire and love. These God-implanted excellencies should be searched for and unfolded. Love not only seeks, but it is a mighty invigorator. The vine is a dry, leafless thing in early spring-time, but the warmth of summer brings out the blossoms and the purple clusters. The infant, at times, is peevish, cross, and self-willed; but maternal love, with skillful fingers, touches and tunes the better chords, till the life-strings become accustomed to vibrate in harmony.

Winter, in northern latitudes, is any thing but inviting; not a tiny flower above the ground; not a song among the trees, and not a flush of summer in the sky! Spring is the resurrection time. Many men, though in the prime of life, are in the winter of their days; cold, hard, worldly! Can we hope for buds of benevolence? Can we look for the "fruits of the spirit?" Aye, there are silent whisperings; these are stirring at the roots of their being. Conscience, at times, arouses itself; the good Shepherd calls; the "Spirit and the Bride say Come!" Charity "hopeth all things."

European travelers tell us that the journey is rough and rocky from the "garden home of Adam" on the Euphrates, to the Calvary, in Syria, that echoed with the words, "Father, forgive them." So, spiritually speaking, the "travel" is often long from the Adamic nature, with its appetites and passions, to Christ, the victor. "Be of good cheer" said Jesus, "I have overcome the world." This "travel," this pathway, is not always flowery. There are trials, disappointments, and thorns to pierce the feet; there are cups of gall to be tasted, and heavy crosses to be borne. All higher births are preceded by pains. "No cross, no crown," said the noble-hearted Quaker, Wm. Penn. Crosses and sufferings are good angels in disguise, and O how divine to bear them without a murmur. "Not my will but thine, O God, be done!"

When a lad, in Vermont, I remember of seeing a shepherd-farmer, on a bitter, snowy day, gathering all his sheep carefully to the windy side of the hill. The silly creatures, left to themselves, would all take to the other side, going to the sheltered spots, where the deep snow-drifts would silently furnish them at once with a refuge and a grave. On such a day, the life of some of the sheep depended upon facing the blast. Lying down cozily, they would become chilled and benumbed! Therefore, the shepherd would not let even the weakest and youngest lie down in the shelter, but by turns called, led, carried, and drove them, facing bitter winds and blinding snows. This is but a faint symbol of the "good Shepherd," of the good angels, of good men and women, and their plans to find, encourage, and gather into the fold the "lost sheep." Life is a puzzle. There are many ways to a city, but only one that is direct. Sunny roads are not always the safest. There are fields of temptation, where the moral strength is tried; fields of danger, where great caution is required; fields of toil, where harvests come only through incessant labor; fields of quietness, where a little rest is allowed; fields of darkness, where the sheep huddle close to the Shepherd; and there are refreshing fields of plenty upon the higher pasture lands of true living. Every right step taken is eternal gain.

"Sweet fields, beyond the swelling floods, Stand dress'd in living green."

Up to these heavenly fields, where the crystal waters flow, flow so gently, by the tree of life, the "good Shepherd" leadeth the sheep. The lamb that is faint and weary he carries in his arms, till it acquires a little strength, then he expects it to use that strength. Effort and will-power are indispensable to success. The inimitable Emerson recommends "self-help."

The "good Shepherd," says the Evangelist John, "calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out;" that is, leads them out of darkness into light; out of the earthly into the spiritual; out of moral feebleness into manly strength; out of sluggish indolence into stirring activity; out of sectarian theology into religion "pure and undefiled;" and, finally, out of earth and earthly associations into the gates of heaven, where they are as the angels of God. Amen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ENON VALLEY, PENN., July 6, 1873.

FRIENDS, EDITORS OF THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS: As all the readers of your beautiful, clean-faced paper feel an interest in the great question now before the American People, of converting the United States Constitution into a theological creed, and the government under it into a persecuting power, they will be sorry to learn that the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention, now in session at Philadelphia, have taken a step backward on this subject. The old Constitution, in its preamble, declares, "We, the People of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, ordain and establish this Constitution." The draft of the new one has this preamble, "We, the People of Pennsylvania, grateful to Almighty God, for the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and humbly invoking his guidance, do ordain, &c." To be sure there is nothing in this change very alarming, except that it panders to the determined set of bigots who wish to push back the cause of human progress ten hundred years, and who are the most thankful for small favors of any people I ever knew. If I were of those who would do evil that good might come, I could wish that the Convention would gratify the bigots, and put into the new constitution the whole Westminster Confession of Faith and Catechisms, and thus give the people a belly-full of it. Such a proceeding would raise a ferment that would rid the public stomach of every atom of theological poison that has been smuggled into it by these unscrupulous men.

But I have something to tell you as an offset to this. The Baptist clergy of Philadelphia have been discussing the subject of the religious amendment. Remembering how the Puritans of Massachusetts persecuted Roger Williams, the great founder of their sect, and drove him down to Rhode Island, the Baptists have always, as a general rule, taken right ground on the question of Church and State. The Rev. Dr. Howard Malcom, one of their oldest and most influential ministers, declared, in the Philadelphia discussion, that the advocates of this religious amendment were either fools or wicked assailants of our free institutions. The Rev. Dr. Cutchart, another eminent man, declared that the intelligent and consistent Baptists held to the secular theory of government, and admitted that nations, as nations, can have no God; that the same is true of families; that religion is purely an individual, not a social, principle, and that the demands of liberalism ought to be conceded.

The demands of liberalism referred to, are the nine following propositions issued by Francis E. Abbot, the able and distinguished Editor of the Toledo Index, and generally adopted by the Radicals of the country:

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian, educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the Government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis, and whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly and promptly made.

These demands are reasonable; and, unless the Young Men's Christian Association, which is made up of members from all the Evangelical sects, override the Baptist Church in their plans "for giving this country to Jesus," we may calculate on the help of this large sect in our endeavors to keep the State free from the adulterous embraces of the Church.

Those religious Bourbons, who, like their political allies in Europe, "neither learn any thing, nor forget any thing," have no idea that they are fabricating a two-edged sword that will cut both ways. The emigration that is swarming to our shores from Europe compels us to think of the future, and the possible complications that may arise in religious matters. Each sect has now an unquestioned right to believe and worship as they please, and to propagate their opinions by the pulpit and the press. But if the majority of to-day have the right to foist their creed into the Constitution, and persecute all non-conformists, the majority of next year can "amend" it out, and put their own in, and send to prison those who don't conform. And the struggle thus inaugurated will make this land just what England and Scotland were in the 17th century, when Presbytery and Prelacy took the field, and drenched those countries in blood.

But what we want is discussion of the subject. When the people are informed on governmental questions the danger is over.

Respectfully yours,

A. B. B.

TWO GOVERNMENTS.

A CIVIL GOVERNMENT, that shall be male and female, to begin with, will have taken an advance step in the direction of the Millennium. Other radical changes and improvements would speedily follow, as naturally "as day the night." An influx from the Divine Order would commence which would never cease, until the land should be as common to the people as is the air and water. Poverty would be no more; for the Lord would greatly bless such a people. "War would cease to the ends of the earth;" the social evil would not be so much as named; and sickness an evil unknown. For great would be the peace, and perfect the righteousness, of the nation whom a dual God should direct, through its Civil Government.

While the SPIRITUAL CHURCH, "not of this world," and as perfectly aloof from the Civil Government as is the sun aloof from the moon, would be "the tabernacle of God with men;" "the kingdom of heaven upon earth," with no generative elements or practices; and with all the property of life, and its labor products, enjoyed "in common," by the subjects of the Resurrection.

Thither would the nations of the earth go up, to inquire of the Lord, as the tribes of Israel went up to the temporal Jerusalem—to its Temple, its Altar, and its Priesthood.

The "ark"—organization; the "pot of manna"—spiritual instruction; the "Covenant"—the abstract laws of Divine Love and Wisdom in government, leading into all truth, which would perfect human happiness in the Natural and Spiritual Orders, with their dual Civil Governments, and the dual Church of Christ, would be the Millennial Epoch.

DRESS REFORM.

SOROSIS has spoken some sensible words on Dress, while partaking of an un-sensible dinner at Delmonico's.

Resolved, That the dress and customs of a people are the outward indications of its character, and should engage the thoughtful attention of its most intelligent men and women. Climate, and the well-established laws of health and comfort, should regulate it. That the Dress question has been left too long in the hands of the ignorant, who furnish waists of torture, and skirts of burthen; producing a female figure out of strange stuff, having but slight resemblance to a natural woman, until the taste of the nation is corrupted, and their good sense impaired. Sorosis further "resolved, that, as mothers of daughters, and sisters of all womankind, we pledge ourselves not to dress, either ourselves or our daughters, in any style of fashion condemned by the wise and prudent, the artistic," the physiologist, or moralist.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

"CÆSARISM IN THE U. S."

THE "Woodhull & Claflin's" says:—"At last, that to which we have been endeavoring to wake the consciousness of the people—the fact that there is a well-organized plan to remand this country to despotism—is becoming the subject of lengthy editorials in the columns of the paper which, in some respects, is the greatest of all newspapers in the world.

"It is a generally-conceded fact, that Protestantism as a finality is a failure in the world. Leaving Catholicism, there is no legitimate, permanent halting-place, until the opposite extreme is reached—that of individual freedom. Protestantism is the road over which people travel from Catholicism to Individualism; while, ultimately, all people will be obliged either to advance to Individualism, or to retreat on Catholicism," or Shaker Dualism.

"The same is true of our politics. The government represented by our country to-day, is to politics what Protestantism is to religion. Having made a departure from absolute monarchy, the people must advance to complete republicanism—individualism in politics—or retreat on absolutism. One of the two extremes only is possible as an ultimate condition; and the sort of government now existing here is therefore impossible as a permanency; and the people—some of them—begin to comprehend this fact. Those who openly advocate the true democratic government, favoring individuality in politics, and those who secretly favor a return to Cæsarism, believing in absolutism. And this is the battle that must next be fought in this country.

"The magnates in politics, religion, and finance, those who now virtually rule, see that the people are awaking to their natural rights, as constituent members of the community, and they know right well that, when once they are thoroughly comprehended, their sway will end. To crush this, some movement must be made to stop the progress of these liberalizing, humanitarianizing ideas. It being impossible that existing things will continue, there is but one way, so they think, in which present potentates can still continue to remain potent in the affairs of the country, and that is by a retreat on absolutism, for the time called Cæsarism; and this is what the secret organization to accomplish a third term for Grant, and ultimately a life term for him, means."

Upon the truth or falsity of the mutual charges of sexual immorality, by which the Brooklyn church and the Woodhull &

Cluffin company have assailed each other for some months past, the Shaker and Shakeress has no public opinion to express. But, when the Orthodox Church-and-State party take up the quarrel, and, evading the direct point at issue—the character and personal conduct of certain prominent leading members of the Brooklyn church—prefer unfounded and ridiculous charges of obscenity against the “Weekly,” for simply reporting the facts at issue, and throw the case into the United States Courts, it looks very much like clerical trickery, and carries the mind back to the time of William Penn and the English Courts who tried him.

As a society we have had some experience in the matter of having “all manner of evil” spoken of us. If the Brooklyn church did not choose to follow our example of “suffering wrong rather than doing wrong,” still continuing to be good, and to do good, as the best rejoinder we could make, but had sued the Woodhulls for libel, the case would have been decided upon the evidence adduced, and would have been definitively settled, pro or con. This straight-forward course would have given general satisfaction.

Whereas, arresting the parties upon an entirely false issue of obscenity (of which every editor in America is equally guilty), and then exacting enormously excessive bail, multiplying vexatious suits, and actually imprisoning both male and female editors, “revered citizens,” to whom thousands of the people were hopefully looking as the possible future President and Presidentess of the United States, has caused very many impartial observers to view the proceedings with terror and alarm, as constituting one of the most direct assaults, by the God-in-the-Constitution party, that has hitherto been made under the American Government.

And, after keeping these innocent-until-proved-guilty, talented men and women in loathsome dungeons for months, awaiting trial, destroying their health (if not the life of one of them), they proceeded, by high-handed Jeffrey-like legal quibbles, to send one of them to an insane asylum, by the merest arbitrary power of the court.

The effect produced upon the public mind, by these unusually cruel and tormenting measures, has been to create grave doubts as to the innocence of the projectors of the prosecutions. Thanks are due to the just Judge Blatchford, for thwarting the evil intended by the legal Orthodox prosecutors and persecutors. Let us all be warned to keep the Gods of these people out of our Constitution, lest a worse thing come upon us.

DR. LIVINGSTONE says that “Sehele,” a famous African Chief, said to him, on the occasion of his preaching to his tribe, “Do you imagine that these people will ever believe by your merely talking to them? I can make them do nothing except by thrashing them; and, if you like, I will call my head meu, and, with our whips of rhinoceros hide, we will soon make them all believe together.”—Dr. Livingstone Lost and Found.”

DESPOTISM.—The Shah of Persia, after dining with the Duke of Sunderland, and observing his immense wealth, proposed, the next morning, to the Prince of Wales, to have the Duke beheaded, as too powerful a subject for the safety of the Government. Being informed that it would not be lawful, “Then,” said he, “I would at least have his eyes put out.”

CONFESSION OF SINS.

THERE is, at the present time, great excitement, in England, upon the subject of confession of sins. It has got into Parliament. Under the Church-and-State Government of England, the Upper House—Lords temporal and spiritual—has the cure of the souls and bodies of the people. Their theology is still cut and dried to order, just as our orthodox priests are hunkering to cut and dry it for the people of America, Shakers included.

Four hundred and eighty-three priests have signed and sent to Parliament the following Petition: “That, in view of the widespread and increasing use of sacramental confession, your Right Reverend House may consider the advisability of providing for the education, selection, and licensing of duly-qualified confessors, in accordance with the provisions of canon law.”

Of course the English objections to this are, first, The principle is anti-Protestant; second, That it means Roman Catholic Church-and-State, instead of “the Establishment.” As things are going, the Pope may pretty soon emigrate to England; unless Infidelity, Spiritualism, Rationalism, and Shakerism, rise up as opposing powers, and saving influences.

The logical end of Protestantism is Catholicism. And, when they coalesce, all the above opposing powers will also coalesce, and it will be the battle of “Gog and Magog around the camp of the saints.” Then the “unwalled villages” will have to be protected by fire from heaven—Divine Spiritualism.

THE ART OF NEWSPAPER MAKING.

OF all writings of man, none is so widely perused and critically examined as the newspaper; and of all public characters, newspaper contributors mostly require diligence, energy, and patient application. The necessity of giving variety to their articles, in length, and subject, and style, creates a heavy draft upon the intellect. The articles must not be too long, or they will weary, no matter how much thought expands, it must be contracted; nor how many ideas may suggest themselves, they must each be condensed into a narrow compass; the marrow of the subject must be extracted by patient toil, and served up in tiny morsels to fastidious readers. They must not be too short, or some will complain that the subject is not finished. They must not be too dry, or the fitful or careless mind will not read; they must not be too light, or the austere will turn from them with disgust. The language must not be too learned, or it will shoot over the heads of the youth, the future strength of the land; it must not be too simple, or the self-styled learned will reject the pieces with contempt. The style must be easy, flowing, or none will be pleased.

TEMPERANCE.

IN reply to a liquor dealer, who proclaimed, with an air of professional triumph, that he “sold to decent people only, and that his business was highly respectable,” a Quaker said, “Friend, that is the most damning part of thy business. If thee would only sell to drunkards and loafers, thee would help kill off the race, and society would be rid of them. But thee takes the young, the poor, the innocent, and the unsuspecting, and makes drunkards and loafers of them; and, when their character and money are gone, thee kicks them out, and turns them over to other shops to be finished off; and thee ensnares others, and sends them on in the same road to ruin.” Surely the good Quaker had the best of the argument, for he had facts on his side.

MENAGERIES.

WE wish we could send a word of warning to the towns which Barnum’s show is to visit. There travels with it a gang of pickpockets, sneak thieves, and burglars, for which, of course, Barnum is not to blame, nevertheless these scoundrels accompany the exhibition, enter and rob houses while the people are away to witness the parade, and in the crowds upon the streets and around the tents they do a big business in taking purses from countrymen’s pockets. We reported a dozen cases last week, and probably didn’t hear of half the cases of pocket-picking that occurred. The show draws thousands of dollars from the pockets of the communities where it is exhibited, and it is rather grinding to have the rest snatched by thieves. Two or three visits of Barnum at this rate would be as unprofitable as a destructive fire.—Saratogian.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

IN the British House of Commons, on the 8th inst., Mr. Henry Richard, member for Merthyr Tydvil, and Secretary of the London Peace Society, moved, That in the opinion of the House, her Majesty’s government should communicate with foreign powers for the purpose of improving the international law, and with a view of establishing arbitration as a permanent resort for the settlement of differences between nations. Mr. Richard, in a speech in support of his motion, stated that he had received a large number of letters from America, expressing sympathy with his proposition. He proceeded to show that danger of war kept four millions of men armed annually in Europe, rendering necessary a taxation of two thousand million dollars, and payment of yearly interest on war debts of seven hundred and fifty millions. In addition to this, the value of labor withdrawn from industry was estimated to be twelve hundred and fifty millions. In Germany conscription forced an emigration which was depopulating the country, and Russia, France, and Italy were financially crippled by the expense of their enormous military establishments. Mr. Gladstone opposed the motion. He argued that it would defeat its own object, because continental nations held widely different views on the subject. He asked the gentleman to withdraw the motion. Mr. Richard declined to withdraw, and the House divided. The division resulted in a tie—ninety-eight yeas to ninety-eight nays. The Speaker gave his casting vote in favor of the motion, which was adopted.

ADVERTISEMENT NUISANCE.

TURN whichever way you may, and the printed or painted announcement of Squillgut’s or some other eminent physician’s syrup, purgative, or salve, greets the eye, in letters long, short, tall, extended or condensed, according to the opportunity the size of the fence-board gives for display. Every bridge in the town is plastered with the glaring advertisements of pills, balsams, lotions, remedies, oils, liniments and pain-killers, utterly hiding the color the authorities thought appropriate for the structures, and making them frightful objects. Trees, stumps, rocks, and fences along every highway are emblazoned with the names of bitters, plasters, ointments, purifiers, and cure-alls, and there is no place or no thing that the modest agents for these various compounds hesitate to appropriate for their purpose. The outer walls of our beautiful Academy of Music are pasted over with posters, telling the virtue of some windy decoction, and there isn’t a rod of fence-board between the village and the cemetery that doesn’t beg the mourning processions that go that way to use this, that, or the other relief from all the ills that flesh is heir to.

We have nothing to say against the stuff advertised. It is one of the inalienable rights of the Yankee to get up patent medicines, and to sell them if he can find simpletons to buy them, but we do protest against this making such bad use of private or corporation property. We wish every fence owner, or owner of any other thing that is used for these announcements, would visit every paste brigade that uses them with the vengeance of the law, or compel them to obliterate their work. As for using the bridges for this business, we hope the selectmen will stop it at once, and make every offender hereafter feel the penalty which the statute provides.—Pittsfield Eagle.

EXCITEMENT over the “Romanizing tendencies” of the Church of England has been growing during the last week or two. On Monday, June 30, a large and influential meeting was held in London to denounce the practice of confession in the Church. That meeting was called as a protest against the petition of “483 priests” to the Upper House of Convocation.

A CHRISTIAN has advanced but a little way in religion when he has overcome the love of the world; for he has still more powerful and importunate enemies; self, evil tempers, pride, undue affections, a stubborn will. It is by the subduing of these adversaries that we must chiefly judge of our growth in grace.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

TO THE RESCUE.

If there ever was a time in the history of our race, when honest, earnest workers were needed in the field of reform, it is now. Never before were there so many momentous questions, and of such vital importance, agitating the public mind at the same time. It was but yesterday, as it were, that all the forces of the American nation were turned to war. Liberty and Slavery met in open combat; and history will reveal to unborn myriads, at what a fearful sacrifice of human life and limb, with thousands of millions of wealth added thereto, the Ethiopian chains were broken. Now, the sound of artillery from the gory battle-field has ceased, the smoke is cleared away, and the camp-fires have died out; and thousands who were clad in habiliments of mourning for fathers, sons, and brothers, slain in battle, have laid them off, and other subjects engage their attention.

The majority of the people at the present time, are in the "broad road" of pleasure seeking; and many, we regret to say, seek it at the expense of honesty and virtue. There is also a large class of deep-thinking men, and women too, who are eagle-eyed, and who have taken their stand upon certain watch-towers, and they look at causes which, if carried into effect, they see, will ultimately destroy the peace and welfare of individuals, and of the nation.

The social, sexual relation as it now exists, is filling the land with untold misery, and threatens to depopulate the earth. Men and women look at the subject scientifically, and are alarmed! Many feel that the time has fully come for the vail to be lifted, that light may shine upon the hideous monster; and that the covering, which wealth and ingenuity combined have woven to hide its deformity, may be torn off. But the question arises, where is the remedy? It was much easier for Milton to tell how paradise was lost, than to show how heaven could be gained. Men "by searching," through natural wisdom and sagacity, may learn to comprehend things below them; and may study the great book of Nature, which is ever an open volume before them; but a Divine revelation from the inner spiritual spheres is needed, to find and apply a remedy that will be effective in removing the cause of the diseases engendered by the violation of law, (whose name is legion) and to heal the waters of the great sea of sexual impurity.

The question of the Rights of Woman, firstly to her own person; then the God-given right to the elements of life (called property) equally with man, which are as necessary to her existence as to his; also her right to co-operate with him in framing the laws by which she is to be governed, and her much needed power and influence in sustaining those laws, is becoming so apparent, and the tide of public opinion is running so high concerning it, that we think the time cannot be far distant, when ignorance and superstition, made strong by custom and common consent, must yield before the potent advancing truths upon this subject.

Progressive truth, whether relating to civil

Polity, to Science, or Religion, has always met with opposing forces; and Reformers in every age have had to wrestle against principalities and the ruling power of public opinion for a time; and it would seem that spirits who were imbued with the war element when they left this world, and who have not risen out of that condition, but still remain in the lower spheres though in the spiritual world, lend their aid to contending parties in this mundane sphere, who are striving to block the wheels of progress. They may come in a false guise, and assume the appearance of a lamb, or of an angel of light, and thus deceive the simple-hearted; while their real mission and incentive to action, is to darken counsel, by smooth and persuasive argument, and to perpetuate human slavery. Although the strong have failed in their purpose to oppress the weak, and to continue to intrall the souls and bodies of the African race, the same spirit is rife to-day, and seeks to control the minds, and bind the consciences of men and women.

The founders of the American Government were providentially raised up to perform a great work for humanity. It was not their mission to found a religious order. They were called Infidels because they would not bow down and worship the Sectarians' God, and acknowledge that their creeds and dogmas were an embodiment of the Divine essence. They saw that the civil and ecclesiastical powers (combined) served to bind and fetter the consciences of individuals, and to impede the laws of progress generally. And "horns"—power—was given to them, with which they broke in pieces the hierarchy, and severed Church and State. They emerged from the narrow sphere of sectarianism, and felt the universality of God's love and goodness to all of his creatures; and that all had an equal right to the elements of subsistence in this world, and an inherent right to worship God in accord with his or her conscience, free from priestly rule. It was the burden of their minds to form a basis of civil government so broad and strong, and so just in principle, that all nations, kindreds, and colors, whether religious or irreligious, Jew or Gentile, might find a home, and be free from religious intolerance, and that would be invulnerable to political storms that might arise, and from the subtle invasions of priestcraft.

And now, what do we see and feel? Unclean spirits like frogs are coming forth from the mouth of the dragon, and from the mouth of false prophets, under the sanctimonious sacerdotal robe, to invade the religious rights of the people: And this element is working (like leaven) in the commonwealth, throughout the American nation to-day. If they succeed in grafting the name of their God and their Christ into the Constitution of the United States, then will they re-unite Church and State, and join together what the God of universal love and justice, through his own agencies has put asunder; and will thereby kindle anew the persecutors' fire—open the way to the gibbet and the rack—and fill dungeons with heretics, as in the past!

"Cry aloud, and spare not," O ye lovers of truth and liberty, lest this great evil come upon us!

If you cannot be a great river, bearing great vessels of blessings to the world, you can be a little spring by the dusty wayside of life, singing merrily all day and all night, and giving a cup of cold water to every weary, thirsty one who passes by.

SETTING SUN.

-o-

Who can behold the splendor of the setting sun reflecting its golden rays upon the face of nature, when clad in its most lovely attire, without feeling grateful emotions? Every tree, plant, and flower, bespeak the love and goodness of the Creator to his creature man. The sweet songsters which so fearlessly hover around our lawns and dwellings, fill the calm, clear atmosphere with their warbling music; and, at times, they seem like little messengers sent from angel-spheres to enliven and cheer our pleasant, quiet home below, and to inspire us to open our vision to the realities and beauties of our final home in the land of souls.

If at even-tide, when the labors of the day are past, we can look upon the setting sun with such pleasurable sensations, and with a confiding trust that another day will dawn—that the sun of the morrow will rise to warm and vivify the earth—what will be the Christians' confidence and hope when they shall have passed through the conflicts of life, and when their earthly pilgrimage is about to end, and they feel that the sun of their earthly existence is going down, and life's evening shadows are gathering around them? If they can then look upon the record of the past, and see that their lives have been fraught with noble deeds of charity, benevolence, and virtue, and that, under the guidance of Gospel principles, they have helped to bear aloft the standard of Truth, will they not feel a bright hope in the future, and have a full assurance that, in the heavenly land to which they are going, and where they have laid up immortal treasures, there are expansive fields, and beautiful groves, filled with the harmonious music of spheres divine? Purity, Innocence, Peace, and Joy, are the virtues which adorn those regions; they are more enduring, and more fragrant, than the flowers which beautify our earthly home. For the flowers of earth, at best, are only symbolical of the lovely graces which bloom in the garden of God, and ornament his spiritual temple. Truth is the Rock upon which the Temple of the Lord is being built; and all intelligent souls who love and do the truth, help to form this Temple, which is composed of "living stones."

In conclusion, I will add, that from the age of fifteen to sixty-five years, I have been striving, by a practical life of self-denial, to be so nearly allied to goodness and truth, as to be counted worthy to occupy a small space in God's holy temple. This life of consecration has brought sweet contentment to my spirit; and the heavenly breezes which are borne from the celestial clime, are refreshing and soul-reviving. I feel peace while reviewing the past; and am now enjoying a foretaste of the joys of the "better land!" The blessing of visible and invisible friends falls upon me like a morning dew upon opening flowers.

WHILE bright the evening sun descends,
'Mid rays of golden hue,
I think, how soon my sun of life
To earth must bid adieu.
Reflections peaceful, calm, serene!
No "sting of death" I dread;
My spirit, borne on angel wings,
Is upward, onward, led.

For angel purity will lead
The soul that seeks her power,
On to the rest that doth remain
Within her fadeless bower.
O happy thought! Who would refuse
The kindly proffer'd hand,
To bear, through shades and toils of life,
On to the heavenly land?

Hail! Angel guide to heav'nly life,
Thy precepts are Divine;
The laurels of a lasting peace
Thy followers' brows entwine:
Simplicity is ever found
Where'er thy hand doth rest:
In thy protection's holy sphere,
The soul is truly blest.

I sought thee early, found thy care,
Beneath the sacred dome,
Where hearts and hands, united, join
To form a happy home.

With kindred friends, the balm of life
Was to my spirit giv'n;
With them I've shared the joy and love
Which cometh down from Heaven.

I sought thee early, found thy prize,
Within the lovely bower,
Where oft the Saviour calls his flock
To spend devotion's hour:
'Tis there the way of life is taught,
And there thy blessings pour;
'Twas there I made my faithful vows
To serve thee evermore.

Methinks I hear a question breathed,
In accents deep and low,
Where may we find this pleasant bower,
This rest of God below?
Not, I reply, amid the walks
Of grandeur, pomp, and pride;
Nor at the shrine of selfishness,
As Jesus testified.

But self-denial, and the cross,
Forsaking ev'ry sin,
And father, mother, houses, land,—
The very life within:
Yea, more; the husband, wife, and child:
Break all the ties they hold,
And God will bless the sacrifice
With gifts a hundred fold.

The Saviour own'd no earthly bond.
Who were his kindred? They
Who sought to do his Father's will,
And walk'd the narrow way.

—o—

DESIRING to add a few lines to your columns, I am impressed by an oft-recurring objection to our faith by those who partly, and only imperfectly, understand our religious tenets.

Many aver that our system militates against itself; and that if all the world should become converted to a virgin life, it would exterminate the race, or, as is often expressed, "run the world out." Admitted! To any reflecting, investigating mind, I would say, Come and let us reason together, as a man (or woman) would reason with a friend.

Perchance, you are a Christian advocate, and believe in Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world, as firmly as do the Shakers, and would think it amiss for any one to misconstrue his words, and lead others into error by explaining them in a wrong manner. Some affect to believe that the Shakers are adverse to generation per se, and stand in antagonism thereto, because of their oft-repeated denunciations of a worldly, sinful life, and their seeking to reform the natural, social system. Your objection is always presented wherever the principles of our faith are made manifest. Christ, in his teachings to his disciples, being questioned upon this subject, said unto them, "All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given." (See Matt., xix.) And, while he did not condemn generation, he taught a higher and more perfect way; for this purpose came he into the world. So long as mortals are content, and soul-satisfied, to live after the similitude of the first Adam, without "seeking, that they may find," the higher life, so long will they be left uncalled. God is willing to wait for his creatures; Christ is willing to wait; still offering and inviting souls to come to him. But, when they become sin-sick, and weary of a worldly life, and cry, in the depths of their souls, "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life," then will they hear the voice of the Son of God, and be taught how to forsake the world and "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Again, saith the Saviour: "He that will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it;" for the life of the natural man must be rejected, in order to follow Christ in the regeneration, and find a spiritual life in him.

Is it consistent with the workings of the Divine Spirit that all should be converted at one and the same time? Is it likely to occur in any one of the Christian Churches of the present day? While humanity exists, opinions will differ; and they alone are right and safe who take for their guide to heavenly light and peace the life and teachings of our Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Let us take a simile. Compare the spiritual organism of the immortal mind, with a beautiful orange grove. Should any one with common mental endowments reach forth the hand, and pluck the fruit in its first opening blossom, or in its green and unripe condition, though it may have reached its full size, yet wanting the rich flavor of the ripe, sweet and luscious orange, we should at once style him non compos mentis who would insist that all the fruit of the grove should be gathered at one time, whether in blossom, in the bud, or in any of its imperfect conditions, and thus lay waste the entire grove! On the contrary, would not the careful fruit-grower often inspect his beautiful trees, selecting only the ripe and mellow, plucking it carefully and placing it where it might subserve a better purpose; and so continue doing, until all the fruit was gathered in its proper time and season? Yea, verily. In this way will each individual, when properly prepared for it, be gathered from the worldly elements; and it matters not whether he had been removed from time in infancy or old age, as the immortal life is commenced with the body's first respiration, and the frail tenement which holds the spirit for a time, does not prevent its onward and upward tendency.

Souls may continue in the body until they become centenarians, and within the hearing of the Gospel of Christ, and yet, like the ancient Jews, disbelieve his mission: "Seeing, they do not see: Hearing, they do not hear nor understand" the Word of Life, until they become fitted by Divine Intelligence to receive the Holy Spirit, the Dove from heaven, and the voice of the Son of God, speaking to their souls, convincing them that to them the "end of the world has come;" and that henceforth, they must give up the worldly life, and seek the life in Christ. And having received faith that God has called them to his work—the work of redemption—which brings conviction for sin, and enables them, through an honest confession of the same, to rise in the resurrection of life, thus becoming "new creatures;" old things "pertaining to the carnal life," being done away.

Your queries, though perfectly consistent with natural reasoning, reminds one of a bright and intelligent school girl in her rudiments, puzzled with a mystical mathematical problem. Advancing to her teacher, with book and slate in hand, she insisted that the compiler of the work had made a mistake, she was sure of it, for she had tried it in every way, and could not bring the correct answer. Seeing her despairing looks, and knowing that she had toiled in vain, her teacher said pleasantly, "sit down, please, and I will assist you." A few figures sufficed to enlighten her understanding; she had made the mistake, and with an animated countenance, she caught the pencil, saying "I see it now," and commenced to figure in earnest, and soon obtained the desired result.

And thus, it seems to me, many are inclined to misunderstand the Scriptures, and the call of mercy to their souls, and believe that the Saviour has made a mistake. They think Christ could not have meant precisely what he said, when he taught his disciples that "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his daily cross and follow me." And, "whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and Mother." He surely did not mean that we must forsake our near relatives, those connected to us by the ties of consanguinity, and cleave to those only who are of like faith with himself, in order to become his disciples and walk with him. We may delight in, and enjoy the worldly life, if we love Christ the best. Thus reasons the human heart while bound in nature.

I ask, in what respect do the children of this world differ from the first advent of our Saviour? Is there any material change, except in civilization, arts and science? Are not the Jews, Hindoos and Mahometans in the same progressive scale? Where is the distinction? Do they not all marry and give in marriage after the form and fashion of their respective countries? It is so, and it is well! With such we have no controversy. Still, we think no one will infer that all or any of them are the true followers of Christ. In the Adamic life he set no example. He taught the higher and more angelic life. Do the professing Christians of the present day "forsake all for Christ's sake and the Gospel," any more than mankind have ever done? Or, do they interpret the teachings of our blessed Saviour to suit their own life and purposes, and fear to "read the writing on the wall," lest it should cut them off from their idols, and oblige them to seek the life in Christ, that they may be saved? Christ did, indeed, come into the world, to teach the way, the truth, and the life, to all who believe in him. But is it rational, is it consistent, to suppose that all who will ever believe in Jesus Christ, as their Saviour, will receive the call in this life, when departures from mortality are momentarily occurring, and millions enter eternity before the God-given faculty of reason has ascended her throne, or they know the right hand from the left? And are not millions, who now inhabit the earth, doomed to continue in ignorance, as well as those who have passed away, having lived out the natural length of time allotted to man, without ever having heard the sound of the Christian religion? And are they not all God's creatures? and will they not ultimately find rest in some of the many "mansions in the Father's house," and accept the terms of salvation, granted by the Gospel of Christ, when they are willing to receive it—and are anxious to "come up out of deep tribulation, and wash their robes and make them white in the blood (or life) of the Lamb?" How transcendent and blissful the thought!

Christ, in his first advent to earth, had but few followers, and of them, one proved a traitor, and another, through fear of persecution, denied his Lord, though he stood before the world, the living embodiment of the Christ Principle, declaring his mission to earth to be of God, his Father. Was his ministry accepted by the masses? Nay, in no wise! Only the few were ready to receive him: And he—this Messenger of God—was derided, insulted, and slain. Does this not show that poor frail humanity is difficult to be convinced, and slow to believe? Faith is given to those who ask, and are willing to receive it, and "to no others." "Two may be in the field, or grinding in the mill, the one taken, and the other left," until he too shall be convinced that Christ has appeared again, without sin, unto salvation, creating all things anew, (in his heart.) Then will he exclaim in the earnestness of his soul, "I see it now," and will sell all that he has of a worldly, carnal life, to purchase the "pearl of great price," even the salvation of his soul.

Thus reviewing the subject, the sophistry and fallacious reasoning of non-believers, have no more weight than if the same person should affirm, that, because he sees a loaf of bread, there will be no more grain raised. The idea is analogous to saying that because a few have chosen the virgin Christ life, it must consequently run the world out. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

"The Shakers (a name given by their persecutors) do not worship the person of any man or woman; but purely the Christ Spirit;" though mention is often made of the first Medium through whom this saving Gospel was preached to us; and the devotional Spirit of the Believer in Christ's Second Appearing, as quickly reverts to our Saviour Jesus Christ as to our Mother Ann. They stand as Representatives of the Father and Mother Spirits of the New Creation (Wisdom and Love), attracting and holding the children of the Resurrection, subjects of the New Birth.

Aurelia White, Watervliet, N. Y.

THE Episcopalian, commenting on the folly of a war establishment, remarks "How many millions of waste of material and money, now consumed in the manufacture of war material and in the support of standing armies would be saved! What a multitude of idle officers and soldiers would be liberated to increase the wealth of the country!"—Ec.

MY OFFERING.

I OFFER a few expressions of love and affection to my Gospel friends, with whom I love to commune, whether they are in the visible form, or have passed to the inner spheres. Their influence aids me along on life's journey, and is a solace in the hour of adversity, and a guide in prosperity. The ties that are formed between earthly connections are frail and unreliable; but those which are formed by living in obedience to truth, are invincible; they are true in life, and death cannot sever them; but they will continue to grow stronger as we progress in the spirit spheres.

I own a heavenly Parentage, and rejoice in the beautiful relation that I hold to them, and to my faithful brethren and sisters of the household of faith; and with them I am privileged to leave the lofty hills of pride and self-indulgence (where is continual unrest), and descend into the low valley of humility, and work in the Lord's vineyard, and cultivate the flowers of innocence and peace, while we eat of the fruit of the tree of life, and drink from the wells of salvation; and here the guiding star of purity sheds a halo of light over our pathway as we journey on.

Here, dear Gospel friends, let us faithfully perform all our vows, and never be willing to sell our birthright for the vain pleasures of time, for what will they avail the soul? Were we to climb to the eminence of worldly honor, gain wealth, and win the laurels of fame, it would only serve to bewilder and dizzy the mind; it would not insure a safe passport to a heavenly home, nor would it fit us to stem the strong current of temptation, or to ride over the billows of the sea of time, or to meet the incoming tide from the boundless deep which rolls from the shore of the eternal world.

But, if we choose our inheritance with those who fear God and work righteousness, and walk humbly before Him, performing deeds of charity and love, "binding up the wounded spirit, comforting the afflicted, giving drink to the thirsty, and washing the saints' feet;"—then we shall look back upon a well spent life, and feel that we have justly earned the treasures of immortal glory, and are worthy to be numbered with the jewels of Christ's kingdom; while they who place their affections upon earthly things, and regale themselves with vain pleasures, will, in the end, find bitter disappointment.

Phoebe A. Jones, Mt. Lebanon.

FREEDOM.

It is a time-honor'd custom with the American nation, to celebrate the anniversary day, when her people were declared to be free and independent. Upon such occasions, the booming of canons, the ringing of bells, and almost every conceivable noise is heard from city, town, and hamlet, to show forth the great joy of the inhabitants that America is a free land—free to the home-born, and to the stranger.

Great enthusiasm usually prevails at such times, and a majority of the people, from hoary age to lisping infancy, seem to partake of it, and feel that it is such a glorious thing to be free. Would it not be well to pause amid the rapturous, and often times tumultuous shout of Liberty, and ask the question, Are we really free? The little maxim reads, "Let no man call himself free, who is enslaved by any passion."

Where shall we find a man, woman, or child, who is not bound to some bad habit, or fast becoming so—habits ruinous to body or mind, or both?

True liberty is found in the truth. Those whom "truth" makes free, are free indeed." Not free from physical tyranny and servitude merely, but free to become elevated in mind and feeling, released from injurious customs, redeemed from bad habits, and free to rise into a moral and spiritual atmosphere. Then we may rejoice, and sing of the blessings of true Freedom, as do the Angels in heaven.

PLAIN DRESSING FOR MEETINGS.

THE house of prayer is a poor place to exhibit beads, ribbons, ruffles, gewgaws, and trinkets. The evils of such vanity and extravagance are many. It keeps people from meeting when they have not apparel as gorgeous as their neighbors. It loads the poor with burdens too heavy to be borne, to procure fashionable clothing. It leads many into temptation, debt, dishonesty, and sin. It causes many a poor shop-girl to work nearly all of Saturday night, that some customer's fine clothes may be ready for Sunday show. It keeps people at home in cloudy or stormy weather, when, if they wore plain clothing, they could defy clouds and storms. It consumes the morning hour in dressing, crimping, and fussing, keeping people away from worship, wasting time, exhausting strength, hindering the reading of the Scriptures, and making the day of rest a day of toil and folly. It makes the poor emulous, malicious, and envious; and sows many a bitter thought in the minds of children and others, when they see their neighbors decked in finery,—often not paid for,—and feel that people are respected, not for the value of their characters, but for the vanity of their clothes. It causes many a frivolous, trifling mind to forget God, and Christ, and the Gospel, and to spend the hour appointed for religious service in comparing garments, studying fashions, and arranging their own gay attire. It causes vanity in the rich, and murmuring in the poor. It wastes the Lord's money that is needed for other uses, and should be applied to more noble and important ends. It leads the young in the path of pride, gratifying the lust of the eye, cultivating an extravagant taste, justifying attire, and seducing to the paths of shame and ruin, many a poor girl who might have lived an honored and virtuous life, had she never known or been led to think that she was beautiful, nor desired more finery than she could honestly earn, nor decked herself out in such a way as would attract the attention of libertines and seducers. This style of dress degrades the taste of society toward the level of those Hottentots, wild Indians, and African savages, whose chief delights are war-paint, feathers, rings, spangles, rag-roses, buttons, beads, and bugles—things which are as repugnant to a refined and cultivated taste as they are contrary to the spirit and letter of the Holy Scriptures.

Let us dress plainly before the Lord, for economy's sake, for example's sake, for decency's sake—for Christ's sake.

ANGEL EYES.

WE often think of angel eyes
That watch us here below,
Of spirit friends—the good and wise,
Who light the path we go.

They lift for us the mystic veil,
That in vision we may see,
The beauteous scenes that will not fail
In blest eternity.

They sing for us seraphic strains
Of yonder peaceful shore;
And show to us the golden gains
Of heaven's garner'd store.

Aud, with rejoicing, make us feel
The strength of angel love,
That lifts the soul, through faith and zeal,
To brighter spheres above.

Where love, unmix'd with earth's alloy,
Pure as the Mother's own,
Crowns dear departed ones with joy,
In their celestial home.

We love those blessed angel eyes,
That search us through and through,
And read the heart's intents, as well
As actions that we do.

They would, in love, our souls baptize,
And be our guardian friends;
They listen to our earnest cries,
Which oft to heaven ascend.

Julia Johnson, Hancock, Mass.

PETITION.

LORD, give me power myself to know;
I seek not earth's delusive show,
But all I ask, while here below,
Is what the Gospel gives me.
Inspire my heart with love supreme,
That flows from Zion's living stream,
Whose virtues will my soul redeem,
Of every fault relieve me.

Though friends should fall, or foes betray,
There's light enough in this pure way
To lead my soul to realms of day,
And thither I'll be going.
I'll brave the breakers, stem the tide,
Though billows rise on every side;
In God's sure promise I'll confide,
While boisterous winds are blowing.

O God of heaven, hear my prayer,
And let me rest beneath thy care,
My soul from judgment never spare,
Let holy Angels guide me.
Assist me to be just and true
In all I say, and all I do;
Each day my vows to thee renew,
Whatever may betide me.

O, help my soul to stand the test
Of this pure Gospel's high behest,
That I may be by angels blest
For every good endeavor.
O, grant me wisdom, strength, and power,
To guard my spirit every hour,
To toil in sunshine, shade and shower,
To keep the truth forever.

O holy Saviour, pure and just,
Thy sacred name I love and trust;
To follow thee, I know I must.
Accept each gift that's given,
Thy soul redeeming power I crave,
To bear me o'er life's rolling wave,
As Peter cried, O Lord, do save,
And guide me on to heaven.

Earth's children find a vale of tears,
But Virtue's pathway bright appears:
It leads the soul to higher spheres,
Where flows life's healing river.
O, there with myriad saints I'll be,
Adorn'd with virgin purity;
And there, to all eternity,
Bless God the boundless Giver.

Harriet F. Chamberlain, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

HOME.

O HOME, blest home, where friends sincere,
Life's weary pathway bless and cheer!
Where all harmoniously combine,
In purity and love divine.
Naught can compare with such a home,
In palace fair, or splendid dome!
Here true contentment fills the heart,
And holy joy to each impart.
Though they renounce all carnal ties,
And worldly pleasures sacrifice,
They find that tranquil peace of mind
Which is to heaven-born souls assign'd.
They seek no laurels of renown,
No earthly coronet or crown;
But, in the heavenly spheres above,
They're clothed with innocence and love.
I love this quiet, peaceful home,
Nor do I ever wish to roam,
To seek for bliss in worldly gain,
Or glittering honors to obtain.
Here true confiding friends abide,
Whose love no sorrows can divide:
O give to me while here I plod,
A Shaker home—a Home in God.

Elizabeth Sears, Mt. Lebanon.

POLYGAMY.

A PETITION for the legalizing of Polygamy in Massachusetts, numerously signed by the unmarried women of Lowell, has been presented to the Legislature. It states the fact of the excess of females over males, as a principal reason for this Petition.

In ancient times, Moses, agreeably with the practices of the Eastern nations, permitted Polygamy, as a secondary evil, because of man's lusts. Brigham Young assigns the same causes for its existence in Utah. Is it, or is it not, better for a nation's posterity, that it practices plurality of wives, provided that they otherwise observe natural laws in reproduction, than that they should do as do the Gentile Christians, "who walk after the flesh"? is an unanswered question.

Those who live in generation should cease to call themselves Christians; and those who call themselves Christians, should cease from "the works of the flesh," including reproduction.

PRAYER AND PRAISE.

(Sentiment taken from Fifth Psalm.)

1. Un - to my words, O Lord, give ear, My me - di - ta - tion heed, While low - ly bow'd in sa - cred fear, Thy strength my soul doth need;
2. My voice, O God, in morn-ing light, I will di - rect in pray'r, Guide thou my wand'ring thoughts aright, And sheld me by thy care;

O, hearken when to Thee I cry, Thou art my hope and stay, I feel Thy spl - rit draw-ing nigh, When un-to Thee I pray.
Though tempting snares my path be - set, Stead-fast my faith shall be, Thy prom-ise I will not for - get, But look for help from Thee.

3. In wickedness and vanity No pleasure dost Thou show,
No evil thing shall dwell with Thee, All wrong Thou wilt o'erthrow;
The false shall not stand in Thy sight, The flattering tongue thou'lt bind,
For truth with clear and glowing light Will search the heart and mind.

4. Those who rebel against Thy law, And in defiance sin,
Upon their souls true judgment draw, And feel its pang within;
But as for me I'll seek a place Within God's house of prayer,
Where dwelleth mercy, truth and grace, My soul shall worship there.

5. Within Thy temple songs of praise Shall evermore resound,
In anthems sweet my voice I'll raise For blessings that abound;
Let them rejoice that in Thee trust, And shout in songs of joy,
Thou ever wilt defend the just Who evil works destroy.

6. Those who Thy name adore and love, Shall sound a joyful strain,
As they advance to realms above, Away from earth's low plane;
Thy favor to the righteous show, O Lord be thou their shield,
Till they Thy perfect life shall know, In endless light reveal'd.

LAMENT.

Impressed by a Sister who (prematurely) died at 28.

I reached this comma, in the continuity of life,
Ere it was noon.
I could not longer hold the body to the strife,
Hence, left too soon.
I had fondly hoped to reach earth life's fruition
Full ripe with days;
I feel a sense of premature transition
To life's second phase.
My twenty-eight should be transposed to eighty-two, Soul growth to gain;
My work is left for other hands to do —
My earthly claim;
My body poor, depleted — wan imagery of God —
Served not the soul.
My spirit, striving with this broken rod,
Fail'd of life's goal.
When all of Nature's laws are rightly understood,
And well obeyed;
When life shall culminate in man or womanhood,
No ills invade;
When the ripe sheaf displays earth's full bequest,
With noble deeds;
When the developed spirit bids the clay to rest,
And from it speeds;
Then, casting back upon a well-till'd field,
Full fourscore years;
Then will earth's fruitage, ripe, full harvest yield
To higher spheres;
Then shall the new earth effect a nobler generation
For work in time;
Then the new heavens will hail the transmutation
To life divine.
I once believed all angels of celestial birth
And all divine,
My retrospection finds them first on earth,
Mortals in time.
When first I learned their origin was human,
Progressing higher,
Then marvel'd I this compromise 'twixt bird and woman, Which men admire.
I long to see inherent laws redeem'd from degradation,
Bodies symmetrical and sound,
And moral justice to abound,
The intellect with wisdom crown'd,
Pure spirits hallowing all around,
Proclaiming The Millennium's found — the new creation.
Then this depicture will not be in vain,
If its portrayal count to human gain;
For naught but love's pure wreath can blind
The human to the heavenly kind.

Elijah Myrick.

SAVE, LORD!

As Jesus was rock'd on the breast of the billow,
And roused by the voice of despair from his pillow,
When fierce raging tempest left no hope to cherish,
Came the entreating cry, "Save, Lord, or we perish."
At his word the wind ceased, and the storm was allay'd,
Then the raging sea, hush'd, in still calm was array'd,
The faint-hearted marvel'd at his power of will,
Who stretch'd forth his hand with the mandate
"Be still."
While they stood around him, all trembling and tearful,
He gently reproved them with "Why are ye fearful?"
And look'd on them with pity, and ask'd for their faith.
Is not that the sure safeguard in life and in death?
"Save, Lord, or we perish;" wild torrents are streaming,
And o'er the dark waves the red light, too, is gleaming.
Lord, send forth thy Spirit, thy creatures to save,
And rebuke the destroyer abroad on the wave.
O, save from the perils of passion now raging,
For sin unto mortals a great war is waging;
O, impart to their hearts a new faith to cherish,
And teach them the prayer, "Save, Lord, or we perish!"

Maria Witham, Enfield, Conn.

ARTIFICIAL STIMULANT.

I have a stimulant within,
Which supersedes all other.
It is not coffee, tea, or wine;
It is to love each other.
This love does stimulate the mind —
Inspires to keep good order:
In this I daily comfort find;
My conscience the rewarder.
I have a stimulant within.
It is a living spirit,
Which shuns the ways of guilt and sin:
This blessing I inherit.
Yea, I have food some know not of, —
Not always need of stuffing:
I keep my conscience undefiled,
And have no use for puffing.*

* The filthy, poisonous weed — Tobacco.

Lord, stimulate me to do right —
Be ever in my duty;
Make thy commandments my delight:
Thy ways are ways of beauty.
I want this stimulant within,
And be alive in spirit;
Not satisfied to live in sin;
That I thy care may merit
Be thou my guide in all I do;
O prosper and protect me,
Until at length I travel through;
And through my head direct me.
This stimulant I'll still retain, —
Be wide awake, and stirring:
True, and thy subject will remain,
Nor be among the erring.
Let me not be a sleepy drone,
Half dead whilst I am living:
Nay! with the saints I will be one,
And all I have be giving.
No artificial stimulant
Is needed to enliven
The soul who has forsaken all —
Who for the truth is striving.

JUDGMENT.

"THE LORD will be a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and strength to them that turn the battle from the gate" of entrance into his and her own soul — the inner thought, the will.

Through the will all good and all evil enters the citadel of our being, our inmost desire, our prayer; for prayer is desire and will united to use the utmost power of the person to accomplish the object desired and willed. Prayer is our wished for selfhood; and judgment is the light of the coming day shining upon the past history of the individual — the truth as now revealed. Repentance — confession, and forsaking — is progress — conformity to present abstract principle, regardless of the sacrifice of the old for the new.

A distiller, liquor dealer, or a drunkard, is convicted by a temperance preacher, and drops the business, or ceases from the practice; that is religion. A generative man or woman hears the testimony of Jesus, obeys it, and becomes a Shaker.

"Fear God, and worship and give glory to Him, for the hour of his judgment is come," applies, first, individually, then to a society composed of those individuals, and next to a nation. "Now is the judgment of this world," when there is an influx of new truth (more light) upon abstract principles, and the "still small voice" creating a whirlwind in the emotions, an earthquake in the habits, and a fire of intense desire and an unconquerable and indomitable will in the soul.

The latent fire and abstract truth of one cycle is the practical truth and burning zeal of the next that succeeds.

When an individual is converted, or a society or a nation is founded, there is always a reserve of the spirit of truth sufficient to reconvert, progress, or explode by revolution, the cycle then inaugurated. The dreams of Abram and Joseph were actualized. The vision of Moses and the bush redeemed one nation from the midst of another, as a child proceeds from its mother. Israel was born into Egypt, and born again into the land of Canaan — born of revelation and evolution. Judgment day followed judgment day to Israel, always beginning at the house of God — the Temple — until the time of Augustus, when a man arose who said: "For judgment I am come into this world." And, as Moses destroyed Egypt, so did he destroy the Jewish nation; and the Pentecostal Church was born from its mother, the Jewish Church, as Israel was born of Egypt. This Pentecostal Church was absorbed into, and diluted with, spiritual Babylon, just as the old Israel was absorbed into, and diluted with, Babylonia of the Persians. Again, the Spirit said: "She shall go forth unto Babylon, and there shall she be delivered. The second Christian, or Pentecostal Church, is born of Christendom in Babylon. And, as Babylon is Church and State combined, so the Shaker Order and the Republican Order of Civil Government were twins, born together; and they will travel together hereafter as heretofore, until the earth, and the fullness thereof, shall be the Lord's, even as Zion is the Temple.

Then shall all nations and races be one nation, one race, and one language. For confusion of tongues and interests shall cease, and a pure language, expressive of pure, simple, natural, and true spiritual lives shall result.

These two distinctive Orders — spiritual and civil — of the United Society, and of the United States, will run parallel, until they shall have subdued, by the truth, all the Churches and all the kingdoms of the earth; and it shall be Shaker dualism — a dual God and Christ, and a dual Church of Christ, where man and woman shall be man and woman, just as Deity is man and woman, in entire harmony, and perfect unity; and the Civil Government shall be in its image, and after its likeness; male and female shall it be, in all its legislative and judicial departments; as also in all its religious and educational institutions; dual — male and female shall they forever be.

These visions of the future are as the dreams of Abram to the twelve sons of Jacob; as the dreams of Joseph to the twelve tribes of Israel; as the vision of Moses to his subsequent revelations, and of their products, the whole history of Israel, down to Jesus, the Head of the Jewish Christian Pentecostal Church, which was a seed of the Shaker Church.

Seven cycles of progress are appointed to the American Civil Government, before it will eliminate from itself all the elements of Church-and-State Babylon, down to pure Materialism. The tendency to retain and incorporate some of the theological or monarchical influences, antagonistic to pure Materialism and Republicanism, will be equalled only by a like tendency on the part of the Spiritual Order of Shakers to retain and absorb some of the "doctrines of devils" and their practices. Hence each cycle will end in a day of judgment in both Orders.

The United States Government has just passed through its first day of judgment. Slavery, which was the antithesis of "all men free and equal," is judged, condemned, and executed, by the latent reserved abstract truths of the founders of the cycle. The Government repented, confessed, and forsook slavery; as it will repent, confess, and forsake land monopoly, male government, war, prostitution, and poverty.

This is the vision for the future. "The seven thunders that uttered their voices" about the steps of Progress of the Church of Christ's Second Appearing, were uttered and understood, but not recorded; so neither do I record them.

"The measure that ye mete shall be measured to you again," is now experienced by the South. As they had held millions of human beings as chattel-slaves, disregarding all social family ties, and sexual covenants, and relations; so did the war-spirit themselves had evoked, disregard all of their family ties, and social sexual relations; and their fathers, and brothers, and sons, were forced into the army, as they had forced away, by sale, the fathers, and brothers, and sons of the Negroes; leaving the females without protection, a prey to the debauched soldiery of both North and South.

SINGAPORE, MALAY PENINSULA,

June 22, 1873

ELDER F. W. EVANS. — My dear friend, my heart swells with emotions of tenderness and sympathy while heading this letter, inasmuch as it bears me on the wings of memory back to Mt. Lebanon, to Albany, to Cleveland, and drops me down among brotherhoods and sisterhoods of souls consecrated to human redemption. The distance, in miles, between Singapore (away down here at the southern point of the Malay Peninsula, under the equator) and Mt. Lebanon is great; but the moral distance is greater.

Singapore is a city of eighty thousand souls, sixty thousand of which are Chinamen; ten thousand are the indigenous Malays; and the other ten thousand are mixtures of Hindoos, Siamese, Javanese, Persians, and Arabs; and their dresses are as complex as the blood mixtures. The heat is intense, and this is the third week we have been waiting for a steamer in the opium trade to take us to Calcutta, where we strike the regular route. They told us, positively, in Hong Kong, China, that we should connect here with another line; but, as the "fates" would have it, just as we were coming into the bay, we met the out-going steamer. You can well imagine my disappointment. Why do men lie so? — to use the word falsify is too mild.

But, left here, I made the best of it, by writing up my Notes on China, and tramping about this country — the country of nutmegs, pepper, cinnamon, cloves, cocoa-nuts, pine-apples, tapioca, durians, bread-fruit, and every other fruit requiring perpetual summer. The foliage is magnificent, and the scenery crowning the isles beautiful. At the same time the drawbacks are numerous. In my room, at the hotel, are fleas, mosquitoes, beetles, and lizards. Only last night I saw four lizards crawling on the walls over my head, one of them nearly a foot in length.

Last week I went over to Johore, on the Malacca coast, to see the palace of the Marah-Rajah, etc. One of his officials took us out into the country where we saw a young tiger (a few years ago, one man a-day here was killed by tigers), an elephant, a boa constrictor, fifteen feet in length on the limb of a tree, and monkeys in the jungle. Why Europeans live in such a country is a marvel. Gold, gold tells the reason in a word. I expect to get away for Calcutta, in about three days. In Singapore there are two hundred Europeans and four hundred Americans.

I am getting terribly behind in all American news. You, dear brother, can hardly imagine how completely alone I am. At times it is quite a trial. But all trials, to those who are loyal to duty and right, will end.

My stay in India and Egypt will be short, as the weather will be intensely hot. I have not given up going to Palestine; for really I do want to see the land where the Nazarene and the Apostles once trod.

I hope to get around to America by Christmas, God and the good Angels continuing my health. This intense hot weather wears upon me I find. It is unnatural to a man born in Vermont. I am getting anxious to be once more under the folds of the American flag, and am very anxious to see you, venerable father, the family, and all. Give them my love, and remember me in your prayers.

Most affectionately thine,
J. M. Peebles.

26, PENTON ST., PENTONVILLE,
LONDON (N. C.), June 30, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—Your kind letter of the 5th of February I received while in the North of England, and I have been so very busy since I have been back, that I have not had time to sit down quietly and pen you a reply until to-day.

We have had a very prosperous season, our only difficulty being that workmen are scarce, many having emigrated, and very few boys being apprenticed to the hand sewing department of our trade. But I will not trouble you with business particulars, as I am sure they will not interest you so much as things of a higher character.

I have been very much troubled, for the last year or two, with a question that, to me, is of the highest importance. Until I have settled that question, and can see the truth of it one way or the other, I do not think I shall make much progress in spiritual life; for, as soon as I begin to think above the earth plane, this thought presents itself, and I feel that I can get no further, until I can see clearly the real truth of the case. It is this: Jesus Christ, was he human or Divine?

I was brought up from my childhood in the Swedenborgian faith, which teaches that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ was the only God; that he came to this earth in a glorified human form, to disperse the cloud of spiritual darkness that prevailed upon it; that he accomplished, or rather finally completed, this work by his death on the cross, and that the rending of the vail, separating the holy of holies from the body of the church, was symbolical of his work being accomplished.

Now, all this is very beautiful, but I have long had, in my mind, grave doubts as to the truth of it. One great thing is, we have no authority for it but Swedenborg; and was not he as likely to be wrong as any one else? It seems to me that every one should settle it in his own mind as to whether that doctrine be true or not. But, who is to be authority in the matter? Perhaps you can throw a little light on the subject; if you can, and will, I shall esteem it a great favor.

I have to thank you very much for the kind and prompt reply to my last letter, and also for the "Shaker and Shakeress," which I receive every month, and am very pleased therewith. I am convinced it will be the means of doing a great deal of good.

With my kindest regards and best wishes for the prosperity of all your undertakings, I remain,

Yours most respectfully,
Frank Everitt.

To Elder F. W. Evans.

MT. LEBANON, N. Y. U. S. A.,
July 24, 1873.

To Frank Everitt:

My dear friend, your interesting letter of June 30th came to hand a week or two ago. I am glad of your business prosperity during the past season. When I was in your shop, I felt a good deal of sympathy, under an impression, that it was close work to make the sales meet the expenses.

The question that you propound is a very important one. In the matter of a person learning geography, we begin with the outlines of the earth—the figure of it. Now it is round; but, for thousands of years, if not ages, priest and people (and even Jehovah, the God of the Jews included) believed it to be, not round, but flat. This goes to prove the fact, that "the whole world" may "lie" in geographical error, as well as "in the wicked one." And how easily I could multiply the instances, like the circulation of the blood, where all known human beings were under a mistaken conception of scientific facts. Now the truth respecting them is everywhere known. It is the same with what are called religious truths; errors have preceded them.

Ann Lee and Swedenborg were cotemporary; and Ann called him her John the Baptist. Like Jesus, Ann was a human being—he a man, she a woman. Like Jesus, she had her weaknesses and sins; and, while Jesus confessed his sins to John the Baptist, Ann confessed hers to Jane and James Wardley. Then the Christ Spirit descended upon her, as, after Jesus had confessed, the Christ Spirit, from the Christ heavens, descended upon him. The Christ heavens bear, to the inhabitants of other planets, the same relation that they bear to the inhabitants of earth. That is, when, on the natural plane, the people of Jupiter shall have multiplied, until a prospect shall appear of there being no more room (for wise people "see the evil afar off"), then the Christ Spirits would begin to harvest that planet; that is, to resurrect the ripest natural men and women above the plane of animal reproduction. Then the voice of Christ to them would be, just as it was to and through Jesus, Forsake generation, and generative relation—father, mother, brothers, sisters, children, wife, husband, and houses and land; and form "households of faith," with property "in common," and relatives all spiritual, not natural. Under this ruling, natural relatives may become spiritual relatives. It is the generative life that the Christ Spirit will burn up; not the person of father, mother, etc. "Let him that readeth understand." Thus would numbers enough become Christians on the planet Jupiter to balance population, without resort to disease, to the Malthus theory, to famine by poverty, to war, to abortion, or to any other vice-checks of population.

Can there be a moment's hesitation in choosing between true Christianity and these infernal "inventions" of Christendom? Or, can there be a question raised, as to the literal fact that, however large a planet may be, the population principle unchecked would fill it as China is now filled; where infanticide is legalized, as the only means of preventing general starvation, even although the Chinese are a long way from being where and what we hope the inhabitants of other globes are—pure, natural men and women—until called by the Christ Spirits to rise up and bless "the wombs that never bear, and the paps which never gave suck?"

Mother Ann then was ignorant of science, but was blessed with a Christ revelation, which enabled her to compass Swedenborg, with all his learning. Now, you must consider that both Ann and Swedenborg were brought up to believe in the Deity of Jesus; to both of them, Jesus was God. Swedenborg became simply a Spiritualist—not a religionist; he was scientific. Spiritualism is the highest of the sciences; nothing more, nothing less. So that Swedenborg was not a Christian, any more than was John the Baptist. The highest heaven that Swedenborg ascended into was a generative—not a Christ, or resurrection—heaven. Himself testified of this, near the close of his life, saying: "I see new heavens forming, and angels descending and ascending from and to them, to the earth. I know not what they are." They were the resurrection heavens, into which none had ever entered up to that time, not excepting Jesus and his Apostles. They groaned in spirit, and waited, looking and hasting unto the coming of the female Christ in a human female.

Ann Lee was the "glory" of Jesus, in which he was to come in his second appearing. The woman, we all know, "is the glory of the man." Now their spiritual children—brethren and sisters—can live together in purity. Never before could this have been done. Catholic monks and nuns have to be kept separate, or they would "fall to the earth"—go back into generation. "A third part of these stars," of the first Christian heavens have, in all ages, been drawn down by the tail of the dragon—generation. But "now," in the second manifestation, or appearing of the Christ Spirit, "has come salvation and strength, the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ." And we can and do live above the earth, as did Jesus. We have the Christ Spirit—not Jesus. He was the "first-born of many brethren;" nothing more; as Ann was the first-born of many sisters.

Swedenborg would have to confess his sins to Ann, or to an Elder of her appointment, just as John the Baptist would have to confess his sins to Jesus, in order to enter into his kingdom. "Facts are stubborn things." And the facts are, that, while the Swedenborgians are, in all respects, like all the other worldly Christians, ready to be of the world, to fight, to marry, to hold private, selfish property, to be rich and poor, high and low, and generative male and female, just as are all who are in the kingdom of the "beast," and in the kingdom of his "image"—the Catholic and Protestant order: the Shakers are a distinct people, in every one of these respects—a new creation. Is not this, then, the kingdom of heaven on earth, for which Catholic and Protestant have alike been sixteen hundred years praying?

There, my friend, I have written the above as fast as I could move the pen; and you may, at some seance, invite Resurrection Angels to come and visit you. They will confirm what I have herein written; and this Scripture will be a medium by which they can come into the sphere of some one of your circles. You have no medium for the manifestation of Christ Spirits. But, should they find access to you, they would invite you to the Shakers as the proper mediums through whom for them to operate.

Remember that, while Swedenborg was the Angel of Spiritualistic communication, Ann was the Angel of a Christ revelation.

Believe me most respectfully your friend
F. W. Evans.

ELDER FREDERICK.

DEAR BROTHER, your letter, with its inclosed extracts, came safely to hand. You will please accept our thanks for the same.

In reference to your leader of the July number of the "Shaker and Shakeress." When about fifteen years of age, I was surprised to hear my father remark, that the mission of Jesus (according to his own testimony), was national—exclusive—in its character. In support of this view, the words of Jesus to the woman of Canaan were quoted: "But he answered her not a word. . . . But he answered, and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." How harsh his expression to the woman seems: "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to the dogs!" (Matt. xiii.) God is no respecter of persons. "He sendeth rain upon the just and the unjust, and is good to the unthankful and the evil." That for her birth this woman was not accountable, must be conceded; and hence she was certainly entitled to receive from Jesus, for her daughter, the healing power, which was given him by the Father to dispense to such as had need thereof.

There are quite a number of expressions recorded of Jesus, which seem to show that the universality of his mission had not dawned upon him; and also that he expected the ushering in of the latter day to take place within a short time. It seemed necessary that to Peter should be given a vision, to convince him that God would accept others besides the Jews, provided they were workers of good.

Of the truth of your observation, in reference to the vacillation of the Apostles between Judaism and Christianity, it seems to me that the Scriptures furnish abundant evidence. In putting aside the doctrines that "Jesus is very God," and that "from his birth he was perfect," it seems difficult, for some, not to make of him a sort of demi-god. The more mystery we attach to Jesus, the greater becomes the difficulty we experience in striving to hold him up as a pattern to mankind. In proving that he could not have sinned, we lower, instead of exalting, his character.

In judging others, we are often reminded of the wisdom of Father James, in saying, "I will henceforth know no man by his words, but by his works." If the Scriptures give all the circumstances connected with these seeming unwise acts of Jesus, then the inferences you draw are no doubt correct. How difficult it is to meet and answer such questions as are necessarily put when any one denies the Divinity of Jesus, in the sense in which it is implied by the old theology:—"Was he man, or was he not? If not like other men, wherein was he different?" is asked. Difficult for whom to answer? Why, for those who, while claiming that the so-called orthodox ideas in reference to Jesus are incorrect, would contend that no effort should be made to clear away the mystery and make the matter plain.

Of the character of Jesus, as a medium and faithful leader—"Elder Brother"—I will speak but briefly. The greatest proof of his surpassing Mediumship lies in the diversity of his revelations, and to their applicability to the soul-wants of "those who hunger and thirst after righteousness." Many as are the hearts that have been stirred by the revelations of Jesus, they are few in comparison to the numbers that will yet awake and realize their truth and beauty.

The concluding part of your editorial I love. It is the primitive faith in its purity: "Who-soever receiveth you, receiveth me . . . and him that sent me." The present of a work which, by its Founders and Leaders, was declared to be a progressive one, is, and (to the faithful), will always continue to be, superior to the past. He or she who lays hold of the faith that "Christ is manifest in the flesh," and who renders to "Christ in the flesh" obedience, can never be deceived, or fail of securing salvation.

But, by referring to the past as superior, and striving to disparage the present gift, we are not only standing in our own light, but we are deuying the truth of Jesus' and Ann's prophecies in reference to the increase which should take place after their decease.

Thanks from all for your love. Please accept our love, and prayers for your prosperity.

Grain all harvested and the greater part threshed. Yield of wheat, averaged twenty bushels to the acre. Crops of corn not so promising as we could wish. A great deal of rain.

DUAL CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

THE TIMES of July 28th says: "The Fantees are among the most interesting of the African tribes. Many of their customs seem directly borrowed from the ancient Jews and Romans. Murder is punished by the offender being sold into slavery. When the tribe, or rather the aristocracy of the tribe, are tired of a king, a parrot's egg is brought and shown him. The sight of this is the signal of death. They believe in one supreme Deity—the "Good Spirit"—like the North American Indians. They have a priesthood which includes both sexes; and the honors, immunities, and property of this body are hereditary, just as they were with the priesthood of Egypt. The superior priests are held to be immortal; and there is a village, in a part of the country called Braffoe, in which a multitude of aged priests are said to have lived from time immemorial." From all of which it appears:

First, That capital punishment does not exist.

Second, That the monarchy is limited.

Third, That they believe in God as Spirit, and as dual—male and female.

Fourth, That, consequentially, they have a dual government—male and female.

Fifth, That they believe in the immortality of the bodies of the righteous.

NEW YORK, July 19, 1873.

DEAR EVANS:—I have been asked to procure a copy of "Ann Lee," which please send me.

The perusal of your books has proved profitable. It is, indeed, gratifying to me to find in the "Shaker and Shakeress" interpretation of Scripture, the key to many passages between which and myself there has long existed the relationship of novice on the one hand, and enigma on the other. Nor has this been attended with little surprise either; surprise that a mode of interpretation so simple and easy should have been overlooked or ignored, and so much "pain of travail" taken by commentators to bring forth that which, except it should serve sectarian ends, or to gratify mere personal vanity of research, can be of little use to any one.

Truly, there are men who, by a system of wordiness, would explain both the meaning and the authority of the Scriptures entirely away!

Should there be a surplus of funds you may continue my feast of the "Shaker and Shakeress," by proportionally lengthening my subscription. Believe me, dear sir,

Very truly,
C. H. D.

CAMP MEETING.

DURING the camp meeting season, when it was known that Rev. Charles Pitman would preach, the country for miles around would be on the move. Not unfrequently he would have five, six, or even seven thousand persons to hear him on such occasions. His audiences were often chained to the spot for two hours or more, forgetful of every thing but the great theme of Redemption of a lost world, upon which he dwelt.

While Agent for Dickinson College, traveling in the discharge of his official duties, he came one day into the vicinity of a camp meeting, and, like the war horse snuffing the hattle from afar, hastened toward it. His arrival was near the middle of the day. He said to the Presiding Elder, "I have come to your meeting, and must leave this afternoon, but God has given me a message to this people. Will you let me preach?"

The Elder replied, "There is a brother engaged to preach this afternoon; if he will yield the appointment I shall be glad to have you." The arrangements were made, and Pitman was to preach. At three o'clock, however, the sky was overcast with dense black clouds; fierce lightnings glared, and the thunders roared. All the indications were that a fearful tempest would immediately burst upon them. But notwithstanding these angry premonitions the preacher took the stand, and falling upon his knees, prayed in agony of spirit, "O God Almighty! if thou hast sent me to preach to this people, hold back these threatening clouds for at least one hour." This prayer was thrice repeated, each time with increasing faith and fervor. It was a bold request—yet it was heard and the rain was stayed. He then preached an hour and ten minutes like one newly commissioned from the skies, and as if, when through, he must immediately return to report the manner in which he had performed his work. Men stood aghast, or feeling that the day of doom had come, fell prostrate to the earth under the power of the convincing Spirit. Thousands were present at the service, and as soon as he had finished, the clouds, no longer restrained, poured out their contents in such ceaseless floods, that the multitudes fled to the tents for refuge. The whole congregation, convinced by the power of truth, and now held captive by the storm, were kept within the reach of religious effort. Prayer-meetings were opened simultaneously all over the ground, and such were the displays of Divine power amid the tempest, that five hundred souls were reported among the saved on that memorable afternoon and evening.

A HOBOKEN editor being challenged to fight a duel, sent word in reply, "When I want to die, I can shoot myself."

VOTE OF THANKS.

The Editors propose a Vote of Thanks from all interested in the S. and S. to Brother William Offord, for his invaluable services in copying and proof reading.

ALL are kindly welcome.—W. O.

SCOTCH CORRESPONDENCE.

[Extract from a letter to D. F.]

"I AM fully of your opinion, that love must be the creative and cementing element of every thing valuable in homo. The primary, fundamental cause of so much domestic infelicity, and so many divorces, is the lack of moral stamina, originating in the utter absence of any effort to train the young, in this country, in that empress of all virtues, self-control.

"It may seem absurd to speak of sugar-sticks in this connection, but it seems clear to me, that if a child is indulged in candy, without ever a hint to his conscience, that there is any thing wrong in it, by and by a taste for tobacco and other abominations is developed, and indulged in without a scruple of conscience. A flabbiness of moral muscle, so to speak, is induced, and, when decidedly immoral appetites present themselves for gratification, there is no power to resist. In he goes, and the result is personal and domestic misery and mischief without limit, divorces included; the sugar stick, the thin edge of the wedge, wrought the ruin.

"Again, the wide-spread practice of raising young women to nothing but a love of luxury and idleness, greatly aggravates the evil. Parents who do not take all possible pains to train their daughters, in all the minutiae of domestic industry and thrift, are the enemies of these daughters and of all human kind; for there is no source of happiness like a sense of genuine usefulness, and a consciousness of duty quietly and well performed; nothing so attractive to those of the other sex, who are sober minded; nothing so subduing to those who are not. Let us contrast the background of solid worth, indicated by the knitting habits of Martha Washington and Maria Louisa Childs, and the simple record of the New Testament Dorcas, with the flimsy accomplishments of the 'girl of the period,' and cease to wonder at the falling off of happy homes, in favor of saloons with 'pretty waiter girls,' and the prevalence of infelicity where real homes are attempted. In Scotland, women work shoulder to shoulder with men in all rural industries. This custom receives unfavorable comment from those who know only the outside of it. It has its drawbacks, but the cannie prudence and sturdy independence begotten of it, may well cover a multitude of minor evils, and be one of the causes of the greatness of our little native land.

"I am much pleased with the ideas embodied in the principles of the Shakers. If I had remained at home in Scotland, it is not likely I ever should have married, for my mother is still alive, and my sister likely to survive me.

"I count Celibacy a wise arrangement to those who can bear it; and, strictly and honestly carried out, it will contribute largely to the permanency of the Shaker communities. I am not naturally disposed to take a very rose-colored view of things that look dark on the surface; therefore, I am gratified with your view of the destruction of slavery, as a prophecy of further moral progress in the world; for that institution looked powerful enough on the very eve of its fall. Taking the whole sweep of human history, with many apparent interruptions and retrogressions, progress is ever evident; but it is as evident that the moral has always lagged behind the material, political, and intellectual. It is not likely that the letter of republican institutions will soon be interfered with in this country; but the state of things which renders possible such careers as those of Tweed, Connolly & Co., Fisk and Gould, Vanderbilt, Drew and others, does not augur well for the spirit of these institutions remaining long intact; yet, 'to hope the best is pious, brave, and wise.'

DIALOGUE.

—o—

Flesh-eater.—Were not all things made for our use?

Vegetarian.—And man for mine, replied the pumperdoo goose.

Flesh-eater.—What reasons have you for rejecting (as food) flesh, fish, eggs, butter, cheese, and grease?

Vegetarian.—See Genesis, 1:29; and Numbers, 11:13 and 33, where it states that the Israelites lusted for flesh, and their punishment was, to have their fill of it, till it turned into a great plague, and they died with it between their teeth. The Prophet Isaiah (66:3) said: "He that killeth an ox, is as if he slew a man."

"Gather up the fragments, and let nothing be lost" said the Saviour, after feeding the multitude.

No one, it is presumed, will question the prudence of the Saviour (in whom were hid "the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"), because he let "the whole herd of swine run down a steep place into the sea," and perish. Is it not reasonable to suppose that he knew that the condition of the man, out of whom the legion was cast, was brought about by his eating the flesh of that unclean animal? and that the inhabitants of that region were much addicted to it?

See, likewise, Isaiah, 19:8-10. Why all the lamentation, mourning and languishing, expressed therein, if it were not because the people would be vegetarians, and would not buy the fish?

Flesh-eater.—Why don't you eat fine flour bread?

Vegetarian.—I do eat some, when I think it is not (as Elder Frederick Evans says) poisoned with saleratus.

MORE CHURCH CONCESSIONS.

—o—

WE scarcely read of the elaborate defense of the Anglican Church by the Primate of all England, made through the columns of the press, in opposition to the disestablishing spirit which is abroad in the United Kingdom, when we get a reminder nearer home, from the American branch of the same Church, of the inroads which science is making into creeds, and of the reluctant willingness of the clergy to accept a situation which they plainly see it is impossible for them to withstand. Bishop Bedell, of Ohio, the coadjutor of the deceased Bishop McIlvaine, whose remains have reached his native shores within a week, in a discourse, not long since, on "Heavenly Conversation," drew up a formal and elaborate argument to prove what all believers in Spiritualism know without any argument whatever, that in the future world we shall renew old friendships, feel interested in past events, and daily increase in knowledge and love. And he proceeded to repudiate altogether the old time belief in a heaven in which the saints are to stand around, perpetually singing praises to God, or listening, in turn, to the songs of angelic choirs. He likewise scouted the idea that the past would be forgotten and the future unthought of, while enjoying the ecstatic bliss of the heavenly present. He believed that the immortal man would be but the mortal man purified of his imperfections, and with an immensely enlarged and intensified intelligence. He will converse with his friends over the struggles and trials of the past, as well as over its happiness, and will look forward with joy to the yet greater bliss of the future.

The Bishop pushed on with greater boldness still, and did not hesitate to renounce the narrow creed that man, in his present state, on this insignificant vale of matter, is the be-all and end-all of created intelligence. And furthermore, and more specifically still, he declared that he did not hold the dispensation of the Fall and the Redemption to be the only one in God's providence. The thousands of magnificent orbs that fill the boundless space with activity and glory were not created merely for the use or amusement of the dwellers on this, one of the smallest of all the orbs. Each probably has had, or will have, its inhabitants and its peculiar dispensation. One of the joys of the future life will perhaps be the reception of news from these myriad worlds, and the tracing out of the workings of Divine Providence in their history. All this sounds very much like Swedenborg. It is Spiritualism. The signs of the times are not easy to mistake in matters spiritual, when the chiefs of the churches give such pronounced evidence of being weary of the restrictions of their creeds, and show that their spirit yearn for a free flight among the realities of the spiritual life, such as are known to those who hold the great truths of Spiritualism. We refer to this demonstration of an Episcopal Bishop in this country with unaffected satisfaction, because it shows that people are on the right track, and the churches have got to follow them. The priests and preachers no longer lead and control the public judgment or popular aspirations. The light is coming down everywhere in a welcome flood.

GOOD RULES FOR EMERGENCIES.

—o—

Professor Wilder, of Cornell University, gives these short rules of action in cases of accident.

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing, dash water into them; remove cinders, etc., with round point of a pencil.

Remove insect from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into your ear.

If any artery is cut, compress below.

If choked, get upon all fours and cough.

Smother a fire with carpets, etc. Water will often spread burning oil, and increase the danger. Before passing through smoke, take full breath, and then stoop low, but if carbonic acid is suspected, walk erect.

Suck poisoned wounds, or, cut out the part without delay; hold the wounded part as long as can be borne to a hot coal or the end of a cigar.

In cases of poisoning, excite vomiting by tickling the throat, or by warm mustard.

For acid poisons, give alkalies; for alkaline poisons, give acids; white of an egg is good in most cases.

For apoplexy, raise the head and body; for fainting, lie flat.

If in the water, float on the back, with the nose and mouth projecting.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with varnish.

Extract from Richard W. Pelham's letter of Jan. 10th, 1873.

And now as it is appointed for all men once to die, and whereas I being about seventy-six years of age, and weakened by disease, am approaching the end of my days on earth, I leave this my dying testimony. To wit, That the REVELATION of the Gospel of Jesus of Nazareth and a second REVELATION of the same Gospel through Ann of Manchester is the power of God unto salvation from sin; that having lived according to this revelation over fifty-five years it has saved me from sin—saved me from all criminal imperfection. It has given me power over all flesh, all lust, all hatred, all anger; over all that is of the world; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life; over all murmuring and complaining, all unreconciliation of spirit, and my soul is filled with peace, filled with gratitude and love to God and to all humanity. Ho! every one that thirsteth come—come to the overflowing fountain of God's impartial Love! Amen.

THE SHAKERS.—The Troy Times does not believe the Shakers are dying out, and says: Regularly we hear or read that the sect of Shakers is dying out. Every six months or so, a correspondent writes to a newspaper that the Shakers are losing in numbers, wealth, and discipline, and every other newspaper in the country reprints the letter. Already enough obituaries of this peculiar people to serve for the funeral memoirs of all the eccentric religious communities in the land have been written. The fact is, that the Shakers are today gaining in wealth and discipline, and holding their own in numbers. Their lands, which were bought for almost nothing, have constantly gained in value, and now, owing to their location and productiveness, they are as valuable for farming purposes as any we know of. For a dying sect the Shakers have considerable vitality.

In a late number of the New Haven Evening Register, we find the following paragraph: It is said that there is not now living a single descendant in the male line of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Spencer, Milton, Cowley, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, Goldsmith, Scott, Byron, Moore, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Drake, Cromwell, Hampden, Monk, Marlborough, Peterborough, Nelson, Stafford, Ormond, Clarendon, Addison, Swift, Johnson, Walpole, Bollingbroke, Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Grattan, Canning, Bacon, Locke, Newton, Davy, Hume, Gibbon, Macaulay, Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, David Garrick, John Kemble or Edmund Kean.

There is a law under which the procreative forces pass from the back brain to the intellectual and turn from the intellectual to the spiritual faculties.

LONGEVITY OF THE JEWISH RACE.—The average duration of life among the Jews in France, is computed to be five years longer than among Christians. M. Legoyt, a French author, in summing up the causes which lead to this higher average, gives prominence to the following: The "sentiment of the family," fully developed among them, assures to these children and to their aged and infirm parents a solicitude more active; to the new-born, the mother's nursing, and to the poor an assistance more efficacious. "Their charity," he says, "is unequalled; their morality is demonstrated by judicial statistics; firmness and serenity of spirit are the most marked traits of their character, and proceed from a profound faith and an unalterable confidence in Providence."

IS THERE MYSTERY IN TRUTH?

THE human mind in all ages, has sought to understand the invisible Source of its existence; for belief in, or an intuitive sense of, the immortality of the soul, and of an overruling Power, which guides and controls the destinies of individuals, and of nations, is inherent in every human soul.

Much was said, in Apostolic days, concerning the "mystery of the Gospel," "mystery of godliness," and also the "mystery of iniquity." The Revelator John, who "bare record of the Word," while under a true spirit of prophecy reaching into the future, foretold a day when the mystery of God would be finished.

May we not reasonably inquire into the source and origin of this mystery? If all the diversified opinions, and theological discussions which have been written and expressed concerning it were gathered and compiled in one volume, it would require a good mathematician to number its pages. But we would ask, Is there mystery in truth, when unmixed with error? Is there any mystery in purity, or in unalloyed, unselfish love? If man and woman, on the natural plane of existence, had kept their integrity, innocently carrying out the laws of their being in the rudimental stage of life, using, and not abusing, the powers conferred upon them, would they not, as a normal sequence, have progressed from the natural plane to the higher spiritual life? Then, where would have been the conflict, or mystery? Has not an interblending of the true and false—a mixing of good and evil—been the cause of all the great mystery?

The unperverted Natural Order is as true, in its time and season, as the Spiritual in its time and season; and must necessarily precede it. But every wise husbandman understands, that, if he undertakes to sow the seed and reap a harvest at the same time, he will create confusion and fail in the attempt. The Adamic or generative plane belongs to the seed-sower; and spirits or angels who have passed out of the material form of existence into the lower spheres of the heavens, watch over and guard those who are in that Order; and, just in proportion to their uprightness in carrying out the true intent and purpose of their existence in that Order, are they blest.

But the Spiritual man or woman, who fills the Christian character, must rise above the natural into the spiritual; and must come under the ministration of spirits or angels who have themselves ascended into the resurrection heavens where Christ is found; whence they are sent as angel reapers, to harvest souls from the earthly generative life. If an enemy had not sown evil seeds—tares among the wheat—and the earth and its inhabitants had grown and progressed like a beautiful healthy child under the protection of its parents, from infancy to the strength and understanding of manhood, can we not see that, successively, all would have ripened for the harvest? and that the Angel reapers would have gathered the mature grain into the spiritual garner of the Lord for a higher use, leaving the field to be again occupied by the seed-sower? Then, where would have been the "mystery," or inharmony?

In violated law, we opine, may be found the cause of all the mystery and misery in the human family at all times. Sin blights and destroys! Virtue is a health restorer! Man and woman are the agents by which the earth must be redeemed; they are the mediums through which the Angels work; and it would avail but little for them to sound their trumpets, or for the thunders to utter their voices, if there were not spiritually progressed, honest, earnest souls waiting upon the watch-towers of Truth, listening to catch the first sound, and be ready to work with them. There is not so much dependent upon what is said as upon what is done. One godly deed is better, and more effective, than ten thousand words (if they are ever so good) coming from a deceitful, unsanctified heart. As one said anciently, "One hour of equity is better than seventy years of devotion," (without corresponding works). While there is so much reliance placed upon the atoning blood of Jesus" and the pulpit eloquence of a hireling priesthood, the masses will continue to sin and to sorrow, and the mystery of iniquity will continue to work."

But we rejoice in spirit exceedingly; for the beautiful star of Purity is rising in the spiritual horizon, giving promise of a brighter and more perfect day. Thousands are beginning to understand that those who "see God" and commune with Him, must be pure in heart and life; and only those who keep themselves chaste, can truly wait on Him, or the ministers whom He sends; and, like many of the ancient philosophers, they ascribe the highest place in the heavens to those who live a pure, celibate life for conscience sake.

And, while we acknowledge God in the natural creation, and study his laws from the great book of Nature, which is ever open before us, and from which we may learn important and instructive lessons pertaining to our physical life, it may also be a medium through which we may study the divine laws, which pertain to the inner spiritual life, and the boundaries of that world which is to be our future home. The healthy spirit will draw sustenance from all God's creation. And, as the rivers and running streamlets all converge toward the ocean, which is never full, although constantly receiving new supplies; so should all intelligent beings, created as they are with the germs of an immortal life, direct their thoughts, and wend their way, toward the great Source and Center of all Truth; for there is the true home of all souls.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BELOVED ELDRSS ANTOINETTE:

ALTHOUGH our material forms are separated by hills and valleys, yet I am thankful that I can commune with you in spirit; and, on this beautiful evening, I feel drawn to you by the strong chords of Gospel affection; and there is a deep feeling of love and sympathy welling up in my heart for you. You are ever ready to give freely to others from the fountain of love that is treasured in your heart, and to impart knowledge that is much needed; and I wish to express the great satisfaction that I find in reading the columns of the "Shaker and Shakeress." It seems to me that great good will result from the circulation of such wholesome truths as are found in its pages.

I often reflect upon the wisdom and love of God; and the more I study his Divine attributes, the more convinced I am, that "His ways and thoughts" are not as the ways and thoughts of natural men and women, who build castles according to their own plans, which do not contain waters of life and salvation; for the natural mind, when perverted, seeks pleasure in unrighteousness, and drinks at the impure fountains of sinful indulgence, and finds therein bitter disappointment, instead of true and lasting joy. They who thus spend their lives and vital energies, are more to be pitied than envied.

And those who have not risen above the earthly, material plane of life, and have never sought happiness and pleasure in doing God's will, often wonder how it is that the people called Shakers can reconcile their feelings to (what seems to them) a dull round of duties; for they cannot realize that Wisdom's ways (which are always pure and peaceful) are filled with good and pleasant things; and that those who walk in her paths ever find joy that is far more satisfying than earth-born pleasures, which at best are transient, and that the spiritually-minded, whose aspirations are God-ward, feel the inflowings of life and love from a never failing source.

One reason why I thus express my feelings at this time is, we have recently been enjoying a beautiful season with several companies of our dear Gospel brethren and sisters who have been with us from other societies of Believers. We have really enjoyed a feast of good things. Our heavenly meetings for worship, where we felt the inspiration of the Holy Spirit which lifts the soul to Angel spheres, and gives a foretaste of the joys of the redeemed, claim our best feelings. Then, in our social feasts, where mind could respond to mind, as well as heart to heart, there was much comfort. Again; as we walked through the cultivated fields and gardens which, in a measure, have been redeemed from blight and beautified by consecrated labor, we really felt that our Heavenly Father and Mother will not withhold any good thing from those who love and do the truth; that the same kind hand that feeds the raven, and clothes the lily, will continue to bestow every needful blessing upon those who seek the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness in preference to earthly riches, honors, or pleasures.

We visited the adjacent towns and villages and saw much in nature and art to admire; but as we saw costly palaces for the rich, and very humble cottages for the poor, and felt the injustice existing between man and man, the poor who toil through weary days, and fill the rich man's coffers by wearing their own lives away, receiving but a small recompense in return; we found a feeling of sadness gathering over our spirits; for we could not feel the peace and contentment there that pervades our Zion home, where self is crucified, and where all toil together in Christian love; thus, as in Apostolic days, breaking our bread together as brethren and sisters in one spiritual household.

I thank God that there is a religion that can make the heart better, and change the whole character of the natural man and woman; and how mistaken are they who think there is no real pleasure to be attained and enjoyed, except by traveling from place to place, and mingling with the votaries of fashion, thus forming an excited and exciting crowd of pleasure-seekers. Happy are they who have so turned their thoughts and affections Godward as to realize that all their joys center in truth—in God.

Anna Irving, Enfield, Conn.

I AM prompted by love to cast my nite into the Lord's treasury; and, in a true Christian spirit, I would draw near to those who are not satisfied with their present condition, and who desire more spiritual light, and conviction of sin, and to find the pathway that leadeth unto eternal life; and, if by a word of solace, I could comfort one sin-bound, sorrow-stricken soul, and help to disperse the dark clouds that have gathered around, it would be a pleasure to me so to do.

Dear friends, do we realize that we are hastening on to the immortal shores; that we must leave the things of time; and that there is but one straight way that will lead souls unto the rest of God in the realms of the blessed? Jesus our exemplar paved this way, and in kindly accents, he said, "Follow me." All who accept the invitation, find in him a heavenly Guide; and the Christ Spirit, with which he was baptized, sheds light upon the narrow path of self-denial, and enables those who are earnestly inquiring "what they shall do to inherit eternal life," to understand their duty; and such find that the yoke of Christ is far easier than the yoke of sin, and his burdens lighter than the bondage of a carnal life.

And I would say to my sorrowing sisters who are yet under that bondage, "There is a Heavenly Mother who is able to extend sympathy and love, and to take earth's erring children by the hand, and gently lead them through the cleansing waters of Jordan, (confession of sin and repentance)," and to bear them up through every trial and temptation, and to guard them from all influences that would ensnare and lead them into darkness.

We have a Father's strength to uphold, and a Mother's love to cheer and encourage; and their united voice is, "Whosoever will give up the carnal, sensual life for the Gospel of Christ, and rise into the higher angelic spheres, shall find a life that is eternal." And bright ministering Angels are sent to earth, to kindle the fires of truth that will cleanse the temple (human hearts), and prepare a dwelling place for the holy dual Christ Spirit.

Even now, at the gates of cities, temples, and chapels, where God's name has been profaned, through a false profession, Angels of Justice and Mercy are crying to the massive throng as they pass, "Who will accept the way of life and salvation, and sell all they possess that belongs to a worldly life, for the pearl of great price?" Who will listen to the goodly Shepherd's voice, saying, "Follow me; I will lead you unto living waters, where you may drink and thirst no more." Few are willing to hear and obey, but choose rather to continue their course in the broad road of sinful pleasure.

It is not God's will that any soul should be lost. He patiently waits, and calls in gentle tones, and pleads with souls to come to the truth and life, and that through the cry in their hearts, "Lord what shall I do to be saved?" How shall I live to meet my God in peace? they may be brought to bow in humble submission and say, "Not my will, but thine, O God, be done." Hold me in the hollow of thy hand; forgive my wanderings from thee; and lead me to the higher life; that I may dwell in thy temple forever. Sweet would be the incense of such soul-breathings, when carried by Angels to the throne of our Father and Mother in the Heavens.

But we would ask, Is not the wickedness of the present age, and especially of our great cities, equal to that described by the Prophet Nahum? Are not the cities full of blood, of lies, and robbery; against which a woe was pronounced? And does not crime as justly merit the indignation of a righteous God now, as in days of yore? People run to and fro; knowledge is increased; and the wicked continue in wickedness. It was said, "The chariots shall rage in the streets, and jostle one against another in the broadways; they shall appear like torches as they run like lightning." Have we not seen that prediction fulfilled in our time?

When we have witnessed the rapid increase of knowledge in the land, O how much have we desired that true wisdom, which leads souls to fear God and work righteousness, might also increase; that there might be a true reformation in the lives of the people; and that those of riper years and experience might, through the law of kindness and love, plant the germs of purity and innocence in the hearts of youth and children, that they might honor God, and become shining lights in the world, that would dispel the clouds of darkness which sin and ignorance have formed. Such an influence could not fail to be a blessing to humanity. It would lift the mind above sensual pleasure, vanity, and pride, which lead to sorrow and death; and would turn it toward the Divine Source, whence all truth and goodness radiate. Thus would be fulfilled that beautiful commandment which Jesus gave to his disciples, "Love one another as I have loved you."

Eldress Hester A. Adams, Gloucester, Me.

FOR many years I have felt the saving influence and power of the Gospel of Christ in his second appearing, which was preached in part by Jesus and his disciples, and for a time was carried into practical effect in the Pentecostal Church. They testified that they only "saw and prophesied in part;" and that, in the future, there would be a more perfect manifestation of the work of God. This undoubtedly had reference to the time when there should be a full manifestation of the Christ Spirit in both male and female; that as Jesus was baptized with the Spirit of the Father, which constituted him the first-born of many sons—an elder brother, so also, in the fullness of time, a female should be baptized with the Mother Spirit in Deity, which would fit her to be an elder sister,—the first-born of many daughters; and that, under the power of the dual Christ Spirit, they would co-operate together in the work of human redemption.

I feel a deep desire that others may be blessed as I have been, and I feel a lively interest in our little periodical, the "Shaker and Shakeress;" for I believe it may be a means of conveying much light and truth to honest inquirers. When I peruse its pages, my heart is filled with joy; it is a medium of the "living word" to souls, and of practical truths so much needed at the present time.

And while I feel an earnest desire that the Gospel may spread far and wide among mankind, I also pray for an increase of the quickening Spirit; the baptism of fire to sin, and of love to truth, within our Zion home; that all may be of one heart and mind—practical doers of good works; and thus become God's true witnesses and living ministers, to herald the glad tidings of peace and salvation to other needy souls.

I am thankful to know that this dual messenger finds its way over the waters of the broad Atlantic, to old England's shores, the home of my childhood, from whence I was brought by my parents in early life. I thank God that I was preserved through a most perilous sea voyage to reach America. Once our ship was so near being wrecked that for hours we were almost without hope of ever seeing land again. The captain and second mate, with six others, were swept overboard and found a watery grave. But we succeeded in putting back to Liverpool; and then took passage in another vessel; but were obliged on account of severe gales, to put back into Liverpool the second time. Again we started and by the good protecting powers above we finally reached the western shore in safety. My thoughts often go back to the people of the land of my nativity; and, in my prayers, I would call down God's blessing to rest upon them; that they may learn to do his will, and may feel the joy of knowing that they are owned and blest of Him; and that, by being consecrated to his service, they may be quickened by his Spirit, and nourished by his Word.

Betsy Ann Hollingsworth, Hancock, Mass.

TO THE EDITRESS.—I have not been accustomed, nor do I feel qualified, to write for the press; yet I possess so lively an interest in what I consider a living cause, of vital importance to us, and to mankind at large, that I venture, in my feeble way, to make an effort to sustain it; and therefore proffer a few thoughts for our Monthly, which, if of no higher use, may drop into the much talked-of "Basket," and there possibly serve as a "nest egg," to attract something more interesting and valuable.

The Shakers, or Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, have (in a measure) for many years, sealed up their testimony among themselves, because it is so radical that none of the sects in Christendom, nor of those who belong to what is termed Babylon, were prepared to hear it or live it. I am thankful that the time has come for the veil to be removed, and the "cloud to be lifted up;" and my prayer is, that the light of truth may shine so clearly, that many eyes may behold the order of the true "Priesthood," who bear upon their shoulders the "Ark of the Covenant."

I bless the Shaker and Shakeress as a medium through which Sisters, as well as Brethren, can present their views, and express their desires, and be heard. Every one who has been blest with the saving influences of the Gospel, which is able to redeem souls from sin, and to free them "from the bondage of the flesh," which is far more grievous than was Egyptian servitude, cannot but rejoice in so glorious a work, and feel a strong desire that others may also be blest, as they have been. I would gladly blend my voice with that of the Spirit, which is calling: "Come up hither." Were Gabriel's trumpet within my grasp, I would sound it aloud, and call my suffering sisters away from the bondage of a carnal life, and its consequent sufferings, to enjoy the freedom of the true daughters of Zion, in the clean fold of Christ.

True, woman has suffered through her own volition, to a great degree; for, through either ignorance or weakness, she gave man power to rule over her; when, if they had kept their rectitude on the procreative plane of life, they could have walked evenly together; and then, in all the duties pertaining to that order, they would have been one. It has seemed very strange to me, that so many females should willingly follow the blind multitude, and yield to a life so fraught with pain and sorrow. But I suppose it is easier to see the broad way, where the multitude—the “many”—through, than the narrow path, where the “few” are found.

When we cast our eyes abroad over the land, we see that crime stalks defiantly among all classes, from the lowest to the highest. And, if we trace to their origin, national and household wars, and the heart-rending abuses and cruelties inflicted upon females, do we not find them to be the fruits of wanton lusts?

As in the first Adam, all who sin as he sinned, die as he died; “so, in Christ,” the second Adam, “shall all be made alive.” By resisting every temptation to evil, as did Jesus, we shall find our relation to him, who was the “first-born among many brethren.” Through the Christ Spirit, with which he was baptized, he was able to say, “I have overcome the world.” And, in the second appearing of the Christ Spirit, a female has been baptized, to be a co-worker with Jesus, who now stands in a corresponding relation to him as the first-born among many sisters. This we call the beginning of the final Order of the work of God upon earth, which resembles the Order of heaven, where dwells our dual God, with countless myriads of angels. The man Jesus, and the woman Ann, are our Exemplars. He, by putting on Christ, became “the Lord our Righteousness.” And, by the same Spirit, “She shall be called The Lord our Righteousness.”—(Jer. 23 : 6, and 33 : 16.)

I own this blessed Parentage in the New Creation, and rejoice with my faithful brethren and sisters, who are living witnesses of the power and efficacy of their mission; and I will ever defend and uphold the testimony which they brought forth against all sin.

I have always loved my Shaker home; and, although I was only a small child when placed under its guardianship, I have never had a desire to leave it. When I grew to riper age, I had (of course) to make my own choice as to whether I would follow the course of the world, and live in the generative order, or continue to live a pure virgin life, as do the angels. I chose the latter, and have never regretted it; for I can truly say, I love the name—character—of SHAKER.

Hannah E. Potter, Mt. Lebanon.

ONENESS OF LIFE.

In perusing the July number of the “Shaker and Shakeress,” so fraught with heavenly treasures, I could not but pause, at the close of each article, to reflect upon their oneness of feeling and sentiment; and knowing that near a thousand miles lie between many of the contributors, and that they have never exchanged words, orally, or by pen, how strange that they should speak and feel as though reared by the same Gospel Parents. What an exemplification of the one great Spirit of truth and love that pervades the children of Light! “As many as were of one heart and soul had all things common.” These have come up through deep waters of tribulation and are being transformed into pure virgins, for the kingdom of heaven’s sake.” Here are truly kindred hearts; those who suffer together for the one great cause of human redemption, and who have pledged their souls to sleep with the nameless martyrs of the past, with no proud monument erected to their memory; these have pictured truly an ensign of noble deeds, whose fame shall yet extend from pole to pole. These shall ascend in glory and triumph, to their Eternal Parents, who gave them this oneness of spirit.

The proud and worldly-wise may scoff,
Endeavouring to afflict us;
But patience doth possess our souls,
And wisdom doth direct us.
Although in numbers we may wane,
Progression’s wheel is turning,
And all earth’s efforts would be vain,
To keep Truth’s fire from burning,
Now kindling on Mount Zion’s height;
Though few the flames are blowing,
All nations yet shall see the light,
And taste the fruits we’re sowing.
Take courage then, dear kindred hearts,
Most precious coins are fewest;
And hearts that suffer just as one—
The noblest—are the truest.
A dawning day I clearly see,
With many untold blessings,
And fraught with love and purity,
For which are thousands pressing.
I would not linger on the brink
Of doubt and desolation,
Since Christ is here, and sayeth Drink
The waters of salvation;
O cleanse the soul from every sin,
By sorrow and confession;
Forsake the world that is within,
Thus honor your profession.

REFLECTIONS UPON MOTHER’S DAY.

THE feminine or mother principle and element throughout sentient life, whether on the natural or spiritual plane, is that which produces, develops, protects and cherishes.

When, on the natural plane, maternal functions are directed by wisdom and love, in conformity to natural law; the result is a well-formed healthy organism—a fit temple for the abode of an immortal soul. The good physical mother may not be well qualified to mature and guide the unfolding spirit, which, like the body, should be fed with food adapted to its needs, and powers of assimilation.

While man may claim supremacy in contending with, and subduing the physical world, and utilizing the elements and forces of external nature, woman’s mission is to contend with, discipline, and direct the strong current of life which flows through the human soul, rippling its surface, or stirring its greatest depths. Her influence, though it may be more silent in its operations, is ever acting on those around her, for good, or for evil.

The human form is an outgrowth from the mother; and her soul-life is infused into it; and even the food which she prepares, and the clothing on which her hands and thoughts are employed, bear her impress. She is the architect of Society, if she properly fulfills her maternal duties.

Man has his sphere of labor and duty, and may perform his part well, in helping to people the earth on the physical plane; but he cannot fill the sphere allotted to woman; and whenever he undertakes it, he mars her work.

And on the higher, spiritual plane woman has her sphere of action, and peculiar work, which man cannot do. Therefore, if her life is consecrated to purity and goodness, and is under the guidance of the Mother Spirit in Deity, then she becomes a co-worker with man in establishing the kingdom of heaven on earth; and, through the love element (which is a stronger power than argument), and her intuitional nature, which render her accessible to the higher sphere, she becomes a medium to bear souls away from the earthly to the angelic life; and in that way she helps to people the heavens with redeemed spirits, and reflects the image of the Heavenly Maternity.

The most sacred right, and the most glorious privilege, of a living soul, is to grow; and it should be woman’s care to promote this growth, and to be a medium through whom the expanding soul-powers may receive the genial sunshine, and refreshing dews, from the Angel world. And, if we would be mediums through whom rays of divine light and truth shall be transmitted to others, our lives must be free from blemish.

The Orientalist, in his address to Deity, said, “As shines the sunlight in a drop of dew, so doth thy Spirit in my spirit shine.” “Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.” And truly a blessing are they in whom God may be seen.

THANKFUL HEART.

OLIVER W. HOLMES wrote the following oft-to-be remembered comparison. “If any one should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes, and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and it would draw to itself the almost invisible particles, by the mere power of attraction.”

“The unthankful heart, like my fingers in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day; and, as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find, in every hour, some heavenly blessings; only, the iron in God’s sand is gold.”

The same thought is applicable to our little paper, the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS. Let the vain, the worldly, or the sensual person look upon its pages, and they appear barren as the desert wastes. But let truth-loving, truth-seeking souls, whose desires are unfulfilled, behold the same pages, and they bloom like a garden in spring; they blossom the promises of immortal fruit; they gleam with unpolished jewels; and they hold the “pearl of great price”—the virgin pearl. They speak with the voice of home love—the home and the love whose foundations are deeply laid, and whose perfection shall be the blessing of eternity.

Fast and far may our dual sheet speed to the hearts that aspire to be pure; for they shall see the work of God wherever it is wrought.

Cecilia Devry, Mt. Lebanon.

If the glory of this world wanes, we see another glory pertaining to a world, of which this is but a shadow, rising and becoming visible to our spiritual senses. Sorrows will cease in the good time coming, when light shall comprehend or banish all works of darkness from human souls; remove the cause, and the effect will cease. Then pain, hatred and strife will give place to the pleasure that flows from pure love. May we realize the importance of giving our thoughts to God: For surely “it shall be well with the righteous, and ill with those who transgress God’s laws.”—Charlotte B.

PROGRESSION.

1. Be firm our en-dea-vor to fol-low the right, Though ma-n'y our pur- pose op- pose,
 2. The hill of re- demp- tion with cou- rage we'll climb, Though rug- ged our path- way and steep,
 3. The dark- ness of doubt that be- cloud- ed our way, Fades far in the dis- tance from sight,

The weapons we wield are untarnish'd and bright, And mighty to vanquish our foes, We will join the vic- to- ri- ous ar- my of truth
 Un- blinch- ing 'mid tri- als and dan- gers of time, Still sunward our course we will keep, For a sweet sound of triumph floats down from the spheres
 We press for the glo- ry of e- ter- nal day, Where lingers no shadow or blight, We will swell the grand chorus with heaven's bright throng

Whose van-guard be- fore us have gone, They tra- verse the land of per- pe- tu- al youth, All crown'd with the lau- rels they've won.
 There's joy in the con- quer- or's song, With hope all in- spir- ing with glad- ness it cheers, And hastens our jour- ney a- long.
 The bless- ing of vic- to- ry see, The con- quest of self o- ver er- ror and wrong, The life that re- mains for the free.

WOMAN'S REIGN.

WHEN error's cloud o'erhung the sky,
 And superstition fill'd the land,
 The life of Woman knew a blight,
 And cower'd neath sin's stern demand.
 She was down-trodden and oppress'd—
 A slave to Man's ignoble reign:
 Her will—her strength—to his must bend,
 Whate'er the loss, whate'er the pain.

Yet through the struggling tide of years,
 The cause of reason claim'd the day,
 And bade her trusting spirit wait
 Till truth should sweep the wrong away.
 And, through the heat and wave of strife,
 She cherished still her lofty aim—
 To be a bright and guiding star,
 And thus the sinful heart reclaim.

The powers above in earnest strove
 To form on earth a home of love,
 And woman was the temple sought
 For the white-breasted, spotless dove.
 The angels bore unto her soul
 The power to lift the fallen race;
 They cloth'd her with the gift of God,
 And in the truth gave her a place.

A Mother in her sphere she rules,
 Unbias'd by inferior power;
 And nobles own her life—her love—
 And seek it as an angel dower.
 Her worth unto mankind is known;
 Her inspiration has been felt;
 She leads the wand'ring to the truth,
 With penitence the heart to melt.

Unto her Order thousands bend,
 To feel her touch of holiness,
 And prove, with her, that Virtue's cause
 Is full of joy and blessedness.
 Her name shall spread throughout the earth,
 Till all shall know her influence true;
 And, through a Mother's strength of love,
 Their life in God and Christ renew.

Charlotte Byrdsall, Mt. Lebanon.

HEAVENLY TREASURES.

OLAY up your treasures in heaven above!
 For purity reigns in those mansions of love,
 Where peace like a river the righteous enjoy,
 While heaven-born pleasures their time doth employ.

The treasures of heaven are fadeless and pure;
 No earthly enjoyment can like them endure:
 O then let your hearts for these treasures aspire,
 Let nothing inferior claim your desire.

The bubbles of time, with their shining display,
 Leave sad disappointment as time wears away;
 Then seek for the fruits that from righteousness grow;

Press onward, the life of the Spirit to know:
 For those who are seeking those treasures to find,
 Who labor sincerely with heart, soul, and mind,
 Shall swiftly the path of redemption pursue;
 And Wisdom will guide them in all that they do.
 Their treasured enjoyments are those that will last,
 An enduring substance when all else is past.
 But earth's richest gift can abide but a day:
 They vanish like dew in the summer sun's ray.

Marion Patrick, Enfield, Ct.

HARD AND BITTER WORDS.—We all speak and write too many hard and bitter words.
 We try to break, not to mend the bruised reed.
 While we strive to be strong in faith, let us not despise the faith of the weakest; for there will come a day to all of us when, in the giving way of the powers of nature, and the pouring in of the great water-floods, we may grasp at something which may hold up and carry us over. And then, not how much we have searched out and know, not how much we have disputed and prevailed, will help us, but how much we have lived on Christ and imbibed his Spirit.—Dean Alford.—Ex.

AMERICANISM.

—o—

ULYSSES GRANT, as a mere man, may be a Methodist, as he is a General; yet, as President of these United States, this gives him no right to obtrude either of those upon the American public, who are neither Methodists nor Generals. Were he an atheist, like Bradlaugh, or a Roman Catholic, or an Episcopalian, or a Jew, or a Hindoo Mahometan, or a Chinese Confucian, or a Persian follower of Zoroaster, or a Buddhist, it would be, in him, as great a violation of good taste, as a citizen; and of Americanism, as a statesman, to project his personal theological views upon the public, as it is for the President to officially sanction Protestantism, by inviting the members of the "Evangelical Alliance," from New York to the American Capitol. Washington declared, in his official capacity, as President, that the United States Government was not a Christian Government.

Thomas Paine, or Thomas Jefferson, might, with equal propriety, and with equal law, have incorporated their Deism into their public services due to our common country, as for Ulysses Grant to thus ally himself to the Protestant Alliance.

The Constitution of these United States is eminently cosmopolitan; and he or she, in the past, or present, or future, who shall have been, or shall be, instrumental in putting the Protestant Bible into public schools, or theological chaplains in the Army or Navy, or into the Halls of Legislation, have thereby constituted themselves judges of other persons' consciences; and, so far, are religious bigots, and superstitious persecutors—enemies to Americanism—to perfect liberty and equality of colors, races, sects, creeds, and sexes;—and to the right of each human being to believe or disbelieve, according to evidence presented, any proposition, philosophical or theological, possible for the human mind to conceive and construct.

Even Gentile Christians, Catholic and Protestant, who, like Ulysses Grant, hold to war and passion marriage, and who swallow the "Atonement" as they would a drug, to cure them of the sins arising therefrom, have the same civil rights to protection of life, liberty, person, and property, as had Jefferson, the infidel author of the Declaration of Independence, himself; or as had the still greater skeptical originator of the Emancipation Act, by which millions of human beings were restored to those civil rights of which the Gentile Christian kidnappers, and slave-holding masters and mistresses had so long deprived them.

Lincoln, like Thomas Paine, and all of the Founders of our Government, were infidels to all the theologies of earth. But they were friends of humanity; and as such, and for which, God "first loved them," until, by Spiritualism and Shakerism, they should learn to love and honor Him and Her as the Fountain of all practical good to their own offspring—man.

Let us all unite to keep intact and immaculate our American Constitution, into which shall enter no theological tenet against which a single citizen shall protest—I do not believe it!

INFIDELS VERSUS CHRISTIANS.

—o—

THERE is nothing more common than for infidels and liberalists to be held up by the clergy and members of the church as the vilest of the vile, and to be denounced in unmeasured terms as bad and dangerous men. This, to say the least, is extremely unjust. It is quite possible that some infidels may have been unworthy men; but, so far as our observation has extended, we have found them to be good moral citizens, well and peaceably disposed, honest in their dealings, upright in their intercourse with their fellow-men, and as freely disposed to open their purse to the call of the needy as any other class of men.

Many of the first minds and best men of our country were infidels. Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, George Washington (so claimed by Jefferson), John Adams, Ethan Allen, Thomas Paine, and many others of the cotemporaries of their times, belonged to this class. In our own times we will mention the name of the great and good Lincoln, whose heart was singularly ingenuous and free from guile—the emancipator of 4,000,000 slaves, and the author of the noble sentiment, "Charity for all, and malice toward none"—he was an infidel. In the same category may be ranked Humboldt, Combe, Darwin, Huxley, Buckle, Froude, Tyndall, Grote, Weiss, Lechey, Spencer, Stuart Mill, Bismarck, Liebig, Bradlaugh, Garrison, Philips, Emerson, Kneeland, Parker, Sumner, Conway, and a host of other brilliant minds in the walks of science, statesmanship, letters, and theology. These men are distinguished not only for their science and education, but for the morality and purity of their lives. To say the least, they will compare favorably with the clergy of the day, who seem to be quite as full of infirmities and fallibilities as any class of men we have. A friend of ours has kept an account of the members of the clergy who, within the last twenty years, have been arraigned before the courts of the country and their own churches for crimes and misdemeanors, and that number has already reached over fifteen hundred. And more than half the piccadillos are never brought to the light, but are "hushed up" for the good of the cause, and to save disgrace to the church.

It was recently admitted by a divine in this vicinity that the clergy were as well represented in our penitentiaries and State prisons, in proportion to their numbers, as any class of the community; while it is seldom that an infidel is found there. It is reported that in the State prison at Auburn, New York, there are twenty members of the clergy confined for the crimes they committed. Are these indeed not a pretty class of men to cry out against the immorality of infidels?—Truth Seeker.

BREAD.

—o—

BREAD is called the "staff of life." Its importance in dieting cannot be over-estimated. The bread of a people determines largely the character of that people.

First. Of what material shall the bread be composed? Potatoes principally, are the bread of the Irish, at home. It has this good quality: it is not separated part from part in the process of preparation. This used to be the case with Indian corn and rye.

The Americans have been termed a toothless, dyspeptic nation. They might be termed a physic-taking nation, as, instead of "throwing that article to the dogs," it is adopted as food, by the nation at large, and taken daily. This is no more wonderful than it is horrible.

Is the American superfine bolted flour the primary cause of national dyspepsia, and also of the loss of teeth? or must we look to other sources for the origin of these national evils? That the teeth are lost, first, from want of use; and second, from the condition of the stomach, or rather, the "digestive tube," would be generally admitted by physiologists and dentists. The people have never progressed beyond the condition of children, as to their food; it is fluid and pap all the way through. Potatoes are either mashed or fried. Wheat is ground to death, and then quickened into life with yeast, and that again is neutralized with pot-ash, under different names and forms of preparation, which leave it as they found it, pot-ash; whose nature it is to decompose animal tissue, and to disintegrate bones and teeth. Rottenness enters into the skeleton, or frame-work of all those who use it, and by it the functions of the inside skin are rendered quiescent.

Again. After the wheat (which of all food contains all the properties, and in the proportions, of the component elements of the body) has been "killed" in grinding, these elements are separated, and some of the most essential are thrown away entirely; the remainder is made into enervating, constipating, dyspepsia-creating, superfine white bread: the tables—a blessing—turned into a curse. And, inasmuch as bread is an article of universal use, so are the evil effects of the use of unphysiological bread universal, creating a dyspeptic, toothless nation.

It is only the constant infusion of foreign blood that continues the present race of native Americans. Dr. Allen thinks a hundred years would terminate the pure Yankee race, if left with all its tendencies to itself, and he attributes this mainly to the use of white bread. Wheat should be used in whole, and ground coarse. How coarse would be the best for ten thousand persons is an unsolved problem. Taking as data, the history of man before "the mills ground so exceedingly fine," we may logically conclude, that, with good teeth, the whole wheat, as eaten by Jesus and his Apostles, could be safely used. After that, all degrees, down to the size of manna (coriander seed) is admissible, and nothing finer than that, as bread, should be eaten by human beings.

That the inside skin requires friction to keep it thick, active and clean, there can be no doubt, from the facts within our reach. Grapes are said, by Dr. Rose, to never injure the eater even when taken in the most absurd quantities, as proved by the people of California, and confirmed in his own personal experience. The seed of the grape is whole. Currants, in our own clime, are nearly as innoxious as the grape in its proper home. Here again is the seed, which is probably very seldom broken by the teeth.

Before Graham bread became popular, mustard seed was a common specific for dyspepsia, but to its coarseness was not the curative property credited. All forms of berries owe their healthfulness to the same cause—the seed. Thus does nature teach, and thus are we slow to learn, that no flour should be ground so fine that the teeth have no office left them to perform, and they drop out for want of exercise; and the inside skin would not be inert and cloggy with mucous; and indigestion, with its mental phenomena, would be as rare in America as it is in Ireland, with its potato; Scotland, with its oatmeal; Germany, with its cabbage, or in England with its good, strong common sense, as applied to diet, dress, and exercise, by the mothers of the people, beginning with the Queen, who, during some part of her reign, prohibited absolutely the whole royal household from using a single loaf of bread made from superfine ground and bolted wheat flour—white bread.

THE TEETH.

EVERY organ of the body needs its proper attention and exercise, in order to attain to perfect natural development and retain the powers and the healthful conditions necessary for the performance of its duties. The teeth are more subject to neglect in that respect than any thing else, perhaps; and the sufferings, consequent upon such negligence, are very great; the expenses for alleviating those pains, by removing their causes, and then procuring artificial substitutes for the extracted natural teeth, are also considerable. Yet all these evils can be avoided.

In some of the northern countries of Europe, it is a comparatively-rare occurrence to meet persons who have lost their teeth, except when quite aged; and the reasons for that are the superior dietetic habits of the people, by which sufficient exercise is afforded those organs. The bread that is most generally used, is somewhat peculiar. It is made of unbolted rye flour, formed into large, round cakes, of various thicknesses, with a hole made through them, by which they can be hung up to dry after they have been baked. When all the moisture contained in them has evaporated, they become hard and very brittle, if they have been properly made. If not, then they are hard and only hard; in that case they are horrible to meet with, especially for a person who is not accustomed to them. But there is none in those countries who is so unfortunate. That bread is eaten at all tables in connection with other food, and the benefits resulting therefrom, are easily seen. It necessitates slow eating and thorough mastication, and would be a most excellent thing for Americans, who are in the habit of bolting their food in five or ten minutes, and then run to the doctor to complain of indigestion, or to the druggist for some pills. It would be much better if they would stay at the table at least half an hour, and attend to their digestion themselves, by eating proper things in a proper manner. This would also give the doctors and druggists an opportunity of earning their livelihood by some kind of honest work.

Emil Bretzner, Mt. Lebanon.

OATMEAL.

OATMEAL, BONE, AND MUSCLE.—Liebig has shown that oatmeal is almost as nutritious as the very best English beef, and that it is richer than wheaten bread in the elements that go to form bone and muscle. Prof. Forbes, of Edinburgh, during some twenty years, measured the breadth and height, and also tested the strength of both the arms and the loins of the students of the University—a very numerous class, and of various nationalities, drawn to Edinburgh by the fame of his teaching. He found that, in height, breadth of chest and shoulders, and strength of arms and loins, the Belgians were at the bottom of the list; a little above them, the French; very much higher, the English; and the highest of all, the Scotch and Scotch-Irish, from Ulster, who, like the natives of Scotland, are fed, in their early years, with at least one meal a day of good milk and good oatmeal porridge. Speaking of oatmeal an exchange remarks that a very good drink is made by putting about two spoonfuls of the meal into a tumbler of water. The western hunter and trappers consider it the best of drinks, as it is at once nourishing; unstimulating and satisfying. Ex.

SIGNS.

Jesus upbraided the Jews, who could foretell the weather by the face of the sky, for not discerning the time of their visitation. By this we learn that the signs of the work of God are as plainly visible to those who are rightly exercised, as are the signs of the weather. Signs have their purpose, and, if truly interpreted, may lead to conviction, strengthen faith, and awaken those who have not entered the real work, where internal evidence exceeds all other. As "the kingdom of heaven cometh not with outward show," but increases gradually from a small beginning, like the growth of "a grain of mustard seed," the predictions relating to that event cannot be fulfilled all at one time, but must occur in succession, as the work unfolds.

When Jesus was about to be separated from his disciples, he said to them, "The world seeth me no more, but ye see me." Consequently, after his resurrection, though

"he shewed himself openly, yet (it was) not to all people, but unto witnesses, chosen before, of God." Only disciples saw his ascent; and only those who believed their testimony could ever know the fact. If he comes in like manner, it must be in the presence of witnesses, prepared and chosen of God; and though every eye shall see him ere this dispensation closes, it cannot be with carnal, but with spiritual sight, if it so be that "the world seeth" him no more.

Witness is in Greek, martyr or martyr, and signifies "one who gives testimony to the Truth at the expense of his life." Such, at least, were the witnesses of Christ's first appearing; they gave testimony to the truth at the expense of their physical lives. The true witnesses of Christ's second appearing, bear testimony to the truth now revealed, at the expense of their carnal or generative lives. The former is a significant type of the latter.

We read in Revelation that, after the resurrection of the witnesses of Christ, "they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither, and they ascended up to heaven in a cloud." The testimony of the witnesses slain proceeded from the dispensation of Christ's first appearing. The resurrected witnesses began to catch the inspiration of the gleaming future, which was the voice they heard from heaven. The first Quakers, about the middle of the seventeenth century, began to prophesy the approaching end of the kingdom of the beast, and the extinction of all the corrupt systems and false professions of Christianity then existing, because the coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness, and to set up on earth his everlasting kingdom, was near at hand.

This testimony was revived with increasing power in the French prophets, who arose in 1688, in the south-east part of France (the same districts where, 450 years previously, the Albigenses, a numerous sect of non-resistants, were extirpated by spoil, banishment, and murder, a million at once, by their pretended Christian neighbors.—Jones' Church History). In 1706, a few of them spread their testimony in England, where they had taken refuge, and it culminated in the society of James and Jane Wardley. With these Mother Ann united in 1758, and there received the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which constituted her the second Eve.

Mother Ann, and after her, Father William Lee, and Father James Whittaker, came forth with the testimony that Christ had appeared the second time to put an end to sin and bring in everlasting salvation, and they were his witnesses. Many received their testimony and became witnesses in turn. This testimony continued, with increasing evidence and power, until the Church of Believers was progressively organized and established between 1787 and 1792, under the ministration of Joseph Meacham and Lucy Wright, upon the principle of a united and consecrated interest in all things.

Here was a gradual ascent of the witnesses, until the second Gospel Temple, or visible order of the kingdom of heaven was established in a heavenly cloud, or multitude of witnesses, in an order and power above the generative plane of the earthly man. "And their enemies beheld them," because their order was visible to men on earth. But they could do them no harm, because the persecuting dragon was bound by the "great chain" of events and liberal principles that inspired the patriots of the American Revolution, and by the institution of the U. S. Government, which secured rational liberty and freedom of conscience for the first time in the history of man. The Government under the present Constitution of these U. S. first went into operation while the Church of Christ's second appearing was undergoing organization. An event of such importance to the interests of humanity, and planted as a seed in the vital elements of this world, to effect the final overthrow of all false systems, did not take place without the latter showing symptoms of their decreed destiny, described by the spirit of prophecy as follows: "And the same hour was there a great earthquake (concussion or shaking—meaning civil commotions), and the tenth part of the city fell; and in the earthquake were slain of men (sects) seven thousand, and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven."

France was one of the ten kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided, constituting the toes of the image described in Daniel. It therefore formed a tenth part of "the city"—mystic Babylon. The French monarch, for his zeal in support of the Roman Catholic religion, was styled "the eldest son of the Church." In July, 1789, the French revolution was inaugurated by the oppressed citizens destroying the Bastille, a stronghold of kingly tyranny.

In the year that the Church of Christ's second appearing was fully established in order, 1792, the French National Assembly abolished the monarchical form of government in France, and declared a republic; and the same year commenced a series of sanguinary wars, that convulsed Europe with terrible shaking. The clergy and nobility, "men of name"—i. e., titled dignitaries, were slain like so many cattle; and the order of nobility was abolished. The Sabbath, and all the signs and symbols of the Christian religion, were also abolished, and a revolutionary tribunal established, which inaugurated a "reign of terror." Thus "the tenth part of the city fell" from priestly influence.

And though the people were frightened by such a riot of blood, and again resorted to their temples for religious worship; and though a part of them vainly wished to restore the former things of the ancient rule; and though Napoleon, the most conspicuous actor of the time, attempted to build again the things he had destroyed, and thereby became a transgressor against the providential work he was raised up to perform (which occasioned his fall), the shaking continues; and France will continue falling until, by the establishment among her people of free and liberal institutions, under a Republican Government, guaranteeing the just, civil and religious rights of man, that nation is prepared to receive the mission of the "Angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth," by whom "the remnant" will be taught to give glory to God, by ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well. May God in his mercy hasten the day.

Observe, this is the first time any judgment is represented as causing men to repent so as to give glory to God. Therefore it is evident that a greater work of God is to take place from this period hence, than ever took place before, through which all men will be compelled to acknowledge the hand of God, even if it be as with the magicians of Egypt.

Alonzo Hollister, Mt. Lebanon.

OPIUM seems to be the continuing and increasing curse of China. Dr. Legge, who has been traveling from Peking to Shanghai, with a view to ascertaining the condition of the people of Northern China, makes the melancholy report that the growth of opium in that country is increasing at a prodigious rate, to the exclusion of the cultivation of food. In one district large tracts of land were entirely covered with poppies, and the doctor was informed that the cultivation only began last year. Some land will yield a profit by opium greater than that of wheat by two, three, four and even six times. The Chinese peasant's love of the debasing drug is attributed to his being "tied down to the soil of his own district and shut out from intercourse with his fellows by unjust regulations of every sort."

ENGLISH LETTER.

MOUNT LEBANON, COLUMBIA CO. N. Y.
U. S. A. October 8th, 1873.

ELLEN BROWN: Last Sabbath afternoon, my dear Mother, I got ruminating. Said I to myself, "By this time your mother has probably received the 'Shaker and Shakeress,' which will enable her to make a pretty shrewd guess how the land lies. But, not being a Yankee, she is not much given to 'guessing.' Write, therefore, and tell her plainly where you are, and what you are doing."

After some little thought, I concluded to tell you briefly "what I have found amongst Believers." Accordingly I drew up, and then reduced to shape, the inclosed MS. Read it, and you will see that a Free-thinker, a Spiritualist, a mourner over the fearful evils existing in society—War and Bloodshed, Capital Punishment, Slavery in all its forms, Poverty, Prostitution—a Communist, a Republican, a Woman's Rights advocate, a Truth-lover!—and all this you well know me to be—will necessarily find amongst the Shakers much that is congenial.

I have not included Hygiene and Vegetarianism in the list, because these are not yet incorporated into the Society, although beyond all doubt they are destined some day to become so. But in our Family there are quite a number of vegetarians, and I enjoy the privilege, which I dearly prize, of eating at a table bounteously spread with good nourishing food, but unpolluted with the products of the shambles in any shape or form. Elder Frederick, the chief of our Family and Order, a leading spirit of the Society, and a man of grand and advanced ideas, has been a vegetarian for forty years. He is also fully alive to the truths of Hygiene, and the evil and absurdity of drug-medication.

Are you surprised that I find myself at home here? I bless my home, and am child enough to acknowledge a deep attachment to it, and for the beautiful souls in whose company I am privileged to dwell. My prayer is that I may, through labor and earnest effort, become worthy of the love of those who call me by the endearing name of "Brother."

PS. Thank you very much for the "Westminster" and the "Illustrated." Perhaps you will occasionally remember me in that way. A copy of the "Daily News" also came to hand yesterday. Am glad to hear you still receive the "Laws of Life." I renewed your subscription last March. I have also placed your name upon the subscription list of the "Shaker and Shakeress," so you will have ample opportunity of studying our views, doctrines, and manners. I trust you and Aunt E. are enjoying comparatively good health. Accept my love.

WHAT I HAVE FOUND AMONGST BELIEVERS.

I—Males and females, of all ages, lodging under one roof, eating at one common table, and—unrestrained by jealous locks, or suspicious bolts and bars, but enjoying free social converse—leading pure, clean, and chaste lives!

II—Hatred of cant and hypocrisy. A keen perception of the utter worthlessness and the hollow trumpery of the Doctrines of Orthodoxy, and the wordy nonsense of the prayers, sermons and homilies thereon constructed. Testimony against the folly of worshipping a Book which shows on every page glaring evidence of error and imperfection, notwithstanding that it does also contain much that is good, true, and beautiful.

III—A devotion to Truth in all its phases, scientific, moral, and spiritual. When Religion, for fear of cracking a crystalized creed, carefully avoids the blows of the geologist's hammer, or the testing heat of the chemist's crucible, and, willfully shutting her eyes to well-ascertained facts, denounces science as dangerous and damnable, be sure that such Religion lacks truth, for truth cannot contradict itself. A rational religion does not oppose truth, but embraces it; and, fearless of aught save error and ignorance, is ever ready to welcome fresh discoveries in any field of human inquiry. Such a religion is Shakerism.

IV—Contempt for thrones, scepters, and crowns—not as emblems of authority, for leaders are necessary, and an active, cheerful obedience to just authority a rare but beautiful virtue, but—as emblems of the abuse of authority, and of tyranny and class-oppression. A testimony against the incestuous union of Church and State. A belief in Republicanism as the best form of government for the "Natural (or Generative) Order," and the only form of government under which the existence of a "Spiritual Order"—true followers of Jesus—is possible.

V—Contempt for the idle conventionalities of society, and the senseless worship of Fashion, whose votaries little trouble themselves about the right or wrong, the wisdom or folly, of her imperious behests.

VI—An effort to supplant the type of social life prevailing in the world, where unqualified Selfishness rules with a rod of iron, by a system the ruling principle of which is Love, and under which it is "more blessed to give than to receive."

VII—Testimony against the atrocities of Capital Punishment, Human Slavery in all its forms, War and Bloodshed, Poverty, Prostitution, and the botching and tinkering of crafty class legislation, which, making a great show of grappling with effects, leaves the prolific causes of social evils unchecked, to breed and hatch their brood of miseries.

VIII—A knowledge of the world of spirits, of the communion of mortals with immortals, and of present inspiration.

IX—The belief that "salvation" is gained through individual effort—through spiritual labor. A good life is the best preparation for eternity, and the mere intellectual acceptance of creed, dogma, or doctrine, comparatively unimportant.

X—Woman the acknowledged equal of man, and enjoying equal privileges.

XI—A cleanliness, neatness, order, sobriety, frugality, industry, charity, and benevolence truly beautiful; and, in some of my more travelled brethren and sisters, a self-control, a spirituality and goodness truly angelic and enrapturing.

XII—Lastly, I have found amongst Believers a peaceful, beautiful home; and, through patient cross-bearing and earnest labor, I hope to merit, and inherit, a final home in heaven.

Hewson Brown, Mt. Lebanon.

SPIRITUALISM, as a science, has no more claim upon mankind than has geology or astronomy or any of the intervening sciences, for the reverence and respectful devotion which properly belongs to religion.

THREE STAGES.

—o—

First.— Fear and love. Children obey through love and fear of ultimate physical punishment.

Second.— Youth obey through love, self-respect, and the ultimate fear of grieving and offending.

Third.— The adult obeys from love, self-respect, from a desire to excel and do right, and, finally, from the ultimate fear of self-condemnation.

The same stages of progress may be traced and observed in the religious travel of souls. The Law, written upon stone: "Thou shalt" do thus and so, or die physically.

The First Gospel.— A call to such as were prepared to believe and obey, or be "damned"—condemned—spiritually.

The Second Gospel.— An invitation: "The Spirit and the Bride say Come, and all who hear say Come and be free!"

Perfect love of truth, of good, of God, hath cast out all fear of physical death, and all of spiritual condemnation, and all fear but the one fear of God—the fear to offend Love.

SANITARY INFLUENCE OF SUNLIGHT.

—o—

THE importance of sunlight as a curative agent is not sufficiently appreciated. Sir James Wylic, late physician to the Emperor of Russia, made a careful study of the effect of light as a curative agent in the hospital of St. Petersburg. He discovered that the number of patients, cured in rooms properly lighted, was four times as great as it was when they were confined in dark rooms. This led to a complete reform in lighting the hospitals of Russia, and was attended with the most beneficial results. In cities visited by the cholera, it has been found that the greatest mortality has taken place in narrow streets, and on the sides of those having a northern exposure where the rays of the sun are excluded. The inhabitants of the southern slopes of mountains are better developed and more healthy than those who live on the northern sides. The inhabitants of secluded valleys are often subject to peculiar diseases and personal deformities, partly caused, probably, by the want of direct sunlight.

So far has faith in the efficacy of sunlight been carried, that its advocates have proposed to build sanitariums of glass on the upper stories of houses, where patients, divested of clothing, can take daily sun-baths. One reason given for the decrease of population in the Sandwich Islands, is the adoption of civilized habits, and the unhealthful restraint of clothing upon the limbs accustomed to light and air. Great improvement can be made in ordinary practice without carrying the remedy to extremes. The most sunny and light part of the house should be occupied by the household, instead of being kept for occasional guests. Persons should sit at the windows where the sunshine comes directly upon them and all the sunshine and air possible should be admitted within doors.

Instead of this, heavy draperies, shades, shutters and blinds shut out the life-giving influence. Reception rooms even in these enlightened days, are oftentimes kept so dark you cannot see where you stand; and as you enter them from the warm sunlight, the close damp air sends a chill through your whole frame, which has, doubtless, by a sudden check of perspiration been the cause of much illness, and the loss of many valuable lives.

This is especially the case at this season of the year. The mornings and evenings are chilly, and the doors and windows, after the morning airing, are kept tightly closed to keep out flies and mosquitoes, while the dwellers sit wrapped in shawls in their gaudy and stately prisons. A little pains-taking will obviate these troubles. Almost all houses, imperatively those shaded by trees, need a little fire at morning and evening. It will make trouble and dust, but that will be of no consideration. Then let the draperies be taken down, and open blinds and windows to let in the sanitary sunshine. Protect the windows with screens of lace or wire, to keep out the troublesome pests that are the bane of the careful housekeeper, and let in the priceless wealth of pure air. Let the carpets fade and the upholstery grow dim. Nothing should be too costly for careful use; of what consequence is furniture, when health and life are weighed in the other scale?

We know of deluded individuals who sit all through the summer days in darkened rooms, where plants would either die or lose entirely their green color. We know of houses that send a chill through you like being in a cellar, when you cross the threshold. We know also of sunny homes, where sunlight and fresh air play through the spacious halls, where the windows are thrown open to all healthful influence, and where, on chilly mornings and evenings, provision is made for that blessed influence, an open fire, cheerful, mirth-provoking, and healthful sunlight and pure air.

It is said that during one day's healthful existence, sixty hogheads of pure air should enter the human lungs. It would be an interesting problem to find out what proportion of the inhabitants of this city obtain the quota of pure oxygen necessary for keeping the lungs in the most healthful condition.

DEVOTION AND LOVE.

—o—

I WOULD, says one, deny myself of such and such indulgences, if I thought God would love me any better for it. O brother, remember "God is Love." He loves thee well enough already; but thou dost not sense his love; thou dost not love Him. Thy heart and affections are on thy idols—thy indulgences. Deny thyself of these, that thou mayest give thy whole heart to God; not that thou mayest purchase his favor, or hire Him to love thee; but that thou mayest love Him, and make room in thy heart for the constant sense and enjoyment of his love.

"God so loved the world," while it lay in darkness and rebellion, "that he gave his well-beloved Son" to redeem it. We need not, therefore, think to do something to excite Him to love us; but may understand, that all our prayers and penances, services and self-denials, are intended to remove the obstacles in ourselves which hinder us from loving Him with all our heart, and our neighbor as ourselves. No forms, ceremonies, or self-denials, are of any service any further than they serve to promote this end; for "this is more than all burnt offerings," is the end of the whole Law, and is the Gospel.

Grant, O heavenly Father, that I may fear nothing but sin; hate nothing but self; love nothing but Thee and thine; speak well of all; do good to all, and ill to none.

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? Yet, not one of them falleth to the ground without your Father. Of how much more value are you than many sparrows?" So taught Jesus; and O that I had like precious faith! O that I fully believed and confided in his word! I then should have habitual and unshaken confidence that all things are under the inspection and control of an infinitely-wise and merciful heavenly Father, and should enter fully and cheerfully into his designs, and be reconciled to all events; doubting not that "all things shall work together for good to those who love Him."

I know that the kingdom of heaven must be within me, and there must be the place of thy throne, O God; and in my spirit must thy worship be celebrated, if ever I become redeemed from the outer darkness of the external world, of empty forms and fleeting shadows.

I cannot enter into the inner court—the kingdom of heaven—but "through great tribulation;" and, if the hour is come, O righteous Father, give me patience, faith, and fortitude, to endure whatever is necessary for my purification. It requires but little exertion, and, consequently, can be but a small exhibition of virtue, to love those who agree with us in sense and sentiment; but to cherish real love and affection for those who in their turn are naturally different and very disagreeable to us, requires a mighty effort—a great change in our nature, which affords proof of the attainment of a sublime degree in Divine virtue.

To what intent are profound thoughts, depth of mysteries and extent of knowledge, if we are destitute of that simple wisdom which should direct our spirits aright in the little and common occurrences of every day? O for that watchful, careful, prayerful spirit, which has reference to the will of God in all things, and at all times.

MOST of our periodicals have matter enough on hand to supply them for the next two years, if all the contributors should strike work in the meanwhile. A gentleman, who contributed last year to one of our youngest magazines an article of three pages, which was promptly accepted, had it inserted as a special favor at the end of seven months; if it had waited for its regular turn, it would have appeared at about the end of the year. We have known of an instance where an article has waited over fifteen months for its turn. The necessary delay suggests the question—how long a magazine article can keep? In the case of some other "articles"—fish and vegetables, for instance—the time may be calculated to an hour. Seriously speaking, it is possible that valuable information may sometimes be lost to the public, from the impossibility of finding immediate room for it, even in that immense general receptacle, the daily press. A natural inference would seem to be, the necessity for the utmost condensation on the part of all writers.

H. H., Mt. Lebanon.

GREAT BRITAIN is very angry with Little Ashantee, and Queen Victoria is about to wage war with King Cuffy.

A leading English journal says:

"Our troops would have no difficulty in destroying the Ashantee capital. The houses are built of combustible materials. We find no satisfaction in the contemplation of hostilities carried to such lengths as the burning of towns and villages. But a war has been forced upon us," etc.

And, further on, the same journal announces the departure for the scene of operations of the transport "Adela," loaded with military stores, and continues:

"In the garrison churches at Woolwich, about the time the Adela sailed, the hymn usually sung when the troops are at sea was given, the chorus—

O hear us when we pray to Thee

For those in peril on the sea—

being sung with deep feeling."

Man ever makes God in his own image. Fighting, warring "Christians" naturally invoke a blood-thirsty, war-loving Deity. This is the same God that our Modoc-murdering "Christians" want to get into the U. S. Constitution! Keep him out!!

THE "cry of the children" of the female gender in China must be vociferous indeed if, as says the Chinese Provincial Treasurer of Hupei, their parents drown them at the rate of 80 per cent. This personage has issued an edict to his people forbidding this method of thinning out the female population, and plies them with various arguments and threats to induce them to desist from the inhuman practice. Among other convincing appeals he remarks that the children can be sent to a foundling hospital; that they will find husbands if allowed to live. He also threatens them with the vengeance of heaven, and finally with punishment for willful murder.—Argus.

FELONS AND RUSTY NAILS.

—o—

FOR the past ten years, we have treated cases of Felons with hot water, and with unerring success. No cutting, no blistering, no any thing, but immersing the finger, hand, or even the whole arm if necessary, in water as hot as can be borne, until the pain is gone and the core is loosened and drawn from the bone.

When rusty nails have produced wounds, the same course has been pursued. If on the hand or foot, keep it in hot water. If elsewhere, apply hot cloths with dregs of No. 6 on them.

WORDS FITLY SPOKEN.

How shall words be so fitly spoken, that they will be as "apples of gold?" To whom should we look for words so virtuous and true, and so appropriately spoken, that they will convey spirit and life to the hearers? If the answer be, Look to the spiritual teachers and learned divines of our day, then we again ask, "If all the words spoken for the space of one year, by professed ministers of the Gospel of Christ throughout the civilized world, should be gathered and printed in one great volume, how much of the quickening Spirit of Truth, that would lead souls to repent of sin and wrong doing, and to a practical life of holiness, would it contain?" Who is able to compute the number of churches in Christendom — their cost — and the annual stipends of the hired priests who occupy the pulpits of those costly edifices, and to define how much of that great expenditure is either directly or indirectly wrung from the hard earnings of the poorer classes of honest laborers, who, perhaps, would not be allowed a seat in some of those fashionable temples?

Texts from the Old, and what are called New, Scriptures, are selected by the professed lights of the world, to prove the diversified tenets of the numerous sects in Christendom, which is now full of names, and all profess to believe in Jesus; though but few have the audacity to claim that they really follow him; for, in this enlightened age, they know that war, generation, and individualism in form of private property, belong to the old Adamic order, and not to the New Dispensation which Jesus Christ came to inaugurate, the principles of which he illustrated and exhibited in his self-denying life.

Whatever the differences of opinion may be which divide the (so-called) Christian sects into many classes, in practical life they are so much a unit, that one plea answers for nearly all of them; that is, We are mortal — finite; he was God — Infinite.

It is said that "the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Many, at the present time, consider that the Scriptures written anterior to the four Evangelists — Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John — are a dead letter now; that they were only applicable to the followers of Moses, and that we have outgrown them.

Again, we would ask, Have not the Scriptures which were written by the Evangelists and Apostles of Jesus Christ, been so weakened by translations, and so corrupted through the vain and false interpretations of the clergy (who, with smooth and pleasing words, seek to allure and charm, having a far greater desire to fleece than to feed the flock over which they preside), that the people of this generation need to be revisited by a spirit, or spirits, from the Christ heavens; and, by the same inspirational power, receive a new and clean revelation — a newer testament — containing the will of God that will meet the conditions of the present age?

The Shakers find oil and wine in all Scriptures written by true inspiration, in every age, and in different nations; and also find that they are profitable to the man and woman of God, who are willing to be reproofed, corrected, and instructed by them, regardless of individual sacrifices which they may require. And yet there is no people who pray more fervently for new openings of Divine truth, and for the living Word, that is "Spirit and life" — which no book can contain, however sacred it may be — than do the Shakers. Their earnest cry is, "Lord, give us this day the living bread which cometh from the resurrection heavens! Baptize and rebaptize us with power from on high! Fill us with a Divine afflatus that will energize the whole being anew."

When under such inspirational power, words will be spoken so good and true, that, in value, they may well be compared to "apples" or nuggets, "of gold, in basins of silver." How can any one ever attain to that condition while seeking pleasure through the medium of the outward senses, and in the gratification of animal desires? If the heart is void of true purity and practical goodness, it cannot minister to others what itself does not possess. Men (and women too) may speak as with the tongues of angels; but, if their words are unattested by the seal of Christianity, which is to "depart from all iniquity," they will be but empty sounds; while words proceeding from a pure heart, though simple in style, will be fraught with power, beauty, and grace. A noble life is made up of noble deeds; it does not consist of many words, or length of years. The external is a reflex of the internal, and like produces like in kind.

Many are anxiously inquiring, Whither are the nations of the earth drifting at the present time? for the social, moral and spiritual conditions of the people are fearful! We answer, Nothing short of a power that is stronger, purer, and more just than men, can stay the tide of iniquity that threatens to deluge the land and carry the nations back to barbarism, or annihilation.

"QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT."

—O—

AMONG the many injunctions given in Holy Writ, perhaps none are more essential to the growth and spiritual progress of the human soul than the one above quoted.

The present tendency of the age (owing to perverted conditions) is downward to the earth, seeking to satisfy desires through the medium of the senses. Thus, from childhood to riper years, unless influenced and guided by a spirit power that is superior to the natural, the mind leaps from one thing to another, in search of pleasure, and rushes down the current of passionial emotion, which leads to sensuality and from God. But there is a germ of spirituality in every human being which can be reached and quickened by divine power; and, if the Spirit of Truth, which speaks to the conscience of every intelligent soul, is not quenched, then, by degrees, the thoughts, desires, and affections, will turn to a higher and spiritual life.

It is true, that the path which leads to the summit of the hill of redemption is "straight and narrow," yet it is beautiful and pleasant, and those who are weary of a worldly life, and sick of its sins, and have commenced to travel in this narrow way, find peace and rest therein. Such find fountains of living waters from which they can drink, and in which they can bathe and cleanse their souls from all sin. And the good Spirit, which we are exhorted not to quench, is ever teaching purity of life, the putting away of foolish imaginations, vain thoughts, idle words, and wicked deeds; all of which tend to grieve the Holy Spirit.

There are many ways by which the Spirit is quenched. If we cast our eyes abroad into society as it now exists, we see that, through trade and traffic, and giving the mind to avarice, the Spirit is quenched. "The flesh always lusteth against the Spirit," and would not only quench it, but would kill it. The Spirit of Truth is quickening in its operations, and if we delay when it calls, and wait our own pleasure, giving to the inferior time to gain strength, that also grieves the good Spirit!

If Jesus addressed the people of his day as "a wicked and adulterous generation," can we not justly apply the same language to the present generation, and ask: Why will ye fill this beautiful earth with violence, bloodshed, and murder, thereby grieving the Holy Spirit, and stifling the sweet voice of conscience? Conscience, if listened to, would stop the ears from even hearing of bloody wars, and would close the eyes to the follies and vanities of this world; it would check the tongue that would speak evil; stay the hand that would do wrong; and would guide the feet into the highway of purity.

God designed that his creature man should be happy, and He has given to him physical, moral, and spiritual laws, to guide and control him in all the acts of life. When those laws are observed, happiness is the result; and, were they all strictly obeyed, heaven would be brought down to earth, and the waste places would be filled and become fruitful fields; for all would have a right to the soil. Instead of a few green spots here and there, testifying that a new earth and heavens are forming, the whole earth would give evidence that a redeeming power was at work. Instead of sorrow and mourning, joy and gladness would break forth as the noon-day sun, and the sweet song of praise and prayer would reverberate through the heavens; mercy and truth would meet together, righteousness and peace would kiss each other, and the jubilee, or sabbath of sabbaths, would be multiplied.

Already the Spirit is brooding upon the waters, light emanates from the resurrection heavens, whence the Angel of conviction will go forth, and, with the torch of truth in hand, will touch the heart that hungers and thirsts after righteousness, awaken the conscience, and kindle therein a fire that can never be quenched.

Anna White, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

ELEVATION BY REFORMATION.

—O—

THAT a general reformation or transformation is needed, to better the condition of the human race, few will deny; but to define when and how it shall be accomplished, seems to be a difficult task. There are many wise men and women who can discern the face of the sky, and tell from outward signs what the weather indications are, with far greater precision than in the days of Jesus. Progress in natural science has effected much in this direction; but, where shall we find minds so spiritually progressed that they can foretell, with equal clearness, the great changes that await humanity, in a moral and spiritual point of view; when the love of right and justice, and not policy and pleasure, will bear rule?

The cruel tyrant, Fashion, has assumed large proportions, and false delicacy sways the scepter over multitudes at the present time; and, while physical laws are disregarded — the law of chastity violated — the comfort and ease of individuals are sacrificed to the monster Fashion, who holds them in her grasp; and many, who should retain and show forth the image of the Creator, are dwarfed and compressed into wasp-like forms.

While those things absorb the attention, and continue to claim the affections of females, there will be but little hope of radical reform. But, when Woman shall have religious conviction, and moral courage enough to throw off the yoke of bondage, which now holds her in slavish fear of the opinions of others, and will come forth and occupy her proper sphere, then she will be an instrument in the hands of angels, to work for the emancipation of man from every form of slavery — from the power of tobacco and alcoholic drinks; and to turn his feet from brothels, and help him to regard natural law. Then may we hope that infanticide will flee the land; and that children will be born and reared under healthful, moral influences. Then many hearts that have grown old with sorrow, because of the degeneracy of the people, will be rejuvenated, and a new era will commence in the Christian world. Then we may look for the waste places in Zion to be filled with honest souls, who will gladly leave the world for the treasures of the Gospel.

Those who honor God, He will honor! And our prayer is, Speed the day, O King and Queen of Righteousness, when the nations of the earth shall know and do thy will! May living truth extend from pole to pole; and may many souls bow to its scepter of peace and love, and learn to live to God, and die to sin.

Rosie Morse, Shirley, Mass.

"NEITHER DO I CONDEMN THEE."

Words of charity unequal'd,
Breathed by one who bore the cross,
Who had fathom'd human sorrow,
And could feel for human loss.
How like the balm they must have fallen
On the poor transgressor's heart,
Courage to her soul imparting,
Ne'er from virtue's way to part.
O that all the fallen mortals,
Dwelling on this earthly shore,
By these words might be encouraged,
And go forth and sin no more.
But, alas! the cold world hearkens
Not to their deep cries of woe;
They have fallen, and are trodden
Down to earth by high and low.
Hear ye not their bitter wailing,
You who boast of Virtue's gift?
Pride or hatred will not raise them,
Only love their souls can lift.
Shall we mortals, prone to evil,
Slight, despise, or censure them?
Shall we crush, adjudge, or injure
Those whom Christ did not condemn?
Place ourselves in their condition,
Just imagine for awhile,
Were we earth's poor outcast children,
With no friend on us to smile,
Would it prompt us to seek virtue,
If all hearts had callous grown,
And exulted in the contrast
Of their station with our own?
Nay, one kindly proffer'd feeling,
E'en a word or look of cheer,
Oft will turn a soul from evil
That would sink were we severe.
Think of men engross'd in business,
False unto the very core,
Holding up their heads in honor,
Welcome guests at every door.
While their feeble, helpless victims
Are rejected and cast down,
They are courted, they—the spoilers—
Never meet the sneer or frown.
God is just: his mercy floweth
Not to person, name, or sect;
In his eyes all sin is hateful,
But the truth He doth respect.
Those who (sin-sick and forsaken)
By their fellow mortals here)
Seek the Lord, He will protect them;
For to Him all souls are dear.
Then arise, O sinning sister,
Knock at Virtue's pleasant door,
Christ, your Savior, will receive you,
Enter in, and "sin no more."

PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.

THIS important subject has often engaged my attention, and made a deep and lasting impression upon my mind; for God is the Giver of all good, and we are his servants, who, in various ways have received abilities that will fit us for the duties of life which we are to perform; and it should be our highest aim to make a wise and prudent use of all those faculties with which we are endowed; and we should likewise consider that these faculties, or talents, are given us on trust, and that we are accountable to the Giver for the improvement we make of them. The following parable or metaphor is designed to meet our condition, and teach us to improve, increase, and faithfully acquit ourselves of this probationary charge.

The Savior said: "The kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his servants and delivered unto them his goods. To one was given five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every one according to his several abilities. And he that received five went and traded with them, and gained other five. He that received two gained other two. But he that received one went and digged in the earth and hid his lord's money. After a time, the lord came and reckoned with the servants. So he that received five talents, brought other five talents, and received the reward, etc. He also that received two, gained other two, and was likewise called a good and faithful servant. He that received the one talent came before his lord with accusations, saying, I knew that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown; and he hid the talent in the earth, and said, Lo, there thou hast that is thine."

Now, what is this one talent which some unwisely have hidden in the earth? All mankind were created with a physical body, of earth, and a spiritual body or soul, which is also subject to death by sin; and into this body was breathed soul-life, or spirit. This one talent may be hidden, or lost in the earthly nature, and the soul left destitute, by neglecting to use this living spirit, and thus double its capacity; for it should increase, and progress in spiritual light and knowledge, and have a continual inspiration of the Spirit of God. The very life our souls should have is the spirit life and element for its director; or it is but earthly, and buried in the constant cares for the body.

O how inconsistent it is to murmur, and return to the Giver nothing but the one talent, saying, Here I am, even as I was created; take the soul, it is thine. In this way, the power to co-operate with the spirit life is destroyed, and the faculty to cultivate and improve the situation is thrown away.

We have received abilities equal to the service expected; but, if we are idle, and do not increase the spiritual life of the soul, the Giver will recall the desire, or even the power to double its value, as the Savior said, "Take, therefore, the talent from him, and give it to the one that hath ten." He was industrious, and energized his soul; for every one that works, shall have abundance in spiritual things, as well as earthly substance. But the unprofitable servant was cast into outer darkness, where there was "weeping and gnashing of teeth." But it was said to them that doubled the gift, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, and I will make thee ruler over many; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Rhoda Blake, Mt. Lebanon.

DRESS REFORM.

In the September number of the "Shaker and Shakeress," an article appeared under the head of "Plain Dressing for Meeting," by our good sister, H. L. Hastings, of Canterbury, N. H. I wish to express my hearty approval of the sentiments therein contained. Certainly every lover of virtue has a duty to perform in testifying, by word and example, against the perverted condition of society at the present time; and the prevailing desire for extravagant, fashionable dressing is an unmistakable proof that the hearts of the people are corrupt; for "out of the abundance" of their hearts, men and women "speak" and act.

It is said that women should be ornaments in society. We would ask, Is there a sensible man, or woman, who really thinks that the huge pile of stuff, called hair, worn upon the heads of women, is either healthy or ornamental? And the high crown hats, loaded with artificial and superficial trimmings, do they make woman beautiful and cause her to ornament society? The hitch-ups on their dresses, with the protruding bumps, and over-lengthy skirts, dragging around in the dirt, are they ornaments, or a manifestation of good common sense?

If some men consume two or three dollars worth of cigars in a day, and chew the vile weed until their systems are saturated with the poisonous juice, and then fill their stomachs with alcoholic drinks; women ought not to complain, so long as they indulge in such extravagance in jewelry and other useless appendages. They who give their attention so much to the exterior are sure to neglect the mind which needs to receive proper and healthful food; they do not remember that the "beautiful lives in the depths of the soul."

If woman better understood her true position, she would scorn the idea of being a mere ornament in society, to be flattered and admired. She would feel that she has powers and faculties that were given to her for use, and that it is her right and duty to exercise those powers for the elevation of the race. But Fashion sways her scepter over all classes, from the queen's palace to the humble peasant's cottage, and the people wander after that great goddess, and pay homage at her shrine.

There are many persons who see the evil that results from following the fashions of the day, and they feel the bondage thereof, but have not the courage to assert their freedom; they fear the prudery of the scornful, who would place a mark upon them. But may we not hope that, ere long, some women from influential circles will have the true moral fortitude to come forth, and, upon an independent platform, inaugurate a new dress reform, and attire their own persons in a plain, modest, healthful, and convenient style, and set an example worthy of imitation? If such a reform were started by some who are wealthy and popular, it would effect a greater change in, and give more relief to, society than all that can be said or written upon the subject. For they who practically adopt whatever is true and just in a physical or spiritual point of view, will accomplish the greatest amount of good to themselves and others; and are worthy to be called Reformers.

Betsy Johnson, Tyngham, Mass.

RULING SPIRIT OF THE AGE.

THE ardent, youthful mind, full of thought and life, is more apt to glance hastily, and take particular views of the future, than to reason dispassionately. The imaginary idea of freedom controls, and any power which holds, restrains, and admonishes, is galling to it. Insubordination to parents and guardians is the ruling spirit among youth and children of the present day. They complain that the sphere allotted them to move in is too limited and narrow; and they feel anxious to throw off all restraint, and even to forsake the watchful care of guardian friends, which would form for them a covert from the rude storms of life.

Thus, they soon become independent, and are unwilling to receive instruction from those who are self-governed, and are older and wiser than themselves. And this element seems to pervade all ages, classes, and conditions in society, from the small child's-play circles, to civil conventions, and the council halls of the nation.

In passing through the streets of our large cities, and even country villages, how often we see the little trotter just able to articulate the alphabet instinctively manifest a restless, dissatisfied feeling—a reaching after something it does not possess. I want THIS—I want THAT; and if the want is indulged, it soon grows into—I will have it—I cannot, WILL NOT do without it! This persistent spirit grows so strong, that it is their constant life attendant; and to have the propensity desire indulged, is the one great object of their lives; and how to remove every obstacle that would obstruct the course of their wild, unsubdued passions, becomes their chief study. This is often carried to such an extent, that, if parents stand in the way, they wish that themselves, or their parents, were dead, or could be annihilated, and be out of the way, so that they could do as they please. And many from this cause commit parricide outright; while others, by their reckless, unsubdued course of action, bring their parents to a premature grave.

The germs of this spirit are in every human heart. In the poorer and more ignorant classes, it manifests itself in grosser forms; the more refined and educated, and the more respectable the parentage, the more subtle it works, and the more it is glossed over. Many parents neglect the early training of their children; and, when the golden moment is passed, and it is too late to restrain them, and throw a protective influence around them, then they feel sorrow, and their hearts are pained when they feel their ingratitude and want of appreciation. And parents, failing in every attempt to induce them to accept of proffered instruction from them, turn to Believers for help, and ask their fostering care—their moral and spiritual influence—in behalf of their children.

When Believers are moved, through feelings of charity, and a sense of the worth of immortal souls, to take children under their especial charge, and become their guardians, they suffer for them as the natural parent is not capable of doing; they grieve selfishly because he, or she, is their own offspring; their love is partial. But love that is grounded in truth, in God, is unselfish and universal in its nature, and flows to humanity at large. This is the love that Shakers claim to possess. And, inasmuch as they have this love to rule their course of action, they become spiritual parents to souls, and suffer for them in spirit, as Christ suffered for his flock. In faith and hope they toil and spend their lives for others; and their constant prayer is, that a soul-saving baptism may fall mercifully upon the hearts of the young to subdue and bring all their thoughts and feelings into subjection to the law of Christ—the power of love. As spiritual guardians, they keep a diligent watch, and strive to be as Angel guides to them on the journey of life, and to save them from the destructive elements of their perverted natures; thus, in self-abnegation and soul-suffering, they give their lives for others.

Some parents realize this in a degree, when they seek to place their children with Believers, and feel confident that they will receive a higher and more spiritual discipline than themselves are able to give, and that thereby their children will be saved from impending ruin. But, at the present time, the self-willed, insubordinate spirit is so rife that it cannot be quelled by merely living with God's people. There must be a spiritual baptism of Divine power that will enable them to practise self-denial, and to accept counsel and admonition from those who are capable of giving it.

Many hearts have been wounded by the ruthless inattention of some of the junior class, for they have returned "cursing for blessing." While consecrated souls have watched and toiled, and fasted and prayed for them, they, in return, have rendered ingratitude.

But the labor spent on such unprepared material will not be lost; it will have its effect; no good deed will ever be lost; but will be gathered by higher intelligences into the great store-house of truth, as gifts for those who are prepared to receive them with grateful hearts. Yet the aged, as well as the middle-aged, have often felt sad to see their best efforts slighted. They have toiled with unselfish devotion to prepare a home for the rising generation, and for all who may be called into the spiritual work of God, to consecrate their all to honor Him, and serve their brethren and sisters of the household of faith, in love, and to do good unto all mankind as opportunity serveth.

We rejoice to say that there are some who can and do appreciate the blessing of the protection and care which they find in their Zion home; and they honor, love and bless the aged who have spent their lives in doing good; and they delight to show kindness and bestow affection upon them, by attention to all their wants, and will never be guilty of wishing them away.

My heart is glad when I can alleviate the feelings of those who are older than myself. The aged in Zion are my blessing. They have beautified my home, and have caused me to become established in the truth, and to feel the importance of true life-deeds. And I know that their greatest joy and comfort is to see the youth in Zion love and appreciate their Gospel home, and the laws which are necessary to guard all within its precincts; so that their "hopes may not melt as the winter's gray frost, or run away as unprofitable water."

Charlotte Byrdall, Mt. Lebanon.

A HUNGRY QUEEN.—At a late public reception of the Shah of Persia, while waiting in her carriage for some evolution, the Queen became hungry and ordered lunch, which she received by spreading her handkerchief in her lap and eating to her own satisfaction, but to the great discomfort of the dowdy aristocracy.

THE influence of the censorious critic is more favorable to character than that of the flattering panegyrist.

DEATH.

WHAT is it, but the gateway to Life? And we know not how many similar changes the Spirit must pass in the journey of Eternal progression.

And though the sense of sight may, for the time, be closed to the presence of our friends, yet, have we not others which may be employed in its absence? Hearing and consciousness are as active in darkness as in light, and frequently form the only means of communication, as in cases of total blindness, and utter darkness.

What is it, then, but the effort of the spirit striving to make its presence known through accessible means.

By such means I claim to have received the following lines from the Spirit of Elder Jonas Nutting, who deceased at Shirley, August 26, 1873, being thrown from a carriage and almost instantly killed:

SWEET REST.

ADIEU to Earth! By Angel wings

Uphorne, I seek my rest:
For me its pangs have lost their stings;
Its pleasures all their jest.
The brittle thread which held me here,
So rudely snapt in twain,
Was not the cord I prized most dear,
Or wished to long retain.

My spirit feels not one regret,
That thus I'm called away;
Or that my sun on earth has set,
To rise in realms of day.
No sever'd ties of Gospel friends
The heart need ever know,
Love's cable to that world extends,
Where joyfully I go.

Though you, my friends, who tarry still,
May miss an absent face,
And look in vain for one to fill,
On earth, a vacant place;
I know that God will guard his own,
And, with his strong right arm,
Until his will can be made known,
Shield you from every harm.

Place not your trust in mortal power,
Nor yield to grim despair;
Should this but prove your darkest hour,
Your sky will soon be fair.
Let Hope not droop her wings too low,
Nor Faith resign control;
These clouds will silver linings show,
And vanish like a scroll.

With you I've prayed that Truth extend,
And flood the earth with light;
I still shall labor to that end,
Unceasingly with might;
Still of your burdens bear a part:
My soul cannot divest
Of that which lies so near my heart;
Inaction is not rest.

The path of Progress now I see
Is all illumed ahead;
For every one the path is free:
Here still, my feet shall tread.
The seeds we sow in earthly life,
With fruitage here are blest,
And those who never yield the strife,
Are those who find Sweet Rest.

POPULAR ERRORS.—To think that the more a man eats the fatter and stronger he will become. To believe that the more hours children study the faster they will learn. To conclude that if exercise is good, the more violent it is the more good is done. To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained. To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough for a bed-room. To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel better is good for the system, without regard to more ulterior. To eat without an appetite, or to continue to eat after it has been gratified. To eat a hearty supper for the mere pleasure experienced during the brief period it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed rest, and a weary waking in the morning.

THE more light admitted to apartments, the better for those who occupy them. Light is as necessary to sound health as it is to vegetable life. Exclude it from plants, and the consequences are disastrous. They cannot be perfected without its vivifying influence. Let in the light often, and fresh air, too, or suffer the penalty of aches and pains, and long doctors' bills, which might have been avoided by more light.

THE "Witnesses," who existed during the 1260 years, as individuals, have become a "cloud," having ascended into an organization—heaven upon earth.

PROMISE.

SACRIFICE.

O ZION, thou beautiful city of God!
 What off'ring will win in thy courts an abode?
 A heart that is chaste'n'd and sick of its sin,—
 Will that at thine altar the precious boon win?
 Ah, yea! if thy vineyards and orchards so fair,
 And gold-waving harvests, the needy may share;
 If they will but sacrifice all that is vain,
 To them shall the hundred-fold blessing remain.

Thy order and beauty the angels have wrought;
 To thee shall earth's treasures in fullness be brought;
 Of gifts and of sacrifice, choicest shall be
 From souls consecrated to true purity.
 Then, come to the waters, so cleansing and clear;
 The angels are troubling them, come without fear;
 For God's power is able the heart to sustain
 That lays down its life, Life Eternal to gain.

Maria Witham, Enfield, Conn.

SHAKER HOME.

SWEET my home, with its attractions
 From the sphere of spirit life,
 Where the pow'r of love is ruling,
 And where never enters strife.

Quiet, safe, and ever pleasant,
 Lighted by contentment deep;
 Sacred influence, ever present
 In true hearts that prayerful keep.

Guardian friends, like angels holy,
 Sainted friends, who've left the form,
 Bless the dwellings of the lowly,
 And protect from every storm.

Here is Freedom's banner gleaming,
 Joy and love its folds display;
 And the star of Truth is beaming
 On my Shaker home to-day.

Phebe A. Jones, Mt. Lebanon.

LET men laugh when you sacrifice desire to duty if they will. You have time and eternity to rejoice in.—Theodore Parker.

FAITH'S REWARD.

OUR earth life is fleeting, and passes away,
 As mists of the morning in brightness of day,
 The few pleasure moments allotted us here,
 Come sparkling like bubbles, and then disappear.

The friends whom we love, that we fold to our hearts,
 Pass from us as glory of evening departs;
 And though by their presence our spirits are blest,
 We cannot retain them from angelic rest.

We pluck the sweet flower, and behold its fair form
 Soon withers and droops, as if torn by the storm;
 And, while we are seeking our sorrow to hide,
 We ask, in our hearts, is there naught can abide?

A brightness comes o'er me, a soft whisper near,
 It says, Child of earth, O dispel doubt and fear.
 The spirit, released from its casket of clay,
 Aloft soars in freedom to bright realms of day.

The loved ones you cherish, the friendship so
 dear,
 Shall yet be your treasure in yon happy sphere.
 No sin, nor affliction, can find entrance there,
 For deep love and wisdom pervade everywhere.

The delicate flower, so fragrant and sweet,
 Will bloom with new life, and with beauty replete;
 No mildew nor blight in the bud can destroy
 The fruit or fair blossoms of that land of joy.

Then toil on with ardor, with hope ever rife,
 Before us are riches of immortal life;
 Our Heavenly Father and Mother will crown
 All those who in faith have their own lives laid down.

Rhoda Hollister, Mt. Lebanon.

THEY who talk much should beware of those who listen attentively.

THOUGHTS OF LIFE.

O, if every one were happy,
 Joyful—happy—I would be;
 But the suff'ring of another
 Ever take my joy from me.

What a world of bitter anguish!
 What distressing scenes of woe,
 Mortals born in pain to languish,
 And but slight releasement know.

Just the best, and the most holy,
 Are afflicted and oppress'd;
 Just the kindest, and most lowly,
 (Seemingly) are most distressed.

As I find of pain each token
 Sadder'd, I behold the cause;
 For, in depths of ill unspoken,
 Much is ours through broken laws.

Violation of the Spirit,
 And of Nature's perfect way,
 With the weakness we inherit,
 How proceed the debt to pay?

Toils that seem to yield but little (While we walk in present light)
 Shall fulfill each jot and tittle,
 And establish truth and right.

Mountains are composed of atoms,
 And by atoms worn away:
 So, by little acts, we render Righteousness for future day.

Let us labor for salvation;
 On the present it will tell;
 Add to every generation
 Something more, till all is well.

Till the work of God's completed,
 And a new relation given,
 Where the laws of life are meted
 With the blessed peace of heaven.

Keep thy calling, O Mount Zion;
 Keep thine inner life secure;
 Draw the power thou canst rely on,
 To protect from the Impure.

Mary Whiteher, Canterbury, N. H.

My Father, I see where the error lies:
 It is in offering only half to Thee;
 When all is brought to win the highest prize,
 Thou wilt return a fulness unto me.

NEW HEAVEN AND NEW EARTH.

A NEW creation. But, as from nothing comes nothing, both the new earth and the new heaven must be evolved from previously-existent elements. As Believers in the second manifestation of Christ, we have heretofore assumed, in our writings, that our spiritual order was the new heaven; and that our community of goods was the new earth. This was true, but not the whole truth. The light shines brighter, and we see further.

John says: "I saw a new heaven, and a new earth; for the first heaven, and the first earth, were passed away; and there was no more sea"—spiritual heathenism. In his vision, John had previously been giving us the history of the first earth and heaven, which began to be created at the introduction of the Christ Spirit into the Roman empire.

The seven churches of Asia were semi-heathen, semi-Christian organizations. They are the bases of our present Gentile Christianity, or "Babylon the Great"—"the Mother" of so many "harlot" systems of theology, and of civil governments. This heathen Roman empire was the raw material out of which our modern Christianity—its Gospel and Law—has been formed. The empire included nearly every known nation that, at that time, was called civilized.

Christendom, with its hundreds of orders and sects, in its creeds, its prayers, and its sermons, unites the natural generative and the spiritual resurrection elements, and mixes them together in its sacraments, ordinances, and church ceremonies.

Is not this flesh and spirit theology—this admixture of discordant, antagonistic elements—the cause of the vehement denunciation of the Revelator, and of his utter abhorrence of the whole Babylonish system, to which he so remorselessly applies the most opprobrious epithets known to human language?

It is said that Babylon means mixture—confusion; and the culminating manifestation of this mixing and adulterous spirit is in the union of Church and State Governments, under which the priesthood usurp authority in the first heaven, and first earth, too, and compound them together.

The Pope of Rome, and the Queen of England, are equally the Head of the Church and State. Marriage is a sacrament of the Church; and war, like the infernal Inquisition, is holy. The same Church official can "solemnize holy matrimony," lead an army, or appoint and pay for the leader, collect tithes and Peter Pence, dress in scarlet and gorgeous attire, fare sumptuously every day; while every fifth person is a pauper of higher or lower degree; and the social evil extends from the sacristy to the brothel. Monasteries and Nunneries, barracks and monitors, State prisons and theaters, tenement houses and asylums, hotels and boarding places, are all Church and State institutions, and come of the attempt of Christendom to combine, under one Head, "the first earth and the first heaven."

Can there be a doubt that these are the "first heaven and the first earth" which John saw "pass away" in the fall of Babylon? or that they were formed under the first advent and influence of the Christ Spirit?

They stand exclusively in the masculine gender. Witness Jesus and his twelve Apostles—all men; the three he Gods of the Trinity, worshipped by the Catholic, Greek, and Protestant world; and the masculine priesthood, from the Pope, and Luther and Calvin, down to H. W. Beecher.

The cardinal dogmas of the "Evangelical Alliance" are, without question, what the Spirit designated "doctrines of devils"—of Evil.

John saw the "first beast"—Catholicism—come up out of the sea—spiritualistic heathenism; and a "second beast, with two horns"—Luther and Calvin—come up out of the earth—Rationalism. These are "the beast," and "the image of the beast"—Church and State male Governments—moons turned to blood. All the ages down, they have been either fighting and warring, or preparing to fight and war, with each other.

Having seen the first heaven and the first earth pass away, John begins to describe the second heaven and earth that should take their places. He saw the new earth in its glory, and, as Swedenborg and some others have done, mistook it for the new heaven.

"I saw the holy city, New Jerusalem,"—the city of the Jews in the spirit world—"coming down from God out of heaven. * * * The tabernacle of God was with men, and He will dwell with them; and they shall be His people," who shall live up to the holy and good Law of Moses, in generation nutrition, and in their property relations; as they did during their forty years visionary state in the wilderness. The land will be Government property; and the Government will be male and female; and marriage will be for use only. The evil things, so much lusted after, will be unknown; and manna—vegetables, farina, and fruit, will be for muscular strength in man, as with the ox and elephant, the horse and camel, the buffalo and dromedary. "Perish commerce," and flourish agriculture.

Let cities be for the giants in wickedness; and co-operative associations universal throughout the land. Let the land be fed with its own produce, and have its sabbaths of rest, to digest its food; that no seed of weed, or germ of animalcule, may live to choke or destroy the crop. And far from human beings would be the plagues and mountain of curses that Moses set before the people who should be disobedient to his organic physiological laws. For, in the new earth, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more curse," or disease; nor death by sickness, consumption, burning fever, or by any other plagues now so well known to the Gentile Christians in Babylon. "For there shall be neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more (physical) pain; for the former things are passed away. . . . It is done." "He that overcometh" his appetites, and subdues his passions, "shall inherit only good things."

Behold, then, the "new earth," in which man and woman shall have equal voice in framing and executing the laws; and which shall possess a simple dual Civil Government; and under its administration, all present forms of evil, and causes of human misery, shall find no place to counteract its Millennial principles.

In chapter xxi of the Revelation, we have, from verse 9, a visionary description of the "new heaven," as co-existent with the new earth; "of which we cannot now speak particularly"—not until another issue of the "Shaker and Shakeress," in the new year, 1874.

THE WORD OF GOD AND THE BIBLE.

EACH one of the thousand antagonistic sects of religionists, called by the homogeneous name of Christians, has a theology built up out of the teachings and interpretations of their Bibles. This fact is continually raising the important inquiry, Is, or Is not, any one of these sectarian Bibles the Word of God? "A tree is known by its fruit." Theological sectarianism is Bible fruit. Inspiration, redeeming love—salvation—is the fruit of the Word of God! The former engenders in men, and in nations, cruel wars, inhuman persecutions, the infliction of the most awful tortures that human ingenuity can invent, upon the infidels and heretics of their own creation; and inveterate, mutual hatred toward the Gods and Bibles that each of them thus worship. Whilst, under the influence of the latter, Pentecostal Communities are formed, wherein men and women love their neighbor as they love themselves.

One said: "Men, in consequence of their belief in the inspiration of the whole Bible, suppose that God requires something more of them than merely being and doing good."

No thoroughly enlightened Christian, whose soul is vitalized by the real Word of God, can study the character of the God of the Jews, as described in these man-made Bibles, wherein he is depicted as possessing all the passions of that humanity he is seeking to elevate and redeem—fickleness, hatred, revenge, wrath, and unparalleled cruelty—without its lessening his veneration for this tutelary divinity—the "Lord of hosts" of implacable warriors.

The hygienic ordinances of the Law, concerning generation, its confessions, and sin-offerings, followed by washings, purifications, and sacrifices, conjoined to the scientifically wise restrictions relative to inflammatory meats and drinks, and the utter prohibition of indigestible, disease-creating fat and grease, are inestimable records. They were designed to remove (and prevent) "all sickness from" the Jewish people, "whose lives, to-day, average five years more than do the Gentile Christian people of Europe, although under the greatest possible disadvantages."—(Dr. John S. Hough.)

Here we have two of the steps in the ladder of redeeming progress, reaching from the lower order of generation up to the Resurrection order—from earth to heaven—as represented in a dream of Jacob.

These laws and statutes remain as a tribunal of judgment, before which the whole human race will yet be arraigned, to give an account of the deeds done in their now terribly-diseased bodies.*

The prophetic books of the true Bible are a priceless boon to humanity. Their claims to a Christ inspiration are substantiated by numerous immensely-momentous fulfillments of prophecies concerning cities, kingdoms, and nations, in the external world; and by still more important actualizations in the religious progress, and spiritual history of our race. They are the recorded links of God's providences, forming a chain composed of the Word of God which is embelting the whole of the New Creation.

The Scriptures are history and biography, interspersed with records of the inspired Word of God, seeking to establish the kingdom of heaven upon earth. That Word is still making Bibles, which are as sacred to the present, and as needful for the future, as was and is the Apocalyptic book of St. John the Divine.

Texts from Scripture furnish the fulcrum for the levers of the sects—the creeds of the theological religionists. By these they overthrow each other. "A house thus terribly divided against itself cannot stand." The evil arises from the error that the Bible is the Word of God; and that every word between its lids is, by efflux from Deity, plenary inspiration. It is a magazine of the warriors' weapons the slave-holders' manacles, the miser's gold, old wives' fables, the sage's wisdom, Jewish prejudices, and God-saving truths, thrown together in a book; to be accepted as the Ark of Oracles, upon which to found religions.

The secular books of the Bible required no more inspiration than does any other history, or biographical story. Many words in the ancient Oriental languages, in which the Scriptures were first written, are variously rendered into other tongues. The Hebrew word nahash, rendered serpent—"Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves,"—might be, and is, rendered seraph, etc. Yet how different the sense to an Englishman or an American! The numerous instances of this kind destroy entirely the idea of a plenary inspiration, to a rational mind. Had the translators been enlightened by the revelation of Christ's Second Appearing, we should have had a very different Bible from any now extant.

Man, in his journey of redemption, swings from one extreme to another. From wrong and ruin, he does not pursue a straight pathway up the inclined plane of righteousness and truth; but moves spirally, as it were, sometimes on the wave of inspirational power, drinking in the gushing rhapsodies of the Word of God; then floating with the tide of passion into caverns of darkness and dissipation.

The present is an age of scientific, theological, and religious revolutions, destroying the false foundations of sectarian creeds, and exposing the imperfections of all the Bibles from which they have been evolved. Under this influence, many souls unwisely throw away the Bibles of other nations and races, in past Dispensations, as useless or unprofitable; not knowing that God's work, for human redemption, in all ages, is harmoniously linked together. The Word of God is a unit. A present revelation will reproduce the past. "Every word that has been spoken by the mouth of all holy Prophets," in all nations, "since the world began," will be restored in the Millennium.

The Christian Bibles, with all their errors, are books of incalculable value to the human race; and the sacred writings, or Bibles, of what are termed heathen nations, are also to be judged by the same standard, ie, the truth they contain, and the good they do. All Scripture records of Divine inspiration help to reveal the power and wisdom of God to mankind; and they should be preserved, studied, and interpreted, by the light of a present living revelation, as that includes the whole focal light of all former revelations.

God's Word and work never wane, or retrograde; but are eternally progressing toward the final redemption of all races. Hence, none of the Bibles, not even the Christians', are yet finished.

SHAKER FUNERAL.

EDITOR HUDSON REGISTER—I have just returned from the Shaker village in this town, where I had been to attend the funeral of the late Elder RICHARD BUSHNELL, an aged and much esteemed member of that community, who has been a member of the society for over sixty years, and most of that time occupied a prominent position in the North Family as one of its Elders. He was over eighty years old at his death; and no man ever died leaving a better record for honesty and an uniform irreproachable life than did Elder RICHARD. His position in the Shaker Society has, during the present generation, brought him into intimate acquaintance with the citizens of this vicinity; and the community at large seemed filled with as much sympathy for the deceased as did the members of the community who have grown up under his eyes, and have looked up to him as to a father and a friend, in whom they could with implicit confidence confide.

The funeral was held in the Church, which was filled to its utmost capacity. The different Shaker families of Lebanon, Canaan, and Hancock, were represented apparently by a majority of the adults, but as the citizens entered, the space occupied by them became more and more compact, and apparently every spare bench and chair came into requisition in order to seat the audience. It was doubtless the largest gathering ever in that capacious room.

The usual exercises on Sunday were entirely dispensed with, and the time was filled up with remarks made by different brethren and sisters, appropriate to the occasion, the reading of articles in both poetry and prose, and with singing. Elder FREDERICK EVANS made a beautiful and timely address in which he took occasion to review the past life of the deceased, slightly touching upon the peculiar doctrine of the sect. Elders DANIEL BOLER, and GILES B. AVERY, also gave each a short but impressive address, which, were it in my power, I would send you, as they were every way worthy of publication. Elder GILES also read a beautiful piece of poetry, which he said was written by one of the sisters. If such talent exists among our Shaker friends, and the sentiments expressed in the poem read, are the true emanations of a Shaker heart, then have that singular people been sadly misunderstood by us of the outside world.

The world has been led to suppose that all the finer feelings of the human heart—all love, affection, and personal regard for fellow humanity, was here crushed—crucified as we might say—and that an ascetic individuality existed, leaving the Shaker a solitary wanderer on earth, avoiding all sympathy with things of earth, only seeking happiness, won by misery here, in a world to come. But this day there was a rare opportunity, seldom witnessed by those outside of the Society, to observe the beautiful system of Brotherhood that seems to permeate the innermost recesses of their heart of hearts. Here we saw the Ministry and Elders, standing at the head of the Society, mingling in perfect union their humble tributes to the memory of their deceased brother, side by side with those who walk upon the ground floor of the Temple, or are the humble workers upon its outside walls. Had you listened to the several speeches made by brethren and sisters, and heard their written thoughts expressed, the only conclusion that could result would be: If these men and women are sincere, if they speak their thoughts in all soberness, if such love cements together the hearts of Shakers, then is their Society a paradise upon earth, and just without the door of Heaven.

An invitation to the audience, not Shakers, drew from J. M. PEEBLES, a well-timed and impressive speech which seemed to be in sympathy with the crowd of people among whom he stood while speaking. Doctor WRIGHT, an old citizen of New Lebanon, added his testimony to the sterling worth of the deceased, whom he had intimately known for half a century.

After the services at the Church were ended, the vast audience had an opportunity to view the remains in an ante-room of the Church. The remains were contained in a plain, substantial coffin, unstained, and without a single ornament; yet, simple as that burial case was, to eyes accustomed to look upon the varnished surface, the emblazoned adornments which fashion turns out to contain the remains of earth's lavish children, I have no doubt our old friend RICHARD (if he has the power in spirit to look back) gave hearty approval. At all events, I am confident that in that humble coffin RICHARD BUSHNELL "sleeps well."

UP AND DOWN.

In deep silence, quietness, and profound meditation—feeling after God—by sympathizing with all things in the natural world, commencing with man, as the head of the animal kingdom; descending through the vegetable to the unorganized mineral kingdom of Nature, is looking downward.

While commencing and sympathizing with unbodied men and women—spirits, angels, cherub and seraph, who intervene between man and Deity, is looking upward.

For unorganization is down; perfected organization is up.

* If the "statutes were not good," which he "gave," evidence that the "God of Israel" was not the Supreme Being, those laws and statutes that were good—embodying eternal truths—do as certainly prove that he had an orderly relation to Him. Ed.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

—o—

THE FIRST CAUSE of life, and of all the qualities or properties of mind and matter, in the entire Universe of Creation, is GOD, whose government of all his intelligences in all worlds, and in all heavens, is by Law, which expresses his will.

All mind and matter are placed under, and made subject to, Law, founded in Goodness and Truth; and is intended to be productive of felicity to all God's sentient creatures, which, therefore, cannot be infringed with impunity.

Man, in all worlds, is a secondary creator; and, therefore, the physical, moral, mental and physiological causes by which we humans are influenced and made to suffer in this world, are mostly, if not altogether, of our own creation; and, consequently, the corresponding effects are indirectly or directly chargeable upon ourselves. And, as the power to create and bring into operation counteracting causes, is in our possession, when one cause, which would produce evil or injurious effects upon us, is in operation, we (as rational beings) can and should set in motion other and counteracting causes, and thus prevent evil effects. By this, we know that the power of deliverance from evil is principally in our own hands; and, if our will be in harmony with the Good and Great First Cause, we can bring forth and effectually use that power, and thereby escape the evil or suffering.

Calling upon (or praying to) God, that He would remove the evil effects of a cherished evil secondary cause, especially when that cause is known to the person, is the merest fallacy, and is useless. It is like requiring of God the Supreme Intelligence (who is perfectly rational, wise, consistent, and absolutely unchangeable, as well in his purposes as in his nature) to destroy his own system or mode of government. God never acts arbitrarily, but always beneficently.

By Law, God says: Do this, and thou shalt live, healthily and happily. Do that, and thou shalt die miserably, or live unhealthily and unhappily.

There must necessarily be suffering, where causes of evil are allowed to be and operate, whether the sufferer be aware of their existence, or utterly ignorant thereof. Therefore, it is the business of every man and woman to study and labor to find out and know the causes that will produce good, and then to wisely adopt them, and thus prevent evil effects in and upon their bodies, and minds, and morals.

There may be, and without doubt there are, gifts resting upon certain individuals, at certain times, by the exercise of which, disease and suffering may be and frequently are removed; the ulterior and beneficent object of which, is to induce the healed to flee the evil cause, and find out, and practically adopt the true cause of health, ease, and happiness. For, obviously, if the causes of the evil, or suffering, be untouched and allowed to continue to operate, the same (or worse) evil effects will undoubtedly and unavoidably follow.

Therefore, be it remembered, that ignorance of the cause of evil, or suffering, will not prevent evil effects. Wrong habits—physiological or moral, will produce corresponding evil effects and suffering. Physical and physiological habits, when known to be wrong, and yet persisted in, become moral wrongs—real sins against both God's Law, our neighbor, and ourselves. Paul says: "Sin is the transgression of the Law" (of Moses he meant). But it would have been better if he had said, The transgression of Law, as established by God in the nature of matter and mind, is sin.

As iron, when under the power of heat (in a molten condition) cannot be used for the purposes of binding or holding together other things, or for the support of buildings, and appears to be without the properties of cohesion and hardness, but which, as soon as the external influence of heat is removed therefrom, will return to its former cohesion, solidity and hardness; so, when inability to act under the power of a secondary cause of evil is present, of course the evil effects are more or less diminished, and, for the time being, the will of the person may appear to be in the direction of good; and it will be called virtue in him, when it is but little better than a "sick bed," or "death-bed repentance." And, in most cases, as soon as the opposing inability is removed, the mind (which is extremely elastic), by the power of the will, returns to its ordinary and customary evil cause, and thereby, with the body, has to endure and suffer the evil effects of the resumed and continued evil cause. And, as every effect is as true to its cause as is a shadow to substance, the longer an evil cause (moral or physical) has been in operation, the longer will it take to eradicate and destroy its evil effects. Therefore, be warned; be wise.

Truth, Knowledge, and Wisdom, are natural attributes of God, and are communicable to all his intelligent creatures, in all worlds and spheres, if they be willing to receive of them. Therefore, let all shun ignorance of right, truth, and good; put off folly, learn to be wise, and choose that which is good and true; and thus escape the ten thousand evils and sufferings—spiritual and physical—which overtake and befall those who will persist in pursuing a contrary or evil course.

Wm. Offord, Mt. Lebanon.

THE JUDICIAL OATH.

—o—

"We demand that the judicial oath, in the courts, and in all other departments of the Government, shall be abolished; and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead."

In connection with the above "Demand for Liberalism," the following extracts from The Pilgrim and the Shrine appear to me sufficiently interesting and appropriate to merit being placed before the readers of the Index:

"But it is our system of judicial swearing that has struck me as exceedingly curious.

"His evidence was essential and satisfactory, but the lawyer who was on the other side very nearly succeeded in rejecting it, and was only foiled by the singular wit of the witness. He was reputed to be an 'infidel,' whatever that may be, and on his entering the witness-box, the counsel stopped the clerk, who was about to administer the oath, saying that he wished to ask the witness a question about his religious opinions.

"The witness observed that when sworn he should be most happy to answer any questions about the case before the court, but that his opinions concerned nobody but himself: they were not evidence and nothing he could say unsworn could be evidence; he hoped, therefore, his honor, the judge, would save him from any irrelevant curiosity.

"The judge, however, answered—what seemed to me a most reasonable appeal—by intimating that it was necessary to answer the counsel's questions.

"Perhaps then," said the witness, "I may be informed if, not being sworn, I am bound to speak the truth?"

"Not legally," said the judge.

"Witness thanked the judge, and, turning to the counsel, said, 'Now, then, sir, you may just ask me what you please, and I will endeavor to frame my answers to suit you!'

"Seeing that an examination under such circumstances would be a farce, the lawyer requested that the oath might be administered. This done he again commenced:

"Now that you are legally bound to speak the truth, I desire to know if you believe in the New Testament, on which you have been sworn?"

"Turning to the judge with an expression of mock humility, witness said, 'I pray your honor's protection.'

"The judge told him to answer the question.

"But, your honor! It's not fair. He wants to make me commit myself, because he knows my evidence will tell against him."

"Exactly so, says the counsel, blandly smiling.

"What," asked the judge, "do you mean by making you commit yourself?"

"Why, your honor, he wants me to disqualify myself for being sworn as a witness, by acknowledging that I believe in the Divine authority of a book that contains a positive injunction against swearing at all!"

"On hearing this most unexpected reply, the lawyer answered the judge's inquiring smile by throwing himself back in his seat, and declining to oppose the witness.

"Does it not seem strange that the very truthfulness which would induce a man to acknowledge his disbelief should be used to discredit him?"

"It seems to me absolutely certain that a little advance in the public intelligence will cause the oath to be discarded altogether. As an appeal to the supernatural it really means nothing, and as a legal contract it might be made equally binding, and less objectionable."—The Index.

TWO ORDERS.

—o—

"Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual." 1 Cor. 15: 40.

FIRST ADAM—male and female ("and he called their name Adam") the father and mother of the natural creation, the generators—the sowers of the seed. Then Christ, also male and female ("He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom"—"Adam, a figure of him that was to come"), the father and mother of the spiritual creation—the regenerators—the reapers of the harvest. "There is a time to sow, and a time to reap," spiritually as well as naturally, human beings, as well as wheat and corn. ("The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few," etc. "Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.")

There is a begetting, quickening, and birth, spiritually as well as naturally ("Ye must be born again"), and equally as necessary are the father and mother in the spiritual as in the natural creation; and, as we had no choice as to who should beget and bring us forth naturally, neither will we be consulted as to who shall be our spiritual parents; and, when we are compelled by the angels to enter the womb of the Spirit (a Shaker Society), let us become "as clay in the hands of the potter," and "honor our father and mother," then God, through his Order, will travail, and in due season bring us forth spiritual beings—angels.

The followers of Adam "marry and are given in marriage" ("marriage is honorable in all" natural people); but the followers of Christ make themselves virgins and "eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake." The hundred and forty and four thousand, who stood with the Lamb on Mount Zion, were virgins, not married people—"not defiled with women," or men. Brother John neglected to mention that there were some of both sexes not defiled," because, like Paul, he then only "knew in part," and "saw through a glass darkly." The prophecy "That the Bride should appear, and she coming forth shall be seen that is now withdrawn from the earth" (Esdras, 7: 26), was not understood by him at that period of his pilgrimage.

Remember, there is a natural and there is a spiritual life: and that one must be sacrificed for the other. "Whosoever will save his (generative) life, shall lose it (his spiritual life); but whosoever shall lose (sacrifice) his (generative) life, for my sake, and the Gospel, the same shall save it" (his spiritual life). But such as are content, and of choice prefer to follow Adam in the natural, generative life, let them sacredly observe the laws of God for that order, which are "Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly," using their generative powers and faculties to "glorify God," not for pleasure; and let them teach the same to others; then (if you have not been called to a higher life) the blessing and protection of God will rest upon you as natural people, and you will be among that number who (Paul says) "do well." If, however, you feel "drawn off

PHYSICAL AND SPIRITUAL.

IF all strong-minded men and women who have the ability and the means of acquiring knowledge, would "apply their hearts unto wisdom," and use that knowledge unselfishly, for the benefit of the many, and in that way help to bear the infirmities of the weak, what a change would be wrought in society! By degrees, capital and labor would be brought into just relations. It is true that science and art have projected many agricultural and other labor-saving implements, by which the soil is made more productive. But, could laborers feel the assurance of a just return from capitalists, for services rendered, it would be a great incentive to industry; and the earth, by proper cultivation, might be redeemed from its present thorn-and-brier-producing condition, and an Eden formed, of far more than pristine beauty. But it has been truly said, that "great men are not always wise or just."

The Creative Intelligence that formed the worlds, and created beings with the germs of immortality to inhabit them, is superior to the things and beings created. And it is evident that the good Father and Mother of all souls designed that their children should grow in wisdom and knowledge from age to age, and be fashioned into their likeness; and that they should study to comprehend the laws pertaining to physical life; and how to use, and not abuse, earth's fullness of blessings, so amply provided for man and beast.

What greater evidence of the love and wisdom of God do we need than has been given? "The heavens declare his glory; the firmament sheweth his handy-work;" and his voice may be heard through all his works. The great luminary, hung out from above, shedding its golden rays, and giving light which rules the day, is God's blessing to humanity; it is the appropriate time to work. The night also has its share of blessing for man and beast. The moon and stars shed a silvery subdued light, which brings a feeling of quiet and repose, and is a signal for rest. Sleep is Nature's balm—a wise provision. The earth pours forth its rich treasures with a lavish hand. But a wise Providence has decreed that every blessing shall be obtained by labor. The intellectual (as well as the physical) powers are given for use, under the guidance of just and immutable laws.

When capital and labor, and science and art, combine and operate harmoniously together, we obtain great results. Geology has penetrated the earth, and brought forth hidden treasures—gold, silver, and precious stones; and subterranean caverns send up oil in great profusion; while exhaustless beds of coal are unearthed: all for man's use. Our great forests, one by one, have yielded to the woodman's ax, and have been used for fuel, or for buildings, and other purposes; and our beautiful hills, once covered with stately trees, are now occupied by the agriculturist; yet we do not fear for the future; for coal supplies the place of wood for fuel; and iron, stone, and clay, are used for building purposes.

Floating palaces, constructed of iron and wood, are seen on all seas, bearing the flags of every nation; and thousands of human beings are continually borne upon the waters of the fathomless deep from shore to shore. It no longer requires a Prophet of the Lord, with a divining rod, to cause iron to swim. Great powers are given to men and women; and they will use them for either good or evil purposes; and (we repeat), if, on the natural earthly plane of existence, all would learn to be just, what a terrestrial Paradise might be created. Then, under the action of the physical and spiritual elements, human beings would be peaceful and happy, until (to use the similitude of a field of grain in process of ripening) ready for the harvesting angel, with the sickle of spiritual truth, to cut them off from the field of nature, and gather them from the generative to the higher plane of divine light, and spiritual life. Then they would recognize the primitive intention of, and the necessity for, two orders of human beings—the natural and the spiritual; which (now) can only with great difficulty be brought to the comprehension of the people.

If natural laws, in reference to reproduction, were properly regarded, and men would learn to be brothers the world over, then wars would cease to the ends of the earth; and warriors would turn to the peaceful pursuits of industry, beating their swords into agricultural implements; and while, on the one hand, there would be no fears that the earth would be over populated, rendering war, pestilence, and famine "necessary evils," by which to thin off the inhabitants; nor, on the other hand, that the existence of a pure celibate Order, like that of the Shakers, would depopulate the earth. But, while the natural man and woman would be doing their work, if guided by the law of use, instead of carnal pleasure, in reproduction, they would bless the spiritual Order, whose portals are ever open to receive those who have progressed beyond the natural, and are prepared to enter upon the angelic life, where they can study and learn the laws pertaining to the kingdom of Christ.

If the development of natural laws, which pertain to the outward visible world, be worthy of so much attention from scientists, who can define and measure the duty of the spiritual man and woman, and the importance of their studying to comprehend the laws of the inner world, and the life that is eternal, and to know what is good and true for themselves, and not blindly follow the traditions of their fore-fathers; but constantly be seeking out new fountains of living waters.

New facts and events are daily occurring in the outward world of mind and matter; and, as there are new revealments in the natural arts and sciences, and new modes of thought and experience, to meet all such emergencies, so is it in a spiritual point of view; the unfolding laws of the invisible world, and of the higher life, require the revelation of new truths, new thoughts, and new modes of application.

Truth does not change! But, as the finite mind grows and expands, and reaches out toward the Infinite, throwing off the grosser and more material forms of thought, its views and conceptions of the Spiritual and Divine become more and more enlarged and celestial.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WE confidently expect that our noble-hearted brother (Elder Wm. Leonard) will forgive us for making a few extracts, without permission, from a lengthy and valuable communication from his pen, which was not designed for publication. To us it was a jewel when received; and it was placed in our casket as such; and we feel quite certain that it would be interesting and instructive to many of the readers of our "Monthly;" but it is too prolix to publish in its entirety. Yet we hope that even the fragmentary presentation thereof will not lessen its illustrative force, nor mar its symmetrical beauty.

BELOVED ELDERESS ANTOINETTE,

I received your kind letter by due course of mail, and was right glad to hear from you and our dear friends at the Mount. I have read it over many times, and have tried to feel guilty for my negligence in not writing before the present time; but, if I had done so, perhaps I should not have received your kind epistle, which has stirred my dying or wandering memory; and I am really puzzled to determine whether to feel guilty or otherwise. Of one thing, however, you may be assured: it was not a lack of true love, or pure Gospel affection, that prevented.

I have, from early memory, had many evidences that I was created to think and feel; and, like many others of my fellow-pilgrims of impulsive heart, and visionary brain, at times, I love to talk, and to write my intuitions and new-born imaginings. Persons of such a temperament naturally love those who are willing to hear them patiently, and who will respond to them affectionately and kindly. I am under many obligations to my friends at the North Family, for the charitable reviews, and pleasant responses to my eccentric theorizing, and visionary dreamings; and, though numerous sheets have passed between us, I have the calm satisfaction of believing that not one discordant feeling has ever arisen to mar our union and tranquillity. My frank, honest difference of opinion, on minor subjects, have ever been met with that wise, calm, and harmonious spirit, that rendered even quarreling a pastime, and fighting quite a Christian amusement. There is a joy in interchanging thoughts and gifts with true and tried friends; they serve to uplift and cheer the spirit, and harmonize soul with soul.

Now, my friend, you will agree to pardon me, if I turn my theme into a somewhat theological strain; I feel like writing a long letter, if you will be patient with me. When looking out from the windows of Zion, upon the outward spiritual horizon, an inspiration steals over my spirit like the glowing fires of heaven. I do not feel a restless anxiety for the future; distrustful, unhappy forebodings have passed from my mind. I never saw the final advancement of God's work look more bright and cheering in the distance than now; the signs of the times are marvellously changing; they may appear new and strange, but they agree with the visitations of God to men, when compared with past history, by which we learn of his dealings with the old world, through the mediumship of Noah; and, when He determined to enlarge and liberate the tribes of Israel, He visited them through the spirits of the ancient fathers; and, next, mighty shocks of spirit-power were felt in Egypt, and the surrounding nations; and there was a slow but sure class of spirit-manifestations peculiar to the age and condition of the old chosen line of those days.

When the reign of Judaism was about closing, John, under the inspiration of the well-tried, noble spirit of Elijah, lit up the torch-light of revelation anew, which helped to dispel the darkness of the whole country.

Again, when the first dawn of Christ's kingdom was to break forth, a higher power and word of God came to Jesus, which animated the angels to sing "Glory in the highest." The same power extended to the twelve foundation pillars of the Jewish Christian Church. The Christ Spirit, at that time, was limited to the Hebrew line; and, when the disciples were sent out to preach, Jesus charged them, saying, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles; and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Upon a time, as Jesus was crossing from Jerusalem to Galilee, and was passing through the suburbs of the ancient city of Sychar, wearied beneath the scorching sun-beams, he sat down by Jacob's well, for rest and refreshment; and a woman of Samaria came to draw water. Gentile as she was, and coming from one of the forbidden cities, yet, by spirit impulse he was attracted to her; and, when she rebuked him for asking water of a Samaritan, he was so pleased with her candor, that he conversed with her freely, and in a manner that reached her understanding; and she went and called others, saying, "Come and see a man that has told me all things that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?" This seems to have been the first kindling spark of Gospel fire among the Gentiles. Ever after that introduction, Jesus showed a marked attachment to that people. Perhaps he was the only living Jew who, at that time, truly loved a Samaritan. When he healed ten lepers, none but a Samaritan returned to bow in acknowledgment of, and to thank God for, the favor; and Jesus did not omit to call the attention of the Jews to this fact.

In his parable of the man who fell among thieves, and of the conduct of the priest and Levite towards him (while the good Samaritan, instead of keeping his gloves on, and passing by on the other side, as the priest and Levite did, had compassion on him, stooped down and examined his wounds, and kindly bound them up), he taught that God is not a respecter of nations or persons, but of character. And he gave his disciples to understand, that, as soon as they had performed their first duty to the Jews, his Samaritan children were the next class to be attended to. He said: "Ye shall receive the Holy Ghost, and shall be witnesses unto me in all Judea; next, in Samaria; then to the uttermost parts of the earth." They caught the inspiration, and, with souls all aglow with revelation from the spirit-spheres, "they went everywhere preaching the Gospel of the kingdom."

What a marked manifestation of spirit-power was given at the time when Saul of Tarsus, undertook to beat down the Christian work! He was, without doubt, honest in his intentions, when he determined, under priestly sanction, to kindle the fires of persecution at Damascus; but he was met in such a manner, when a light flashed upon him, and he was smitten by an unseen hand, and heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" that he was convinced of his mistake, (and O how quickly he turned his energies in the right direction, and, after his conversion to the Christian religion, became a fortress of strength), and proved to be one of the greatest revelationists that ever existed. He was a leader of leaders, a torrent of eloquence, and as immovable as Mount Zion.

Each of the disciples of Jesus was called to perform a certain work, and spirit-power attended their labors. If in former ages there was a host of spiritual mediums, an abundance of prophecies and a gradual growth from small beginnings, need we despair?

Since this large continent was discovered, great changes and modifications have been wrought, and a new form of Civil Government is established.

Through the mediumship of the French prophets, the spirits worked; and from them Ann Lee was brought forth, who was afterward anointed to be our spiritual Mother. The powers of the heavens hastened her work; and, by revelation, she came to America, and the Church of Christ's Second Appearing began to be established, while a free Civil Government was also in process of formation.

This Church has stood as an inside wheel that fits into the wheel of the new outside Government, and the one has turned the other till it has become too visible to be longer concealed; for the light and spiritual influence of this Church is seen and felt throughout the nation, and in other nations.

The reforms of the last century started with the American people, and have been produced by the life-germs, or spirit lights, of the age, who had their highest existence in the Church. Modern Spiritualism began its work on the inner wheel, and was carried out by spirit-messengers, to do its work in the outside order. The spirits who were commissioned to do the first work in Zion, predicted its universal spread; and now we see a mighty upspringing of every species and order of mediums for both good and bad spirits to work through; but the same power that commenced the work, will bring order out of chaos—divide the false from the true—and will kindle in honest souls the fires of judgment, and thus purify them as gold is made pure by furnace heat, and will fit them to be indwellers and workers in God's holy Christian Temple, which, in its dual form, has started for a heavenly growth into order and beauty; and of its increase there will be no end.

Some of my friends here, who have heard this, my epistle of forty pages to you, think I have fully canceled all former debts that I may have incurred by not answering letters from you; and I guess you will think so too.

Please accept love and kindly greetings, from Elders, and Brethren and Sisters, who send it liberally for yourself, and all of our dear friends at Mount Lebanon.

Your Brother in the Gospel,

William Leonard, Harvard, Mass.

"IN EVERY THING GIVE THANKS."

AT this season of the year, when so many outward blessings are showering from the hand of the good Husbandman, we feel that "praise is comely" for all.

And to us, who not only have found a Father but an ever-loving Mother, what measureless call for gratitude, that not only now will the strong and vigorous in the spiritual household find support, but the poor and oppressed share of her love and sympathy.

Thanks for a Gospel that approximates to justice, and, while it acknowledges the universal brotherhood, is striving to reduce it to living practice; that knows "nor high nor low, nor rich nor poor, male nor female, but all one," etc. "Exalting the valleys" by "bringing the mountains down."

Thanks for a spot on earth where virtue and innocence can be preserved, and rank higher in value than stocks or exchange.

Thanks for a home where labor is honored, and consecrated toil and uses are the gauge of honor and respect.

Thanks for a love that is pure; and for "the hundred-fold" of brothers and sisters, which compensate the forsaking of the natural and earthly.

Thanks for the "banishing to the desert of forgetfulness," which succeeds the washing in Jordan (the river of Judgment); and for the cheering of spirits from the unseen, and the hopes of re-union in the spirit world.

And highest thanks that, for poor suffering humanity, there is such a way of becoming sons and daughters of God, without rebuke.

Elizabeth H. Webster, Harvard.

THE isolated efforts of individuals can accomplish no more now than formerly. Therefore it is an age of unions, combinations and leagues, pointing to the only avenue of advance to a higher order, viz., through a united and consecrated interest. We may also include as indications, the associated efforts of Bible, Missionary, and Peace Societies, all of which have started into operation since the Church of Christ's Second Appearing was established.

Many can "run to and fro" and knowledge may be increased, but knowledge alone, irrespective of quality and use, cannot confer happiness. Knowledge is communicable. Wisdom is acquired by applying knowledge to use. The higher the knowledge, the more excellent the wisdom attained by its exercise.

FOR THE SHAKERESS.

FEELING that I am a debtor to all lovers of truth in the preceding Dispensation, who, by a life of self-denial, strove to vindicate and uphold the work of righteousness on the earth, I would gladly give a fitting expression of my gratitude therefor, and honor the past; and also give my testimony to strengthen the present; and to help (in my humble way) any sincere soul, who may be looking among the lo heres and lo theres, to find the Christ of God that can give true rest unto souls.

The years of my pilgrimage on earth number fourscore, fifty-six of which have been spent with Believers, or Shakers. In practical obedience to the truths taught and lived by all who are true to their profession, I have seen the travail of my soul in the work of regeneration; and, as I have progressed "from faith to faith," I have also received increasing light and power to work the works of righteousness, and am now reaping the fruits thereof, which are peace and rest to the immortal part, that I know a life in sinful indulgence could never give. And I have witnessed the operation and effect upon others with whom I have been associated, and I can testify that I am satisfied with the goodness of God through the Gospel of Christ in the first and second appearing.

I am conscious that I am now nearing the end of my sojourn in time; but I feel a bright hope for the future; and, although my physical strength is waning, yet in spirit I am joyful; I feel that the prediction of the prophet Jeremiah is being fulfilled in our time, when the "virgin" sons and daughters of "Zion can go forth in the dances of them that make merry, both old and young together, and sing in the heights of Zion," and partake of the goodly feast of "wheat, and oil, and wine" of the kingdom, until "their souls are as a watered garden." My feelings go out in love to, and in prayer for, all honest truth seekers, that they may be led, as I was, to renounce the inferior pleasures of time and sense, and learn to live to God and die to sin; and, through obedience to truth, fit themselves for the society of angels in the Heavenly Father and Mother's kingdom in the world to come.

Anna Crosman, Mt. Lebanon.

GOOD resolutions are safeguards to the soul—God's blessings are limitless as the twinkling lights that spangle the vast arch above, or the sands of the sea. Every thing in nature's realm, evinces an overruling supernatural power. The smallest insect his goodness shares. The birds carol their sweetest notes to Him who gave them life, swelling their little throats to the fullest extent, reminding us of the musical fullness of the spheres. And the running streamlet, as it ripples over hill and dale, sings a merry song; it may be shallow at its source, but it finds its way to rivers and lakes, and its terminus is the deep blue sea. Every drop of this vast body of water contains animal life; and if the tiny aquatics were asked why they were so lively, they would reply, in their language, "Because we have nothing but water to drink." Would that many human beings might reply in the same language who are now wedded to the wine cup, or bound in the demoniac chains of Alcohol! Alas, that man who was made to govern himself, and rule over the lower orders of animal life, sinks himself below the beasts that perish! O that intemperance might flee the land.

MEETING.

J. M. PEEBLES, on behalf of the Spiritualists of New York City, has asked to have a Deputation of Shakers attend one or more of their Gatherings, on the 23d instant; and Elder F. W. Evans, with a Company of Brethren and Sisters from the Three Novitiate Families of Mount Lebanon, and Elder G. A. Loomis, with a Company from Watervliet, are expected to be present.

For particulars, as to Hall, hour, &c., see public advertisement.

OBITUARY.

—o—

In looking over the obituary notices in the "Shaker and Shakeress" of 1873, up to October, we find the names of a large number recorded, who have been as bright stars in Zion, to illumine her spiritual horizon, whose light, to the external perception, has now gone out; but through faith we behold them shining with increased brilliancy in purer, brighter spheres. The majority of them lived to a ripe age; yet, how much they are missed from our circles! Each Family and Society had learned to love, and appreciate them for their works' sake; they knew their worth, and have felt their loss.

It has not been customary for Believers to eulogize, by word, their dear departed Gospel friends to any great extent; but rather strive to profit by their godly lives and teachings, and to have their bright examples shine upon our pathway, and light our course heavenward, that we may know how to walk in their footsteps and follow them, as they have followed Christ.

We are certain that a biographical account of many of those worthy saints who have been harvested from earth, and gathered to their spirit home, would be very interesting and satisfactory to Believers who have known them personally, or by reputation; and, had we inserted all the love tokens in the columns of the "Shaker and Shakeress," that have been sent to us by surviving friends, they would have occupied a large space. We have loved and admired the feelings which prompted such beautiful and affectionate tributes to the memory of dear departed ones; and would gladly have gratified the wishes of each contributor in publishing them, as well as to have satisfied the feelings of many of the readers of our little sheet by so doing, had it been practicable. But the lives of Believers in Christ's second appearing are so veiled from the outside world, that they seldom know one Shaker from another; except, perhaps, in the vicinity, or in the adjacent towns they may be known to neighbors and friends. As they take no part in politics, they have no political record to present; nor do they imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow men, believing that Christians cannot, will not, fight. Hence the warrior's fame and glory (such as it is) does not rest upon them; and, having forsaken the natural, generative order of marriage, for the higher—the angelic—Christian order and life, it may be said of them as it was said of Jesus: "Who shall declare his generation?" Like him, the Shakers have none.

Seeing we differ so widely from worldly Christians, upon all of those essential points, how could we make up lengthy obituary notices of our brethren and sisters that would be edifying and interesting to subscribers in the outside order, who know nothing of the individuals of whom we are speaking, however illustrious their lives may have been to us? Our worthy sister Abigail Munson, who attained to the age of 102 (lacking a few days), how much might have been said of her good deeds, her godly example, and great worth, by those who knew her best.

We received an obituary on the demise of Elder J. R. Eades, which occurred at South Union, Ky., August 27, which was written in a beautiful spirit, by sister Jane Cowan of the same place, descriptive of his moral worth—his spiritual attainments—his consecrated life, and devotion to truth; and how much he was beloved by the little flock, of which he had been a faithful leader many years, and how deeply they felt his loss! We also received a poem upon the same subject written by Sister Lucy Shannon; all showing how they loved him in life, and honored him in death.

Such bright spirits as Elder D. J. Hawkins, Sister Charity Palmer, Elder R. W. Pelham, Brother J. Dean, and many more that we might mention, whose names are scaled in heaven, for they are written in the book of life, to be read by their Brethren and Sisters, have all left worthy records. And while we view the way-marks they have left behind, they will live in the hearts' affections of their Gospel kindred while memory shall last.

It may not be amiss to restate the ages of those who have gone from the ranks of the eighteen Societies of Believers to their homes in the spirit spheres within the last ten months. The ages of two, we did not get; but understand they were well advanced in life.

NATURE CURES, IF CURE THERE BE.

—o—

In all systems of error there is a starting-point usually made by a false assumption. This is palpable in the drug theory. Assuming that disease is an enemy which a new drug disease may vanquish, patients are dosed into tedious pains, fevers, and too often premature graves. Dr. Trall's lucid pen has recently shown, that neither Seward nor Greeley died of natural disease, nor yet of a mysterious Providence, but of poisonous drugs. Similar fatal administrations ended the days of Washington, Harrison, Taylor, and multitudes of eminent sufferers, including millions of the obscure, whose lives, in one sense, were none the less precious. The germ, as we have said, of this poisonous system is, that nature don't or won't cure. While the drug theorists are unable to ignore the efforts of nature in this direction, they nevertheless insist that she must be assisted to cure. Hence, under the guise of aid, they embarrass; and on the pretext of removing burdens, they bind on such as are heavier and more crushing; and, in endeavoring to promote the process of cleansing, they surcharge the body with the foulest matter.

As the cause must always be removed to insure a cessation of the effect, so must this baseless assumption of assisting nature, by poisoning, be abandoned, before we can get rid of the destructive medical theory. By eating unclean food, and too much of it, persons are sickened, then druggists proceed to dose down yet more unclean matter to cleanse and cure! In swallowing bad diet, the laws of health are broken, and disease ensues; in swallowing yet worse drugs, the laws of health are still more dangerously broken, and too often death ensues. Who in his sober senses can believe that doses which invariably make well persons sick, can make sick persons well? Can filth remove filth? Will Beelzebub the chief, cast out his subordinates? There is but one way to swallow the drug theory, that is, ostrich-like, to run the head into sand, and force it down blind. Facts, handled by common sense, are as fatal to it as is warm sunshine to ice, or light to darkness. Naked assumptions and despotic authority may sustain the absurdity, while simple truth and reason must overthrow it.—Science of Health.

SELF DENIAL.

—o—

Blessed power of self-denial,
Source and well-spring of true joy;
Walk with me as guardian angel,
That no sin my peace destroy.

It is natural for the whole human family to seek happiness; all have some God to worship, some Superior Being to look to, for aid, in times of affliction and distress. But how few seek happiness in the right direction! We are all looking and hoping for a blissful existence beyond the dark river; but, do we consider what we must do this side the stream, to gain the lasting joys of that bright land? Are we willing and thankful to bear the cross of Christ, that crucifies us to the world, and robs us of the corruptible joys of sin and carnal indulgences, practising true self-denial in our every-day lives, walking in paths of peace and righteousness, sacrificing the meaner affections of the lower life, owning nothing, yet possessing all things, caring for, and being cared for, in sickness and health, by the good and pure? If so, then, when this life's journey shall be ended, and we pass on, to that unknown land, having laid up treasures there, we shall not feel like strangers in a strange place; although we shall have left behind us all that we possessed in this world. True, our clothing will be new, and formed of different materials; our food will also be of a different nature; our surroundings too, will be new; but we shall join kindred friends whom we have previously known on earth; and, can we have a better recommendation to take with us than the record of a good, upright life, bearing the impress of self-denial and cross-bearing, which is true excellence—a garment formed of good and righteous works, to adorn the immortal part? When I take somewhat of a realizing view of these things, I think I will never be heard to cry, O the burden, the burden of the cross! the oppression of self-denial! striving to bring the way to me, instead of bringing myself to the way; this is beneath my high and holy calling. I will fight the battles of the Lord valiantly, and lay a good foundation—purity and honesty—for my building to stand upon.

A builder may erect very elegant and beautiful structures; but, unless the foundations are firmly and properly laid, they are liable to be wrecked by winds and storms, and finally to become a mass of ruins.

"I want to have the Christians' stamp On all that I possess—
My conscience, manual labor too, And even on my dress."

I want to have good Shaker faith Implanted in my soul;
And fain would have good Shaker works Extend from pole to pole.

I bless the name, I love the life My Shaker kindred live,
I love the true and sure reward A daily cross will give.
I love to feel that living power That shakes the soul within—
The fire that burns the dregs and dross, Consuming ev'ry sin.

I love to hear the living Word, That flows from soul to soul,
Cross-bearing ones who dally strive Each passion to control.
These are true Shakers; and they shake from ev'ry thing impure,
And seek for treasures by the cross, That ever will endure.

They bring each hidden deed to light, Not in a closet dark;
But to the witnesses of God, Where rests the sacred Ark.
How can we live without the Word, The living Word of God,
That resurrects to spirit-life, Points to the narrow road?

I love my Shaker Brethren dear, My angel Sisters too;
My Shaker home, with all its joys, Is charming to my view;
Then, let me live the higher life, And bear the noble name:
Make it my chief concern to be Right worthy of the same.

Emily Smith, Mt. Lebanon.

WHO SHALL PRAISE GOD?

—o—

Mysoul, wake up inspired to sing,
 And let each thought a tribute bring,
 And praise our Father's name;
 Let earth and heaven join in one song,
 So sweet, so glorious, and so strong,
 Of this inspiring theme.

Let mountains high, and valleys low,
 Let verdant plains the music throw,
 In strains both loud and clear;
 Our Maker's name we will proclaim
 From pole to pole, thro' earth's domain,
 With reverence and fear.

Ye angels bright, who wing your way
 Through mansions of eternal day,
 Reverberate the sound.
 O, all the powers of heaven above,
 Join now with us the song of love,
 Sweet praises flow around.

Ye cedars on the mountain brow,
 Your towering heads with reverence bow,
 To him who gave you birth;
 Ye little rills that murmur on,
 Join in the chorus, sweet and long,
 That gladdens all the earth.

Ye flowing rivers which have grown
 So deep and broad, your voices loan,
 To sound his holy praise;
 And cataracts with thundering roar
 His glory tell from shore to shore,
 His wise and prudent ways.

Above all these, let those who live
 A life of innocence and love,
 Be heard in sweetest tones;
 Who love the Lord with all their heart,
 And from all sin and lust depart;
 They make the loudest sounds.

They set all nature in a blaze;
 Men ask, are these the latter days
 By Jesus Christ foretold?
 'Tis something new; we do not scan
 How God does purify a man,
 And liberate the soul.

He's brought to light the living way,
 And all who're willing to obey,
 Do walk the path so straight;
 They do not err from day to day,
 But constant watch, and daily pray,
 To enter heaven's gate.

Let those who have repentance found,
 With peace, and love, and joy abound,
 And join the glorious song;
 While those who cover up their sin,
 Their grief and sorrow then begin;
 They cannot join the throng
 Of the united souls of men
 Who live to God, and die to sin,
 And in this death rejoice;
 But all who bear a daily cross,
 And by its power are saved from loss,
 Shall praise Him with one voice.

Andrew Barrett, Mt. Lebanon.

ELDER RICHARD BUSHNELL.

He brought a glorious manhood to the strife,
 And gave it freely, with a noble will;
 He made a consecration of his life,
 And bade ambition's trumpet-voice be still:
 For he had powers that would have gain'd the fame,
 The wealth, the honors, that the world bestows.
 But better far, to him, was lot and name
 Among the people that his conscience chose.
 He came to them with zealous heart and hand,
 Made all their interests his absorbing care;
 Strong in his faith, met persecution's band,
 Yet held his heart in lowly strains of prayer.

The clash of elements that round him rung,
 Awoke his energies to fight within—
 To strive for conquest—while his life was young,
 And evermore to wage a war with sin.
 In thought, and power to sway, he was a king;
 He won a royal priesthood by his zeal.
 His soul was gentle as an angel's wing,
 Yet it was keen as Truth's incisive steel.

Before him, malice (supplicating) knelt,
 And bitter envy laid her face in dust;
 While bold assailants lost their rage, and felt
 To seek for pardon, half convinced they must.
 He gave forgiveness as the morn'g gives light;
 He gave his love as seasons give their fruit;
 He bless'd with tenderness, rebuked with might Quell'd human passions till their waves were mute.

And, when his autumn crimson'd to its close,
 We saw the garner'd treasures he had found;
 We felt his soul's unspeakable repose.
 And knew his spirit was with vict'ry crown'd.
 We'll miss his cheery voice, and kindly smile;
 We'll miss the hands whose industry we prize;
 We'll call him often, in the little while
 That from our home to his so misty lies.

O father, as we bid adieu to thee,
 Our heart-strings vibrate with a plaintive swell:
 Our love, upwelling, gushing, warm, and free,
 Shall reach thy spirit wheresoe'er it dwell.
 What though the years made halos in thy hair,
 And carved their furrows on thy open brow;
 They could not give thy heart one rankling care;
 Thy life was true, and thou art blessed now!

Cecelia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon.

TRY AGAIN.

—o—

Tolling pilgrim, art thou weary?
 Doth the path of life seem hard?
 Are the gleams of hope and courage
 From thy spirit now debar'd?
 Hath the prayer to Heaven directed,
 Fall'd to bring thy spirit gain?
 Yet, if thou art still protected,
 Never flinch, but Try again.

Have the foes thou wast contending,
 Over thee some vict'ry gained?
 By a dark'ning cloud impending,
 Hath thy star of guidance waned?
 Does the blinding cross of Jesus
 Cause thy lofty nature pain?
 There's a balsam for thy spirit,
 Flinch not, then, but Try again.

Mark thy friends who now surround thee,
 Seeming most like angels pure;
 Have they passed these youthful conflicts,
 Having nothing to endure?
 Know, my friend, when thou art tempted,
 Those before have felt the same,
 And with courage to thee whisper,
 "Never flinch, but Try again."

Try Again! blest words of courage,
 What a radiance they impart!
 When the soul, though met by Failure,
 Claps their virtues to the heart,
 Then, with "Onward" for thy motto,
 "Upward," for thy constant aim,
 Thou canst bear aloft the banner—
 "Never flinch; but Try Again."

Amelia Calver, Mt. Lebanon.

CURIOSITIES FOR THE CENTENNIAL.

—o—

THE Centennial, at Philadelphia, will be a celebration for which every patriotic man must desire to insure the greatest possible completeness. Especial attention would he desire to have given to that twilight period of our history which the Centennial is intended so largely to commemorate, and which indeed concentrates in itself so much of what is interesting and romantic in American annals. The readers of our Sunday's issue must have been gratified to read of a contribution from Maine to the Revolutionary Department of the Exposition, which opens to its managers an entire new field of curious and delightful interest.

At the town of Alfred, in that State, an old lady has been discovered whose singular and happy fortune it was to be born on the 4th of July, 1776. She is a Shaker, and her name is Lucy Langdon Nowell. It is another of the virtues of this venerable lady that she has been in a railroad car, and it is proposed to send her in a Pullman car to adorn the opening of the Centennial on the 4th of July, 1876. It is urged that nothing could be more appropriate or significant at a festival designed to celebrate the completion of our first century of national existence than the presence of one whose birth is exactly coeval with our nation's birth, whose life has shared the vicissitudes of the nation's life, and who has lived to see the career begun, like her own, in doubt and utter weakness, finish in the most exalted power. — N. Y. Times.

PEOPLE talk of originality. What do they mean? As soon as we are born, the surrounding world begins to operate upon us, and so unto the end; and, after all, what can we truly call our own but energy, power and will? Could I point out all I owe to my great forerunner and contemporaries, truly there would remain but little over.—Goethe.

SOCIAL GATHERING.

On the 19th August, we, the Gathering Order of Mt. Lebanon Shakers, held, for the seventeenth time, our annual social union meeting—never once having failed for want of weather. Not only have we had weather enough, but it has been, as on this occasion, simply perfect. Whether this has happened to be so by chance, or has occurred under Law, and by design of interested parties in the two worlds, is an open question.

One hundred and fourteen were on the ground. All enjoyed the occasion, without a drawback. Dialogues, in which from four to seven took part, were enacted. Short speeches were delivered by many. Over fifty original articles and treatises were read, mostly by the writers. It was a foretaste of Heaven. The general feeling was, by a young sister, thus expressed: "I do not believe there ever was, since the world was made, any thing quite so good as our Annual Social Gathering."

MEETINGS should be times of religious confidence among those who assemble—the interior soul feelings coming from the heavens, grounded in the conscience, can then find confession and expression.

If the meetings of natural men and women are free, in the mutual confidence of a common sensuality, to those therein immersed, how much more free should be the meeting of souls, in the God element, for spiritual judgment and mutual elevation. How sacred should such occasions be held, and all things therewith connected.

The proper use of secretiveness is to conceal those things that are too good to be communicated—not common. A true, religious meeting is a prophecy of union, in a permanent, spiritually religious life—a meeting that will never break up.

When that high order is attained, the past will become the present, and the present will be eternity. The loves and affections will have become spiritualized. We shall have found real fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters—Gospel relations, who will be as unchangeable as truth, as kind and loving as their Father and Mother—God.

THE OLD WORLD DIES.

AND what have we to do about it? Why, to join with angel hands who are demolishing its corrupt but lingering institutions, political, social and religious, for "passing away" is written on all effete institutions of the age. "The yesterdays are gone. Let them go."

As the new born sun of righteousness peers in upon the pathway of the pure in heart, enabling them to "see God" and walk "in the light of life," the crude crutches of a limping faith in God, fall from their grasp. And as we see the erect living human temple—a soul arrayed in truth—walking in the garden of the Lord, and beckoning us on to Elysium, a healing inspiration thrills our being and makes us whole in faith that a power is about to be shed upon humanity, causing it to seek after God and Heaven; a power that makes "all things new and all things of God" in the new Earth and new Heavens.

In inimitable music a new song bursts upon our souls, with our spirit eye we look down the aisles of time, of man-made churches and human creeds, and see the platforms of theological error being removed plank by plank. Delusions, as strongly set as the pyramids of the ages—delusions—which have been the arbiters of faith, the fruitful source of division in the churches called Christian, and the dominating rule in secular policies, severing the fraternal bonds of nations, and bathing them in blood—are being destroyed by angel hands.

Shells of truth are being cracked, the kernel tasted; invigorated by its nourishment, God's agents are turning the old world of error and sin, upside down. The soul of institutions, political, social, moral and religious is being disrobed of garments that have deceived their votaries and the new born mind, and resurrected spirit, is discovering the motors that are moving humanity to day. The fulsome, hypocritical, selfish policies, that have organized and directed human governments, both mundane and religious, will be exhumed and exposed, their base purposes comprehended by the common mind, and truth, simple as the driving wheel of a velocipede, will be harnessed to the car of human progress, propelling it onward to the goal of God.

Rays of light—the life examples of those who follow Christ are beaming upon the theological cloud—"mystery of Godliness"—and it is found to be as simple as the two halves of an orange. The Christian's God is not a triple headed male monster, not the theologically created, baleful, vengeful tyrant who destroys human beings at his pleasure; blesses and saves whom he will, and damns whom he pleases, without regard to good or evil deeds. God is, in esse, a bisexual being—the Heavenly Parentage of man. The Father revealed by Jesus, first born Heavenly Son. The mother, by Ann, first born Heavenly Daughter. Ann Lee, imitating Jesus, in practical life of Godliness, aided by the life of her children, establishes the fact of the Motherhood of God, even as did the life of Jesus, the Fatherhood. They twain reveal the "new man" in Christ. Mediatorially the Divine will and purpose both for the "new Earth and new Heaven" are vouchsafed to man. The first by the light of a burning bush, through the thundering Sinai, by commandments, etched on tables of stone, by a voice, through the ministration of angels. The latter, by a succession of ministering spirits, and by souls, redeemed from sin and wrong—the harvest of honest confession and repentance.

Commencing with Jesus, then extending down, through male and female witnesses, who, by obedience, keep heavenly relation to the Divine Mind, until the testimony reaches the most debased human soul who may be resurrected and elevated to the Divine Life.

Christianity, instead of being a mummy saint, eighteen hundred years old, dead in formulas, and smothered in ceremonies, without the life of God, wrapt about with a winding sheet of human creeds; embalmed by imputed righteousness; encased in a petrified sarcophagus of the blood of Jesus, and healed of the wounds of sin by the stripes of a Judean thong, in its reappearing is discovered to be a character, new born, living, consisting of righteousness. Its vital currents pulsated in the veins of the baptized Jesus as by humiliation he learned obedience by the things he suffered, and became a "son of God," the same vitalizing spirit flows in the life currents of every true follower of Christ. By the light of this new born gospel day, Christian atonement, for humanity's ransom, is manifested by each individual on the altar of self denial, as did Jesus, Peter, Paul, Ann, and others. In fine, the mysterious cloudy creed of theological Christianity, called Catholic, with its posthumous salvation in sin, by death bed declaration of faith in Jesus' death; its water baptisms for soul purifications; its elections to salvation and damnation by Divine arbitration, without regard to works; its free grace redemptions without repentance of sin; its glorifications without righteousness; its withering damnation by eternal punishment—without eternal sin; its mysterious eucharist; its triune male God; aye, its whole mystic churchal cloud, is swept away like the dew, by the rays of the sun of this new born day of God. The old world dies!

Christian discipleship instead of being faith alone, is discovered to consist of confession and repentance of sin; and redemption from its nature by crosses, thus becoming sons and daughters of God—our Heavenly Father and Mother. The Christian's God is just and righteous, yet merciful and forgiving. No human being is so cruel and unjust as to punish the most perfectly good man for the sins of all the rest of humanity; much less will the Christian's God punish man on that principle, and still less punish a fellow God.

Truth is come, the soul that sins, dies, the soul who works righteousness lives. The confessing, repenting sinner is resurrected to spiritual life in God and peace with man. Good works are sermons, more potent than the orations of Demosthenes, the folio opinions of Calvin, Luther, or the Romish Pope. Ceasing to do evil will more effectually cast out the devil than hurling a Lutheran inkstand at his head.

A righteous life weds its possessor to God, and thus mated—Jesus like—the human soul hath boldness without egotism; power without usurpation; authority without priestly laying on of hands; pathos without human affectation; mercy without partiality; justice without revenge; love without lust; peace without sacrifice of principle, and honor without throne of regal state. This was the amulet of Jesus!

The germinal principles of human law for the protection and guidance of society, needs to be purgated of the hypocrisy and deceit that now hide the motive of self interest of rulers. And the greatest good of the greatest number must become the laws.

The old world dies, let it die. For the day is dawning when both political and theological potentates shall know that there is a power above the thrones of church or state, to which all knees shall bow, a simple creed, which all tongues shall confess as authority, and that creed is given in two words—Godly life.

Elder Giles B. Avery, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

THE SITUATION.

NEVER did the theological world, present the appearance of "choose ye this day whom ye will serve," more than the present time. At no period, since the Reformation, have there been as many departures from the so-called orthodoxies as now; nor so few successes for the churches, that arraign their heretics, as since the beginning of the last half of the nineteenth century. That there is a leaven hidden in the earth, that is working mischief with man-made creeds and unsavory dogmas, is apparent to the dullest comprehension; and that this leaven is making Babylon, worse confounded, in the social and religious circles of the earthly order, is cogent, even to the minds of those, not given to reflection. Infidelity in the efficacy of infant baptism: incredulity to infallibility; tendency to the confessional, and the preference of good works before good faith, are but drops before the shower, that will lead to many followers of the recent apostates, of these, and many similar pre-supposed, infallible theological enactments.

The expulsion of one Hyacinthe, is only the rearing of the standard of a new departure, that has more followers than tongue can tell. The "Swing" recently enacted at Chicago, with procedures there, of the same character, not long ago, will be followed by hundreds of cases more defiant than these; should the Churches accept the challenge, which the gospel of common sense seems daily multiplying, as with arithmetical progression. The arraignment of a Cuyler, for recognizing that woman is equally a saviour with man; and that it is only heathenish, and worse, to fail of acknowledging that God is as much female as male; and the employment of Smiley and her Sisters, are making this proclamation a home-thrust, in thousands of hearts, where, by no other agency, could it possibly enter. This arraignment is one of the largest blessings in disguise—the sprouting of a truth, in a new field, that "will not down" at the bidding of all the Churches combined. God be praised, and blessed be Cuyler!

The scare of the Elmira Congregationalists, as given by their noble pastor, in the advocacy of oral confession, comes in for a share of our admiration, and is a notable "straw" that indicates the inclination of the "situation," as being more towards Christianity, than towards Romanism. And to this Beecher, of Elmira, is credited the advice to his Brooklyn Brother, of "preaching less philosophy, and practicing more Christianity." No "sorrow" would follow such action. The union, of the "old and new" schools, has its significance, that points to less hair-splitting theology, and more real philanthropy. The universal admission that Presbyterians and Universalists are nearer, and more loving neighbors, bears evidence of the fact that predestination, foreordination, and total depravity, will eventually lie in one common grave. What means the departure from entire reliance on the vicarious atonement theory? a deelenion in Methodist mummery of leaving the whole debt for Jesus to pay; and the more prevalent demand for good works, than for good faith? Not one Wesleyan in ten, now clings to the atonement, with the confidence and tenacity of thirty years ago!

Can we pass by the revolt against the military drill in the Colleges, as having no significance upon the religious situation? And the general desire of the nation, as expressed through its representatives, to reduce its army and navy; does this arise from its financial situation, or from the advanced ground of moral necessity? What means the iconoclasm of English, German and Italian States, with others, against their union with the Church? What happiness may we feel, that God, through the people, refuses the admission of his or her name, or that of Jesus Christ, Ann Lee, Virgin Mary, the Methodist, or any other Church within the constitution of these United States! And following the progress of truth, when should we stop? The Second Adventists and thousands of others, have thankfully lost hope in a physical resurrection, after death. Spiritualists are learning that spiritualism is no more of a salvation to them, than is the cast-off faith of the blood of Jesus. Men and women of all denominations are learning that they are sinners; and that there is no way out of sin, except by a self-denying repentance, that stops their sinning; and good works are at a higher premium, even outside of religious denominations, than is the most popular persuasion, without good works. The primitive Christian Church, is brought into better repute, in these days, than for hundreds of years in the past; and a demand for its repetition, as a Christian necessity, is now more easily evoked than for ages. Churches are admitting the great disparity of brotherhood, between the first Christian Church, and the popular so-called Churches of to-day; and reforms are already numerous. The multitudes recognize great departure in their lives—however good members of popular Churches they may be—from the life Jesus lived; the life his disciples lived in that day, after their conversion; and the life which his followers—Christians—are only justified in living to-day. Upon reviewing the situation, I am more than satisfied that the progress is in the right direction; and that in the life and works of humble, but unpopular Christianity, the Shaker saints, in their heavens upon earth, are still the Vanguard.

Elder G. A. Lomas, Waterclet, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PLEASANT HILL, Ky., July 28, 1874.

DEAR CHRISTIAN BROTHER—For the letter you wrote me two weeks ago, I am thankful: and as I am in doubt as to duty on one, if not two points, please advise me.

First—Can I consistently unite without fully believing in the dual and sexual nature of God; or the inspiration, or Motherhood of Ann Lee? Her practical good, in the line of progress, I gratefully accept, as I do yours and other Reformers.' The celibacy, communism in property, anti-war, fashion, style and cast of your societies—including equality of the sexes—have been my principles for years, excepting the first, which I now accept. But to the "sacred roll and book" I demur. It may be even so, but as I am careful, and possibly slow to prove all things, it is not yet so proven to my mind as to command belief.

Second—If I ought to unite, should I stay here or go to you? As a visitor I came hither one week ago. As you know, the location is favorable, the more aged members industrious, frugal, and in all substantial things worthy; and yet Conservative. Whereto they have attained, they literally walk by the same rule: not forgetting things behind, nor reaching forth to any new things before. I must reform and progress. They, especially Paulina Bryant, Chief Eldress, and all sisters including the children, are urging me to abide, and influence my wife and two daughters to come. With your people I know there is more congeniality and enjoyment. Here, more need of my work. Can it be done? Will they hear, or even forbear? May they—the Elders—not go so far as to forbid my efforts to reform? For their work hands and visitors they cook pork, lard, tea and coffee and other unclean things—using, themselves, these bad drinks—and raising swine on one part of their grounds—the mill. I fear they are sliding back to the world, in eating, drinking and drugging. Progress, in science—practical facts in God's works—they ignore, save four or five members. Can I be blessed with the wisdom of the serpent and harmlessness of the dove, sufficient to persuade them onwards and upwards? The few minds, here, in sympathy with progress, discourage the hope yet wish me to stay. Their property, worth near half a million, united with their great cause of human purity, is too much to be lost. But their agriculture, horticulture, house-keeping, hygiene, and in a word, all, needs improvement. Ought I, the least of all saints, to try in my humble way?

I enclose a testimonial as to a little of what I have done, and send you a copy of my treatise, years ago on suffrage.

In the confidence of a Christian Brother, I hope to receive your advice. They have extended, to me, the utmost kindness, and heard me, for twenty minutes, last Sabbath; but seem to fear widening from the old paths, not to say ruts. By no means would I change a jot of the first genuine faith; but desire to learn all the useful our Father has for us, in these latter days. As I expect to remain a week, or ten days longer, please write me here.

With due esteem and Christian regard, I am your unworthy Brother,

W. Perkins.

Have Dr. Trall's diploma, have treated sick for fifteen or twenty years, and lost but one patient, and he because he left my prescription.

W. P.

Mt. Lebanon, July 31, 1874.

W. PERKINS,

DEAR FRIEND—Your letter of 28th inst. is at hand. You ask if you can, "consistently, unite, without fully believing in the duality and sexuality of God, and in the inspiration and motherhood of Ann Lee."

Jesus asked the questioners, in his day—"How can ye believe, who seek honor, one of another?"

If any man will do the works, he shall know and understand the doctrine. The physical, moral and spiritual STATE, of a person, determines his or her power or capacity of belief.

We have, in our family, a person, who was obedient to and observant of the rules of the family, for about a year, before he traveled to deep, spiritual, religious conviction of sin; and believed, with all his heart, the doctrines of our system. I have been under the influence of the system, some forty-four years, and its principles and beautiful doctrines were never so brightly expanding, enlarging and absorbingly interesting, as at this present time. I would believe, because I could not help it; practice, because I could not, conscientiously, do otherwise—would preach it for the love of humanity, if left, like Elijah, all alone. I have life in myself.

The fruit of the Gospel tree attracts you to it. If you come as a little child—a learner—you will gather to and respect those who have done the works; but who do not yet fully know of the increase of the Gospel doctrines. If, in them, there be any love of self, any lack of self denial, that the increasing testimony—the second thunder—would take cognizance of, new comers have need of patience, until such as have been, for so many years, doing the will of God, in obeying the testimony of the first Gospel degree—the first thunder—shall receive their reward, which will be power to "increase with the increase of God." "To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God and Daughters of God." That was the pay they received. It will be so with the old Believers—genuine Shakers.

You need the Gospel that they have lived. They need the increase that you see, but have not yet lived. You can well afford to bear with them, if they can bear with you. You should not rebel against them because of the truths they do not yet practice. And they, in the Christ spirit, can do nothing against the truths, you see, but cannot reduce to practice until you do the first works which they have done—confess and forsake all the sins you see in yourself, and hate the flesh. Hate your own generative life, with all the relations growing out of it, without hating your own person or hating any other persons. Fulfill all contracts, or legally dissolve them. Perform all duties that that order has created.

I do not see how you can help believing in the duality of God—except from bad diet—for all things are dual. If you believe in God as the fountain from whence so many dual streams flow, "believe also in me," and with me, that God is and is dual. And so with the motherhood of Ann Lee. Why, she had four natural children, and she has thousands of spiritual children, yourself included. Will you deny her motherhood? If you did not believe her inspiration, verbally, believe for her works' sake. But you do believe. Lord help your unbelief.

As to the "Sacred Roll" and "Wisdom's Book," some believers had as good a right to make fools of themselves, about two books, as the whole of Christendom had, to do so, for centuries, about one book which they had made. When the Israelites had made a calf of choice things, they worshiped it for a little while, until they became ashamed of themselves. After worshipping Jesus so long, what if we did worship Ann Lee for a season? And after bowing down, for ages, to the idol King James set up—the Bible—what if we did bow down, for a few years, to two books, that ourselves had made? They contain almost as much good as the Protestant male book, and a great deal less evil. At least, they did represent duality.

Under our anti-Christian education, when Spiritualism broke out among us, we mistook it for Religion. In the beginning, what was supernatural was Divine and Holy. The Instruments were Angels, and the Spirits were the Lord God, Amen. Now we know the Spirits were no better than they should be, and that the Instruments were men and women, of like passions, subject to the same infirmities as our poor selves. That is all. A word to the wise, who discern the principle, is sufficient.

As to your remaining there, or coming here, it is only a question whether you will be an affliction and an infliction to Pleasant Hill, or to Mt. Lebanon.

Some body will have to suffer many things on your account before you become identified with the institution—flesh of its flesh and bone of its bone—for, until you "eat my flesh and drink my blood," said Jesus, you will have no part with me. That means suffering. It means a baptism of the Christ Spirit, and all the gifts and graces flowing from obedience—spiritual obedience.

You ask my advice, as a Christian Brother, and in a rough, off hand way, I give it. But I love you, have been pleased with the feeling and sphere of your letters.

As you have found a certain relation to Pleasant Hill and its ruling Elders, I prefer to let them "advise" as to your location of settlement.

Wherever you can receive, from the Institution, the most good and be the most benefited, personally, you will do the most good.

Fraternally,

F. W. Evans

SHAKER CENTENNIAL.

Mt. Lebanon, August 6, 1874.

BELoved J. M. PEEBLES:

Your last, from New York, is under my eye. If any thing I write comforts or strengthens you in your life work as a Christ Prophet—a diffuser of light and purity—life from the inner Heavens—I am "glad, and rejoice," I live to be and do good.

One hundred years ago, to-day, Mother Ann Lee and her little band landed in New York, on Sabbath eve. They were in a new world, having fled from the face of the monster, blasphemously calling itself the Church of Christ—the Episcopalian Church of Old England—a powerful Hierarchy which was forever pointing the poor of the earth to the heavens, there to behold a crucified Jesus, standing, with pierced hands and feet and bleeding side, pleading for those whom they, the priests, had robbed of their inheritance in the land; and then employed press-gangs to force them into the English armies and navies to fight for their God and King, whom, in their hearts, they cursed, and looked upwards to see if there were not better Gods and beings, than their God and King.

In the "Beecher-Tilton scandal," there is more than the public or even your own dear self may imagine.

It is not persons, but principles and systems. It means Babylon. Generation and Christianity mixed, God, not man, is in it. It is the judgment of Protestantism in America, even as Catholicism is being judged in Europe. Does not Europe possess her infallible Pope? And does not America possess an image of that infallible Pope, in every one of her great, popular preachers and leaders? War "the Bible and Sharp's Rifles," are component parts of Protestantism as of Catholicism.

How long since Church and State Clergy were slave holders? Some being slaves and Christian ministers too. It is judgment day. The revelation of the Christ Spirits is, increasingly, brighter and brighter. The Christ Angels do often obsess the public men, like T. K. Beecher, Chapin, Chever, Tyng and H. W. Beecher, and corresponding leading women. And in the "fervent heat" of their inspiration, cause them to forget themselves, and to utter sentiments and advance ideas, consistent only with Shaker theology. This creates confusion in their own minds, and great incongruity between their life conduct, and their preaching is the result. Not that they, as men and women, are "sinners above all others." But being quickened by Christ Angels, and their spiritual powers developed, they are capable of sinning beyond the power of the unbaptised. If their light be turned to darkness—to do evil—how great the darkness! And how transcendent the evil!!

When the seven plagues are fulfilled in Babylon, and the seven devils—of which the prostitution of the reproductive powers is chief—are cast out, war and poverty will not be. The noble, cultivated powers and faculties of our intellectual giants and giant-esses, will be left free for the service of Heavenly Ministering Angels, who are hovering—brooding—over the whole of Babylon—Catholic, Greek and Protestant. And their rest from self serving, will be glorious.

Repentant Peter—the symbol of Rome, which has denied and crucified the true Christ for 1,260 years—will become their Father. And Mary Magdalen—the symbol of Protestantism—will be their Mother.

Babylon—Flesh and Spirit Order—is fallen—is fallen—before the Angel of Spiritualism, and Harvesting Angels follow on to attend unto, and cut down the wheat and tares, which are so inextricably mixed and interblended, that none other than Christ Spirits could or would do any thing with them. Such as call upon the name—character—of true Shakers, will be saved. For in Christ's second appearing, there is salvation from the "sins of the world," that are, even now, "accusing the Saints of God day and night continually." And swamping the fleshmongering amphibious Christians—Priests and People—in Pilgrim's Slough of Despond.

Write and tell me you will be, in spirit, if not in body, at our social gathering.

Fraternally,

F. W. Evans.

AS YOU SOW, SO WILL YOU REAP.

THE man who undertakes to live two lives will find that he is living but one, and that one is a life of deception. Causes will be true to their effects. That which you sow you will reap. If you live to the flesh, to the passions, to the corrupt inclinations, you may depend upon it that the fruit which is in store for you will be that which belongs to these things. There can be no doubt as to what your harvest will be. If you think that after your day's business is done you can shut the blinds and carry on your orgies in secret with your evil companions; if you think that you can serve the devil by night, and then go forth and look like a sweet and virtuous young man, that goes in the best society, and does not drink nor gamble, nor commit any vice, then the devil has his halter about your neck, and he leads you, the stupidest fool in all the crowd. You deceive nobody but yourself. There is an expression in your eyes that tells stories. Passions stain clear through. A man might as well expect to take nitrate of silver—whose nature is to turn him to a lead color—and not have the doctor know it, as to expect that he can form evil habits and pursue mischievous courses and not have it known. It does not need a sheriff to search out and reveal the kind of life that you are living. Every law of God in nature is an officer after you. It does not require a court judge and jury to try and condemn you. All nature is a court room, and every principle thereof is a part of that court which tries and condemns you. Do not think that there can be such a monstrous misadjustment of affairs as that you can do this work of the devil and have the remuneration of an angel.—H. W. Beecher.

CANAAN, VT., August 12, 1874.

ELDER F. W. EVANS—My dear friend—Your kind favor of August 10, inviting me to be among you upon the occasion of your social gathering, was duly received. And, though against my heart's wishes, must say it will be impossible for me to be present, in body, owing to previous lecture engagements. But I promise to be with you in spirit and the fellowship of heart, which seeks the good of common humanity. Created social beings, it is eminently proper to occasionally meet and mingle upon the intellectual and spiritual planes of life for mutual benefit. Such seasons, comparable to oases, are highly enjoyable. Often do I mourn, because deprived (traveler and pilgrim as I am) of the privilege of oftener meeting congenial souls—those whose sympathies are aflame with reform; whose aspirations reach up to the heavens; whose natures have been quickened by baptismal fires, and who, standing upon the mount of vision, walk even now with the angels of the resurrection. The date of this assures you I am in Canaan, where lecturing upon spiritualism, and reflecting upon the signs of the times, there comes to me this old hymn:

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand, and cast a wishful eye,
To Canaan's fair and happy land, where my possessions lie."

The banks of mortal life are truly "stormy" and almost fainting by the way, we often cast "wishful eyes" toward spiritual Canaan the Zion of eternal peace and rest. Do we see alike the signs of the times? The old theological heavens and the political earths are being rolled up like a scroll. The social world is in a terrible ferment. The devil seems let loose for a little season. Surely "the judgment is set." And yet, beyond present storms are lightning skies. God has not forsaken the world; Christ angels are inviting; the reapers have come and are thrusting in their sickles; the chaff and stubble of fashions, forms and creeds, and man-made institutions, are being burned up by the unquenchable fires of eternal truth. The granite rock of righteousness is laid bare—and upon "this rock," with its seven thunders and seven steps of holiness, an order of society is being built, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail. Weary not, O brothers and sisters, ye are the first fruits, prophecies of the coming harvests. Upon your forehead the angels have written the word Faithful. The teachings of purity, peace, and "all things in common," are based upon the foundation of eternal truth and justice. They lead to heaven, to salvation, to-day; to the Zion of our God. I must come up to Mt. Lebanon—the New Jerusalem of the country and century—this fall.

I recently had an excellent letter from Elder Eades, of South Union. He is rich in faith, and full of hope for the future. Remember me most kindly to all present—"One family, we dwell in him—one church above, beneath."

My sincere prayer is, that God and good angels may bless you, one and all.

Most cordially thine,

J. M. Peebles.

MT. LEBANON, August 16, 1874.

G. F. TRAIN—MY DEAR FRIEND,

I want to hear from you—and to see you. Next Wednesday, if you will be here, you shall have the rare privilege of attending our Social Gathering. You would be the first outsider who has ever attended. I have invited Peebles, but do not much expect him. This invitation is to you, on the ground of friendship, and the self-denial you practice, in abstaining from fleshly lusts and fleshly food. Come by G. F. Train, on Harlem Express, to New Lebanon Depot, then to North Family.

F. W. Evans.

TURKISH BATH HOTEL, 41 W. 26TH ST.,
NEW YORK, August 19, 1874.

DEAR ELDER EVANS:

Head and shoulders over Sects, Dogmas, Creeds, Lawyers, Doctors, Priests, Politicians and Beechers, the Disciples of Ann Lee have jumped the fence of bigotry, fanaticism and superstition—holding Church and State, consuming wars, Inundations, Famine and Panics, at arm's length. They are victorious, over the Appetites and the Passions.

Startling changes are so near at hand, I seem chained here, as by fate. It may be Revolution.

What binds us, in affinity, is Truth. I want to meet you and yours, but destiny keeps me still, a Hermit. Some time I will come, but not now. The Fruit is not yet ripe. The Harvest is not ready for the Reapers. The Dead Carts will soon come round, and Property will have no value. That thins out the diseased, in body and pocket. Beecher's fall leads the way.

All your Ideas will prevail. Nobody will eat flesh, use Tobacco, drink Alcohol, chew Opium, nor destroy manhood—by and by. The Nation is Psychologizing, fast. The Electric Current is being magnetized into man, and I cannot move yet. So, say all manner of kind things to your people, and take much good will for yourself.

Geo. Francis Train.

MT. LEBANON SHAKERS.

[From the Albany Evening Times.]

Mt. Lebanon Shakers, the largest and richest community of that peculiar class of people in the United States, with possibly one exception in the west. On my return I took the road which leads through the settlement, and stopped for a few moments chat with Elder Evans, the leading apostle of Shakerism of the present day. The neatness, plainness and regularity for which this people are proverbial were apparent in every detail. Even the ox carts lying idle under the sheds were arranged at exactly equal distances from one another, and their neaps were not allowed to point one hair's breadth to the right or the left. Elder Evans welcomed me with quiet hospitality, and invited me to dinner, which was prepared by one of the sisters, and was of plain, but wholesome abundance. I had but a few minutes to spare, and could not go over the place as I very much wished to. The number now in the community is about four hundred.

Elder Evans said that the story, that the society was decreasing in numbers and would soon die out, was as old as the society itself. Shakerism, he said, was the ripened fruit of humanity, and if its believers dwindled in numbers, it was the fault of humanity and not of the system. Shakerism was as dependent upon the outside world as the apples upon the tree. If there was any falling off, it was on account of the low state of the religious sentiment in the world. He believed that a grand revival would take place ere long; the religious feeling would be quickened, and then Shakerism would be benefited thereby. The principles of communism and celibacy, he said, were adhered to by those who attained to the highest religious life among all people. They were found even among the Brahmins of India. He had recently been in communication with the leaders of the Mennonites, who are soon expected in this country. Among them was a class who believed as the Shakers did, and it had been suggested that on arriving here, they should unite with them, and such an arrangement seemed altogether probable.

"We are living," said he, "in the highest form of religious life yet attained to by mankind. Others have lived lives of chastity, but in monastic cells, or in the cloister. Here the sexes live together, yet apart. The result is that the passions are finally subdued, or the unsuccessful ones go out from among us and marry."

Regretting that I had no more time to spend with this remarkable philosopher, fanatic, saint, or what you will, and regretting still more that Shakers did not take summer boarders, I bid the Elder adieu and departed out of their coasts.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN writes to his favorite paper: "Having eaten no meat, eggs, fish, oysters poultry, or animal food of any kind for many months, all the ancient argument, antagonism, ferocity of my nature has died out, and yet I am in savage health and terrible mental vigor. I never imagined a Bengal tiger could be transformed into a Mongolian sheep by Turkish baths and a vegetable diet. I suppose the new religion of evolution has helped to make the change. I am either incubating some gigantic power to develop love and truth in mankind, or I have culminated in the most magnificent fizzle produced for centuries."

INDISCRIMINATE READING.

KING SOLOMON, the Temple builder, who lived in what is termed the fifth age of the world, is said to have been a very wise man. He admonished the people in his time, that "Of making many books, there was no end"—that happiness did not consist in much study—but in fearing God and keeping the injunctions given through the Law and the Prophets. What would that preacher of olden time, say, if he lived in the present book-making, newspaper-reading age?

We have no account that Jesus wrote any books. It is said, that upon a certain occasion, "he stooped and wrote with his finger on the ground;" but much has been written by others concerning his marvelous doings and sayings; and one of his disciples supposed, "that if all he said, and did, should be chronicled, the world could not contain the books." We will suppose that he referred to the world of mind then in existence—not to the earth: for books have rapidly increased from that time unto the present, and thousands of volumes are published from year to year, and yet there is room.

Jesus, the Anointed, came seeking fruit. He said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." His sayings were fraught with wisdom, but he exemplified his mission by his life deeds, as fully as by his words. He sought to embody all true principles in his own life and character—to be a living open volume—an epistle that could be read of all (spiritually minded) men and women. Would it not be wise for the present generation of people, to copy the example of Jesus, to some extent,—write less, and practice more—read less, and work more? i. e. Write what is true and useful, and read to gain knowledge that is worthy to be reduced to practice; not to kill time, nor for the lust of reading, which is done to a great extent by the present and rising generations, to their injury. If we judge of the moral status of man and women, by the company they keep, with the same propriety we may judge of private individual character, by the books which they surround themselves with. Light or obscene reading creates morbid mental appetites, and is a sure indication that those who indulge in it, are prostituting the noble faculties of the human mind to base uses.

In a recent number of the R. P. Journal, we notice the following: "Let a man capable of judging, travel through ten, or twelve States, visit three hundred families in the cities and country, and make special enquiry in each what the general reading of the family consists of; then if he should be asked what the American people read, I think he would say—The upper classes read fiction, fashion, fable and allegories; the lower classes, fiction, fashion, love and ghost-stories. Our fathers and grandfathers had no such reading. It was not in existence then. But the present generation has been reared in it. And by it, the whole country is filled with folly, fashion and wine."

Novel reading is bewitching; it is designed to act upon and stimulate the animal passions, and corrupt the minds of those who give their time and attention to it. They taste, and thirst for more; and the youth of our land are eagerly drinking of those poisonous waters; and they inhale the foul atmosphere, which surrounds those impure fountains, which is as deadly minus to the moral and spiritual part of their being.

As truly, as all food taken into the stomach goes to form bone and muscle, and the blood which courses through the veins, and to make up the physical frame of a man or woman, so the mental food—what the mind receives—thinks upon, and communes with, whether in reading or otherwise, forms and animates the soul which dwells in the material body—the tenement which is given for use while in the earth life, and not for abuse.

How great the necessity, that we carefully select good and pure food for the body and the mind; for we cannot escape the results. As we value health and happiness, let us strive to avoid all disease-producing causes. Light, trashy literature, will never be sought for, nor indulged in by true Reformers, and Saviors of our race. Those who desire to save others from intemperance, and to uplift those who have prostituted their God-given powers to sensuality, and thus become the victims of crime, must themselves be temperate and prove their integrity by being virtuous and honest. And to accomplish this, the avenues of the heart must be guarded, that no influence in the guise of friend, or foe, that would throw one poisonous dart to corrupt the thoughts,—dim the vision—or pervert the understanding, be suffered to approach.

We shall, if consistent, select the best company that we can find—neither giving nor accepting evil communications—but be ready at all times to turn from every influence that would allure to false and carnal pleasure. We shall remember that every book, and paper that we read, bears the impress of the author's mind; and as we come into rapport with them, we receive either life, or death to our spirits.

We have many times sorrowed in spirit, to see talent which should have been dedicated to high and noble purposes, employed in writing romance and novels to stimulate unhalloved desires, and to make money. Let all lovers of virtue spurn such literature, and cultivate a taste for the good and useful; and form a character which they can themselves respect. Then, they will never fail of having the confidence and respect of others.

When such shall have finished their course in this life, they will "lift up their eyes to the everlasting hills," as did Jesus their prototype, and say "The hour is come," Father, Mother, glorify us as we have glorified God on earth. Give us to drink of the cup of joy with purified saints in mansions of peace and rest. As Jesus and Ann, through the Christ baptisms, became one with the Father, Mother, God, so make us one with them! And the response will be given, "Amen, even so shall it be."

OUR CENTENNIAL.

ABOUT a hundred years ago a little company of nine embarked from the shores of England to find a spot where they could carry out the principles they had received from the Spirit of good, which were leading them to seek for purity of heart and life, as the means of attaining the holiness required of God as the first condition of millennial dawning.

Instructed from the Spirit world that this work was to have its growth and fulfilment in this country, struggling at that time for freedom, they forsook the land which had so bitterly persecuted them for their strange and unwelcome testimony of truth, and, for nearly three months, were confined to the narrow limits of a small sailing vessel, the bark Maria. Feeling called upon to go forth in their simple worship, they did so, which aroused the enmity of the Captain to that degree that he threatened to throw them overboard. But a violent storm succeeding, the ship sprung a leak, and the captain, in terror, said "they must all perish before morning." But Mother Ann told him to be of "good cheer." She had seen two shining angels standing by the mast who assured her that not a hair of their heads should be harmed but they should arrive safely in America. She then went to work with them in bailing the water, and so inspired the men, that they were kept afloat until a wave striking the vessel, restored the plank to its place.

In like manner she inspired the little handful of followers while suffering hardships after their arrival, in the wilderness of Niskayuna, with the same precious faith in the power of God, which called them to forsake all for the Christ principle.

Although she did not, like her Lord and Master, receive her inspiration soon enough to save her in virgin purity, still, she, through suffering and struggle, obtained redemption from a sinful nature, and was made meet to be a co-worker, with him, for the redemption of a lost world. There seems such a depth of wisdom, such a fullness of love and such a martyr-like heroism, in her character and mission, such an entire obedience to the spirit of truth revealed to her; and that truth so difficult for woman's lips to utter—so shocking to the sensitive ear of man-made modesty—that I can revere, and scarcely refrain from worshipping that devoted one. The good, the true and the Christ-like in her I do worship. I regard it as an emanation from the All-Good, and as a blessed pattern for my imitation. The world has its war and blood heroes, and who shall say there is no need of Spiritual and celestial heroes?—whole souled devotees to the elevation of the race through an entire abrogation of self, save in the perfecting of their own spirits by the practice of the Christian okeness: squaring their lives by the precepts of Christ that they may become fit temples for the spirit of God, and to perform the master's use?

In times of danger or persecution it seemed as though her own safety, or comfort, were but minor considerations; and while she would shed tears at the sufferings of others, her own spirit became so free from the operations of a selfish nature that she could trust in the almighty arm to shield and protect her while uttering her most unwelcome truths. The weak and craven fear of harm, or defeat, seemed to find no room in her soul; but "perfect love cast out all tormenting fear," and fulfilled the scripture saying "The righteous are bold as a lion," yet "harmless as doves." Indeed, the dove-like Spirit of the Christ, seems to awaken so much that is most lovely and commendable in its receiver, that it wins a sort of homage and respect, from even those whose lives are rebuked by its spirit, testimony and life; and they behold the Christ in his works; when a Pharasaic, self-asserting spirit, would only awaken the corresponding element in them, by arousing their combativeness. Oh! for the lion and the lamb to fraternize so completely, that the product will be a noble, genial, unselfish individuality, inspiring peace and happiness, instead of distrust and envyings, and eliminating the pure joy and simplicity, of which even the child can partake!

The goodness of Mother's heart, is manifested in her enduring such powerful and continued mental and spiritual conflicts, for the release-ment of her own soul, into the freedom of perfect purity, in the shortest possible time; for she was a faithful warrior, and ceased not, until Satan, coming, could find nothing in her to respond. But its greatness is none the less manifest, which enabled her to meet physical hardships and perils—self-denials and sufferings—and indeed, to shrink at nothing which came in the way, as a result of her spirit's obedience to truth.

Noble, heroic mother! may thy daughters share largely in thy courage and love, and a host of brave and self-denying sons rise up to call thee Blessed. Surely in the contemplation of such a whole-souled pattern and leader and of such a cloud of witnesses as have been harvested during these passing years, we may keep a joyful centennial in our hearts, though it find no outward demonstration.

And while we contemplate the past growth and increase, must we not still pray that the sickle-bearing angel of truth, may reap many souls from the rapidly whitening fields of nature, which we know must have become arid and barren to them spiritually, that in the garner of life they may become "bread for hungry souls."

"Hail, thou victorious gospel
And that auspicious day
When Mother safely landed
In Hudson's lovely bay!"

E. H. Webster, Harvard, Mass.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE following letter may be interesting to some of the readers of our paper, when they learn that the writer, who was then in good health, died suddenly in about a month's time after she wrote it. It was not designed to be made public, and we withhold the name.

DEAR SISTER ANTOINETTE:

Friend F. W. Evans recommended me to write to you, dear sister, and gladly I avail myself of the opportunity. "Write just as you feel," he said; but my heart is so full I hardly know where to begin. That good man (F. W. E.) wrote such a beautiful reply to my first letter of inquiry—and sent me papers—then, when he came to the city, he called to see me; and I feel very grateful for such kindness. I believe he represents numbers who are like himself.

Well, I feel, dear sister, that my greatest need at present, is to be a silent listener to your teaching. Friend Evans has done me more good than all the teachers, doctors and nurses, I ever had in my life. He swept through the old and new testament, from the beginning of Genesis, to the end of Revelation—and set it before me in a brand new dress—common sense.

After he left, I fished up my poor little bible, that was banished several years ago to the bottom of a "Saratoga" trunk; and with unfeigned humility asked its pardon. Now, I will read—think and think:—by and by I will come to some thing, that will neither clear away, nor let me pass. Then, may I come to you for instruction dear sister? I shall soon have to enter my profession again, and shall feel so much stronger under the influence of your love. I will hurry, and finish my work here—and then—if you all think best—"come home." O how those words inspired me!

I hope my brain is safely through—done forever with the molting condition—and that this new crop of feathering ideas, under sound Shaker nourishment, may grow up into strong, useful quills.

I believe there are many right here in this very city, who are starving for just such food as Elder Evans gave me yesterday! how much I wished, when he was talking, that the room could have been filled with appreciative listeners! How are they to be reached? for that class seldom speak their minds—they see nothing to satisfy their souls—and they sink in despair!

A young, and beautiful girl, started with me in the career of life, whose brilliant future was prophesied by all who knew her; and whose untimely death was caused, without a doubt, by her utter abhorrence of the poisonous materialism with which she was surrounded. Her last words to me were "I am going where I shall have less trouble in making myself understood; and if you love me, bid me God-speed." It is easy to understand what a "Pearl of great price" Shakerism would have been to her, and it is sad to reflect, how many are lost for the want of true knowledge.

But I have encroached too much upon your time, and must bring my letter to a close.

Please remember me kindly—and in Celtic phrase, I will say to all those under the immediate sunshine of your blessed faith—"May your shadows never grow less." Affectionately yours,

K. S.

ANSWER.

MY DEAR FRIEND:

Yours of the 13th inst., came to me by last evening's mail. I was pleased with its contents from beginning to end. I love the breathings of your spirit—your frankness—sincerity and child-like dependence. That "old book" that has so quietly rested in the "trunk," contains some beautiful instructions, "profitable," to those of enlightened understanding, "for doctrine, reproof and correction, that the man, or woman of God, may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works." If we give heed to the instructions of that book, we cannot give to the children a stone, when they ask for bread; neither say to them, when cold and naked, "be ye warmed and fed," without imparting to them of our treasures.

Our heavenly Father and Mother—God—give freely to those who ask, if they ask in faith and sincerity. If we freely receive, it is our duty to freely give. This is the reason, dear child, that I take the earliest opportunity to reply to yours, that you may feel, we have ears to hear and hearts to sympathize with you, in your aspirations for a higher life. Verily, my friend, God hath dealt kindly and generously with us; and after many years' experience, we are enabled to say, that the eyes, ears and hearts, of those who seek pleasure in worldly things—in unrighteousness—can neither see, hear, nor understand the things that God hath prepared for those who love him so truly, that they consecrate all to his service; and, who not merely say, "Lord—Lord," and retain all that is self-pleasing, and think to pay their way to heaven and happiness, by giving a large salary to a hireling priest-hood—as they would pay their fare from New York to Cincinnati, in a railroad car; but through self-sacrifice, and toil, they gain the treasures of eternal life. Such find the highway that is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in. The waters of the great deep (sea of worldly, carnal pleasure,) are dried up, and truth lovers will pass over and come unto Zion, joyfully. They will gladly leave the house of bondage in the dark and shadowy land and seek to find the place, where broad streams and rivers flow; where are green and living pastures, warmed and vivified by the sunlight of truth and Divine revelation.

I wish you were free from all claims that the world has upon you, that you might "Come home now" and take with us the Christ's cross, and with us wear the victor's crown! While duty calls you to remain where you are, you may come in spirit, or by letter, to me—to us—and freely make known your feelings and desires; and while you are thus separated from us, attending to present duties, if you feel at times that you are surrounded by temptation, and dangers attend you, remember your Shaker friends. Come to us, and we will give you love that is not of the world, to strengthen, shield and protect you. Ask any question freely, and we will be honest and deal frankly with you. If we possess knowledge of the true Christian life and character which you are not in possession of, we have received that knowledge through practical obedience to truth, and from spiritual guides and teachers, who are progressed beyond us, and we have no cause for boasting; but freely impart to others, of the treasures that have been so mercifully bestowed upon us.

We are thankful to know, there are many, at this time like yourself, who are ready to burst their swaddling clothes—open their eyes to simple truth—and leave the dark shadows of mysticism which have gathered around the bible by false teachers and worldly interpreters, until all has become a myth. With you, I sorrow in spirit that those who would thankfully receive food for their fasting souls, do not know where to seek it.

We must pray to God to send Agencies to them, as he has done to you, to show them the way, the truth, and the life.

That good Being, who endowed us with reason and intelligence, will never ask us to surrender those God-given powers, in regard to religion. Reason, Science and Religion are in perfect accord. So hope on—hope ever—Write whenever you feel like it.

Thine in Christian friendship.

Antoinette Doollittle.

MORNING LIGHT.

LET not thy sight be dim, nor thine ear heavy. For the daughter of Zion calleth to the multitude of "erring sisters" whose mental and physical doings cast a dark shadow over the future destiny of the race.

She would fain speak into their hearts words that burn, and breath into their souls inspirations that would effect a radical change in their lives.

Creative agency is placed within the province of human responsibility, being wholly committed to the power of man, and woman. And I am moved by deep sympathy, to make a friendly effort to aid those suffering females, who have been drawn into the vortex of "social evil" by ignorance, or poverty. The native innocence and original purity of thousands of the young and inexperienced are destroyed by their imbibing false principles. O that the warning instructive voice of reason might be heard like a faithful friend, forewarning children and youth with knowledge to protect them from impending danger.

A voice from the higher spheres has long been calling to the inhabitants of earth to come out, and away from the haunts of infamy, and to engage in some useful manual occupation. It will be admitted that the formation of habits, either indulgence, or self-restraint, is the foundation of that character which is noble, pure and good, or dark, infamous and degraded. The strongest love, is often tributary to an evil influence—lust. The children of this world, who marry and give in marriage, are not yet subjects of the new, spiritual birth.

Come forth ye heroic daughters of the nineteenth century, and protest against the "social evil," which ruins so many thousands. You have been nobly engaged in overthrowing intemperance, which goes hand in hand with other sensual passions of mankind.

By a mighty struggle, the slave was liberated from bondage! Woman has grappled with the monster intemperance; now let her, with the besom of power in her hand, sweep the social evil out of existence, and restore to herself the order of times and seasons, and teach it her children, and her children's children.

O ye heroines, turn from the temptations of vice,—assert the dignity of womanhood! Sever the bands of death—sensual sexuality—then will the spiritual powers of the soul, which should pervade the whole being, limit the tide of excess. Come unto Wisdom, with the whole heart, and the royal scepter of power will be placed in your hands, that will insure victory, and give joy and rest.

Rhoda Blake, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE daily habits of every boy and girl are materials with which they are building up their characters, and every repetition has the effect of strengthening them for good or evil. Justice, benevolence, honor, integrity and self-control are no ephemeral blossoms that a day's sunshine can call into being and a night's frost can wither and kill. They grow slowly and develop gradually, but once rooted firmly in the heart and trained by constant exercise, they will prove sturdy, healthful, long-lived plants that will bear rich and abundant fruit. It is not enough to teach; we must also train. It is not enough to tell the child what is right; we must accustom him to love its atmosphere. So with self-culture. If we would become nobler and more virtuous, we must habituate ourselves to the constant exercise of pure thoughts, generous affections, noble and disinterested deeds.

HALLOWED MOUNTAIN.

—O—

Blest mountain, I view thee with deep admiration!
Thy lands are enchanting and lovely to me;
I've drunk at thy fountains, and pass'd through thy burnings,
I've wash'd in thy Jordan my soul to set free.
Thou art the sweet home of my youthful enjoyments;
Fond hopes and bright futures then center'd in thee;

I bow'd at thy altars, the shrines of the living,
And gain'd the protection that bath shelded me.

Again I've ascended thy summit of beauty;
I've sat at thy base in humility bow'd;
There pray'd to my heavenly father and mother,
Lost I should be taught, exalted or prond.
How kindly they listen'd to humble entreaties—
Those low earnest breathings that rise from the soul—

They sent to me bread, by the hands of the angels
And life giving water, which maketh all whole.

When thy skies were darken'd with clouds of affliction,
The flash of the lightning played fearfully round;
O then have I trembled, and sought for repentance—

I've shudder'd and shrunk at the thunders deep sound!

And when they were brighten'd with smiles more propitious—

The bright-golden sunshine illumin'd the day—
I drank the sweet dews that were falling from heaven,

And gather'd rich flowers that grew on the way.

How can I but love thee, fair mountain of glory!
My heart has one aim, and my spirit one care;
'Tis ever to serve the Eternal who formed me
And built on thy heights the great Temple of Pray'r!

So glorious and holy are all thy surroundings,
Here Seraphs of mercy and Cherubim rest,
The Lord's house of honor and praise they are guarding,

By myriads of shining immortals, 'tis blest.

Here reigneth the King of the first resurrection,
Revealing the means of salvation from sin;
The Queen in her loveliness stands in the kingdom—

They call to the sh-sick, O come, enter in!
And now, as I'm viewing thy vast elevation—
Repeating the eulogies—sacred to thee,
I think when a lone little wanderer in nature,
How I was call'd hither thy glory to see.

Jane Emily Smith, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

DRESS.

—O—

As our little Bark arrives in port every month, laden with rich stores of good things from the "Delectable Land," there is one important subject that has been treated rather sparingly, the subject of Dress—the love of which, fills the human mind, and engrosses much of the time and attention of the present age.
Some kind of dress is a necessity. But dressing for show, is woman's folly, her proclivities are to overdress, without reference to use or modesty. And her vanity is apparent in this respect, both within and outside of the so-called Christian Churches of the day. Human nature is the same in all ages, differing in degree.

In Apostolic times, the same spirit sought entrance, and Timothy and Peter gave some strong admonitions concerning it. They taught, that instead of adorning the outward person with gold—plaiting the hair—and putting on costly and useless apparel—they should clothe the inner man and woman with the incorruptible—"a meek and quiet spirit —chaste conversation," which in the sight of God is of great price.

We do not need to go back to Paul, the minister of the Corinthian Church, centuries ago, to learn that "the fashions of the world pass away"—not the marriage institution only, of which he was then speaking—but its fashions in dress also. The marriage vows, at the present time, do not even retain much of their former sanctity; however high the priest may stand, who sanctions the contract, it gives way, before the latitudinarian, as a rope of sand. Gaudy attire is the concomitant of sensuality—the handmaid that seeks to cover up the diseases of the body and soul—by garments of purple and scarlet—gold and costly pearls. Was Paul severe, when he pointed out heady, highminded, incontinent men, as finding their way into houses to lead captive silly women—those who dress gaily with the intention of enticing and drawing such men to them? And is it strange that such persons should be the servants of low sensual desires and passions? They who give their minds wholly to pleasure-seeking—and to fashionable dress, which is ever changing, so that they have no time to devote to the good, the useful, and the true, are in a pitiable condition of servitude, whether they profess to be shining Christians, or shining infidels.

When the Methodist denomination were a living people, and possessed the vitalizing power of God, their faith led them to dress so plainly that they were easily known. Where are they now? Verily their glory, which consisted in Christian plainness and simplicity, has departed.

Among the many Reforms and Reformers, which are now agitating the public mind, and shaking society to its very center, few, comparatively, have given their attention to the subject of Dress Reform. If strong minded women could possess the moral courage to stem the tide of popular opinion, and adopt some mode of dress—plain—comfortable and modest; and not swerve from their purpose, until they had accomplished a radical reformation in the dress of women, thousands would eventually rise up and call them blessed for the good done to humanity.

When the time arrives that woman is accorded her legitimate right to sit in the Legislative halls—not as spectator—but as Arbiter, co-operating with men, in framing and sustaining the laws of the land, then may we not hope that she will rise to the dignity of true womanhood, and nobly vindicate the justice of her position, by showing that she has a mind that can grasp substantial things—a mind that cannot be veered by the capricious winds of fashion, which, their origin considered, every noble minded woman would have cause to despise.

I must confess, that when I see the ludicrous style, and the extravagance of fashionable dress at the present time, I turn away in disgust. I feel like prostrating my body and bowing my spirit in gratitude to God, for the union and communion of those whose hearts are withdrawn from the world, and lifted above its vanities—and are seeking treasures that will not perish.

And with my dear Gospel Sisters, I would be more fervently engaged in the work of subduing those elements within, whence spring "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life," the foundation principles of the world. Only in thus doing can we fill the Christian character, and perform our mission to God's acceptance.

If we guard the avenues of the heart, and reject every temptation that would lead away from the simplicity of the truth, and induce to worldliness, in manners and dress, and in all things conform our lives to true Christian principles, then we shall become active workers in the temple of God, set upon the hill of truth, that will give light to the nations of the earth.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS.

—O—

ARE you happy and contented in your Shaker home? Do you never feel a desire to mix and mingle with the world, in its fashions, pleasures and life, in the generative order? Are you not so bound that you cannot withdraw from this people if you wish so to do? Is not life dull and monotonous, with you,—devoid of the social intercourse and entertainment which add cheer and pleasure in all its phases?

These and many other similar questions are often put to us by strangers. It is not strange that such thoughts and queries should arise in the minds of those who have never engaged in the cause, and have not been spiritually exercised to comprehend the work—its vital power of action—its inner attractions,— the centripetal force which holds us together, in a body, under "one Faith, one Lord, and one Baptism." To answer, lucidly and concisely, is a somewhat difficult task; especially to those who have been reared under the old theologies, which have been handed down from generation, to generation, through many centuries, and exist at the present time, as blinding dogmas, giving license to sinful indulgences, mixing flesh and spirit together.
Though we have valid reasons for the hope and faith that are within us, which lift us above the world, and guide us to the higher life; yet, we find as a general rule, people need a practical illustration presented to their outward vision. Hence, to such enquirers (if they are sincere), we say, Come and see what living faith, and works, combined, have produced.

The Shakers, to thousands of people, are a problem. That Shakers are celibates, are neat, clean and industrious, is understood by many. The Principles, producing such results, are understood by few.

Knowing the innate love of pleasures in young minds of the present age—seeking the gratification of the senses, to the greatest extent attainable—self will, and independence predominating, it is natural to wonder, how the young, especially, can find contentment and happiness within these supposed cloistered walls.

To the truly rational mind, happiness is but the result of virtue. This is the first idea to be gathered, by those who would dwell in the Shaker Order. True happiness can only be found in well doing; but so long has passion ruled the individual, instead of the individual ruling and governing the low propensities of their natures, that the power to control the lower, and develop the higher, is weakened, and seemingly lost in a chaos of worldly elements. To effect a change in things both natural and spiritual, is the design now carried into action by the Shaker Order.

To the first question, Are you happy and contented? we make this reply. Children, when first brought amongst us, seldom know why they come, further than to accord with the desire of their parents, who seek to protect them from the evils of the world without.
They enter a school, in which the disposition and germs of future growth and character are sought for. Growth from childhood years, is a continual developing, or unfolding of the principles which go to make the man and woman.

The faith and testimony of Christ's Second
Appearing, will either gather, or scatter.
Those, who from a lower organization develop the animal and sensual, are as a consequence, drawn back to the great magnet evil of the world; such cannot find happiness and comfort among this people, because they are out of their element. While, on the other hand, those who from a higher organism, develop the moral and spiritual; who love good, and desire purity, are strengthened and encouraged by those of riper age, who from a long experience of sacrifice and devotion to right principles, testify of the glorious reward. Such, find contentment and happiness, which no other religious Order or Sect, or Infidelism could in anywise afford.

And while the whole being is devoted,
through the reason and thought of maturer years, to eradicate every form and degree of evil from body and soul, and to establish the truth, with all its ennobling effects, in the heart and character, there is no desire whatever to mingle with the world in its ridiculous fashions, pleasures or pains. The generative life, in its highest forms, only tends to darken the understanding and breathe the blight of death to the angel-part in man and woman.
We are under no bonds save our own faith and conscience. That we are debarred from acting our free choice, is an erroneous idea—a dying echo of past fabled stories—created through enmity or by those who were ignorant of the principle of the institution. Those who choose a worldly life, are at liberty to have it, and are welcome to its enjoyments, if they find any therein, and also to the pains and vexations arising therefrom, which are manifold.

Jesus likened the kingdom of heaven to a net cast into the sea; bringing forth good and bad fishes—the good were preserved—the bad, cast into the sea again. Though we renounce the vain amusements of the world, and ever strive to hold the spiritual of greatest importance, in all the duties of life, that does not hinder a free and social enjoyment and intercourse one with another—exchange of good thoughts—ideas and feelings, and the development and promotion of every gift and talent.

Thus united as the heart of one, we are unitedly working together, striving to cement those links in the chain of life which will not be dissolved either on this or the other side of the river that flows, dividing time from eternity.

Elvah F. Collins, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

CONTENTMENT.

It is an old maxim, that "A contented mind is a continual feast."

There is, perhaps, nothing more certain to insure happiness, than an even temperament—a cheerful, contented disposition that can look at the bright side of things, even under adverse circumstances. Nor is there any thing that will more effectually prevent usefulness, and mar the happiness of individuals, or produce more unpleasant conditions in society, than the reverse of this.

The former looks for good, and finds it; and is quick to discern virtue in others, and to cover their defects with charity. While the latter, sees every fault, and magnifies it, and finds it much easier to see deformity, than beauty; and always inclines to put bitter for sweet.

If we would make life bright and happy, and have friends to love and care for us, we must, while young, cultivate such dispositions and habits as will make us agreeable and useful members of society. We cannot be too earnest in this; for upon it depends, in a large measure, our present and future happiness.

We shape our course, the joy or fear
 Of which, our coming life is made;
 And fill our future atmosphere,
 With pleasant sunshine, or with shade.

REVISION OF THE BIBLE.—It appears, from recent developments, that another revision of this book is now going on by a body of English scholars and theologians, and so thorough is the work to be done that it is expected to occupy altogether some eight or ten years. There is little doubt the bible needs an extensive revision, and there is much in it that, if left out altogether, would greatly improve it. But if it be truly the Word of God, how about these changes?—Cape Ann Advertiser.

THE GREAT HERESY.—There is one form of error so fatal, so persistent, so wide-spread, that it fairly may be called the great heresy. Its essence is this: Men regard religion, in some way, a substitute for right living, instead of the highest form of right living.

CANDY MANUFACTURERS AND CONSUMERS.

Com. Jourdan offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Frequent complaints have been made by the press and people that terra alba (which is nothing but plaster of Paris or gypsum), glucose, lamp black, sulphuric acid, aniline, verdigris, Brunswick green, gamboge, smalts, ultramarine, oil of turpentine, prussic acid, rotten cheese, fust oil, chrome yellow, and other drugs and compounds are largely used in the manufacture of cheap candies; and,

Whereas, The indiscriminate use of such poisonous drugs and compounds is considered deleterious to health.

Resolved, That the sanitary committee, or such officers of this board as they may direct, do thoroughly investigate and report to this board as soon as possible the mode and material used in the manufacture of all descriptions of wares and merchandise made or sold by confectioners, in order that children at least may be protected from the evil effects of the dangerous compounds which are sold under the description of candy.

In this connection Commissioner Jourdan stated that he had heard on good authority that terra alba is used in place of white sugar; glucose in place of gum arabic consists of mucilage of starch; lampblack, glue in place of gum arabic and liquorice; tonquin bean in place of vanilla; tartaric and sulphuric acids in place of lemon; aniline, a poisonous product of coal tar, in place of cochineal to color red candies; gamboge and chrome yellow in place of saffron to color yellow candies; smalt, verdigris, and Brunswick green to color blue and green candies; oil of turpentine for flavoring; rotten cheese and sulphuric acid to flavor pineapple drops.

Com. Palmer offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the sanitary inspectors be directed to inspect all the markets, vegetable and fruit stands, and report the number of street stands where fruits are sold, and the quality and condition of the fruits on said stands in their respective districts, at the meeting of the Board, August 4.—Brooklyn Union.

Cannot Believers substitute something for the children, in place of poisoned candies?

Or, some family manufacture candies, and sell to outsiders and to our own people?

Fossil oyster beds have been discovered above the snow line on the Rocky Mountains.

VISITING.

On the 5th instant, a company, of eight young Sisters, from the North, spent the day, at the Second Family. With faces beaming with satisfaction, they report a good time. And that their dinner was so rational, and simple its digestion did not, in the least, interfere with their social and spiritual love feast—their soul enjoyment.

They feel honored by the confidence reposed—their bodily wants being considered subordinate to sweet Gospel Union and Communion.

F. W. Evans.

THE closer together the parts of mechanism are brought the more noise and friction there will be. Just so with mind—or imperfect, undeveloped mind—that is not polished by the emery wheel of divine truth and order.

ONE ugly nature is enough to distemper an entire family; and, on the other hand, one light-shedding, joy-bearing nature is enough to restore the equilibrium of a disturbed family. Great is the power of a human soul.

EVOLUTION.

Will, Shakerism, if successful in its missionary designs, run the world out? Will it exterminate the race? Nay, Shakerism is the result of Evolution—the fruit of the tree of Humanity—Orderly Generation and prospective Regeneration.

The Law and the Prophets were until John, the last and greatest of the Prophets, who baptized Jesus with the Christ Spirit, and he became a Christian. Then the Kingdom of Heaven was preached, and all men progress toward it.

All, born into this world, die. All who die, unresurrected from the generative Order, will, in some of the hours of eternity, become Shakers. If right for some, while in the body, to rise, in the Resurrection Order, is it wrong for all others not to so rise? Or, if right for the many to live and perpetuate life, is it wrong for the few not to propagate? Is there any Law—of God—under which, to abstain from physical parentage, is a right and a duty? or can a man, or woman live a celibate life, in thought, word and deed, and be a perfectly developed human being—comfortable, useful and happy? And can a man, or woman become, to the highest degree, spiritualized, without refraining from amativeness on the physical plane? May flesh and spirit be united and constitute Christian husband, wife, father, mother, brothers, sisters, sons, daughters, houses and lands, on the Earth, as in Protestantism?

If generation be right, per se, is celibacy wrong? If Celibacy be right, per se, is generation wrong? Or are both right—each in its own Order—being different stages, phases, or cycles of human progress, under the Law of Evolution?

Or, is there but one plane of being, in this world, and one heaven and one hell, in the next? And, at death, do all go to one, or the other? If so, will children, who die before and after birth, with no developed character—having done neither good nor evil—all be in a lake of fire and brimstone, for eternity? Or will they be in a Paradise of glorious felicity, for which they are equally unprepared, and of which they are quite as undeserving?

Are the millions of Heathens, so called in theological and unhumanitarian contempt, all consigned to the aforesaid lake?

The principal difference between marrying, fighting, private-property-holding Christians, and these Heathens, consists in points of belief.

Comparing the Trinity, Atonement, Vicarious sacrifices, Physical Resurrection, Justification by faith without good actions, etc., with Buddhist Theology, the difference is largely in favor of the latter.

Shaker Probation, after death, solves knotty problems, and justifies the way of God to man.

How can persons believe right, unless they have the will to do right? Condition determines capacity. In Physiology, persons, who eat, drink, breathe, exercise bodily and mental powers, to their best perception of right today, may, to-morrow, see that in all these they were wrong.

To receive Truth, in the love of truth, unbiased by educational prepossession—to observe facts, gather ideas, compare, deduce and arrange, with the view to build up a system of truthful conduct, is noble. The reverse—using facts, ideas, knowledge, to sustain preconceived theory, for short-sighted, selfish purposes and habits, is ignoble. Thus, truth may be held in unrighteousness, and the Grace of God turned to licentiousness, war and covetousness.

Persecution, for mere belief, arises from unprogressed selfhood—fear of consequences that might flow from the admission of new truth. As the Catholic Priesthood feared the consequences of admitting that the earth revolved upon its axis, as Protestant Clergy and Doctors opposed Harvey's circulation of the blood, and now dispute the records of Geology, even as Paine disputed their Bible records, so does Tyndall paralyze generative Christianity, with discharges from the Battery of Scientific Truth.

BEAUTIFUL LAWNS.

Is there any intelligent Believer that does not admire a neatly kept lawn; whether the lawn be at home or abroad?

A short article on the subject might not be out of place, among the readers of our monthly, from one who has devoted a good deal of labor from his own muscles in that direction.

Our family Order, when obeyed by the inmates of our communities, is a protection from the accumulation of unsightly rubbish in our dooryards, by disallowing liquids or garbage to be thrown out of the windows, to lodge around the house.

I claim to be an admirer of the beautiful, but, have never yet been able to see beauty in ever so choice a flower or shrub left to grow up surrounded with coarse rank weeds, or to be choked with grass.

Nothing of an earthly nature have I more admired than those palace-like residences, with their neatly appointed lawns, which may be found along Euclid street, Cleveland. It may be said these are the homes of the merchant-princes, who have made fortunes by banking, merchandising and other speculations, which our faith and religious lives debar us from, therefore, we may not hope to have such beautiful lawns. Admitted, but does that debar us from improvement?

Sometime since I was one of a company who made an extensive journey among our societies, and although most of the families were well off, for comfortable and even elegant dwellings and shops; yea, and some very good frame country barns, quite up with the general improvement of the neighborhood, yet the dooryards were not quite as neat, for Believers, as I could wish. There were flowers and shrubbery not well kept, that marred the appearance of the dooryards rather more than they improved them.

It is singular what an influence our education has on us. One of our brethren—a man of taste and an appreciative observer of nature, says to one of our old Deacons, who had been a pioneer in western life and was educated to study the value of cows and hogs,—Brother Jacob, do you hear that bird sing? Jacob listened, but the merry twitter of the little songster was not sufficient to arrest the good Deacon's attention. They passed along to the piggery, where a little grunter had got fast in the fence where he had been trying his ingenuity to shift his quarters. Brother Jacob do you hear that pig squeal? O! yea, I can hear that. Just so is it with most persons, who arrange a home. They have eyes to see and ears to hear, and faculties to arrange for the important details, but the polish they do not seem capable of putting on, nor of appreciating. Some people will go to any amount of expense in building a beautiful mansion, but their taste, in out-buildings and laying off grounds, is woefully deficient.

We say our predecessors did not attain to all that was true, and we might admit neither did they attain to all the knowledge in the world of beauty. Nay, they had their work to do and did it well and faithfully, and it is our privilege to not only follow the beaten track they pursued, but to progress beyond. I can see no godliness in slovenliness nor untidiness, whether it be in the house, on the farm, or among the rough weeds in the dooryard.

It is surprising, what one brother, with a refined taste, could accomplish in his spare hours. At first like our moral imperfections, he would have to give close attention, to not let the weeds grow and go to seed. But a few years application would make his task a pleasurable exercise.

Hoping to draw attention to this subject, and thereby awaken a greater amount of interest, in lawn dressing, was the object of the writer. And now, in conclusion, let us keep the weeds from going to seed. And if we cannot afford time to keep the shrubbery and flower-beds as they should be kept, let us omit them, and let their place be occupied by the green smooth grass.

Elder W. Reynolds, Union Village, O.

[A century ago, it was said, "The time has come for the Lord's House—the Second Temple—to be built,"

Henceforth, let the Courts of the Lord's House—the dooryards—be made fruitful.

The small fruits can be raised, in Believer's lawns, which have, hitherto, remained a barren waste. The food of trees therein abounds, and ought to be utilized. The blossoms, in spring—foliage, in summer, and fruit, in autumn, please the eye, comfort the spirit and cheer the heart of all beholders and partakers. Thus, the product of combustion, by fires and breathing, will be turned, from a curse, into a rich blessing. — Ed.]

LAW AND GOSPEL.

ALONG the highways of progress, whether civil or religious, lie the debris of old customs, creeds, habits, forms and ceremonies—effete Gods and theologies. Their days of usefulness are passed. The good they did possess has been used. Something better has taken their place.

Bodies corporate, civil, or religious, as well as individual, to maintain healthy inner life and outward organization, must possess the power to eject effete matters, and grasp and assimilate the present living truth.

The forms, creeds, beliefs and Gods of the past, had, in their day, a measure of vitality, which made them useful. Supplanted by higher truths and forms, the old are obstructions only. What was truly glorious, is as vital for all future, as in its first unfoldment.

The Jews were said to be a people of types and shadows. Very remarkable types they were. Let us glance at their code. To change their habits, their tutelar deity keeps them in the wilderness forty years, on purely vegetable diet, which each man, woman and child gathered for him and herself. With two exceptions, none but those born on the journey enter Canaan.

From landless slaves in Egypt, they become landholders in Canaan. Every man and woman having a right in the soil, from which they could not be ousted, except for a brief period.

They are instructed how to cultivate the earth, what to eat, how to raise it and how to cook it.

They were forbidden intermarrying with surrounding nations, and lending money—product of labor—upon usury—eating of blood, fat and certain meats.

The results were—no sickness—no blight on crops, famine, caterpillar, unseasonable rain, nor frost, no monopolies, no poor.

Means are employed to accomplish purposes. A school, with Moses for teacher, to educate souls for something higher—for Christ.

After professedly following Christ for 1800 years, in endless theologies and forms, is it not a wonder we do not possess one of the characteristics of our preliminary education?

Would not the world be better, to-day, with less false theology and more health—fewer lawless lawyers and more equity—less monopoly and sexuality, and more honest toil with celibacy?

We are so insatiably, sensually selfish, that there is hardly a living thing, on the earth or under the water, which is not made to cater to our depraved appetites—consequently we are clad, from head to foot, internally and externally, with loathsome and debilitating diseases.

For 1800 years, we have been building grand theological castles for our souls, in eternity, and sending our poor bodies to present perdition.

Theological systems have, one after another, crumbled away. Temples, built on sandy foundations, have toppled over. Is it not about time to dig down to the rock and make our foundation sure and permanent in physiological truth, before we attempt another structure in the air—the Temple of the second degree.

In other words—if we want Christ, the higher educator, had we not better, first, pay more attention to Moses, our original schoolmaster? In the name of common sense, let us learn and remember our A, B, C, in earthly things, if we would have the ethics and higher classics of Religion.

LETTERS FROM THE EAST.

JAMES M. PEEBLES in writing letters to the Banner of Light during his late protracted journey, treats of the alleged impracticability of reformers and of Christian teachings before the advent of Jesus, in this manner:

Apollonius of Tyana, the rival of the Nazarene, was a mediumistic "mendicant;" Cleanthes was a "vagrant;" Jesus "impracticable." These are the frisky judgments of pert, mole-eyed men! Seen from the slough of selfishness and measured by a miser's standard, Jesus was decidedly impracticable. Listen: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth"—"When thou makest a dinner or supper, call not thy friends, thy brethren, thy kinsmen, nor rich neighbors to the feast, but call the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind."—Nothing to a vain externalist could be more unnatural—nothing more egregiously impracticable to fashionable, pharisaic worldlings!

The beautiful hymn of Cleanthes to Jupiter, from which Paul quoted this to the Athenians—"For we are also his offspring," will live on the page of poetry forever. And yet, poor, kind-hearted Cleanthes, who gratuitously taught philosophy and religion, was, upon the complaint of an envious and pompous Greek, brought before the tribunal of Arcopagus and charged with having no visible means of support. Shadow-days have their compensations—justice is ultimately done. The moral teachings of Jesus and Cleanthes' hymn are in literature immortal, while the names and memories of their persecutors are rotting to nothingness in a resurrectionless oblivion.

Jesus was born a peasant. Mary was good and pure-minded. Joseph was a country carpenter. Judea, geographically insignificant and numerically small, was at this time in a condition of political and religious decadence. The whole land had nothing to inspire faith. Its Shekinah was eclipsed, its prophets dumb, and its very memories like the embalmed mummies of Mizraim. An alien race sat upon the Syrian throne. A Roman official presided in the Judgment Hall. Roman soldiers paraded the streets, Roman officers levied and collected the taxes, and Roman coins circulated in the markets. The Jews at this period were narrow, selfish, proud. Hatred of Gentiles was a virtue; help for suffering foreigners little better than a crime. Religion was a form; fasts fashionable, and a broad, cosmopolitan charity unknown.

Jesus lacked early culture. John and James were scholars. Though uneducated in dialectics and the classics, Jesus was nevertheless clairvoyant, clairaudient and marvelously intuitional. Accompanied by a legion of heavenly angels, he stood above human laws—a law unto himself—unique, emotional, incomparable. The schools of the Rabbis being but conservatories of traditions,

Jesus, inspired by his spirit-guides, traveled in foreign countries—Egypt, Assyria, Persia, studying the mysteries of the seers, and listening to the voices of ascended gods. He sat at the feet of religious mystics, magi, and gymnosophists; Plato at the feet of orators and logicians. Jesus, whose daily psalm was love, whose touch was a blessing, and presence a benediction, cultivated the sympathetic, the self-denying, the religious faculties; but Plato the perceptive and the philosophical. Centuries have rolled into the abyssal past. Now millions march under the banner of the Cross, made memorable by the martyrdom of that religious enthusiast and radical Palestinian reformer. The once thorn-crowned Jesus Christ is now companioned with those celestial angels, the presence of which make radiant the kingdom of God. The pre-eminent greatness of Jesus consisted in his fine harmonial organization; in a constant overshadowing of angelic influences; in the depth of his spirituality and love; in the keenness of his moral perceptions; in the expansiveness and warmth of his sympathies; in his unshadowed sincerity of heart; in his deep schooling into the spiritual gifts of Essene circles and Egyptian mysteries; in his soul-pervading spirit of obedience to the mandates of right manifest in himself; in his unwearied, self-forgetting, self-sacrificing devotion to the welfare of universal humanity, and his perfect trust in God.

CHRISTIAN TEACHINGS BEFORE THE TIME OF JESUS CHRIST.

The patriarch Abraham, when returning from the "slaughter of the kings," convicted of the sin of war, met Melchisedec, King of Salem, priest of the most high God, and received his blessing. Abraham, conscious of the superiority of this so-called "heathen" King of Salem, King of Peace, paid tithes, giving him at once "a tenth of all." But "who was Melchisedec?" Why, he was the king of some contiguous nation—the peace-king of Salem, the baptized of Christ—in a word, a Christian! This Christ-spirit, or Christ-principle, is truly "without father or mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life—a continually abiding priest."

There were Christians in those pre-historic periods; Christians in golden ages past; Christians long before the Old Testament patriarchs traversed the plains of Shinar, and Christians who spoke the ancient and mellifluous Sanscrit. Many of the most genuine and self-sacrificing Christians on earth to-day are Brahmins and Buddhists. All great souls, under whatever skies, and in whatever period of antiquity, baptized by the Christ-spirit of peace, purity and love, and illumined by the Divine Reason, were Christians!

Bigandet, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Ramatha, and apostolic Vicar of Ava and Pegu, says (Life of Buddha, p. 494):

"There are many moral precepts equally commanded and enforced in common by both the Buddhist and Christian creeds. It will not be deemed rash to assert that most of the moral truths prescribed by the gospel are to be met with in the Buddhistic Scriptures. * * * In reading the particulars of the life of the last Buddha, Gaudama, it is impossible not to feel reminded of many circumstances relating to our Saviour's life, such as it has been sketched out by the evangelists."

St. Augustine, treating of the origin of Christianity, affirms that—

"The thing itself, which is now called the Christian Religion, really was known to the ancients, nor was wanting at any time from the beginning of the human race, until the time when Christ came in the flesh; from whence the true religion, which had previously existed, began to be called Christian; and this in our day is called the Christian religion, not as having been wanting in former times, but having in latter times received its name."

The Emperor Hadrian, writing to Servianus while visiting Alexandria and referring to the religion of the old Egyptians, assures us that—

"The worshippers of Serapis are also Christians; for I find that the priests devoted to him call themselves the bishops of Christ."

Clemens Alexandrinus, so eminent in the early church, admitted that—

"Those who lived according to the true Logos, were really Christians, though they have been thought to be Atheists, as Socrates and Heraclitus among the Greeks."

The Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, in his discourse upon the "Citizens of the New Jerusalem," says:

"It is a mistake to suppose that Christianity began only eighteen hundred years ago; it began nearly six thousand years ago; it was preached amid the wrecks of Eden."

The learned Baboo Kestub Chunder Sen, whom I have met several times both in London and Calcutta, said in a discourse just previous to leaving England for India:

"The Hindoo, therefore, who believes in God, is a Christian. If purity, truth and self-denial are Christian virtues, then Christianity is everywhere where these virtues are to be found, without regard to whether the possessors are called Christians, Hindoos or Mahometans. Hence it comes that many Hindoos are far better Christians than many who call themselves so. The result of my visits, I came as a Hindoo, I return a confirmed Hindoo. I have not accepted one doctrine which did not previously exist in my mind."

This rational position lifts the Christianity of the ages out of the slough of sect—out of the realm of the partial, and places it upon the basic foundation of the universal. Seen from this sublime altitude, all true resurrected celibate, communist, Peace-practicing Spiritualists are Christians, recognizing the evangelist's affirmation that "Christ had a glory with the Father before the world was;" and, furthermore, that "Christ is the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely!"

A Christian, then, is one who has been baptized with the Christ Spirit, and who lives in continued obedience to its inspirations.—Ed.

SERIOUS QUESTIONS OF THE HOUR.

WAR—PEACE.—"My kingdom is not of this world." Can Christians fight, or in any manner abet war? Was there ever a Christian, from the days of Jesus, to the days of Geo. Washington, and thence down to Gen. Grant, that could engage in physical warfare, in any cause whatsoever? Not one. "Whence come wars and fightings?" Come they from causes that grace the anti-Christian and disgrace the Christian profession? Where can be the reason of calling any member of a national army, "a Christian soldier?" Taking the principle of Christian peace into serious consideration, does not even the name of militia, still more the practice, forfeit the title of Christian? What can the people be thinking of, to admit, for a moment, that any soldier in physical warfare can be a Christian? Who are those who aid and abet war? Children of the world.

SELFISHNESS.—Does Christianity admit of private property? It does not; never did. Do Christian Churches permit distinctions of dress, diet, or other comforts, among the members? Never. Are there any rich or poor Christians? None whatever. Why are there so many rich, and, particularly, why are there so many poor, in the so-called Christian Churches of to-day? Because such Churches are not Christian. Can these be Brethren and Sisters of Christ while faring so unequally? Never. Why are there no rich nor poor in Christ's Church? The formerly rich, "lay down" their plenty; the formerly poor do likewise with their poverty, and hence, share equally. Who, then, are the rich and poor? The Children of unresurrection, who will give up neither their riches nor poverty for the gospel's sake. Who amass fortunes, and live in palatial residences? Unfeeling men and women, erroneously termed Christians, who are careless of how many are made correspondingly poor. Who are the mountains and valleys of scripture? The rich and poor. What is the mission of Christianity to such? To bring down the mountains; raise up the valleys—inaugurate an equality—none possessed aught he could call his own. What wonderful phenomena accompany conversions to Christianity? Mine becomes Ours! Riches and Poverty, with their miseries, disappear.

MARRIAGE—CELIBACY.—Did Christians marry in the days of Jesus? Not at all, nor since. What did the married, to become Christians? They became as though they were not married—brethren and sisters. What did Jesus teach concerning marriage? That it was the practice of the children of the world, and did not belong to the Heavens of Christians, on earth, or elsewhere. Who was and is the Resurrection? Christ. The Children of the Resurrection, of Christ, are first known by the fact that they do not marry. Secondly, they do not sin any more. Thirdly, they are as the Angels. Do the Angels marry, or engage in any lasciviousness? Can Christians? The Primitive Christian Church was a Celibate organization. Who have prostituted this Church to the filthiness of the flesh? The Children of this world. Wherein, alone, can genuine, unadulterated Christianity obtain? Among celibates only. Wherein do we observe the most marked contrasts, between the early Church of the Apostles, and present, popular Christianity? In the reversal, by the latter, of the whole economy of the Primitive Church. In that, they were unbound from marital relations, private property, fleshly lusts and their results. In popular, so-called Christianity, these things are encouraged, practiced as sacraments; results, "it would be a shame to speak of the things done by such in secret." Christians do not marry; they retain, or regain, their virgin estate, and remain unspotted from the world.

Who then are Christians? Those who follow the Lamb—Christ—whithersoever this Spirit led Jesus. From War, Marriage, Private Property, to the Higher Life.

Elder G. A. Lomas, Watervliet, N. Y.

COMMUNISM.

And all that believed were together and had all things common.—Acts, 2: 44.

WHILE there are many theories and notions too absurd for sound minds to credit, and others, to say the least, quite doubtful, there still remain many facts, beyond all peradventure. These are at once embraced by all truth loving souls. Of such is the scripture above quoted. Believers in the days of Jesus were neither avaricious, nor monopolizers. Their love for each other cast out all selfishness, and their possessions flowed together. Their tender and mutual regard for the common weal, allowed no one to call aught he had his own, in an exclusive sense, "but they had all things common." The candid reading of Acts, 2: 41-42 and 4: 31-37, must convince all sane persons of these facts.

Nor will any one dare to intimate that these Christians did wrong in thus providing for the wants of each out of their common store. How natural that their overflowing love for each other should thus flow their earthly goods into an unselfish pile. In thus loving and living did they go beyond the Law and the Gospel? Did not, and does not each enjoin that we love our neighbor as ourselves? How then could or can such heart-searching injunctions be fulfilled short of doing just what these true Christians did? All this is conceded by those who ignore and indeed contravene their example.

But they say, the peculiar circumstances of these early disciples demanded this community of goods. Such special pleaders, not to say quibblers, are of the earth earthy. Like the old Ox fable between the Farmer and the Lawyer, they say "and if" clinging to the letter and sticking to the Devil's maxim "circumstances alter cases." Destitute themselves of principle, such pharisaical interpreters try hard to construe communism out of genuine Christians whose unfeigned love has left us this heavenly example. Not by constraint of great destitution and suffering did these beloved followers of the meek and lowly Jesus put their possessions at the Apostles' feet; but from their supreme love to their Heavenly Father and Mother, and their fellow Christians. He who, out of his own selfish heart, so misinterprets their motives, is little short of a slanderer. Some say, "Persecutions and destitution compelled the communistic practice." Commentators and Preachers thus try to interpret away this blessed example and excuse the avarice of themselves and flocks. Persecutions never created a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

The profoundly learned and noble Paul has testified that "the love of money is the root of all evil," that corrupt men suppose "that gain is godliness;" that such as "will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition * * * piercing them through with many sorrows."

The cure for all this is not "temporary circumstances," but forsaking all for Christ's sake and the weal of his true followers.

This is simply what the Shakers do, which beyond all peradventure must be right. Did they refuse to do this they would not do as Christ and his disciples did, and of course refuse to follow him. As the principle is not only general but universal, all who fail to do likewise fail to love their neighbor as they love themselves.

In the next number I may show the blessings which flow from having things in common.

TRUTH.

TRUTH in a qualified sense, may be considered as the foundation of the Universe. There are a diversity of Truths; when classified, they would come under the head of Scientific, Moral, Theological and Spiritual; each, and all, in their multifarious forms have a bearing upon the human mind, and help to make the real man or woman.

The Moralist seeks Truth, the application of which will elevate man in his social relations, and make him a better citizen—wiser—more just and honest in his dealings with his fellow men—temperate in all things—sober and considerate in word and action, neither giving nor taking offense; but reducing the beautiful theories which he has conceived to practice; i. e. be governed by the law of right.

The Scientist, in his department of labor, probes and searches the bowels of the earth—dives into the depths of the Ocean—scans the illimitable stellar regions to obtain knowledge and understanding of things hitherto hidden from mental, and optic vision; thus educating the race to a truer conception of the Divine mind. Without such knowledge, we should have very crude and imperfect ideas of the earth under our feet, or of the heavens above us.

The Theologian, who is honest and sincere in his searchings after religious Truth, and is prompted by noble sentiments and high aspirations to save immortal souls, will be blest in his efforts, and help to progress humanity. But in this broad field, there has been great diversity of opinions, many speculations and conflicting ideas, arising from different organisms, being constitutionally diverse in modes of thought, and the capacity to comprehend spiritual Truth, which is ever developing and revealing new forms of life and beauty, through psychological forces. Hence we find some theological disputants forming Deities after their own modes of thought, having parts and passions like themselves; and creating a system as contradictory, as it is inconsistent; representing God as being at one time moved by love; at another time by anger, jealousy, moods and tempers which we would hardly be willing to own that ourselves were governed by. If we judge of Deity by external manifestations, we must conclude that He and She are the perfect embodiment of Wisdom and Love in the broadest sense and most significant application. The Father and Mother of the Universe of Mind and Matter.

Truth, like precious gems lie scattered here and there to be gathered and appropriated by whomsoever found. Real religious spiritual Truth which flows from the deep emotional and devotional feelings of the soul, and reaches to the inner realms of divine light and life rises above and is superior to all other truth—or it is the great center to which all other truths converge. There is Power in it, which few have as yet even dreamed of—a power emanating from the throne of Deity and who shall withstand its mighty influence? It will eventually progress humanity to the condition, and position in the scale of being, that they were created to occupy—Lords of creation—ruling, not by animal force, but through love, which is the most potent force known in the realm of mind. It will subdue all opposing forces in its course of action, till God shall finally be all in all—the center and circumference—the Alpha and Omega. Blessed forevermore shall be this power that permeates all things animate and inanimate! To it we bow in reverence and filial love. With Truth for our motto we will march on to perfect victory; and love shall be one of our guiding stars in our onward progress home to God.

Love's a fountain deep and pure;
Love will make us firm and sure;
Love will banish every wrong,
Love we'll make our constant song.
Hail all hail! the pow'r of Love,
Wafted from the spheres above,
Joining every heart in one,
Father, mother, daughter, son.
May we ever keep in view
How this love creates anew
Every trusting, pleading soul,
Under its benign control.
It doth brighten as our sight,
Opens to catch new rays of light
'Mid the changing scenes of life
'Mid the conflicts and the strife.
Love shall ever be my theme;
Blessed pow'r on which to lean:
And on this consecrated spot,
I give this pledge, refuse it not.

Timothy Rayson, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

STRONG DRINK.

BELOVED EDITOR.—I was led to the following thoughts by reading, in a late journal, an estimate of the extent of the "curse" by the retail traffic of ardent spirits in the United States and Territories in 1873, as follows: "Number of places licensed to sell intoxicating drink, 150,000; persons employed in those 'hells,' 300,000; annual cost of liquor to satisfy and increase depraved appetites, $400,000,000! The same author estimates the number of clergymen and school-teachers in the country at 200,000." Thus, while one class are laboring to advance the people in moral and spiritual life, the other, and by far the greater portion, are plying the work of Death! Now, when it is considered that the above estimate is based upon the amount of money expended for liquor retailed, which probably does not include more than one-half the amount sold, and when we reflect that the time lost, fines paid, etc., would amount to as much more, the enormous waste of money yearly, for that which produces only evil and crime, is truly appalling! This hydra monster (intemperance), besides sending thousands of people to prison and a drunkard's grave, reduces thousands of children to a state worse than orphans, and spreads misery, disease, crime and premature death throughout the country! Truly, "the sword hath slain its millions; strong drink, its tens of millions." If people will not be moved by the moral and social aspects of the case, will they not heed the pecuniary loss? Think of it, all ye who yield to the seductive influence of the "cup" of Devils, inflaming your brain with deadly poison! Think of it, O ye guzzlers who complain of enormous taxation and "hard times," and find the remedy for the burdens you complain of in your own hands.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Conn.

MT. LEBANON, Aug. 23, 1874.

BROTHER DANIEL ORCUTT: You say, "If you keep your thoughts pure, and bring them into complete subjection to the obedience of Christ—God—Good—then will your life be blameless." Beloved counselor, if every young person in Zion, reaped as much benefit from your contribution in the August S. & S., as I did, you would have cause to rejoice that you had written to such good effect. I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart, I love the spirit that prompted you to write it. I read it carefully over and over again, and finally came to the conclusion that it had been written especially for my benefit. I am eighteen years of age, and have been among Believers some seven months. My experience here and elsewhere tells me, that it is harboring evil thoughts and imaginations, that prove disastrous stumbling blocks to the youth of Zion. The young and untraveled are apt to pride themselves on their deliverance from temptation, and not to hold their calling with sufficient sacredness, forgetting the duty they owe to those who have done so much to create and sustain the pure atmosphere into which they have been providentially brought. After having been here long enough to conquer and get the ascendancy of some bad habits, which they never should have acquired; they begin to feel as if they had done about all that was to be expected of them, and then they ruminate after this manner. All praise to me! for the manly way in which I have delivered myself from vice. I have now so fully recovered myself that the Devil can never reclaim me; therefore I can read any book, paper or pamphlet without its injuring me. Satan knows our weakest points and there he directs his power. I am sorry to say I am stating my own case; but, I think human nature is much alike all over. To be continually cultivating a simple, lowly, dependent, and thankful feeling, is, I find, youth's surest safeguard against impure imaginations. Pledging myself to be more watchful, and thankful to you for your counsel to "Youths of Zion," I am happy to sign myself One of them.

Theodore Gorham, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

WHO ARE CHRISTIANS?

NONE but those who follow Christ in the regeneration. Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls." A beautiful promise, to such as wish to become meek and lowly, take up a daily cross and live the life of Christ and the Apostles. We learn of Christ that to become his disciples, we must come out from the world, forsake the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life. These are of the world.

We believe the Saviour meant what he spake when he said, "Except a man forsake all that he hath he cannot be my disciple." Again "Except a man forsake father, mother, wife and children, houses and lands, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."

The Apostle said, "We look for a New Heaven and a New Earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Generation, husband and wife, with selfishness, pertain not to the New Heaven. There is no half-way station between generation and regeneration. All are living in one element or the other.

Christ came to establish a new principle, that of loving our neighbors as ourselves. This is the test of discipleship. There is, in the world, what passes for love—but with more propriety, it might be called by another name—lust.

We read "Old things shall be done away, and all things become new"—of God.

The marriage relation, as it generally exists, is as old as when Adam and Eve, in disobedience, begat Cain. Poor, frail humanity has, by similar means—disobedience—been raising Cains ever since.

Christ comes as a refiner—to cleanse, purify and make us fit Temples of the Holy Spirit. Do some choose darkness, rather than light? Why? Is it because their deeds are evil, and they prefer to do evil?

They, who are in the light, love the light, that it may be manifest, their works are wrought in God. Christians are called to be light to the world—to have no fellowship with works of darkness.

The writer has heard some, who claim to be Christians, say—"I sin daily." I didn't dispute them—nor do I dispute Jesus, when he says, "He that committeth sin is of the devil."

As none can serve two masters, the devil must have the first claim to all sinning Christians.

"With the heart man believeth—with the mouth confession is made, unto salvation." If there be any, who can't cease sinning, is it not because they have not made honest confession, of past sins, and repented of them?

By honest confession, in the Divinely appointed Order, we receive power to say, "Get behind me, satan"—and are obeyed.

To Purity-loving minds, the way is open, to Salvation from sin.

Elder Simon Mayhe, Hancock, Mass.

THE relations of friendship that have been so long and steadfastly maintained between the Canadian Indians and the Colonial government were given fresh and gratifying prominence by the recent visit of Earl Dufferin, the Governor-General of the dominion, among them. The respectful, even affectionate reception given him at Oukneeka by 3,000 industrious, intelligent, well-fed and happy Indians, who, having been established in certain definite rights and privileges had long trusted the power that guaranteed them, was a strong contrast to the suspicion and hate born of our contradictory American policy, which is every day getting us deeper and deeper into trouble and complication. He went among them to show the personal interest he took in all classes coming under his administration, and renew those pledges that had been so long and so faithfully kept. He assured them that they should not be violently forced into the white man's rigid mode of life, but mapped out for them an attractive path of peaceful progress, and pointed to a higher plane of development which in time he expected they would reach. The comfortable and contented condition in which he found his wards was a refutation of the idea that the Indians are incapable of civilization, and a rebuke to those who hold it. While Lord Dufferin was travelling among the red men of his dominion, noting their condition for himself, and giving them good advice, the President of the United States was on a junketing trip, and the National forces were prospecting among the Black Hills, where they had no business, inasmuch as they constructively broke faith with the Indians by being there, and unnecessarily made enemies where the English policy would long ago have found friends.

THE advocates of vegetarianism make out a plausible case for their theory. They say the Scotch and Irish contrive to breed some of the finest specimens of men and women in the world on vegetable diet, and we have heard it stated that the Scotch have shown symptoms of degeneration in cases where they have abandoned the old-fashioned oat-meal porridge in favor of the modern dietary of butcher's meat and tea. Again, the Finns, who are mostly vegetarians in their diet, are a well-grown race, while the flesh-eating Laplanders, inhabiting the same climate, are almost dwarfs. Further, it is claimed that vegetarians enjoy especial immunity from sickness, and are rarely if ever attacked by epidemic disease. The adoption of vegetarianism puts an end at once to much of the torture inflicted on the brute creation, the bleeding of calves, the crimping of cod, the skinning of eels, the boiling alive of shell-fish, besides all the more legitimate hutchery of the slaughter-house; and it saves people from the risk of illness produced by eating tainted or diseased meat.—Golden Age.

DRUNKENNESS.—Things are no doubt had as regards the vicious indulgence in stimulants, and seemingly worse they grow as the means of expenditure become more plentiful, and the more idle time is at disposal. But in such indulgence there is no particular novelty. Excesses in gin-drinking became alarmingly prevalent in England about 1735, followed by agonizing poverty and wretchedness. Listen to what Smollett says of the period:

"The populace of London were sunk into the most brutal degeneracy by drinking to excess the pernicious spirit called gin, which was sold so cheap that the lowest class of the people could afford to indulge themselves in one continued state of intoxication, to the destruction of all morals and order. Such a shameful degree of profligacy prevailed that the retailers of this poisonous compound set up painted boards in public, inviting people to be drunk for the small expense of one penny; assuring them that they might be dead drunk for two-pence, and have straw for nothing. They accordingly provided cellars and places strewn with straw, to which they conveyed those wretches who were overwhelmed with intoxication. In these dismal caverns they lay until they recovered some use of their faculties, and then they had recourse to the same mischievous potion; thus consuming their health and ruining their families, in hideous receptacles of vice, resounding with riot and execration."—Chamber's Journal.

MEED.

"One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh."

GENERATIONS that have passed, and are passing away, have made their records. Would that all might have as truthful testimonials of a virtuous and godly life—of strong faith in God—and of the increasing revelation of His will to humanity, as our aged friend and sister, to whom we gladly give space in our columns to speak for herself. Thus would Order and Justice be established in all things pertaining to body and soul.

She has spent a long life of usefulness, in being good and doing good. Already she is reaping what she has sown; peace and blessing is her just inheritance. When the lamp of life shall cease to burn, and she lies down upon her couch to the "sleep that knows no waking" here, we are confident she will be gathered to her fathers and mothers in the land of souls, there to continue the life which she commenced in the earth sphere. Such spirits never die.

AYER, August 16th, 1874.

DEARLY BELOVED ELDERESS ANTOINETTE:

As I have been deeply interested in reading the richly stored columns of the Shaker and Shakeress, I feel that it will not be showing due respect to one who has labored and toiled so assiduously as you have, in spreading light, not to comply with your request, however incompetent I may feel to do so.

The development of new Truths concerning the Millennial Order, is a subject that is inexhaustible; but those without the pale of Shakerdom do not seem far enough advanced to comprehend them; and those subjects, within the scope of their understanding, are, with me, nearly exhausted. There is one, however, though of very ancient date, which absorbs my feelings at present and one which seems to demand more attention than ever has been given it.

We read that "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." This being the case, we would ask, is it duly considered, even by those who intend to walk uprightly? Are there not many things said and done that would be withheld, were it realized that a penalty was attached to each word and act? Would hard and unkind feelings be harbored if it was borne in mind that they must be repented of? Were the silent monitor within permitted to control, should we behold so much violence and fraud as now? Would poor widows, orphans, sewing girls, etc., be toiling early and late for a mere pittance, scarcely sufficient to supply them with food and clothing, of the poorest kind, and often be compelled to wait even for this till starvation stares them in the face? Or, would there be so many of the laboring class out of employ, whose families are suffering for the necessities of life, if those who now withhold from them the means of subsistence were to realize the consequence of refusing their aid?

And where would be those dens of vice and crime, in a few years to come, if those who are now approaching them would stop and reflect, that for every sinful act they must yet be brought to judgment? Is it not time for conscience to be more fully awakened on this all-important subject, and to feel that those passages of scripture relating to it are something more than empty words?

Let each one ask his or her own conscience before speaking or acting, especially on matters of importance: Will this be right? Am I about to speak or act from motives of Truth and Uprightness, or from sinister or selfish motives, and thereby make for myself work for repentance?

With a daily consciousness that a true record is kept of all our thoughts, words and actions, how can we act contrary to the Divine monitor—conscience? To do so must show a great lack of wisdom and forethought, for be assured, that all souls will find, either in this life or that beyond, that every thought, word and action of their earth life is engraved on the tablets of their hearts, as with the point of a diamond, and from this record will they be judged, their own consciences bearing witness for or against them.

For a further proof of the foregoing statement, please call to mind the various accounts of those who have been resuscitated from drowning, or rescued from immediate death, and it will be found that their whole lives were spread out before them instantaneously, even to the most trifling incidents, which had passed from memory for years.

I am not of the number who are sitting by the wayside, waiting for God and our Heavenly Parents to do some great work for us, but am laboring to keep my bark so that the sail can catch every little breeze that will help to waft me onward and upward.

I hail with joy all true reform, whether physical or spiritual, feeling that one is closely allied to the other; and although too far advanced in life to make much progress in the former, I believe it will not be long ere the progressive portion of society, both in and out of Zion, will see the necessity of a more simple mode of living, and wholly eschew all stimulating food and drink.

I do not believe we were made to subsist on animal food. Vegetables and pure water were designed by our Creator for our sustenance. And before we are fully re-instated in Divine favor we shall have to return to this as well as all other laws which God has given for the benefit of the race. But they are so fallen that they must be led, step by step, out of the state into which they have been plunging themselves for centuries. And in this is manifest God's goodness and love; for should all the digressions from the true standard—Divine Code—be at once presented before its view, no soul would have either strength or courage to even make an effort to rise.

I rejoice to see light so fast increasing among mankind, preparing many for millennial harvesting. God has commenced His work of emancipation, through His agents, whom His angels are daily inspiring with more light and knowledge of His laws, and this work will continue and increase till all souls are brought to the knowledge of the truth, and set free from the shackles of anti-christian superstition and darkness.

I see the stones preparing in the mount to build up her temple. They will yet be brought together without the sound of "axe or hammer," the clashing of discordant elements.

Our foundation is sure. But is it not very essential what materials are used in rearing the fabric? Must not such be selected as will stand the storms and tempests of coming ages?

These are questions which bear heavily upon my mind; but I forbear, knowing my earthly pilgrimage must soon close, having now passed my four score years; and I would far rather depart than remain to clog the wheels of true progression in any of its evolutions.

Eunice Bathrick.

"GATES OF HEAVEN."

ONE of the items, of the enjoyable entertainment, in the Pine Grove, on the border of the beautiful little Lake in the land of Canaan, at the annual Social Gathering of the Novitiate Order of Mt. Lebanon, August 19th, was the following Colloquy by and between

ANN OFFORD, CHARLOTTE BYRDSALL, MARTHA J. ANDERSON, MELISSA SOULE, and MARGARET CLEVELAND.

MARTHA.—What is Religion? has often been asked. Is it strange that such query should arise in intelligent minds, when there has ever existed such a contrariety of opinions respecting its true spirit?

History abounds with records of bitter strife, animosity and devastating wars, all in consequence of difference in religious views. One might judge that what is claimed as the religious principle in human nature, is only a power to awaken, rather than to control and subdue, the gross passions and propensities. It would seem that there is no zeal so ardent, no spirit so unrelenting, as that which is inspired through preconceived ideas of what is right, and a desire to control the consciences of others. Such intense fervor has produced the torture-room—the gibbet—and the rack; while thousands of innocent martyrs have perished in the flames of its diabolical wrath. With this view of what has been termed Religion, is it to be wondered at that there are so many infidels and skeptics?

ANN.—Not at all; but Religion has a broader basis than mere belief. It is a soul element, the outgrowth of high ennobling faculties—Veneration, Spirituality and Hope. Through Veneration we seek some object for worship; through Spirituality comes holy aspiration for goodness—a desire to become like our ideal—while Hope ever presents the prospect of immortality and blissful existence.

CHAR.—Just here we must make a distinction between Theology and Religion. In reviewing ancient and modern history, we clearly perceive that all conflict and strife have arisen from a difference in belief, and not from the truly religious element in humanity.

MELISSA.—That is a proper consideration; a theme that has more, or less engaged heart and mind from the earliest history of our race. We need to have clear conceptions of truth, which will enable us to consider that human beings, in their varied degrees of intellectual and spiritual progress, naturally entertain antagonistic ideas of God. Without the light of revelation we mistake the letter for the spirit, proselyting zeal for virtue; a hatred of persons for love of God.

MARGARET.—All forms of life have their progressive stages of growth and development. Thus it is with the human race. From low organisms, have been evolved increasing degrees of intellectuality and spirituality, through which we trace higher and higher forms of religion,—proving that Reason and Conscience combine in true conceptions of the Divine Mind, as manifested in higher life and being.

The uncivilized and barbarous races still cling to their crude representations of Deity; and their forms of worship are expressive of sensual and passionial emotion.

ANN.—Heart-sickening are the scenes of idolatrous worship, described in history. People were seemingly led by blind ignorance, without the aid of reason and knowledge; the sensual dynasty instead of morality and virtue reigned supreme.

MARTHA.—The Fetichism of Western Africa lingers to-day, while its intellectual antipode, manifested in the highest type of scientifically enlightened manhood — Tyndall — perceives God as the great unfathomable, without bound or limit, the grand centre of inextinguishable light and glory, whence proceeded life, love, and the continuous creations of mind and matter; yet, impersonal.

To Believers, the Christ Spirits reveal God as Wisdom and Love — Our Heavenly Father and Mother.

MELISSA. — From Polytheism to Monotheism we can trace the progress of thought and an increasing degree of revelation. As far back as Abraham we read that his mission was to introduce the worship of the one true God, and to break up the forms of idolatry then existing. This he did not effectually accomplish; for, notwithstanding his faithful and earnest exhortations, even his relatives clung to their idolatrous worship, and for many years after, Mecca was the only place where the doctrine of one God was taught. "Many worshipped the spirits of the stars whom they called the sons and daughters of God." To them God was an abstraction. The Gods of their own creation were the popular objects of worship.

MARGARET. — This illustrates the tenacity with which mankind cling to traditional ideas. Truth has ever battled her way through error's legions, but the ground she has gained is clear, and as there is a "growth in grace" and in reason, her way is made easier.

CHAR. — Many sins in all ages, have been disguised under a profession of Religion. Under that cloak Sodom sinned. David, called the man after God's own heart, gloried in sexual indulgence — and Solomon, with all his wisdom and knowledge, reveled in carnality. Greece, with her learning, reared temples which were devoted to infamous purposes, and Rome added to the list by her degrading festivities. England, also, with her Church and State government, has produced a score of ignoble rulers, like the eighth Henry, and her history is stained with the blood of martyrs, who were sacrificed for what was deemed heresy. Their religion was a prostitution of virtue. The God they worshiped sanctioned war. His very breath would blight the germs of true religion.

ANN. — The so-called Christian nations of Europe, who profess to follow Jesus — the highest ideal of perfected life — whose example has illumined many sin-darkened souls — are warring nations; and their religious history, instead of wearing the laurels of peace and purity gained by the self Conqueror, is blackened by crime. Their religious life and practice, fall below the standard of the Buddhists and Brahmans of the East, for they do not stand in warlike antagonism with brethren of the same faith, nor of any other faith.

MARTHA. — I have been interested in reading some accounts of the origin of the three great Religions of the East, Brahmanism, Buddhism and Mohammedanism. Around those strongly fortified systems cluster much that is traditional and legendary; but their great central truths are effective in binding upon their devotees certain moral and religious obligations, which have elevated them above gross idolatry, and, in some respects, such as honesty in dealing, and pure morality, they eclipse many sects of professing Christians. Not that their faith is superior, but their practice is more in accordance with their faith.

MARGARET. — We will here repeat the eight steps arising from the four sublime truths that form the basis of Buddhism, which when perfectly attained, the soul reaches that inexpressible condition called "Nirvana," the meaning of which cannot be explained, but evidently conveys the idea of perfection — an inner consciousness of rest from conflict — corresponding with the Christian's heaven, or kingdom of God.

The first step is Right belief, or the correct faith.

Second. Right judgment, or wise application of that faith, to life.

Third. Right utterance, or perfect truth, in all we say and do.

Fourth. — Right motives, or proposing always a proper end and aim.

Fifth. Right occupation, or an outward life not involving sin.

Sixth. Right obedience, or faithful observance of duty.

Seventh. Right memory, or a proper recollection of past conduct.

Eighth. Right meditation, or keeping the mind fixed on permanent truth.

ANN. — I think that would be a good code of morals for any people, whatever their profession. Some physiological truth was also inculcated in their system. The application of the unconditional command, "Thou shalt not kill," has much to do with softening the manners of the Mongols. They are not a fierce people, and are decidedly opposed to war.

MELISSA. — There is indeed much of interest in the history of those religious Powers. In some respects they, who call themselves Christians, may learn of them. We cannot pass over the fact that Buddhism, with its errors and superstitions, has neither deceived, nor persecuted — has not formed inquisitions, nor possessed and cultivated feelings of antipathy toward those who profess other faiths — believing that all manifestations of Religion are but an outgrowth of one true faith.

CHAR. — "The heart of man is not innately vile." It only awaits the law of progress, and the increasing light of revelation, in physiological, scientific and spiritual truth, to lead it from the contracted cell state of ignorance, to the pure light of true Religion. It is pleasant to review the history of the past, and gather the gems of Wisdom and Goodness, which the Spirit of Truth has scattered along the pathway of human progress. As the poet beautifully and truthfully expresses it:—

"God sends his teachers unto every age,
To every clime and every race of men,
With revelations fitted to their growth
And shape of mind; nor gives the realm of Truth
Into the selfish rule of one sole race.
Therefore each form of worship that hath swayed
The life of man, and given it to grasp
The master key of knowledge, Reverence,
Enfolds some germs of goodness and of right."

MARTHA. — It is true that every age and race have had their inspired prophets and teachers; this is God's method of improving mankind. No truth that has ever been revealed will be lost; it may drop off its old forms, but will be re-incarnated in new ones, fitted to the growth and comprehension of the minds of men. Thus we trace Infinite Wisdom and Love working their way through the frailties — passions — conscious longings and aspirations of finite beings.

ANN. — Under the laws of evolution, Scientists tell us that species of animals and genera of plants have been perfected; that the earth is going through constant changes from lower to higher forms of life. A corresponding condition must exist in the higher realm of mind and spirit; for the worlds of mind and matter stand in a correlative position, and are acted upon by the laws of causation, proceeding from the primal fountain of all progress. There is no retrogression. Life moves spirally, ever up and up. Change, growth and development are stamped on all created things.

MARGARET. — Then, it is by the law of evolution that we account for the liberalizing influences which permeate society and give, to all, the unmolested right to their own conscientious belief; for certainly we live in a time, when the ETERNAL GATES OF TRUTH ARE Ajar, and we catch glimpses of light which bespeak regenerated life in the political, social and religious worlds.

MELISSA. — There is great need of reorganization, and renovation, in all the departments of life. We have cause of gratitude, that much has already been done to expand religious thought, and establish just civil government. We who live under the blessing of Republican institutions, feel not the restrictions felt by those whose lot is cast in lands where Church and State, combined, bear rule, crushing spiritual freedom. It is evident there is a power at work, even in the old world, which will silently, but effectually, burst the chains of tyranny that have so long fettered the minds and consciences of men.

MARTHA. — It does not seem much like it, when we consider the course that Russia has lately taken with the Menonites.

CHAR. — There will be turnings and over-turnings, and much injustice will yet be done; but the general aspect and signs, as they appear, are encouraging.

MARGARET. — I was glad to hear that the great question which has agitated the public mind for some time past, concerning the proposed sectarian amendment of the Constitution, has been so wisely settled; evincing that those to whom it was referred comprehended the evil that would result from the recognition of church creeds and dogmas, in an infidel — materialistic — constitution. A constitution oblivious of religious sects.

MARTHA. — I wonder if Solomon ever had such complex questions to tax and perplex his superior judgment. I think it requires great skill in this day to guide the helm of the Ship of State, that she may not founder, and be submerged in the sea of political intrigue and social problems.

ANN. — That judicial decision will lift a great weight off the minds of liberal reformers and freethinkers of our day. A few years ago it might have been decided in favor of Sectarianism. But, thank God, the Seers of our time have had the moral courage to lift their voices, and dip their pens in the living inspiration of truth — denounce the error, and prevent the fatal step, which would inevitably have led to war and bloodshed. We now rejoice in the happy consummation of their efforts for humanity's good.

MELISSA. — I think modern Spiritualism has been a powerful wedge driven by an unseen hand, to split the knotty questions of human rights and privileges — breaking up old forms — bringing forth increasing revelations of truth, which are completely revising old orthodox conceptions of the mystery of godliness, and of future rewards and punishments.

ANN. — Spiritualism is becoming popular. It has made rapid advances. We now hear of seances in royal palaces. Eminent scientists after thorough investigation, fail to give proof against the genuineness of its phenomena. Men of all professions, whose strength of mind and character give them high position, have been convinced of its facts. Who can say unseen intelligences are not effective in producing right impressions in reference to important questions which agitate the public mind in regard to civil polity, as well as Religion? Can we not see an overruling power in the triumph of right so lately achieved? One of the prophets foretold, that in the latter day, "God would set up a kingdom which would never be destroyed," and that it would be a refuge for all nations. How could such a kingdom exist except under an infidel, or more properly, a materialistic, form of government?

CHAR. — It could not; but there is another point I wish to refer to. Do we not observe that as Spiritualism becomes popular, spiritual wickedness increases? While the doors are open to the spirit-world, and there is free communication, all classes of spirits find access to mixed circles, and varied conditions. It is written, When the sons of God came to worship, satan came also, clearly indicating that where the avenues are open, evil seeks to find entrance. Thus has it been through the long career of Spiritualism — the good and evil have ministered through imperfect media. Those who, while on earth, knew only a life of sensuality, have not quenched the fires of passion, by the dissolution of the body. They hover over and obsess mortals, with carnal desires and soul-destroying doctrines; and many, at the present time, while under the power of diabolical influences, are bold in the assertion that it is right to live in the unrestrained indulgence of the sexual functions, without regard to the law of use, to conditions, seasons, or restrictive bonds of the matrimonial relation. Children, too, are strengthened in the ways of self-destruction, until it would seem that the race is hurrying into the vortex of sensuality.

MARGARET. — From a high moral and spiritual point of observation, we can clearly discern the evil that is rolling over the earth, from this source, like a mighty flood, and it should be a warning to us, to raise higher the unerring standard of Purity, and to hold it with a still firmer grasp, that it may be preserved untarnished through all conflicts, while the faithful are contending with the dragon power—lust—which has drawn down so many of the stars of the old heavens to darkness and sorrow.

MARTHA.—Spiritualism has done a good work, and it has had its evil phases, which it is right to consider. For want of proper guidance, many have been led astray. If communication should be held with the living spirits of a century ago—who boldly shook themselves from the chains of British tyranny, through sacrifice of life and property—and wrote the immortal Declaration of Independence, while the burning fires of freedom glowed in their souls; would there not be some stirring communications? Would it not be wise to employ Franklin (who is no doubt still active in his scientific pursuits,) to establish an electric line of communication between some of the Congressional courts in the Spirit world, and the Capitol of our great country, that an earthly government may be established, under just legislation and sound policy, instead of bartering principles for gold, and yielding the weight of national claims and duties to selfish aims and purposes? What a change would thus be wrought!

CHAR.—That is true; Spiritualism, if comprehended, would be of great value to the human race; but it must be understood as a Science, not as a Religion. It does not contain the power of salvation, but enlightens the understanding—gives clear views of the inner state of existence—and imparts the hope of salvation—it is the Angel of Light. See Rev. 18.

MELISSA.—I think that if Spiritism were substituted for Spiritualism, it would better express the external revealments and marvelous manifestations of psychical force, operative on material things.

MARGARET.—It would most certainly. The question occurs to my mind, How is it that we make the assertion, that the founders of our government were infidel, when history speaks differently? Washington was said to be a man of faith and prayer, and I have read many sketches of their lives, which clearly indicate that they were possessed of deep religious feeling.

ANN.—They may have been deeply religious, and yet have been infidel to the popular forms of religious belief, preferring that every one should give expression to his and her own conscientious opinions.

MARTHA.—There have always been those who were deemed irreligious, because they made no profession of unity with church organizations, but whose lives, in reality, comported more with goodness and truth, than many who weekly attend church, rehearse prayers, and mournfully attest to the truth of being great sinners, yet change not their characters.

CHAR.—Cheerfulness is Religion's companion, and happy are they who are under her influence. I believe we have all been more or less impressed with the sombre aspect of Religion, in our early days. In attending the religious meetings of different denominations, even when a child, if I saw any of the church members cheerful, I thought they should be lost in silence and solemnity, or they were not living according to their profession. This was the effect of an anti-christian education.

MELISSA.—We have all been under the same deadening dogmas; but many persons, who are brought up within the pale of the Church become infidel to its views, when they arrive at an age to think, judge and decide for themselves.

MARGARET.—Truth gleams over the earth, and occasionally there are minds prepared to advance beyond the common mould of thought. Such receive new revelations, and go before the people, like John the Baptist, sowing seed, that shall perfect fruit for the Millennial harvest.

MELISSA.—It is right that we should be prepared for the increase of truth, and recognize a growth of mind in the outside world; but it would seem that the truly religious element is at a low ebb. At least there is very little power of conviction at work in the hearts of the people, at the present time. "The multitudes rush to and fro in quest of knowledge" and yet lack that knowledge—wisdom—which saves from sin in its many destructive forms.

MARTHA.—A truly religious life, no vain ambition, nor tyrannical rule can overthrow; as was proved by Jesus, Mother Ann, Madame Guion, Fencelon, and many other bright lights, which the persecutor's rage could not extinguish.

MARGARET.—Though many have been nobly devoted to Truth, and have suffered for its sake, I would that there were many more to impart zeal for holy things. The present generations seem destitute of energy and true fervor of spirit. Their attention is turned to the external. Religion, with them, is theoretical, and assumes the form of Sentimentalism, rather than practical virtue. Even among us, zeal—the true Christ-baptism—that lifts above the vain and unreal, into the conscious realms of unifying spiritual action, is, at times, deficient.

ANN.—"Vanity of vanities" might be inscribed on the present phase of life. "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and pride of life" have unlimited sway among the people. A distaste for enjoyment in truthful realities gives the young a thirst for exciting pleasure—frivolous reading—false notions of dress—stimulating diet—an altogether artificial mode of living. The primitive simplicity of our forefathers is lost sight of, and consequently there is degeneracy and effeminacy.

MARTHA.—We cannot wonder at this. Could we accurately discern the signs of the times, we should conclude we were about entering upon a new epoch. The revolutions in Science, presage the upheaval of the spiritual elements. Ere long, a mighty wave of inspiration shall flood the earth, awakening the latent germs of spirituality, and producing a revival—an outpouring of the Spirit, that shall turn the tide of life into the channel of reality, and effect a work of righteousness.

MELISSA.—The Religion greatly needed is strength to subdue me and mine—the selfish principle in the human heart—to extirpate war and establish peace—to create a sphere of universal love, from which shall emanate kindness, even toward the animal creation; and which will admit of no law in violation of equality and right.

CHAR.—Must history ever repeat itself in individuals, as well as nations? Shall the inordinate thirst for power produce war and bloodshed, through all time? Must life be sacrificed for human sustenance, when God's beneficent hand has spread the fields, and given the seed that will produce a golden harvest of precious grain, and luscious fruit, for food, ample to supply the muscle and brain of those who earn their sweets? Must some toil beneath the ban of poverty, beyond their strength, for a mere pittance, to sustain others in luxury and idleness, because Mammon hath not elevated them to its standard? These are the questions which arise in the mind, when we behold the extremes of life, and the wrong usages of society.

MELISSA.—When the higher and more spiritual forces control, those troubles will cease. The elements of nature, when stilled beneath that power, will bring no more the revolutions of error and sin. Evils will increase before that event. Society will feel the full force of wrong doing; and arousing to a realizing sense of surrounding conditions, will, by the help of the good Spirit effect a great change; firstly by individuals bettering their own lives.

ANN.—"Lord what shall I do to be saved?" is ever the cry of a convicted soul. We may comprehend principles—theorize intellectually—and behold, afar off, the glory and beauty of a life of virtue and goodness; but, unless the heart be touched by the fire of truth, and a practical work of reformation be begun in the soul, we shall in no wise realize the fulfillment of a perfected life.

MARGARET.—There are wise lessons of instruction which we may gather, from the experience of preceding ages, and perfect by the spirit of inspiration.

MARTHA.—The gold and silver threads of inspiration and revelation, are interwoven through the long woof of human experience.

At no period of time has the Divine Spirit left mankind entirely to the guidance of frail human nature. According to our power and capacity, we are constituted guardians of goodness, and while we uplift the standard of our day, and live to the law of obedience, we shall be as stars to guide others to the truth, who in their turn will do likewise. Thus the car of Progress is slowly but surely advanced toward the golden age of perfected knowledge—Religion.

MELISSA.—As we believe, the time draws near, when many will be led to Mt. Zion, under spiritual awakening; should we not be more zealous in performing our own work, that we be not unfaithful stewards in the house of God, nor have our birthright taken from us? We have every opportunity for spiritual growth and advancement, and of all people should be the most religious. According to our light and understanding so will be our judgment.

MARGARET.—Religion is a theme on which much has been said and written, yet comparatively few have comprehended its true meaning, or practically lived out its spirit. Of all people, Believers are most favorably conditioned to illustrate it in its full meaning, in the every day duties of life. According to the precept, "Labor is worship and prayer," ours is a life religion.

ANN.—And all may possess this gospel, without money or price. They to whom we look as our exemplars in virtue, meekness and every good grace, were poor. No outward advantages distinguished them from the common people; and no worldly honor gave them dominion. Their superiority was in their life work; their glory, that of the self-conqueror—their honor that which cometh from God.

MELISSA.—It is well for all to consider for what end and purpose they are living. Man's earthly existence is like a shadow flitting over the rainbow. As the ages glide away, the sons and daughters of men, the youth in life's green spring, and they who go in the full strength of years, the aged and the infant, shall one by one be gathered to the land of souls. Life is uncertain; but when based upon true principles, we can brave the storms and tempests that may come; for Religion is our anchor; and when we have finished our work in time, angels will bear us in safety to our immortal home; and we shall rest in the tranquillity and confidence of those "who wrap the drapery of their couch about them and lie down to pleasant dreams."

CHAR.—We appear and disappear, as sunbeams, through the clouds. The thousands who walk the earth to-day will vanish as the dew. The plants that blossom but to fade, have as firm claim on life as the proud monarch who sways the scepter of power in the earth; but through all life's changes, RELIGION is the hope of the human heart.

MARTHA.—The noble Athenian philosopher said to his disciple "He may bury my body, but let him not think he buries Socrates." So in reviewing the past history of the race, we see that Truth stands in the same relation to man that the Soul does to the Body. It has had many forms, which have been subject to transmutation. But Truth—the very soul of existence—remains the same, yesterday, now and forever.

Genuine belief helps to form true modes of thought; yet, however absurd any form of belief may appear to us, we are bound, in the name of Religion, to respect every sincere opinion. Religion, whatever form it may wear—be it enshrined in the mysticism of Heathen Mythology, or enthroned in ideals of pure Reason—we should regard in the same reverent spirit.

MARGARET.—It has been said "there have been but few voices, in the world, and many echoes." The same desires, questionings, aspirations and hopes have moved the human heart and mind, only varying in form, according to the growth of the ages. It is interesting to candid, reflective persons, to glean from the vast fields of spiritual knowledge and experience precious seeds of Truth, to sow in the soil of their own hearts, that it may by culture, bring forth a hundred fold of good, that they may have wherewith to scatter blessings over the earth.

BEAMS OF LIGHT.

1. When the glo-ry of light beams o-ver our way, From bright souls in regions a-bove; The forms of the near, the true and the dear, Who've pass'd from our sight, ere the day turn'd to night, Are seen flit-ting round us in love.

2. And when we are weary and worn with life-toll,
We feel their soft presence in peace,
They brighten the hours, which ever are ours,
To rightly improve, as onward we move,
To the land where sorrow will cease.

3. 'Tis thus we are strengthened to journey below,
And bear with true pleasure each care,
For bright is the thought, with happiness fraught,
Of communion sweet, when the hours shall fleet,
That hold us earth-labor to share.

4. O, gladly we walk by the faith of to-day,
And banish all darkness of mind,
For in that fair land, where the purified stand,
Our faith will be sight, and in its pure light,
We'll crave not the joys left behind.

EDITOR'S DESK, August 19, 1874.

DEARLY BELOVED MOTHER EUNICE—I have just read critically your letter and accompanying article, of the 16th inst., to Eldress Ant'e. They impress me on this wise, that Eunice is a genuine Shaker, who has the life of God in her own soul. A child and sister of Mother Ann. You have life in yourself as she had.

You have not only been baptized with the Christ Spirit, but have traveled—increased with the increase of God. You have not gone to sleep on the enchanted ground—the success of the first cycle. You heard and obeyed the voice of the first thunder—testimony. And now you hear the voice of the second thunder beginning to sound. What a blessing to you! And what a blessing you are to the work of God in thus connecting the past and the present—the first and second degrees. While it is unreasonable to expect those of the first degree to be pioneers in the second, their blessing is heavenly. Of all the thousands who came out of Egypt only two entered Canaan. Only two retained the life of God in their souls to that degree, that they could be leaders in the army of the Lord, to fight the new class of enemies of the Lord in the land of Canaan—the Promised land itself!!

THE RIVER.

I'm descending the banks of a beautiful river,
That flows by the storm beaten island of time;
And I'm watching the waves with their unceasing quiver,
That ripple and dance on its bosom sublime.
And I'm watching the life-boats, just crossing the river,
That follow each other and all disappear,
While above the strange music that swells there forever.
The call of the boatmen distinctly I hear.
I am thinking of friends, who've passed over the river,
Those near ones, those dear ones, so blessed to me,
Did feelings of dread seize their spirits? Ah never!
'Tis the River of Life to those who are free.
I am thinking of those who've passed over the river,
Whose vestments concealed the dark spirit within;
If true hope was theirs, as an anchor? Nay never!
'Tis the River of Death to souls hid in sin.
And, I ask, do I fear to pass over the river?
Should the boatman soon call, could I readily say,
That my soul is prepared to meet Father and Mother?
Or would I ashamed and abashed, answer Nay!
Sometime I shall go to the banks of that river,
And I shall return from its brink nevermore,
Its tide may run cold, yet my soul will not shiver.
There's sunshine and rest on the opposite shore.

THE SHAKERS.

—O—

Jefferson Democrat.

Esteemed editor, in the brief conversation we had the other day, you asked me some questions about the Shakers, remarking at the same time that you had "heard some pretty hard tales about them." I had not time then to answer your questions definitely, yet you will doubtless remember that the few statements I made were in defense of the Shaker order.

After we parted I was meditating upon the import of the questions you had with so much candor asked me, and wondering why it was that the multitudes of people in the world, who are so intelligent upon general subjects, should have such limited knowledge, and such mistaken opinions respecting a body of Christian professors, whose teachings have been freely offered to the people for a hundred years. The Divine law is, "Ask, and ye shall receive." You have asked, and I offer to let all who read your paper know that Shakers are an interesting class of Christian people. There are many sects and divisions of people all claiming the right and title to the name "Christian." If obeying the precepts of Jesus, and endeavoring to follow his example on earth, will give any people the right to be called "Christians," there is no religious body of people on earth who have a more perfect right to the Christian name than the Shakers have, and none who can more rationally prove their faith and their mode of life to be correct, by Scripture texts, than the Shakers can.

Those hard tales which many persons hear about the Shakers are not true, they are merely started by those who love to gossip about their neighbors. It could not harm an editor, or lawyer, or doctor, or preacher, or granger, or republican, or democrat, or merchant, or mechanic, or farmer, or any of "the rest of mankind," (male or female) if they would correctly inform themselves how and why the Shakers differ from other professors of Christianity. I will not prolong this article, but will say in conclusion, that if you are disposed to ask any questions through your paper on the subject, they shall be in a kind spirit briefly answered. Or if the citizens of Hillsboro (or any other town in Jefferson county) would like to listen for an hour to a lecture upon the subject of Shakerism, they can be (most likely) accommodated.

With kind regards,

V. Nicholson.

In our last issue, in the question, "Had not Believers as good a right to make fools of themselves, for a little season, about two Books, as the Antichristians had to do it for ages? 'For Christ's sake,'" was omitted.—ED.

Should we explore this spacious earth,
And view its contents o'er and o'er,
Renew again our diligence
Add search the sea from shore to shore;
How vain, alas! our search would be,
If happiness we seek to find,
It can't be found on land or sea,
Except we have it in the mind.
'Tis there our choicest treasures lie,
Abroad for joys we need not roam,
Nor stretch our sense beyond the sky,
Our greatest heaven is at home.

SCDDEN WARMING.—A very dangerous, yet a very common winter practice, is that of sudden warming when very cold. We frequently read in the papers of little children falling down dead on suddenly going to the heated stove after a long, cold walk. Others are injured seriously who have no guess at the real cause of the difficulty. Every intelligent person knows that a frozen limb will become dead flesh if suddenly warmed. The temperature must be raised very slowly. The limb must be put into cold instead of warm water, or be rubbed with snow. When the limbs are half frozen, they cannot resist the injurious effect of sudden warming. Convulsions in children occasionally occur; many more are made suddenly faint and sick without knowing the cause; the eyesight is often particularly affected, and people call it "snow blindness." All skin difficulties are greatly aggravated by sudden warming, and sometimes very painful ones are induced. It is generally thought that chilblains are caused by the severe cold, but the true cause is sudden warming after they have been very cold. It seems as if this distressing malady were largely on the increase—even very little children suffer from it. Too great care cannot be taken in this matter of warming cold feet slowly, and by friction rather than by putting them near the fire.

Sudden warming, too, makes the whole system so subject to cold for a long time afterward that extra garments are always needed, and then the frame shivers in what was once very comfortable temperature. Physicians have observed this in their cases, and say that they have sometimes suffered in this way for years from a single act of such imprudence.

Use proper precaution on your own part, and watch carefully over your children, who of course follow their natural impulse to rush to the fire when very cold.

SHAKER THEOLOGY.

—O—

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."—Is. lx. 57.

SHAKER theology is the logical arrangement of all mundane and super-mundane facts, constituting a system of ideas, subject to the law of evolution—change. To it new facts may be added, old facts be revised or proved to be no facts at all.

SHAKER CREED is the present formula of belief—the orthodoxy of to-day—generally accepted, for the time being, by the leading minds of the order.

The eye of faith looks into the interior of things, by the light of revelation from spheres invisible to the earthly eye.

The path of the right doer grows brighter and brighter toward perfect daylight from the sun of righteousness.

A DECLARATION of faith in certain doctrines, by a Shaker elder or member, is an expression of his or her own theology, or creed. Only as it commends itself to the understanding and conscience of any member of the order, is it binding, except upon the one who utters it; and he or she may increase with the increase of God.

ONENESS we all pray and labor for. Those points, upon which we are agreed, are as the foundation stones of a building—not to be moved. So much of the second temple is builded.

The spirit of truth is, with us, stronger than the spirit of theological controversy—stronger than the gates of hell, which, in Babylon, have prevailed against all her sects and churches, not excepting the Churches of the Witnesses.

From the Constantine to the Quaker Church, from Dr. Beecher to Dr. Swing, theological controversy has taken peace from the old Earth and from the old Heavens. All is turned to blood, under Church and State governments—governments in christendom. It commenced with shedding the blood of Jesus. Then the blood of the martyrs flowed like a river, down through the ages, until humanity, in its highest form of development, was drunk with blood—was either killing, or being killed, in theological or secular wars—patriots, heroes and soldiers, in battle array, with garments rolled in blood, destroyed the earth. Peace was thus taken from the human family, until their most sacred, refined, religious emotions were tinctured with horrid conceptions of the atoning blood of Jesus.

BELIEF was life or death, justification or damnation, temporal and eternal.

By faith—Belief alone—souls were saved, or lost. Error, in doctrine, was fatal to all hopes of salvation. Belief, in a given proposition, was voluntary, not the effect of evidence—of demonstration. Theology and science were implacable enemies. They, who killed the body to save the soul, were doing God service—were loving their neighbors as themselves. They were inflicting temporal suffering to rescue souls—obstinate heretics—from sufferings of eternal duration. Thus did doctrinal error—doctrines of devils—produce its practical results—ceaseless murders.

Shaker Theology is exempt from doctrinal controversy—the gate of and into the Hells—holding that light and truth are sown for the righteous, who are compelled to believe right, just so far and fast as they do right; because belief is the result of evidence—demonstration—not subject to the will, being involuntary. Therefore, the Gates of Hell have prevailed against the seven churches of the 1260 years of apostacy—the church of Jesus, the Church of the Apostles, the Gentile Church of Peter, the Nicene Church of Constantine, the Church of Luther and Calvin, and the conglomerate Infidel, Quaker, Catholic, Protestant Church of America—but the Gates of Hell will never prevail against the Church built upon the Rock of Revelation, past and present; and this is the foundation upon which the Church of Christ's Second Appearing is being built. It possesses no final creed, but, like the Bible, its "theology" is subject to perpetual, everlasting "revision," until the Christ Spirit shall have led it into all truth, through Revelation—the Rock on which the Church is founded.

Then shall the Peace Makers have Peace, in leaving each soul free, not only to speculate and reason out, but to work out its own theology, agreeable to the Christ saying: "If any man or woman will do the works, he or she shall know and understand the doctrine." Henceforth the faith, which works by love and purifies the heart—first pure, then peaceable—shall take precedence of all Shaker Theology.

LIFE THOUGHTS.

—O—

MAN being brought into the world under the influences and by the principles of the generative order, knows no life higher than, and comprehends nothing else for justification, but the natural order, until his senses are reached and his mind becomes enlightened by ministrations from the resurrection heavens. Then conviction begins to find a seat in the soul; and as it is treated, man rises or falls. Then commences the education that develops manhood and capacitates him to an equality with angels. His understanding becomes enlarged and progression is his life-thought. His soul is touched as with fire, his reason is called to action, and from the light he accepts or rejects, justification or condemnation becomes his reward, corresponding with volition.

From the influx of light from the heavenly world, he is, by induction, brought to a knowledge of the principles which introduce love and the peaceful elements of Christ, the prince of love and peace—the principles which condemn hate and ignore war and strife—which introduce regeneration—the resurrection order—and condemn the sensual carnal life—which introduce community of interest and condemn selfishness, arrogance and that spirit which would give to one an advantage over another. Heeding these ministrations from the Christ sphere, he becomes developed in the Christ life, where the associations and relations are those of a common brotherhood and sisterhood, in the whole economy of life—where "they buy and sell as though they possessed not"—where "they use this world as not abusing it"—where "they that have wives be as though they had none"—where "the fashion of this world passeth away."

Here, finding an element they become, in this life, children of the resurrection (Christ), and are "accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead"—they "neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more"—sin, the cause of death being taken away—for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being children of the resurrection.

In this relation, there is "one faith," that of Jesus; "one Lord," the God of the universe; "and one Baptism," that of the holy spirit.

Query. Is that people to be found? Answer. Investigate Shakerism; learn the lives of its true members, and satisfy yourselves. Religion, that will not bear investigation, is not worth possessing; and if the lives of religious professors will not bear examination, they are not profited by religion.

Elder Abm. Perkins, Canterbury, N. H.

CHRIST IN US.

—O—

IN the passage, "Except Christ be in you, etc.," we learn two important lessons from biblical scripture. First: The characteristics of the Christ; secondly, the condition of reprobates. Our ante and anti-christian educations have left much for us to unlearn in the school of the New Creation. That which saved Jesus from being reprobate, was the entrance into his soul, and its permanent residence there, of the Christ. This Christ is not an individuality—not a personal being. We have erroneously been taught, that whenever Christ is mentioned, Jesus is intended; and that this beautiful appendage is only applicable to him. So, have we been taught, that heaven is a peculiar locality, instead of being a condition of the soul. The law of impenetrability, will not permit two or more things to occupy one and the same place — where Christ is, else cannot be. The same philosophy will not admit, of one person or thing being in two or more places at one and the same time. Christ may be in millions, at one and the same time; and then, these are not reprobates. What is Christ? It is a power, emanating from God to humanity; and transmissible from us, to other apostles of the same life. Upon whom this emanation rests, to them is given power to rise superior to themselves, and to become sons and daughters of God. Herein, by the power of Christ, are Christians saved from their temptations to commit sin. It is, to them, "the power from God unto their salvation." With it, they will travail — progress from the evil and good of the past, to an exceeding righteousness.

The gospel has called us to come up higher, into new conditions of life. It has taken us "for better"; not "for worse"; and if we do not thus travail, the absence of Christ is apparent, and we are reprobates. Let us learn and experience, that Christ is a saving power, not a person. Let us manifest the salvation of this power to others, by impartation. As the disciples became *Christ*s, and did impart the power of salvation over every human weakness; so, in this era of the new creation, let the same "Christ in us" be exercised. And let us progress from the infantile class of the Christ School, having learned the a. b. c. of salvation from gross sins and sensual predilections, "let us leave erroneous ideas of Jesus, and go on unto perfection." We can never grow in truth, until we perceive that it is as really in our power to become *Christ*s, as it was the province of Jesus. And then, there will be no mixed mists of uncertainty regarding this important principle. Then will Daniel Christ, Ann Christ, and Christ attached to other Christian or Jewish names, declare the same power intended by Jesus Christ.

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN — WHAT HE IS NOT.

THOMSONVILLE, CT., September 30, 1874.
GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN, ESQ.:

I see by your article in the Shaker and Shakeress, that you have seen some of the light and grandeur of the doctrines lived by the Shakers in America. You will be, I know, a mighty and valuable knight in the cause. You have every reason to believe a reformation in theology close at hand. All the signs of the times point to this work. God will bless you. No man has a right to be a reformer until he is reformed himself. You have chosen the true way. I want to tell you my experience in a few words: A few weeks since I came to this Shaker village, and I was much impressed by their life. I finally received light, such as you have got, and it seemed to open a new world to me of which I never thought it possible for mortals to know. Now I earnestly desire to be with you as soon as you commence to begin laying these mighty truths before the people. I have one lecture all ready now. I want to be enrolled as a private in this mighty battle. I will await orders, from any direction, if the orders are only Forward. I should like to go with you if you commence soon, as one of your spiritual staff. You may remember we met on board the steamship Atlantic in 1871, where you came to the rescue of Elder Evans and Mr. Peebles when the clergy gave them the cold shoulder, as among those who gave recitations in the saloon.

G. F. TRAIN'S REPLY.

MILLER'S BATH HOTEL, 41 W. 23th St. }
NEW YORK, October 2, 1874. }

NOT A SHAKER.

JAMES H. DICKSON, ESQ.:

Elder Evans and the Shakers invited me to be present at their Social Gathering (I believe the only outsider ever asked), and our affinities are strong on diet, exercise, hygiene, sexual continence, abstention from poisonous stimulants, freedom from bigotry, fanaticism, superstition, and in bold advocacy of great truths. I am not yet a Shaker.

NOT A MORMON.

Brigham Young sent his son, Brigham, Junior, Congressman Canon, and another elder, as a delegation to my cell in the Tombs (where I was incarcerated by the Beecher ecclesiastical tribunal for publishing his impeachment in Bible quotations two years in advance of the New York journals), to assure me that the Mormons were with me to a man, and a woman too, and I endorse his temperance, frugality, thrift, enterprise, independent thought, in establishing a colony free from asylums, jails, poor-houses, gambling hells, rum shops and houses of prostitution. Yet I am not a Mormon.

NOT A CHRISTIAN.

I never drink, smoke, swear, lie, cheat, steal, fornicate; never back-bite, make pastoral visits, or wish I was dead; never introduced "nest-hiding" into the Christian fold, and have always observed all the noble precepts taught by all good men; have read the Bible from my youth upward, only to despise the morals of its prophets, David, Solomon and Lot; I do not believe it possible by any act of mine that I could injure my fellow-man; am always happy; never discontented — living in the perpetual sunshine of an eternal present. Yet I am not a Christian.

NOT AN INFIDEL.

I rejoice in the brains and intellectuality of Voltaire, Rousseau, Hume, Gibbon, Paine. Yet I am not an Infidel.

NOT A PAGAN.

I like Democritus, Lucretius, Euripides, Epicurus, Alcibiades, Aristotle, Plato and Pliny, but as I do not believe in immortality, I am not a Pagan.

NOT A SCIENTIST.

I like Newton, Davy, Bacon, Cuvier, Comte, Spinola, Herschell, Mill, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer. Yet I am not a Scientist.

NOT A SPIRITUALIST.

I admire the morals of Confucius, Buddha, Brahma, Moses, Christ, Zoroaster, Mahomet, Swedenborg, and other ancient and modern Spiritualists. I can memorize the faces, forms and characters of departed relatives and friends. I can respect Davis, Wilson, Peebles, Mansfield, Dake, Slade, Foster, Hume, the Eddies. I can imagine some grand, undeveloped power lying beneath all this slate-writing, mind-reading, table-turning, spirit-acting that agitates the public. I am not yet a Spiritualist.

THE PSYCHOLOGIC LETTER IN THE SUN.

All these show what I am not. What I am all the world will soon know. So I answer your kind note by handing you my letter in the Sun to-day, and enclosing yours to Elder Evans, the champion Shaker of Mt. Lebanon, and the lion of the fold of Judah, who so astonished the priests on board the Atlantic, and the press at St. George's Hall in London, who ought to invite you to deliver your first gun at the headquarters of the disciples of Ann Lee, in Massachusetts, or join him at the coming convention of the Shakers in Steinway Hall, November 22.

PHILOSOPHY OF THE OVEN.

THE use of heat, to increase the digestibility and savor of food, is an art exclusively human. The highest order of animals below man has not been entrusted with fire. Baking, or roasting must have preceded broiling. A shallow hole in the ground, paved with small stones, is still in use as an oven.

Sarah, of Patriarchal times, when asked to knead three measures of meal, and make cakes on the hearth, no doubt her oven was a flat, hot stone. Her cakes were a sort of Graham wafer, a kind of wheaten hoe cake, and was the unleavened bread of the ancients. It is by far the most palatable of any form of unleavened bread. Of all the new forms of bread, none surpass it, not even the gem; it is not hard, but it requires considerable mastication.

The first improvement on the hot stone oven, was a jar-shaped cavity in the earth, lined with cement, in which fire was built, then came the Cottage oven. The elevation of this hollow structure to a convenient height, may be regarded as an important step in the history of baking. The ovens of private families are all of this type, and the only improvements made, have been in the direction of saving fuel. This oven has one inherent defect — from the moment the dough is put in, it begins to cool. The oven, with continuous heat, we owe to a native of Woburn, Mass. — Benjamin Thompson. He was a wise and humane man. His discovery of the nature of heat, and its application to useful purposes, rank him as one of the most honorable of men. He is best known as Count Rumford. His oven was of iron, and heated from without. The dough, at first, was subjected to heat to distend it and partially cook it, at the proper moment he introduced air so hot as to brown the bread. About twenty-five years ago, the French applied this mode to a brick oven, maintaining a regulated temperature.

There is an oven known as the Vienna oven, to which two important additions are made, one to admit steam, so as to maintain a moist atmosphere down to the last few minutes of the baking, when an intense heat is thrown into the oven so as almost instantly to redden a very thin crust. The bread of Vienna is probably the best of breads, neatness and cleanliness are observed in preparing the yeast and dough. The oven is surrounded with air heated to about a temperature of 380° — 168 degrees hotter than boiling water. The ideas involved in this mode of baking are first, the steam saturates the air of the oven with moisture and retards evaporation from the loaf, during the early part of the baking. When the loaf has attained its fullest distension, and is penetrated by myriads of minute pores, the steam is shut off, a side door is then opened, and an intense blaze is flashed into the oven, giving to the loaf a delicate red crust, having a flavor most grateful to the palate. This part of the operation is brief, and watched through a glass door.

Bread, fresh from the oven, should never be covered up; on the contrary, it is improved by exposure to a current of fresh air. In reference to airing, thick loaves are not so good as thin ones.

The bread of continental Europe is excellent; that of England, less so; that of this country, is of the lowest quality. To improve the quality of the staff of life, among our people is the object of this paper.

Some knowledge of chemistry is necessary to raise breadstuffs from the soil. I venture to state, that here is more ignorance of chemical law manifested in the garden and on the farm than in the bake room. In either, there are rich fields to be explored, and benefits to be gathered. Chemists have thrown some light on the subject before us. They say that there are different kinds of fermentation, one kind converts the starch (starch is not soluble), into dextrine and sugar, these are soluble. Too much fermentation converts the sugar into an acid, and makes sour bread; the first develops an agreeable savor. The second spoils the bread, hence the necessity to arrest fermentation before acidity sets in. How acidity operates will hereafter be shown; also, the proper temperature to be maintained in the treatment of dough. In converting starch into dextrine — into sugar — carbonic acid gas is formed. This gas swells up the loaf and fills it with little holes. If fermentation be suffered to proceed beyond the formation of this gas, and runs into acidity, it will break down the gluten, and the loaf will be liable to collapse — become heavy and sodden.

To make good bread, good flour is necessary. The next thing is to have good yeast. No sour yeast should ever be used. There is given a recipe for making yeast and bread from the highest authority in this state (Massachusetts). Boil, with the skins on, enough of potatoes to make a quart when mashed; peel the potatoes, and mash them to fineness, then mix, intimately with them, one pint of flour, and stir the whole to an emulsion, with the water in which the potatoes were boiled; cool the product to about 80°, and add half a pint of the best baker's yeast, and a table-spoonful of brown sugar. Set the mixture aside and maintain a temperature of 80°, till it works well. Of this yeast, take half a pint, to seven pounds of flour, mixed with three pints of water, at 80°. If the weather be cool, warm the flour too. Knead well, and set aside to rise in a temperature of 80°, till the full size is attained; then put the loaves in the oven heated to not less than 450°. Keep the loaves covered with stiff paper, till the dough is fully raised; then remove the paper and permit the browning to take place. The larger the loaves, the hotter should be the oven.

Bread has, sometimes, an agreeable nutty savor, acceptable to everybody. Again, there is bread destitute of that aroma. To secure the former condition, first, have good flour; second, use no more water than is necessary; third, knead thoroughly—till flakey; fourth, bake well; fifth, cool it off in a current of fresh air; sixth, see that the yeast is all right.

The foregoing is affectionately dedicated to all the young sisters in the gathering order, at Mount Lebanon and at Canaan, by their friend,

BELOVED ELDER FREDERICK AND BROTHER DANIEL:

The foregoing is the fruit of some research, and though condensed to a few pages, they but meagrely represent the labor bestowed on the subject.

I have thrown the matter into its present form trusting, thereby, that its efficiency may be increased.

Herewith accept my love. I bless all the Elders in your lot, for their many labors of love, and pray that you all may be supported to bear against the pressure, within and without, brought to bear upon your spirits, I sympathize with you. Do us the favor to accept the love of this humble family. We are happy in the assurance that when you are praying for the Household of Faith, we are included. Our love to all the burden bearers and to all the beloved brethren and sisters, and in a special manner to Brother J. Shaw and to the aged sisters.

LITTLE THINGS.

BELOVED YOUTH IN ZION—Do not despise the important lessons that little things teach, and think they are of no consequence—socially considered. Life, and great things, are made up of little things, and little things often lead to great results. No one can be guilty of great offenses, who has not been accustomed to committing what he or she regards as "little errors."

Words are little things, but they sometimes strike hard. You wield them so easily, that you are apt to forget their hidden power. Fitly spoken, they fall like the dew, the sunshine, and the fertilizing rain; but, when unfitly, like the frost, the hail, and the desolating tempest! Some youths speak as they feel, or think, without calculating the force of what they say; and then seem surprised if any one is offended. Springs are little things, but they are the source of large streams. A helm is a little thing, but how evenly it governs the course of the largest ship. Nails are little things, but they hold together the largest buildings. A seed is a little thing, and may be buried a thousand years, and hereafter spring into life, and become a great plant. The coral worms, tenants of the ocean, are little things, but they create more important changes than the whales. As little drops of water make up the rivers, and rivers form the sea, so, the "little habits" of wrong-doing, make up the ocean of wrong in your whole lives.

In a word, little things make, or unmake you all; they are the true seeds of character, for they more than make up, by their number, what they seem to lack in individual importance; and you might as well plant the seeds of noxious weeds, and not expect them to grow, as to cherish "little vices" and not calculate on their increase, or as reasonably hope to see the firm and noble oak, where no acorns were ever planted, as hope for success in spiritual progress, where the seedlings of a thousand little habits of virtue and purity, have not first been carefully nourished.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Conn.

UNION.

DEAR EDITORS—My emotions are deeply stirred by the unselfish interest and consecrated labor of soul and body, you put forth, to promote this most glorious cause. I hail our little monthly as a messenger of light, to break the spell of monotony, furnish deeper thought and elevate our aspirations.

I appreciate the necessity of union in the great work whereunto we are called. Herein is our strength. As Christ and the Father and Mother are One, even so are Their Children—All their Childreu be one—No domestic unkindness.

Looking out, from my Shaker home, upon the broad expanse of earth and its inhabitants, what do I see? Babylon—Mixture—Confusion.

Viewing my dear Elders, Sisters and Brethren—their aspirations all centering in a life of Virgin Purity—I exclaim, Blessed Dear Gospel Relation! Your Life shall be my Life! your joys, my joys, and your sorrows, my sorrows.

Twenty-four years ago, then a mere youth, I came, from the great metropolis, to this Holy Mountain. Great was the change—from the great city of turmoils and unmentionables, to the peaceful, serene and innocent. O that all could comprehend and appreciate the beauty and excellence of the higher life!

Though young, I found the first principles more than child's play. It was not to merely walk up to the Altar and receive the sprinkling, nor to be plunged into the water and come out the same old sinner. I was baptised in the Holy Fire of Truth—Confessed my sins, one by one, as I committed them, and began the New Life—the Resurrection.

I began to feel that I could handle the things of God with clean hands, and sing his praises with pure lips. The bands of death were broken. Transported to Elysian fields, I could join the Ransomed of the Lord, chant their sacred songs, and go forth in "the dances of them that make merry."

God met me in mercy. I accepted the invitation—the call. I rejoice in my deliverance from the thralldom of sin. My love for a life of purity grows stronger and stronger. "Upward and Onward" is inscribed on my Banner.

DEAR ELDER FREDERICK—With the above, please accept largely of the Love, of Elders, Brethren and Sisters, for yourself and all associated with you in spreading the joyful tidings of Truth—Love that can be expounded and solidified—sweeter and sweeter, and better, the more it is mixed and extended.

Andrew Barrett, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20th, 1874.

Elder Frederick Evans:

DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER:—I have been thinking of writing to thee, for some time past. When thee was here we had some conversation about the peculiar views and testimonies of the Shaker fraternity. I have been for a long time satisfied that there is great need of reform in regard to the sexual relations among mankind. Personally, I think the highest condition is that in which a man and woman can live together in all the freedom and purity of a true marriage, and be entirely above, not only sexual intercourse, but all desire for it. I have been aiming for this, and am conscious of approaching such a state. I fully accept the truth of the declaration of Jesus, "That he who looks upon a woman, to lust after her, hath already committed adultery in his heart." I am well aware that there are persons whose presence produces more or less sexual excitement, and as a sensitive person I have learned that it is better to avoid such persons. I was much attracted to thee while thee was here, and am much interested in thy writings. Thy letter in the Journal last week was gratifying to me. I wish there were more who could appreciate the high standard of your people. My position as a physician with considerable practice, and as a prominent spiritualist, occupies all my time, and yet I am glad to know of your movements. My position is that sexual intercourse for the propagation of the species is justifiable for those who are upon the proper plane to carry it out; but for mere gratification, and especially after the time for that function to be carried on, I have no doubt it is a very great injury to man and woman, and that the powers wasted in that direction would, if preserved and turned in the right direction, give to the world many more beautiful, intellectual and spiritual truths.

Wishing thee and thy friends all success,

I am very truly thy friend and brother,
Henry T. Child, M. D., 634 Race Street.

Mt. Lebanon, Sept. 1, 1874.

CHARLES AND AMANDA DEYO—ESTEEMED FRIENDS: I hope my absence from your gathering will not be noticed. My spirit is with you in the good cause of Peace.

Of the Seven Seals, which the Lamb opened, the first was a White Horse—Innocence and Peace. The rider had, for his weapon, a Bow, and a Crown, as a sign of victory. Revelation was the Power. This was the first Church, founded by the Apostles. For three hundred years, this Church denounced War.

When the Second Seal was opened, a Church was founded, of which Constantine was the head—a Red Horse, signifying Blood. The rider took Peace from the Earth—that they should kill one another. Constantine introduced war into the Christian system. It is there yet.

The Moon—Church and State governments—was turned to blood. Is it not so to-day? Is there any hope for peace, until all theology is purged from our Statutes—all Sunday laws and every form of Priestcraft, and Woman is installed Human, as complete as Man—endowed with the same inalienable right, to make Laws, and execute them.

Lay not the flattering unction to your Souls, that any Male Government will be a Peace government—Males will fight.

Not until the raw material is so far wrought up into Manhood, that the Man yields might to right, and ceases to hold Woman as a Slave, can She become the medium of Heavenly Truth to him.

When Redeemed Woman rules the Souls of Men, as absolutely as heretofore the unredeemed women have ruled men's bodies, there will be peace.

Dear Friends—Peace be with you. You will meet a little company of our Brethren and Sisters. As a delicate and appropriate expression of the welcome, we know you feel, you may, during their sojourn, practice a little more self denial than is your wont. Dress plainly. Eat plain food. Be what you seem to be, and seem to be what you are—that our countries may join.

Please excuse the simple plainness of your friend.

F. W. Evans.

BUDDHA AND JESUS.

BY J. M. PEEBLES.

THE Buddhists of Asia consider Sakya Muni Gotama Buddha a much greater Saviour than Jesus of Nazareth; because, say they, the latter, born in poverty, a carpenter's son, sought — upon Jewish authority — to enthrono himself as king; while Gotama Buddha, a king's son, laid aside the prospective crown, humbled himself, walking the companion of beggars, that he might break down caste; thus enabling him to more fully reach and enlighten the lower classes of humanity.

Gotama Buddha died 543 B. C. Buddhists number in China, Ceylon, Siam, Burmah and other oriental countries 170,000,000. And while the most numerous body of religionists on the globe, they have never been known to persecute. Their teachers renounced the world, and through fasting, prayer and penance, sought to subjugate the lower animal nature to the higher.

In preaching, Buddha continually magnified the "wheel of the law"—the four great principles.

I. There is sorrow, want, pain.

II. Examining the source of pain, he found it to be selfish desire.

III. Pain was destroyed by regulating the natural demands of life, and destroying selfish desire by self-control.

IV. The means of destroying it in the sense of extirpation, were meditation, self-abnegation, and the practice of every virtue.

A Brahmin accusing Gotama Buddha of idling away his time, neither sowing nor reaping, was met with this reply:

"I do plough, and sow, reaping thence fruit that is immortal."

Where are your implements, Gotama? asked the Brahmin.

"My plough is wisdom; my field is the law; the seed I sow is purity; the weeds I clear away are the cleavings to life; my work, attention to the precepts of the spirit; and my harvest, Nirvana—eternal peace!"

Among the beautiful teachings of Buddha and his disciples were these:

"In a corrupt world each ought to be a lotus without a spot."

"So long as the desire of man toward woman is not subdued, so long is his mind in bondage."

"Sin will come back upon the sinful, like fine dust thrown against the wind."

"Master thyself, so mayest thou teach others; and easily tame them after having tamed thyself."

"Let us live happily, free from greed among the greedy—happily, though we call nothing our own."

"Better than ruling the world is the reward of the first step in virtue."

"Of all the lamps lighted in Buddha's honor, one only, brought by a poor woman, lasted through the night."

"Not even a rod, not Maria, nor Brahma, could change into defeat the victory of man over himself."

Brahmins and Buddhists bearing much the relation to each other as Jews and Christians, agree in considering Christian nations exceedingly inconsistent and wicked—eating the flesh of dead animals—drinking intoxicating liquors—sleeping several in the same bed—engaging in the "unfruitful works of darkness"—in religious persecutions—in bloody wars; and all, in the name of Jesus, the Prince of Peace!

The Brahmins of India and the Buddhists of China seriously contemplate sending missionaries through Australia, England, America and other Christian nations to enlighten and imbue them with these divine principles taught by Brahm, Confucius, Gotama, Buddha, Jesus Christ, and other great inspired souls. "Ex Oriente Lux!" Will not the Shaker communities of America heartily second the efforts of those noble "heathen"? It seems that this missionary movement has already been initiated in Australia. The Weekly Queensland Advertiser has the following:

"At a numerous and influential meeting of the Chinese residents in Melbourne, it was resolved, in view of the deplorable paganism which prevails, to establish a mission in Melbourne, Victoria, to bring its benighted inhabitants to a knowledge of Confucius and of the pure morality which he taught. Careful inquiries and prolonged observations have convinced the promoters of this movement that the population of this Colony is sunk in the grossest idolatry, and that they worship medals of gold and silver, stamped with the portrait of the reigning monarch. Certain temples, called banks, are erected as the shrines of these pocket deities; and so abject is the condition of thousands of idolators, that they not only adore gods of gold and silver, but they also worship those human beings who possess the largest collection of them. Desirous of reciprocating the zealous efforts of British missionaries in China, the Chinese residents in Melbourne purpose to send English-speaking and highly educated Mandarins into the Metropolis and country towns of Australia with a view of weaning their inhabitants, if possible, from the degrading worship of that god who bears the name of Mammon. Our sacred books tell us, 'Contentment furnishes constant joy. Much covetousness constant grief. To the contented even poverty is joy. To the discontented even wealth is a vexation.' Now, we perceive that among the idolators and pagans calling themselves Christians there is much covetousness and no contentment. Therefore, we desire as fellow-beings created by the same Divine Power, to bring our Victorian and Australian brethren to a knowledge of the truth, as it is in Confucius, and convert them from the error of their ways."

The above document, with directions for depositing subscriptions, purports to come as a sort of "first fruits" from Buddhist Chinamen in Australia, who when reflecting upon the heathenish darkness that enshrouds Christendom, become fired with a genuine missionary spirit. It certainly bespeaks the nobility of human nature in its best estate, as well as reveals the half-hidden grandeur of the Orient. There are many Chinamen in Australia, and mostly Buddhists. The Mandarins of China admire the "Sage of the West," Jesus; but despise that Christianity that forced opium into the Empire, and through an infuriated soldiery, burned the Emperor's library in Peking. It is certain that India and China purpose sending missionaries to England and America. Let those who have "put on Christ"—those who "walk in the resurrection"—forbid them not; but welcome them in the spirit which breathes "peace on earth and good will to man."

THE TORTURE OF PRISONERS.

It is not more than a century ago that the torture of a prisoner charged with a criminal offense was the common practice in nearly every country of Europe. England had become an exception, by that time, to this rule, and so had Sweden. Prussia was reformed in this regard by Frederick the Great early in his reign. Imperial Rome had forbidden the torture of the accused, unless he were a slave.

The torture of a prisoner in the course of his trial was justified on the ground that it was essential to bring to light the real facts in the case. At the same time a confession racked or wheeled from a prisoner was not deemed satisfactory. With a stupidity which modern jurisprudence can hardly equal, the self-accuser was compelled to reaffirm his statement under oath, as if evidence given in the agony of torture would be strengthened by repetition, wrung from the victim through fear of further torture. The outrageous practice was defended also on the ground that it was a sort of extra-judicial purgation of infamy. Others again, went so far as to reason that the prisoner might be guilty of some crime of which he had not been accused, and either he would be brought to own up, or receive in the process, a punishment which would answer the demands of justice.

The iniquity of this practice was thoroughly shown up by the Marquis Beccario, an eminent Italian philosopher, in a treatise on crimes and punishment, which swiftly passed to several editions; and about the same time by Voltaire in his essay on the same subject. The arguments used were so cogent and persuasive that a thorough revolution was the result. Modern Christian jurisprudence owes an incalculable debt to those two humane men. One would suppose that lawyers and judges, having most to do with such things, would have been the first to move in this reform; on the contrary, it was brought about in spite of them. The legal profession, bench and bar alike, do not search for principles. There are no precedents for taking advanced positions, until compelled to do so by public opinion.

PEACE IN THE WOODS.

THE Peace meeting which has been waited for with interest by large numbers of excellent people, was held yesterday morning and evening in Wiley's grove pursuant to the call. We are compelled to content ourselves for the day with the merest outline of its proceedings.

The woods were well filled with the most intelligent and orderly assemblage it has ever known. About five hundred persons were present, a large proportion of whom were women, young and old, with conveyances by the hundred. The day was fine, the wind just swaying the tree tops, and making the softest accompaniment to one of the most peaceful scenes one ever meets.

Upon a raised platform the venerable head of John A. Spear, of Philadelphia, was prominent, flanked by six of the sweetest of Shakeresses, with their plain caps and white handkerchiefs and drab gowns, two Shakemen and the Madames Deyo, Blake and Victor, with Messrs. Crumney, Gardner and others.

The morning session was opened at half-past ten with singing by the Shaker friends, seven in all, two men and five women, with voices as gentle as the air above them.

Order was then called by Mr. Charles Deyo, and singing again by the Poughkeepsie Temperance choir, the piece being "Glory to the Lord."

The choir sang "Stand the Storm." Mrs. Blake made an address.

Mrs. Amanda Deyo read lengthy and interesting letters from Alfred W. Love, of Philadelphia, L. C. Whipper, of Mystic, Conn., who was formerly imprisoned for not paying a tax, from J. W. Onderdonk, S. M. C. Perkins, President of the American Peace Society, H. C. Denham and Gerritt Smith.

The Shaker friends sang "Beautiful Shore," and everybody seemed to be wishing they were all there together.

Daniel Offord, one of the members of the North Lebanon Shaker Society, gave an account of the origin and objects of the Society and of the hostile action of the government toward non-resistants. The Poughkeepsie choir then sang "Let us have Peace," which was not the composition of the late Gen. Grant. Mrs. Elizabeth Underhill then made an address, the Shakers sang "We are hastening On," while everybody wished they would stay, and the morning services were over.

At two o'clock the meeting was opened again by singing from the Temperance choir, followed by the Shakers. Letters from F. W. Evans, the Shaker Elder, and Antoinette Doolittle, were read by Mrs. Amanda Deyo. Mrs. Blake then made a vigorous speech, followed by L. V. Gardner of this city. The choir sang "Purity and Love," and the crowd was silent to a whisper.

Mrs. Matilda Victor, of Michigan, made an impassioned address. She was followed by one of the Shakeresses, Anna White, daughter of Robert White, of New York, who has belonged to the Lebanon Society for seventeen years, and was formerly a pupil of Mr. William Gibbons, who taught the seminary on Mansion Square, many years since.

Better results or a better meeting could not have been reasonably desired.

THE GOVERNMENT OF CHILDREN.

THE proper culture and government of children, is an intricate subject, not generally understood. It is a science that demands deep study and attention; for upon the proper training of the young and rising generation, the future greatness and real character of the nation — its morals — civil and religious polity — depend.

Great attention is given to zoology, agriculture, and horticulture. Continued efforts are made, not only to improve the germs of each according to the family, or tribe to which they belong, but also, to understand their nature — their powers of endurance — the climate most congenial to health, and the soil best adapted to their life and growth. Those possessing animal life, are governed by instinct in regard to propagation — are under natural law — and observe times and seasons. In this respect they are a law unto themselves.

Times and seasons, are equally necessary to be observed in the vegetable kingdom; but man is the judge and active agent in reference to seed-time; and upon his knowledge, when and how to sow, plant and cultivate, depends in a great degree the fruitage.

But to return to our subject, the "Government of Children." What do we find? In the first place, we find the major part of the children in society in the same condition that David the psalmist found himself, when he said "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." In other words, my parents did not regard times and seasons, and I was the product of inordinate desire and passion, instead of the fruit of those who were perfect in the work of generating their kind.

Under these circumstances, we begin our work at a decided disadvantage. Children in our time are precocious; and all the conditions of society conduce to make them so. While great care is taken to educate and develop the intellect, their food, dress and exciting amusements all tend to stimulate the passions in children, who would, if in a normal, childhood state, be as innocent as the lambs that skip and play in green pastures; but are now subjects of secret vice at an astonishingly early age; and through that source, the disposition is soured, the temper is easily excited and a spirit of insubordination takes the place of child-like obedience and submission. How the best way to meet these conditions, and the wisest means to be used to control them, is the subject now under consideration.

We read that the God of the Hebrews at one time said, "The iniquity of the fathers shall be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generations." At a later period the Lord God said by one of the prophets, "The son shall not bear the iniquity of his father, but both father and son shall bear their own iniquity and die for their own sin." There is a qualified truth in both of those averments.

It is a self-evident fact, that physical diseases are transmitted consecutively from generation to generation, like scrofula, cancers, and consumptions, which are the effects of transgression of physical laws, many times reaching far back on the line of ancestry. And it is just as true that diseases of soul and mind often permeate the very germs of life, which are infused while in the embryo state. In many a little stranger, who is cast upon the world without its own volition, we trace the marks of sensuality, of intemperance, of moral degradation, stamped upon the visage, by its predecessors. A sad picture!

Many have read what the wise man Solomon said, in the days of yore — "He that spareth the rod hateth his son" — and have made use of the rod upon children oftentimes when themselves had need of its application to their own backs; for they had never learned to govern their own ungodly tempers, nor to rule their own spirits. No one in justice to him or herself, or to the child, should ever undertake to govern it while under the influence of passion!

In modern times, a great change has been wrought in the public mind in regard to governing children! The theory is, "Moral Suasion." The practice is, "Indulgence." When we meet small children with their hands full of candy, or rich cake, trying to find room in their little weak stomachs to deposit it — which often occurs after a full meal — and we interrogate the parent concerning it, the reply is, "I know it is not for its health but the little thing wants it, and my love is so strong that I cannot withhold it." Then we would ask when in after years the same parent sees the child fall a prey to disease, or be forced to fill a premature grave — What then? What becomes of the love? Many deep sighs, and tears, cannot restore health and life. Costly monuments may be erected to their memory and choice flowers strewn upon their graves; but the story will remain to be told, that the parents did them an irreparable injury through a false conception of love. God is as just with his children, as He is merciful, and so should earthly parents be toward their children; and never let mere affection so rule their judgment that they indulge them to their harm.

'Tis the duty of parents and guardians to study the germinal traits of character in children, to make due allowance for peculiarity of disposition, age and circumstances of birth; and how they can best secure their confidence. Some, in the order of their creation, are effeminate and timid; others are bold and heroic in their natures; different means are needed to accomplish the same results. But no child should ever be allowed to grow up in a spirit of insubordination to its parents, guardians, or superiors in age. Children who are the best disciplined in early life, as a rule, make the best citizens, the most reliable members of society.

In the strongest language that we can command, we would urge the importance that all who have the charge of children should feel the weighty responsibility resting upon them to protect them in innocence, to curb their tempers, control their abnormal appetites and help them to develop the higher faculties of their being by teaching them to think right; and as they mature, to unfold their reasoning powers on the intellectual, moral and spiritual plane!

In our humble opinion this object can be obtained the most effectually, by giving them the strongest evidence of our love, in kind admonition, patient endurance with their faults, and by appealing to their better feelings, showing them that obedience will insure happiness, and lead to enduring honor. Added to this, children should be taught that physical health is essential to happiness; and in order to secure it strict attention must be given to diet, dress and ventilation. It is a duty, binding upon all who have the charge of children, to teach them to subsist upon plain, wholesome food. Give them bread made of unbolted flour — vegetables — and healthy milk; and let good refined sugar, with fruits of various kinds, take the place of poisonous candies, and rich pastry, adulterated with deleterious substances. Then we may hope, if children are reared properly, they will have no desire to depart from the path of rectitude in after life.

WORK.

Jesus said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day. The night cometh, when no man can work."

We all know what it is to employ ourselves about something we call work. It may be something of use, or it may be very frivolous and unnecessary; still, if it call out of us an earnestness of action, physical exercise for the body, and employment for the mind, it is better than inaction. For if we observe nature faithfully we shall see that every thing works, from man, whose pleasant work it was to till and dress the garden, to the minutest insect, or tiniest leaf upon the tree.

The laborious toil which depresses by its long continuance and ill-paid servitude, is still better than idleness and inertia; the noisy blusterer better than the no worker. But how preferable the profound worker, who in silence brings forth grand results.

As the curse lifts itself from the so long groaning earth, and woman, by self-denial and cultivation, rises above the plane of passion and sensual life, will not man, too, feel that this life of toil is not without its physiological use? This beautiful earth needs multitudes of agriculturists to keep and dress it, whose manliness would be better preserved than by crowding into the steaming cities, and entering upon pursuits calling for but little outlay of muscle, or of mind. The life-giving stimulus for work, derived from the fresh breezes of heaven and nature's charms, is immeasurable. The Apostle said, "Work out your own salvation," or deliverance from any evil that oppresses or afflicts, particularly any sinful habit. Have we a temper which would compel the tongue to utter words which our reason would condemn? We have work to do, that we say or do nothing we would not have another say or do to us. Have we moodiness and moroseness in our natural temperament? We have, if possible, harder work to do, to become the genial, kind and loving beings the followers of Christ should be; diffusers of that love which should control each thought and deed.

Are we prone to be trivial and giddy — thoughtless and indifferent in our spiritual nature — its sweet and blessed resources yet unawakened? Then let us heed the Apostle's word and commence on a life of higher earnestness.

"The temple of God is holy which temple are ye." Let us realize, then, that the time for "the cleansing of the sanctuary" has come to us, and that all that is not hallowed and of use, in purifying and refining the temple, should be driven out. We find there is work in this; and to have it thoroughly furnished, fit for the Holy Spirit to inhabit, is work worthy of an angel's love and zeal. As the poet has so fitly said—

"Let us do our work all well,
Both the unseen and the seen,
Make the house where God should dwell
Beautiful and fair and clean."

Cheerfully, then let us "work with our might," feeling that by so doing we are putting ourselves in harmony with the Creator and His works, and becoming resurrected into the angelic life of pure and heavenly love and unselfish uses.

Each and all of us, if we do truly follow Christ, will find our "wilderness of temptation," our "garden of Gethsemane," as well as our "mount of Transfiguration." And if we shrink not from them, nor deny the Christ, who is seeking by every tender and loving appeal, to win and hold us to the service of love and truth, great will be our reward. We may find the cross, sometimes, heavy and burdensome, and the yoke galling; but the quiet rest of spirit we experience, after a temptation overcome, or a decisive "Get thee behind me Satan," will more than compensate for all the pain.

"These are they who have come up out of great tribulation and have washed their robes (not without labor) in the life of the Lamb"—by no vicarious atonement; for, as the Scriptures say, "Obedience is better than sacrifice." "The blood is the life," and they have lived his life, and "followed the Lamb whithersoever he goeth," or has led. Their confession and repentance have "cleansed their robes" so that they have "no fearful looking forward" to the future; but a quiet trust that the same loving heart which said—"She hath done a good work" will receive them into his peaceful habitations in the spirit land, or call them to still more earnest work in his spiritual vineyard.

For every faithful soul there awaits the solemn consciousness which prompted the words of Jesus, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do," and this will be the consolation whenever brought before the bar of enlightened conscience, or in receiving the verdict of unchangeable truth and right.

That wise writer Ecclesiasticus said "Hate not laborious work, neither husbandry, which the Most High hath ordained." So far from laborious work being degrading, we believe it to be one of the means of man's regeneration. And that the measure of his happiness and honor will ere long be—not how much wealth he has amassed, nor from whom descended; but, how useful is he to his fellows? How many anguished souls has he cheered and comforted? How many needy bodies fed and clothed? And he will be considered God's truest nobleman who does most of such work, and sets an example of diligent hand-labor.

Mothers, whose active little ones surround you, teach them to work, and let them help you, tho' their noisy, boisterous spirits tire instead of helping. And when play time comes, snatch the moments for rest. Let them learn to work skillfully and well, when young, and they will find something to occupy hand and brain as they grow older; and not, through very disgust of life, find a suicide's grave. Teach them to work that they may be self-sustaining and not obliged to wait for some opportunity to rise to them position and influence unearned.

There will be work to do while there remain any poor souls grovelling in the mire of sensuality, or unblessed by the gospel of peace through self-denial. Some Christ will still be needed "to preach to the spirits in the prisons" of darkness, discouragement and death, a gospel of love and uplifting; and an aptitude gained in this life for benevolent, self-denying labor, must surely add to the spirit's uses, and consequent blessedness.

E. H. Webster, Harvard, Mass.

A LETTER.

EDITORS SHAKER AND SHAKERESS—Will you allow a four months' member of South Union, to congratulate you upon the excellent matter in the October number of your paper? From first to last, it is replete with good and wise sayings. Ideas of reform are inculcated, with liberality of sentiment, worthy the generous patronage of its own people, and of the public.

Among Believers, the mingling of sexes is without the debasing influences, arising from the present marriage system. Now, that the brave Shaker pioneers are passing away, after years of physical toil incident to founding such a community home, those now gathering to it, can begin to add the increase of mental endowments, that shall unite health to wealth, through the practical wisdom that shall effect a perfect release from the mental thralldom, and physical suffering, consequent upon ignorance.

The Shakers are familiar with spiritual intercourse, being, through Mother Ann's inspiring prophetic genius, founded upon Divine revelation. Were the outside Spiritualists familiar with the manifestations through her followers, they would not feast so exclusively upon the "Rochester Rappings." It is only another convincing proof, that "originality" is not safe to pin a modern discovered truth upon.

When the origin of human intelligence is ascertained, then Spirit communication can specify the time when certain new thoughts were first revealed to mortals. The world is so apt to forget principle, in the enthusiasm of building up systems, creeds and dogmas, it is not wonderful that the contestants are defeated in reaching the Eternal, by a favored route intended only for the elect.

When I attended those immaculate places of worship—the Church of God that offered the Holy Eucharist from the latest style of silver plate—I thought truth was glorious, and Christianity its greatest exponent. But upon the proof of immortality given me, by an Infidel Medium—resolving the atoning blood of the Lamb, into good bread and wine, more efficacious to invigorate the body than to save the soul—I began to question other things by the analysis of reason. The past, written records are simple—rudimental—in comparison to the possibilities of the advancing mind in its researches after truth. Wherefore then, I asked, be bound to the past, when authority is not adapted to requirements of the present?

Being thus gradually released from the bonds of childhood faith, I launched forth to seek my own spiritual salvation, by working in accordance with individual responsibility. I have at last moored in the quiet orderly harbor of Shakerism. I find the families genial (and so far as my own observations can judge), hospitable, generous and self-sacrificing. They acknowledge faults—lean to virtue's side—and can never be submerged by the corruptions of the world.

If all the Communities are as well favored with progressive Leaders as this one, no Brother nor Sister need despair of getting physical and spiritual wants supplied. When a people are determined to make practical the righteous theories of Christianity, how can they fail?

The world, concluding that mere preaching and praying, have not, and cannot bring happiness—turn to question how the band of Believers that grow by works instead of faith, manage to walk calmly, while the storm is raging so fiercely without.—It is by firmness of purpose, in resisting the follies of social customs, that enslave woman, by fashion's demoralizing hold, and aid her to an equal standard with the opposite sex, in business, and mental culture. They battle against the debasing passions—health destroying habits—that degenerate both soul and body.

Shakers, repel the horrible doctrine of total depravity and predestination to heaven or hell, as they do the physical resurrection; which is against all scientific facts. They condemn War with its bloody sword of devastation, and favor arbitration, and peaceful interposition, as a more enlightened way to promote harmony and fraternal love. Can these principles ever die? Nay; not if the Shakers themselves were to ignore them. Well have they cherished these bright truths. The excrescences incident to all organizations, will in the order of change be left in the past, under the increasing light of Divine Revelation.

FORGIVENESS.

—o—

To love our enemies, and to forgive those who injure us, is a Christian duty that requires self-sacrifice.

The command, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you" is explicit. We may find it difficult to obey this command; but it is unchristian to do otherwise.

It is easier to endure privation and suffering, severe bereavement and death, than to feel kindly toward those who rejoice when we are afflicted, and delight to add to our sorrows—whose words are as arrows to pierce our hearts and blight our happiness. To pray for those who have sought to wound our peace, and to rejoice where light shines upon their pathway, after they have darkened ours, calls for an amount of self-denial and grace, which few possess.

If we are found wanting in this grace, how can we offer this petition, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us?" Yet, Jesus expressly declared, "If you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father in heaven forgive your trespasses."

If we cherish enmity in our hearts, we cannot feel the love of God. He will hide his face from us, and we shall walk in darkness, not having the light of life to guide us.

When Christ taught his disciples to forgive, not only seven, but seventy times seven, then they prayed "Lord, increase our faith!" It is our duty, not only to possess a spirit of forgiveness toward our enemies, but, also, to deal kindly with those who, by misfortune, have been unjustly thrown upon the cold charities of the world. They who are striving to battle with the stern realities of life, with no friendly hand to aid them in the strife, or voice of sympathy to whisper comfort and assuage their grief, need compassion.

Those who have passed through the troubled waters of affliction and destitution, know better how to feel for the woes of others, than they who have never drank from the cup of disappointment and sorrow. "Every such heart knoweth its own bitterness!" A soft word, a kind act, may lift the threatening cloud, banish the darkness of night, and give hope of the dawn of a bright morning.

LIBERTY.

LIBERTY consists in the power to act without restraint or control except from the immutable laws of nature. In every phase of life, which forms the grand pyramid of material existence, and in the vast realm embracing mind, or spirit, in its unfolding growth, there is an innate desire, an unconquerable love of Liberty, even from the smallest manifestations of sentient life through progressive degrees, to the center of Supreme Intelligence. Any infringement of this native right in vegetable or animal growth, or in the development of those faculties with which the human mind is endowed, is evinced by corresponding death, a silent yet expressive language. Hence Liberty is life!

It is this love of life, this quenchless fire in the heart of humanity, that has warmed to action and given momentum in the strife against the foes of truth; from early history to the present day, men have struggled for religious liberty and political freedom. God has always had his witnesses; while one class have battled for human rights with carnal weapons,—being advocates of war on the low strata of physical force and retaliation, an eye for an eye their highest conception of justice—another class have turned the combative elements of their nature, energy and will into a higher channel, and relied on Almighty Power to aid them in wielding the two edged sword of spiritual truth which subdues the enemies within the human heart, and is a safeguard against those without.

In every Nation where Church and State have been united, the increase of truth has been opposed by the Priesthood, operating through the civil powers. Great has been the contest between bondage and freedom. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." Liberty is the herald and guardian of progress, and floods of persecution cannot sweep away its power; the sword cannot slay, nor the inquisitor's flame consume it! Truth has advanced and gained strength in defiance of the meek and dungeon.

About a century ago, a company of heroic, humanity loving men arose, and inspired by love of Liberty, they determined to break the yoke of oppression which held them in political and religious servitude. The contest was long and severe; but they realized that the welfare of unborn millions was involved in the success of the cause in which they had enlisted, and courageously they resolved to sacrifice self-interest and life itself for the priceless boon—Liberty. It is evident that they perceived that religious freedom could not be gained and maintained, except through Political liberty, based upon just laws. In a prophetic spirit, one of those patriots said, "Here may the flame of Christian Liberty which has been kindled, burn brighter and brighter, until states and empires shall be no more;" evidently alluding to the Millennium, for which they prepared a place.

It is a remarkable fact, that cotemporary with those workers for civil Liberty in America, a little band was raised up in England,—by the Holy Spirit—whose hearts were warmed from celestial fires; and with awakened consciences, and deep soul-thirstings, they sought freedom from the tyrannical power of sin—to search out its source—and if possible to find an antidote. By divine revelation,—and a baptism of the Christ Spirit—they were instructed, that only through the death of the carnal life, could the spiritual life be gained, and the germs of immortality in the human soul find expansion and growth.

By spirit guidance, they were directed to find shelter beneath the banner of political freedom which was about to be raised in America, where they might commence to establish a Church in which they could enjoy liberty of conscience, to worship God as they were moved in spirit to do, and be protected from harm. The seed of a New and Living Church was committed to their charge, seed which was the product of suffering witnesses of God—the saints and martyrs of past ages—that had been gathered and carefully stored by Angels appointed to the work, until the time was fulfilled.

They laid the foundations of the Church of Christ's Second Appearing—by the help of good Angels of the Resurrection Order—deep and strong. Now, it becomes our duty to up-build the walls. While those in the outward Order are striving to perfect the civil government—to make the Land a birthright inheritance—placing capital and labor in just relations, thus enhancing freedom and happiness, which will eventuate in the formation of a New Earth, let us learn to study more deeply the oracles of God pertaining to the spiritual angelic life; and be advancing in light and truth, and in obedience to all that belongs to the New Heavens. Thus by united effort we may build a temple of Truth, over which shall wave in triumph the ensign of sweet Liberty.

Catharine Allen, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

TRIBUTE.

It is now a century, since there arrived in this country, one, whose very name, sends a thrill of joy over the spirits of many who have been led by her spirit (through the instrumentality of others), to embrace her faith, and labor in the vineyard of Christ's Second Appearing.

And, when we consider how great were her trials, and how zealously and perseveringly she labored to overcome them—nothing daunted by the cruel persecutions which she was forced to endure from her vile opposers—we cannot be sufficiently thankful for our privilege.

Beautiful homes we have in various parts of the country, where all, from every clime, and nation—who desire to live pure and godly lives—may find a haven of rest. Here they can behold the fruits of the Gospel, and may also become living souls in the vineyard of the Lord.

Should not the sincere prayer of all Zion's Children be, that the day be not far distant, when the sin-sick and weary shall flock to our courts pleading for admission?

Not only for this increase should we pray but let us all earnestly labor for that spiritual growth in ourselves, which is so necessary, if we would approximate those who laid the foundations of this beautiful Gospel; and who endured hardships innumerable, in building these homes which we are privileged to enjoy, free from persecution.

Shall we not then, dear Brethren and Sisters, show our high appreciation of their labors and trials, by being good, in the very highest acceptance of the term?

PLANTS.

—o—

OF all objects in nature, perhaps there are none more familiar to us than plants. They please and interest us, and afford subjects for thought; many of them are emblematical of human virtues. Indeed, I have thought whether a close observer might not be able to trace many of the vicissitudes of life through these silent orators of nature. What wonders lie concealed in them!

If we look around us, what a variety of little sprouting spears we see beneath our feet; no earthly hand could form and infuse life into one such. And the beautiful evergreen trees, extending their branches in all directions, call forth our admiration. The maxim "A place for everything, and everything in its place," is good and useful—forest trees are out of their proper place when intermixed with choice fruit trees—wild plants are unwelcome guests in a cultivated garden, and we seek to extirpate them. Notwithstanding, the world would be robbed of much of its beauty were it denuded of the wild plants and weeds. Plants are made more beautiful, and useful, in proportion to the degree of cultivation which they receive. The potato, once poisonous, has, by culture, become one of the staple articles of food.

Some plants are very remarkable in their formation. In southern Asia it is said a plant is found called "Pitcher-plant," so called from its peculiar shape. The bowl of this plant holds nearly a teacupful of sap, and is formed with a lid on the top. It is abundant in Ceylon, and is often called Monkey Cup, for the reason that Monkeys raise the lid and drink the sap.

In India, one kind of these plants grows on a climbing stem of nearly a hundred feet in length, and is destitute of leaves till near the extremity; it has no cover, consequently insects are often drowned in the sap; and it is supposed that the plant receives its nourishment from the decomposition of those insects.

In South Carolina there is also a plant called a Fly Trap. When the sun shines it opens—a fly lights upon it, and immediately it closes and remains thus, until the victim ceases to struggle, then it opens again to receive another. We are informed that this species of plants is found on the borders of Cape Fear and Santee rivers only.

The Cactus is another wonder, found in the vegetable world. It has neither leaves nor stems and will live several months without water. It is well adapted to its own climate. During the wet season of the year it absorbs a large amount of water and stores it away for use through the dry season.

We look upon the variegated flowers and plants—their different shapes and hues—with admiration; but we cannot tell how one of them is formed. Nature is a silent, but a diligent and effectual worker.

CENTENNIAL.

—o—

A CENTURY has passed, since the first gleam of a New Moru burst forth on America's soil—a gleam of light that since that time, has pierced many dark places, and been welcomed by thousands of weary souls, who had hoped and prayed for its dawn.

Mother Ann, and the little band that accompanied her on the perilous voyage to this western land,—destined by Providence to be a refuge for the oppressed of all nations—found the people struggling for freedom from British rule and tyrannical exaction—to separate Church and State, and to found a free government, based upon equal rights, where liberty of conscience could be enjoyed. It was a momentous struggle! The welfare of future generations depended upon its success. Had those fetters, which bound the consciences of men and women remained unbroken, the establishment of a Spiritual, "Shaker Order," would have been impossible.

History tells of the life-devotion, and powerful action of noble hearts and wise heads, who made great sacrifices to obtain full release from unjust taxation imposed on the colonies by the English government. Its great oppression, called forth strong efforts for freedom and justice—which resulted in a long continued war—by the people, under the leadership of the bravest and truest men of the nation.

After the dark night of peril had passed, they lost no time in combining the wisdom and knowledge of Statesmen and Lawyers, in forming a government that would subserve the best interests of humanity. Those great and self-sacrificing men—justly called the fathers of our country—Americans are, in duty bound, to honor; and for the religious freedom which they handed down, as a boon, to posterity, we give thanks to-day. Can we over-estimate the privilege of sitting in peace and tranquillity "under our own vine and fig-tree"?

The Declaration of Independence, unlocked, and threw open the gate of truth for the Queen of Zion, robed in garments of purity and salvation to enter, the Daughter, anointed with the Christ-spirit with an Olive leaf—seeking rest in the hearts of a new people, in a new land.

Starting from this point, let us see what a century has effected. The revival which occurred near the close of the eighteenth century, had prepared many for the reception of the testimony of Christ's second appearing, through Mother Ann; and they were "a willing people in the day of God's power,"—noble and generous souls—who, under the spiritual awakening of truth and religious conviction, sacrificed worldly honor, and high position in the ranks of society, and gave their soul energies, and physical strength, in laying the foundation of a glorious temple, and in framing and establishing wise and just laws, which would safely guide and guard the inmates of that temple through all storms that might arise; and that would gather them into community relation, and consolidate them one united body—true Believers in Christ.

A nucleus was then formed—a Central Power—that has been like a spiritual magnet to attract other honest, sincere souls, who were seeking good; and who through faith and obedience have found a relation to the first-born children of Gospel light.

Of the varied and peculiar ways by which individuals have been gathered—from the millions who trod the highway of life—to stand in the ranks of the Zion Church on earth—we can only say, that He who prepared the way, and sent messengers to rear a temple, constructed of "living stones," will protect his own from barm and blight; and not one stone will find a permanent resting place there, that has not been tested by the rod of truth.

Self-denial, Industry and Economy, have formed a home with its "hundred fold of fathers—mothers—brothers and sisters—houses and lands," and an accumulation of goodness, consequent upon a righteous blending of the New Earth, and New Heaven. If one century hath so well fulfilled the promises of Jesus, what will Zion's attainments be when the years of the Millennium are numbered by the thousands?

SHAKER MEETINGS IN STEINWAY HALL, NEW YORK.—In response to invitations from New York and Brooklyn, Elder F. W. EVANS, with a Delegation of Speakers and Singers from other Communities, will hold three Meetings on Sabbath, November 22d.

BEAUTIFUL ANGEL HOME.

1. O, my beau-ti-ful an-gel home! Fraught with blessing and peace, Where no sor-row of earth can come, Where in-har-mo-nies cease;
2. Storm and tempest may wildly reign, Clouds as dark as the night, Gath-er o-ver the gold-en plain, Shutting thy glo-ry from sight.

Bas'd and built on the rock of truth, Rear'd by an Al-mighty arm, Heav'n-ly vi-gils pro-tect thy youth, From all dan-ger and harm.
Shall not hands of a ho-ly pow'r, Chase and scat-ter the mist, That the light of a bright-er hour, With thee may ev-er ex-ist?

Chorus.

O, my beau-ti-ful an-gel home! Fraught with blessing and peace, Bright immortals around thee come, Crowning with joy thy in-crease.

3.

Thus the care of a father kind, And a mother's pure love,
Bid thee prosper and union find To fair Zion above;
Storm, and tempest and cloud defied, God thy life and support,
Hosts of heaven upon thy side, Light to the nations thou art.
CHORUS: O, my beautiful, etc.

3.

Bound to hearts that are willing here, Toil and labor are mine,
Till my spirit and life appear In thy glory to shine;
Till thy truth like a flood shall roll, O'er a sin darkened earth,
Drawing hither the burdened soul, Weary of spiritual dearth.
CHORUS: O, my beautiful, etc.

RETROSPECTIVE.

Adown the highway of the past
Fierce Passion's chariots clang and dash,
To forward truths, ordained to last
When human weapons cease to clash.
Through Jewish epochs we discern
A glimmering light—though faint and far,
We watch it, till we see it burn—
The pride of time—the Morning Star.

And then through Gentile ages search,
To find a corresponding ray—
A gleam of the millennial church—
A flush of the millennial day.
What scenes of horror center there!
Where savage factions strive for might;
With arm of steel, not heart of pray'r,
Though God would guide them in the right.

Far stretched the sacerdotal cloud;
Gross darkness on the people lay;
The Church and State with scepters proud,
Forbade the dawning of the day.
Yet, Church and State, like marshes are
That point their lances at the sky;
Their festering odors breathe afar,
Their reeds must bow when winds pass by.

All strong through carnage, England stood,
And king and bishop bore the sway,
When Cromwell rose in midnight mood,
To herald Freedom's distant day;
He smote the altar, and the throne,
And hurled them from their lofty heights,
Gave Freedom's Temple just one stone—
The common people's vested rights.

The slaves that Moses sought to free,
Were unprepared for freedom's boon;
And Cromwell found that liberty
Had come to England's sons too soon.
Yet, was his mission timely wrought,
It made successive tyrants cower,
Unfolded energy and thought,
That gave Columbia's land its power.

O, England! thou wert called to be,
The greatest nation of the world!
Thy grand Republic, strong and free,
Extending where thy flag unfurl'd.
What priest or statesman now could count
The loss thy sordid children brought,
For it was thine, to be the fount
At which redeeming gifts were wrought.

The tide waves of a hundred years,
Have flung their wrecks on every land,
Earth has writh'd on in blood and tears
Since from thee went an angel band,
They were the messengers of God,
Raised up to break the power of sin,
To rend the covering spread abroad,
And let the light of judgment in.

The Spirit of the Christ reveal'd,
Was in a lowly woman's heart:
From thee her glory was conceal'd,
She must from thee, unknown, depart.
Yet, the glad tidings of great joy,
She published wide in Freedom's land,
Where king or priest cannot destroy
The good which God designs to stand!

OUR SPHERE.

Labor is the sphere assigned us,
And our time we will employ,
That a harvest we may gather,
Yielding peace and endless joy.
In the light that's ever dawning,
We will toil with fervent will,
With the loved and faithful number,
Who the law of truth fulfill.
While we're young our souls will gather
To our kindred pure and true,
And with holiness of purpose,
Seek the inner realm to view.
Upward to the sphere of angels
Shall our aspirations tend,
Where the power of love can reach us,
Where our hearts with good can blend.
And along life's daily pathway,
We will cull celestial flowers,
Bind them with the cords of virtue,
Found within fair Zion's bowers.
'Round our hearts we will entwine them,
Till there is no room for wrong,
Till our souls can join the chorus
Of the victors' happy song.
While we rise on faith's strong pinions,
From earth's elements away,
Where no blight nor sin can tarnish,
Where no treasure fades away.
What though adverse clouds may lower,
Beams of hope our course will light,
Till they guide us to the portals,
Far beyond the shades of night.

HOME.

Our Zion home is not adorned
With pictured walls, or gold;
Nor in a glittering chain of pearls,
Is all her glory told.
She bears the substance of sweet peace,
The treasure of pure love;
Her power, truth and holiness
That rule the heavens above.

Her walls are made of living stones,
With brightness they're aglow;
They form the temple of the Lord,
Where souls His truth may know.
And all who come beneath this dome
May work for virtue's fame,
Gain the true riches through that life
Which claims a blessed name.

O, happy home, what joys are thine!
Who from thy courts would go,
To be a slave to passions base,
In wickedness to grow?
My heart will keep the sacred law
That holds us in one band,
And feast upon the heavenly fruits,
That grow in Canaan's land.

With dear companions I'll unite
In consecrated toil,
And growing in the glorious light,
Will till the gospel soil.
And when we leave this mortal shore,
To dwell with saints above,
We'll breathe a pray'r that holiness
May bless the home we love.

Sarah J. Burger, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

"THE liberty of propagandism has almost always been greatly restricted in France—narrowly limited by drilling and excessive regulations. In our unfortunate country it is not as in free America; it is difficult to stir without authorized permission. Without Government authority a lecture cannot be given, a place of worship opened, a meeting held, or tracts distributed. Added to this, the Catholic priesthood is very powerful—more so, alas! at the present time than ever, exercising particularly in small towns and country places, considerable influence upon those in authority. It succeeds in fettering us in a thousand ways. It does all it can to discredit us in the eyes of the nation, attacking us violently from its pulpits, and not hesitating to employ against us the grossest calumnies. Most young Frenchmen are brought up in a holy horror of Protestantism, and traces of this early impression are even found clinging to the minds of men of independent thought—nay, of those whose boast it is that they are free-thinkers."

THE NEW HEAVEN.

THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS sends kindly greetings, and would fain waft joyous influences of love, and all-inspiring hope, over the whole "Household of Faith;" not omitting its host of other friends, in the Natural Order, for the year 1874.

We commence the new volume with thoughts upon the new heaven; and we bless those who "let patience have its perfect work" while they are creating it. And, through suffering, may the Shaker and Shakeress be made more perfect.

A glorious hope inspires us on,
To bear the burthens of our day;
A living faith bids us be strong
To reign o'er wrong undauntedly.
For lo, we see the heavens bend,
The Angels come with choicest things;
And to their home we would ascend—
Mount upward, as on eagles' wings.

To the "new earth" we have given a "place" to be, when truth-loving souls in the outer order shall have created it. But we would now sing of the "new heaven" in its purity and spiritual beauty, as distinct therefrom as is the sun from the moon.

"Come hither," said the Angel, "and I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife." Marriage in the "new earth" will be between one man and one woman; but, in the language of the Christ Spirit, it is a union between the Male (or Jewish Pentecostal) Church, and the Female (or Gentile Pentecostal) Church. They were betrothed 1840 years ago ("He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom"), and have now just grown to "the measure of the stature of man" and woman—Two Orders—"in Christ."

Jesus and the twelve Apostles of the Father Church, as representatives of the spiritual principles which should be revealed to and in the Mother (or Gentile Pentecostal) Church, were the "corner stone" and foundation of the Jewish Pentecostal Church, which had the Mosaic Law as a basis, but did not possess the revelation of the Mother Spirit in Deity, or in Christ. The Gentile Pentecostal Church, however, does possess that inestimable treasure—the revelation of the Mother Spirit; but, being "without the Law" of Moses, it cannot, at present, sing the song of Moses, the servant of God—all of those beautiful natural truths which will constitute the glory of the "new earth," as set forth in our preceding article, in 1873.

During the 1260 years' reign of Antichrist, ending in 1792 or 3,* these two systems, or—ders, and peoples existed, one on earth, the other in the spirit world, and acted upon each other for the progress of the race. The holy Jerusalem, or city of the Jews—the first Pentecostal Church—"was caught up to God," away from the persecuting spirit of heathen Rome, and was his throne in the spirit world; and was also the source and fountain of inspiration to the "two witnesses," who were continually delivering their testimony, and being slain by the "beast and its image"—Catholicism and Protestantism; first physically, then spiritually; until the kingdom of Antichrist has become full of their "dead bodies"—"names"—sects.

* In this, Cumming, Shimeal, and the Shakers, respectively (in their critical calculations) agree.

When, in the fullness of time, the Christ Spirit began, through a female in England, to be revealed, as it had been revealed through a male in Judea, the Church had to flee from the face of the English Lion, as it had "fled from the face of the Roman Dragon;" for, at that time, there was "no place" of refuge for it upon earth. Therefore "it was caught up" to the land of souls. Persecution had "destroyed the body," but could not destroy the spiritual organization. But, in 1774, the Church "fled into the wilderness of this 'new world,'" from the face of the English Lion, and it came to the help of the American Eagle. For Mother Ann proclaimed the Independence of the United States Government that should be finally and successfully established; as also liberty of conscience, through its agency.

John continues: "He (the Angel) carried me away, in spirit, to a great and high mountain, and showed me (in the spirit world) that great city, the holy Jerusalem"—the Jewish Christian Church (in which there had been a war between the saints and the Dragon and his angels—Roman heathens in the spirit world—until they were cast out), "descending out of heaven from God;" see Rev. xxi. It had a "wall" of separation from the "new earth," "great and high; twelve gates, and twelve Angels" guarding them; "and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of Israel. For in the spirit world, as on the earth, Jesus was sent to its 'lost sheep.' The city was four-square, and, when measured, it 'was a hundred and forty-four cubits, the measure of a man, that is, of the Angel;' the number twelve denoting the natural, or generating man; twelve times twelve, the celibate or resurrected angelic man.

And the many "precious stones" bear to the earthly man and woman—the "new earth"—the same relation that resurrection spiritual principles bear to the heavenly man and woman, or "new heaven." There was seen no physical "temple, and neither sun nor moon; for the glory of God did lighten it; and the Lamb"—the Christ Spirit—"is the light thereof." It was spiritual to that degree, that neither John nor his inspiring Angel, who was one of the ancient "Prophets," could comprehend it. Nor has any generative man or woman ever been able to look into this Apocalyptic book without becoming blind; and "any such person attempting to explain this book is crazy, or will become so."—Emerson.

Yet the natural man and woman in the "new earth" may "walk in the light of it," as of a spiritual sun; for the Law of Moses shall go forth from Zion, and the word of revelation shall come up from Jerusalem. And "the kings"—leaders in the earthly order—"shall bring their honor and glory into it." "And the gates thereof shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there." But there will be a continual ascension of individuals from the "new earth" into the "new heaven." Yet "there shall in nowise enter into it any thing that defileth, or that worketh abomination, or that maketh or loveth a lie;" but only those whose virgin characters are "written in the Lamb's book of life."

"Blessed," in the "new earth," "are they who do his commandments, that they may finally have a right to the tree of life"—of spirituality; and may enter, through the gate of confession, into the city of God—the "new heaven"—while yet in the body. "They sing a new song before the throne," or Church, which none but the twelve times twelve can learn; these being "virgins," who were "redeemed from the earth, and are not defiled" with generative men or women.

The first Gospel Church had its representative men; the second, its representative women. These two are the "angels who neither marry nor give in marriage."

"I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the son of man"—a woman—"having on her head a golden crown, and in her hand a sharp sickle. And to her an Angel said: Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time has come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe; and she thrust in her sickle, and the earth was reaped." Does not Shaker celibacy reap a man or woman from the earthly order, and bring it to an end in them?

But "the plowman may overtake the reaper," and the sower may soon follow; and thus the Two Orders—"the new heaven and the new earth"—may run parallel forever; or until this planet is exhausted of its vitality, and falls back into the sun, from whence (some say) it was originally projected.

It is a well-known fact, that the Church-and-State theologians utterly ignore the Mosaic Law; and that, from the days of Constantine to those of President Edwards, they have waged against it an unrelenting war. Gentile Christianity rests upon the Justinian Code and the Roman Pandects, exactly as Jewish Christianity rested upon the Law and the Prophets. Blackstone refers, not to Jewish, but to Roman Law as authority.

In the relation of the sexes, and of property, "an English woman," says Dixon, "is far worse off than any of her swarthy sisters of Egypt, or Bengal." "We get our marriage laws from the Roman Pandects; the Moslems get theirs from the Koran. In this difference of origin lies the secret of their difference in tone and spirit. Our laws have a civil and commercial source; theirs a moral and religious source. Primarily, theirs are Mosaic, as Mahomet was a lineal descendant of Abraham, through Ishmael, his son." (P. 294.)

"Here, indeed, an inquirer strikes his ax upon the root of our" Babylon "system. Our life is a divided duty: a moral life based upon the Gospel; a family life based upon Civil Law. Thus, while our morals have their life in Christianity, our statutes have their root in Paganism."

"The truth is, we English and Americans have hardly yet embraced Christianity as a scheme of life. We find our religion at church; and, when we have sung our psalms, and breathed our prayers, we go back into the streets, to be governed for another week by our Pagan Law."

MEETINGS OF SHAKERS AND SPIRUALISTS IN NEW YORK.

THAT the Metropolis needs a baptism of salvation, equal to the supply of water that surrounds it, some will hardly deny. If this salvation should ever reach any of its denizens, it will be through the instrumentality of those who are saved from the sins with which this and other cities are notoriously afflicted. They need "Saviours."

Upon the appeal of a lover of truth—J. M. Peebles—that "Zion must have a hearing in New York," ten of us girded ourselves for the mission, and were hailed by the beautiful morning of Nov. 22d, 1873. We quartered at the hospitable "New Hygienic Home"—clean, quiet, and restful—at whose head stands Dr. Miller, who finds it more difficult to relieve his patients of the effects of other doctors' medicines than to effect permanent relief from disease. As a "Home," or "Cure," we recommend travelers to 41, West Twenty-sixth street.

On Sabbath morning, we repaired to Robinson Hall, which was soon comfortably filled by a thoughtful and respectful audience. J. M. Peebles welcomed and introduced us in (as we felt) very flattering terms, which we are laboring to feel may some day be deservedly bestowed. Singing, by the excellent choir of the "North," followed, with much interest. The writer was next introduced; and, though our efforts were very well received, we proved only a kind of John Baptist to the speaker of the evening, which we were contented and duly prepared to be. Eldress A. Doolittle followed in a few well-timed remarks upon the increased facilities for obtaining knowledge of the truth, and the necessity of obedience thereto. Her words were received with evident satisfaction, and much outward approval. A few more songs, and then our Morning Meeting closed.

In the Afternoon, we attended the Lyceum, spoke to, and sang for, the children, and witnessed the movements of the Spirit upon some individuals, who lost all control of themselves.

In the Evening, we reached the Hall early, yet found it nearly filled with impatient auditors of seemingly select minds, who were conscious of their needs, and appeared to realize that they were soon to receive satisfaction. A few songs opened the meeting. Elder F. W. Evans came forward, and taking for his theme the Leaders of the December and January Nos. of the "Shaker and Shakeress," spoke, for more than two hours, as we never, upon any occasion, heard him or any other man speak. Thus to hold an audience, as crowded as was that, for so long a period, required both talent and the power of truth to accomplish.

Several Reporters for the City Press occupied places on the platform; and, although beginning with the speaker, they soon became too interested to continue reporting. We followed him for an hour and a half, reporting sufficient to fill six columns of this our Monthly, when we too became enchained by seeing and hearing. Such indeed was the discourse, that we should require six times its period of delivery to report the whole of it. There were laid down the most thoroughly radical premises in truthful systematic theology; and upon these were built up the beautiful structures of a new earth and a new heaven. Arts, sciences, history, orthodoxy, infidelity, land reforms, land limitations, social life with sectarian proclivities, lawyer-craft, priestcraft, and doctor-craft, all came in for their share of elucidation and justice at his hand. The utter abandon with which he scathed the rottenness of man-made creeds, and hypocritical professions, surprised me; and the thought that we were "bearding the lions in their den," led to reflections upon what might be the consequences. Jesus said far less to the Jews, for which they crucified him. And the fact that round upon round of applause greeted the speaker, evidenced the highly-liberal preparation of the people for truth, and their appreciation of the spirit no less than the letter of the Constitution of our country.

Time was, and that not long since, when a safe conduct would have been necessary, after such a delivery in this same city. One man, of fine intellect, said to me: "No one but a Shaker would have been permitted to speak like that, without a tragical ending." So we thought, so think we now. But of one thing we are assured: Just such facts and undeniable logic, carried into effect in that most wicked of cities, would prove the salvation of thousands.

The sister of R. D. Owen remarked: "If this nation is ever saved, it must be through the Shakers." Other women returned heartfelt thanks for the clear, lucid advocacy of their rights and interests by the speaker. One remarked: "This city needs just such salting, at least once a year, to keep its rottenness from reaching the nostrils of an avenging heaven."

And that noble-hearted, eccentric, but honest, infidel—George Francis Train—who says that he does not believe in a God, or in a Jesus, or in a hereafter, but does believe in Elder Evans and the Shakers, after reaching the Institute, sent up the following note:

"Dear Elder Evans, Congratulations on your magnificent lecture. It should have been taken down in short hand, and published all over the world. You should write it out, and print it in the "Shaker and Shakeress."

"Many thanks for so handsomely shutting off the call of the audience, as I requested before you went down. My speaking days are over. The time for action is now at hand."

"George Francis Train."

The evening proved rainy; but this was fortunate; for the Hall would not have held a third of the number who undoubtedly would have made the attempt at an entrance, but were prevented by the unfavorable weather.

This Meeting will prove but a forerunner; and then we move: Ho! for the Cooper Institute!

Elder G. A. Lomas, Watervliet, N. Y.

Mt. Lebanon, Sept. 25th, 1873.

BELOVED ELDERS, & BRETHREN & SISTERS OF THE GATHERING ORDER:

I WAS agreeably surprised to find the "SOCIAL GATHERING" in our dwelling-room, when I came in for meeting on Tuesday evening, and am delighted with it, containing, as it does, many excellent hints for our guidance and travel all along the way. It was a real casket, handsomely and tastefully prepared without and within, ornamented with buds of promise, blooming flowers, and ripened fruitage, the products of a self-denying life. Those offerings, proceeding from the heart and life of the contributors, reminds one of the pellucid waters of life, which rise beneath the Altar of Self sacrifice, and flow from under the threshold of the Temple down into the great Sea of human nature, to heal its muddy waters, that the fish therein may live in preparation for the Gospel net. Beloved friends, it brings your spirits very near, as they often are; and I hope the life of every one whose name is there recorded, and all others who have entered the Gospel field, may ever continue under the Altar as a well of "living waters springing up unto everlasting life;" and that they may glow as stars of divine light and beauty, beneath the gradually-extending canopy of the New and Spiritual Creation.

Surely there can be nothing so beautiful and glorious on this earth, as the clean, consecrated, subject sons and daughters of our Heavenly Parentage. O may I never mar this beautiful relation, which is really worth ten-fold the sacrifice required to gain it—yea, a hundred-fold! My feelings were with you all that day. If I had been in need of rest from toil, and were allowed my choice as to how to take it, I would have been with you bodily, without the least desire or temptation to be anywhere else. I am thankful for what you have given us. It is indeed seldom that such a clean messenger, so free from mixture of earth, or taint of error, goes forth in a visible form to enlighten the denizens of this benighted planet. And, if it should be but little heeded now, it will inevitably sow seed that will spring up in some soils, and extend with a widening influence, as the ages roll on, and the actors grow strong by increasing toil and sacrifice.

Reformers, and even anti-christians, having little else than moon or starlight, though they sometimes hit upon real gems of truth, yet are they so embedded in earth, or surrounded by darkness, as to be often like a torch in a cavern: bring them out to the sun, and their light ceases to appear. Hence their fire, brought down from heaven in the sight of men, only enlightens those who are in a like degree of darkness. And so far as they hold the truth in unrighteousness, like those who hear the sayings of Christ and do them not, their impure affections and desires, which are the windows of the soul, are like stained or colored glass, adjusting the light to their pleasures or fancy. The light of mere natural reason, unaided by the wisdom that comes from above, is both adjustable and movable from place to place, and allows its possessor, like one carrying a lantern, to wander in the wilderness of the natural life, as far and as long as he pleases.

Not so with the revealed light that shines in Zion, which proceeds from the primal Source of unchangeable principles, in a direct line through an orderly channel, inviting the wanderer to return thither, and to dwell in a fixed place of abode, in a quiet resting-place, and peaceful habitation, which shall never be taken down, nor one of the stakes thereof be removed forever. Here our God has become unto us a place of broad rivers and confluent streams, wherein shall go no galley (labored system or creed) with oars, neither shall gallant ship (of human-invented schemes) pass thereby. Therefore have we received garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness, and the oil of joy for mourning; for, in the Orders of the Gospel, the Law of Mount Zion, we have a fixed light which will not veer to human caprice and folly, nor accommodate the worldly-wise and carnally-minded; and, if we find we are getting on colored glasses, we can have them removed, if we desire it, by dipping in Jordan, which is but coming into the light of the true and faithful witnesses, who are appointed as watchmen to guard our city, whose walls are salvation, and her gates praise. By thus doing, we renew vital contact with that word of Truth, which is the light of the heavenly and only true life. All such have access to the sanctuary of holiness, where God has promised to meet and commune with us.

Beloved Elder Frederick, Eldress Antoinette, and co-laborers, your lives of devotion are known. We bless your lives of consecration; and may we imitate your righteous example, by obedience and faithfulness in the trust committed to us, to prove our sincerity by good works.

In much love, from your brother, who is deeply interested in all efforts to hasten the work which shall cause the knowledge of the goodness and glory of God to cover the earth as the waters cover the seas.

Alonzo Hollister.

PS. Our Elders unite in sending their love.

LONG speeches, long letters, long communications, are out of place these stirring times. We have a whole world's news to look after and put in order for our readers over night. Remember that, kind correspondents and contributors. Avoid parentheses. Drop the semi-colons altogether. Make the spaces between your periods as brief as possible. Shake out the adjectives without remorse. Sacrifice the pet metaphors. Be not led away by the lovers of antithesis, or alliteration. Be clear and crisp, pertinent alike in your invectives, eulogies, and recommendations. Think of the Lord's prayer, and then of the awkward substitute served up by sensation-mongers in too many pulpits. That flights of tawdry rhetoric, and volleys of expletives; what endless repetitions of tedious details weary and disgust the hearer. It is frightful to think of the time wasted by these self-parading petitioners and long-winded inditers of many-headed sermons. Life is too short, too full of cares and duties, to be thrown away thus. The best advice, the brightest wit, the deepest wisdom, come over in small packages. — Boston Globe.

TRUTH FOR YOUTH.

To all the youthful readers of the "Shaker and Shakeress" in Zion. None of you can lift the curtain that conceals the events of 1874; but if you will commence with the purpose, as well as the wish, that the year shall be to you all a fruitful one in spiritual progress, then you need not fear what coming time will bring. Resolve from this day that your beloved Elders and caretakers, who love you "with that love which God does bless," shall have nothing from you but truthful words, and ready obedience. For nothing is beautiful but truth. This sentiment, though true, has been deplorably neglected. But truth does not need untruth to bring out its beauty. The object of uttering an untruth is generally to conceal a fault; but, as this end is seldom attained, the one who utters it adds another to it. In point of prudence, even, an honest confession will always serve you better.

Truth is all important. It alone, more than all other qualities put together, will give character to youth, and is of itself a rich inheritance, of greater worth than mines of silver or gold. It is related of one of the ancient kings, that, when asked what was the first thing he learned, he replied, "To tell the truth." He was fortunate in having good instructors. Had he lived in this day, many would have instructed him differently. Remember, then, if you wish to be loved and respected, you must be known; but you cannot be known unless you speak the truth from your heart, and act the truth in your life. Again: The mariner who should put to sea without chart or compass, trusting to his own knowledge, would, without doubt, on the first stormy night, bitterly repent of his folly. How much greater is the folly of those who, trusting to their own ways, refuse to be guided by the "Spirit of Truth," which would lead them to perfect happiness. There is a way that seemeth right, but the end thereof is death. Prov. 16: 25.

Here, then, is the conclusion: Imminent perils surround the youth; but the greatest of all perils is the danger of trusting to your own heart. Youth, beware! lean not to your own understanding; own God in the appointed Lead, and all will be well. Though you are weak and unwise, yet God is wise and strong, able to guide and protect all who trust in Him.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Conn.

"I THANK God for our little paper, the "Shaker and Shakeress"; I greatly bless its editor and editress. Much have I learned by perusing it. How thankful I was to have you come and visit us; please to come again as soon as you can.

I have now entered into quite a labor of mind against all mental and physical disease. Be so kind as to help me all you can. A great day this is, surely. I want to be a Progressionist, like yourself. I am longing for the time to come when all animals will be in their own climate; when the lower orders will not have to be slain — yea, more — when they will not have to work to support poor, lazy man.

Be so kind as to explain about the "new heavens and the new earth," whether those in the latter are to have "all things common," the same as the former.

Please accept an abundance of love from us all.

Your Gospel son,

Henry L. Davidson, West Gloucester, Me.

DISSATISFACTION.

THE more contented people are in any state short of the resurrection, the more desperate is their condition. Stagnant water is proverbially unhealthful. The more men are absorbed, and find enjoyment, in the pursuits of earth for selfish purposes, the less probable is it that they will be quickened by the Spirit of Truth. As long as men are contented with the pleasure which indulgence of their passions brings, and with the comfort which wealth and the present false organization of society bring, so long will they be out of reach of the pure pleasures of self-denial. Indeed, they can have no conception of the fact that there are delights therein, which immeasurably surpass every earthly satisfaction. To them every thing which cuts off any selfish gratification is loathsome. Those who live lives of virgin purity, consecrated to holiness and truth, are to them ignorant bigots. Cut off from all living hope in the future, they cannot realize the welling up of eternal life in the souls of those despised ones. Yet happiness can be found through an awakened and justified conscience alone. But the more we reconcile ourselves to worldly pursuits, with the inevitable consequences — deception, the greed of gain, worldly pride, with more or less of sinking into the mire of sensuality — the more will the conscience become deadened, the farther off will become the prospect of eternal life, the harder will it be to shake off the bondage of the world when truth strikes irresistibly on us.

Dissatisfaction alone with existing circumstances, on the part of those who are on Nature's plane, will lead to that yearning after something that can satisfy the soul, which is the best preparation for enlightenment into divine truth. Nothing ought to satisfy a rational being short of the possession of principles which can redeem the soul from the power of evil, and that can bring it into a state of justified relation to the Deity — the only state in which continual progress in Christian qualities is possible.

It is not those who are satisfied with an easy, good-natured life, who do any thing to exalt their race. Though they may do but little active harm, they are utterly incapable of making the sacrifice and effort which spiritual progress demands. As the testimony of the First Christian Church was "Awake from the death of sin," with a foreshadowing of the resurrection; so the more vital testimony of the Second Christian Church is "Awake from the death of Nature," with the full proclamation of the resurrection for humanity while in time. Thus, those who cannot be satisfied with natural affections and interests, and with sin, who restlessly and eagerly seek to know and realize divine blessings, such have been the witnesses of God in all ages of the world; such were those who founded the Second Kingdom of Christ on earth; and such are those who are building up that kingdom in this day.

But, while the only hope of salvation for man lies in dissatisfaction with a life of nature, sin, and earthly pursuits, he ought not to be ungrateful to God for the blessings which he receives in his present condition. He should be thankful for his existence; for the prospect or the possession of a sphere of usefulness; for the numberless pure blessings which all men receive unasked from their Creator; but no man or woman should be satisfied with a state of life in which they are obliged to violate their consciences, in which they are conscious that they are cut off from the life in God.

T. J. Stroud, Enfield, Conn.

THE man who yields to anger, and seeks to appease his disturbed temper by inflicting upon his horse, or other domestic animal, an unmerited punishment, is injuring himself in a great degree. Such a man will, in a short time, become morally depraved, and incapable of rendering any true sympathy for man or beast. It will destroy those beautiful traits of character that make a man manly, and should be the distinctive marks of his affinity with God, as a son of the Most High. — E. C. W.

THE life of an honest man is a beautiful poem; and every human being who reads it feels better, stronger, more hopeful for it.

New York, November 24, 1873.

ELDER F. W. EVANS,

Messenger of the Lord — the Female in Deity:

ACCEPT the warmest thanks in behalf of the Shaker sisters of New York City, whose sentiments you so bravely and admirably expressed in Robinson Hall last Sunday evening.

Not in the whole city of New York, or Brooklyn, do we know of a platform where Woman is invited to advocate the grand truths which for years have inspired her, from what you would doubtless term the seventh or Christ Heaven.

Man is the great red dragon who has usurped every place of honor and trust, and who faces her in the wilderness travail of her soul. Does she want a church? a man owns and controls it. A public hall? she must apply to a man. Even the deciding power of who shall supply the rostrum of the liberal Spiritualists is a man, or a woman whom man places in power.

The qualifications in Woman for pre-eminence and preferment demanded by man are not Shakerism, but they are those that will pander to his lusts either under the cloak of "Free Love" or beneath the darker mantle of hypocrisy.

Who are the women that can support a paper in New York city? Those who advocate and practise "Free Love." Who are the women whose lectures are reported in the newspapers and who can get a "respectable" man to introduce them to a public audience? Those whose bodies and souls are under the psychological influence of man. Would woman build or hire a hall for herself, she has no money, no strength — nothing. Every place of business is run by man, and he dolefully stints her wages even; she often compromising virtue to hold any place.

Is she the wife of a millionaire, she is no less a slave. He carries the purse, and will lavish its contents only upon doll faces who will gratify his passions. Intellectual and inspired women have no foothold upon earth; and, while the Shaker brothers brought along an equal number of their sisters to occupy the Spiritual rostrum, they were welcomed by the Spiritual brothers, but the Soul-women of this movement were not even notified of their coming, or given the liberty to express their glad welcome before the public. And the only place among the Spiritualists, even where they can possibly obtain a hearing is at the "Spiritual Conference." Here, each person (every Sunday) who first commands the floor, has the privilege of ten minutes free speech; and, if a woman is spry and bold enough, she can push her way, in spite of tonguey and aggressive men that jump the moment the last speaker is seated.

Woman, subjugated by man, has brought forth monstrosities, great red dragons, whose horns of power have hemmed her up in this Great City of Babylon, from which she has apparently no avenue of escape; (but she hails in Elder F. W. Evans a sign and promise of future deliverance;) that is the reason the country is on the verge of ruin; that is the reason licentiousness prevails; therein is the cause of "great expectoration," and why the tormenting smoke of tobacco ascends upward forever and ever.

The country is flooded by the dragon, and Woman is suppressed in her birth-pangs for the nation.

And this is her only opportunity of stealing a chance to offer the right hand of fellowship to our dear Shaker brothers and sisters.

THE RISE AND FALL OF EMPIRES.

—O—

ALL that has been said, or may be said of Empires, may, without much stretching, be said of races, generations, and individuals. All have their culminating point, their ascending and descending grades.

By fidelity to nature, by stern self-discipline, especially as respects diet and the use of the reproductive functions, through successive generations, the culminating point of that family stock is achieved, to wit: the production of a choice type of the race homo — a happy combination of the intellectual and moral elements in the human make-up.

Now, let us go back on the record. Do we, in any case, find that high attainment transmissible by ordinary generations? Does it not appear that liberal, intellectual endowment, and high moral culture, lift their possessor above the reproducing plane?

Where, in lineal descent, do we find the Moseses, the Solomons, the Jesuses, the Washingtons, the Jeffersons, or the Paines?

The individuals aforesaid, were the culminating point of that family stock. The reproducing of God's image and likeness is a highly responsible office. Such high official functionaries should, in no case, be cumbered with serving the commonwealth in any other official capacity.

Pater-familias should have undivided use of his capabilities to provide ways and means. Mater-familias should have full liberty to care for the little ones, unencumbered with other official serving.

In the coming new earth it must be so. Another, an intellectual class — celibates — must run the Government machine, wholly unencumbered with domestic cares and responsibilities.

When the new earth is fully actualized, all departments, each in its own order, working harmoniously — don't you think the morning stars may sing together, and the daughters and sons of God shout for joy?

Then will the new heaven be replenished with material not marred in the hands of the potter.

Oliver Prentiss, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

A PRAYER.

—O—

O LORD, thou who seest all things, and orderest aright the way of the sincere, enlarge the scope of our understanding, that we may comprehend the truthful import of thy requirements to us. O God, unlock the prison doors, so strongly barred by our own transgressions, perverted habits, and sensual hankerings for unnatural stimulation. Make us, O Lord, to feel satisfied with, and thankful for, thy instruction, plainly showing us how to escape from the present quagmire of disease and premature deaths, mainly induced by our own transgressions.

Distil, O Lord, the bright shining rays of thy truthfulness into our souls, to understand that there is no transgression of thy law, either in mind or body, without its attached penalty, according to the greatness of its duration, amount, and number. O God, open our hearts to understand that thy primitive natural laws are all truthfulness, reflecting thine own image of beauty, perfection, and health; and that all the misery and trouble comes from the many sought out inventions of man, perverting thy natural law, in both his doings, habits, tastes, and inclinations, thus unhinging thy whole economy for his true comfort and happiness.

O God, open our eyes to see and obey the truth, and gird us with thy armour of strength so sufficiently that we may no longer hanker after the flesh-pots of Egypt, or unnatural poisons and narcotics, or thirst for stimulants in this our day.

And thus, O Lord, shall we be enabled, by degrees, to travel into the full perfection of thy present requirements — freedom from sickness, disease, and premature deaths, satisfied with the real needfuls of life, instead of their fancies. And all the praise, honor, and glory shall forevermore be thine. AMEN.

Ayer, Mass. Sept. 21, 1873.

MUCH-BELOVED ELDER FREDERICK:

WILL you please have the kindness to send me one hundred copies of the "Shaker and Shakeress," containing the "Social Gathering" the modern "Jacob's Ladder;" for, of a truth, on that day, "the angels of God ascended and descended on it," and the rest of the vision (though it seems to tarry) is sure of fulfillment in spiritual Israel. See Gen. 28: 12 to 15 inclusive.

Though I was not apprised of the time of the gathering, yet, not far from that time, I prepared the inclosed poem, Truly the Lion and the Lamb have commenced their state of quiescence, and the Lamb is outside of the Lion; not forced, but protected by the secular arm. I was both edified and inspired in reading the record of that heaven-blessed day; I found there no finality-pins to mark the place where aspiration perished, to rob the more blessed future. If one-half of man has not been an entire failure, what may we expect of a whole man? for, when woman holds her station, man alone can never fall. Then blessed, thrice blessed, are the virgins! Heaven ever recognizes the white-robed passport. Your article on "Judgment" came with divine unction to my spirit; it has seemed for years that we were experiencing the judgment of our time, for our idolatrous veneration of the past, of persons and mediums, in place of vital advancing principles of truth. There seems to be a prevailing disease of looking back to something great and grand (well nigh final), and stretching the imagination forward to something still grander; in the distant future; almost forgetting that we live to-day, and that our work is ever before us. To assert such truths, insures an unwellcome and undeserved appellation. God bless you, Elder Frederick.

Gratefully thine, unqualified love to all.

Elijah Myrick.

Worcester, Mass. Oct. 6, 1873.

ELDER F. EVANS.

DEAR SIR: You will perceive by this, that I have settled down here in Worcester, and shall be obliged, if you will change my address on your books, as I am seldom at Fitchburg. I was up there last week, and found two Nos. of the "Shaker and Shakeress." In the multitude of cares, in establishing our office, advertising, mailing circulars, etc., I quite forgot to order my paper sent here. I take great pleasure in perusing the contents of the "Monthly," and perhaps may find much profit. It is a spicy, earnest, readable sheet, attacking boldly, and with a trenchant blade, some of the worst plague spots that are festering and corrupting the morals of the nation. We need just such a fearless exponent of truth and purity in every family in the land. May its influence extend, and take deep hold, until the people in and out of the churches shall see and feel how far short the present teachings of so-called Christian ministers are of the Christ model, as exemplified by him they profess to represent; and until they realize how unChristlike is much that is called Christianity.

With earnest wishes for your success in your reformatory efforts,

I am, sir, respectfully yours,

B. G. Barto.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

TO THE FRIENDS AND SUPPORTERS OF THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, GREETING:

TWELVE months have passed since we sought aid from our Gospel kindred in a new field of labor. As we then stated, it was by the earnest solicitations of many friends and inquirers outside of our community, who seemed to think that duty demanded a greater effort on our part to make known the fundamental principles of our institution, religious belief, etc., to the world at large (as far as we could gain access), and to frankly "give our reasons for the hope" and faith "that is in us" (and which has hitherto been our chief burden to actualize in daily life), that we were induced to engage our services in bearing to those who had ears to hear what the Sisterhood of the Shaker Societies had to offer in defense of our religious faith and the reasons for reducing that faith to practice.

Our efforts in this direction have been sincere, our services freely rendered, and our deep and earnest prayers have been that God might be honored, our Gospel kindred comforted, and that humanity, through this humble agency, might receive some new thoughts and new aspirations for the higher life; and, with us, be led to the conclusion that holiness of character is profitable to all in this life, as preparatory to entering upon the great future in the unseen world. We have made our record for the year 1873, and time must decide for or against its value.

Journalism has become a great institution in all civilized countries; but America is a receptacle, not only from the "father land" and "mother country," but all nations and peoples find a home in this "broad land of liberty," and hence the press is brought into requisition, and wields a greater power than in any other nation. It is (speaking after the manner of men) "the lever that moves the world," and moulds society in secular matters, and in a religious point of view; but there is a "Providence"—a power behind—"that shapes our destinies," will it as we may.

Amid such a variety of periodicals and newspapers which fly through the land, containing advertisements for commercial departments, crimes and casualties for lovers of the marvelous, and politics for office seekers, we cannot reasonably expect that a small "Monthly," containing none of the foregoing, but which condemns the ungodly practices of the age in which we live, and would seek to reason dispassionately of cause and effect, would receive a large amount of patronage. Yet we rejoice to acknowledge that there are many candid and thoughtful persons who desire an increase of physical, moral, and spiritual truth in what is called Christendom to-day, and who feel deeply for the welfare of our race; and they cry, "Lord, what shall we do to be saved! Give us the bread of life through thine own instrumentality, and we will bless the means." "Only save us from the destructive elements which are sweeping through the land, the effect of raging, unsubdued passions in human souls; that is all we ask." Such persons are glad to receive the "Shaker and Shakeress," and make it a welcome messenger to their family circles, and feel that they are benefited by its moral tone, and are made better by its religious teachings, and heavenly inspirational influence.

Many who have sung of the beautiful star that arose in the eastern hemisphere, which indicated where the young child might be found, who was to be the medium of the Christ Spirit that was about to visit the earth, now look upon the Shaker and Shakeress as another star, that has appeared in the spiritual horizon, pointing those who have studied the prophetic periods, and are watching the signs of the times, to the place where the second appearing of the Christ Spirit may be found in a "cloud of witnessing saints," who testify that "now has come new life and strength," by the power of the Christ manifested through both male and female, and that the gathering of the saints has begun. Such say to us, "Do not let the light of that star go out! by all means let it continue to shine!"

Now that we have concluded to extend the publication of the dual sheet through 1874 (if life and strength should be preserved), we solicit contributions from the Sisterhood in every Society, and we ask you to seek, through faith, humility, and prayer, for Divine assistance. We need aid from resurrected spirits, that we may receive inspiration from on high, to enable us to "give meat in due season" to all who are prepared to receive. If we keep our eyes turned toward the Fountain of light and love, we shall receive new supplies of living inspiration, and our understandings will open to new truth, and our spirits will yearn for a growth in an endless life; and thus we shall be prepared to leave the dead past, and drink of the pure waters of divine revelation, which makes the work of God an ever-living, present work.

Let us, my dear Gospel Sisters, rise above selfhood, and, through pure love to truth, and love to human kind, arm ourselves anew for another race. The heavens are full of truth; let us wrestle in spirit to attain thereunto, open our hearts to receive, and stretch forth our hands to grasp the hands of the angels, and they will delight to fill them with pearly gems which are found on the banks of the beautiful river which flows through and gladdens the celestial city, where nothing can enter that is impure, defiling or deceiving. Thither let us wend our way, dear Gospel friends, and by diligence and self-sacrifice, induce others to join our ranks, and with us journey homeward to the rest of God. We would now speak peace in well-doing to the whole "Household of Faith," and wish all "a happy new year."

DEAR ELDERESS ANTOINETTE.

WE would say a word to you concerning the "Shaker and Shakeress." It is a blessing to the world, and we want it continued; for it is among the brightest stars that ever shone in the New Heavens, or lighted the New Earth! May no dark cloud ever obscure its brilliancy, or dim its lustre! Though it was small in its beginning, yet it has thrown great light upon inquiring minds.

Believers need it, to guide their feet up the high hills of Truth, and through the green fields of progression.

When the toils of the day are over, we can look upon its pages and find inspiring thoughts and glorious hopes, and are lifted in spirit above the perishable things of time, and feel joy and rest. It is a comforting Angel! Gospel Truth is written upon its wings of snowy whiteness. It is like a beautiful banner of purity waving in the soft breezes of love, which blow from the summer land, which lies just beyond. It must not, shall not fade away!

I send a few thoughts upon "Woman;" and if you think proper, please give it a little corner in the "Shakeress."

THE VOICE OF WOMAN.

—o—

IN this age of progress, when the sunlight of heaven is shedding its golden rays of divine revelation upon us, and a deep and holy inspiration, from the Eternal Fountain of Goodness and Love, kindles anew the fires of truth in many prepared souls, there is still a voice of lamentation heard in our land. Whence does it proceed? from the virgin daughters of Zion? Ah, nay! "These are they upon whom the ends of the world have come"—the end of the generative life. It comes from those who have been oppressed by the iron rule of fashion, and public opinion, and held in bondage by old theologies and commands, such as Paul gave in his time: that "women should submit themselves unto their husbands in every thing—keep silence in the churches,"—and if they really wanted to know any thing, they might "ask their husbands at home." That part of the Scripture text has been remarkably well remembered; but "Husbands, love your wives as Christ loved the Church, has been little thought of, and less understood and acted upon.

Many enlightened females, in this day, are becoming restive under the yoke thus imposed; and are seeking for newly-inspired Apostles, who will give new commandments that will meet the demands of the present age, and give woman power over her own body, and an equal right with man, to think, speak, and act according to the dictates of her own reason and conscience!

Error darkens the windows of the soul; and is ever blind to its own weakness and deformity. We now hear the cry "Let there be light!" and let Truth sweep error away, and triumph over every form of evil!

Now, the question arises, "What is the duty of the daughters of Zion who have fled the house of bondage, and, through the Christ baptism, have found liberty, being no longer servants to sin? Is it not our duty to hold that liberty sacred, and to use it to help others of our sex to attain to the same condition of freedom? Let us arise, and, like the good Samaritan of whom we read, reach out the helping hand to aid in the glorious work of emancipating Woman from her present condition of servitude to the lower instincts of her nature. Let us proclaim aloud, "There is redemption for Woman!" Let us seek, by precept and example, to draw souls away from the paths of sin, which lead down to destruction.

Within the past few years, much has been said, and written, concerning the Rights of Woman; and a variety of opinions exist to-day upon this important subject.

I well remember a few remarks that were made by Eldress A. Doolittle, in a Convention held by the Shakers in the city of Boston, in the year 1869, which, in substance, were as follows: "Much is said at the present time about Woman's Rights. There is another question which is to my mind of equal importance, i.e. What are Woman's Duties? According to Bible history, Woman was first in transgression! This, the old story, has been handed down from generation to generation, through the past centuries, until we have become weary of it; and we propose a change. If Woman was the medium, in the beginning, of leading man into sin, let her now become a redemptive agent to lead him out of his fallen condition, up to the higher plane of spiritual life; and, by our good example, and purifying influence, let us blot out the censure that has so long rested upon our sex."

To which we heartily respond, Yea, we have a duty to perform! Let Woman come forth, and act in her proper sphere—the sphere of usefulness, purity, and love—and be what God designed she should be. Let her strip off the garment of pride that she has worn so long, and testify against the evils that are spread broadcast over the land; against the fashions and follies which are so closely interwoven with her existence. Then, she will be able to look with the eye of pity and sympathy upon the erring of her own sex; and, instead of treating them with coldness and indifference, she will be ready to lift up the fallen, and to remove their worn and tattered garments of ignorance and unrighteousness, and guide them into the straight way, by the cross, which leads to immortal life beyond the shores of time. This is Woman's work! It is our work, now, to-day.

My Gospel sisters, let us toil early and late, and not be afraid of soiling our hands, if by any means we may win souls to Christ, and help them to find a heavenly parentage, that they may feel a Father's strength and a Mother's love. It is said of Jesus (who was the first to receive the Christ baptism), that he was tempted in all points like others of our race, and was able to succor those who were tempted as he was. And Ann, who was the first baptized daughter of Zion, gained her redemption through tribulation, fasting, prayer, and watching. Let us follow them, and work as they worked; and, like them, depart from all iniquity. Let us sow the seed of true conviction, and if need be, water it with our tears.

Let us enter into the secret chambers of our own hearts, and see that they are clean and pure, fit temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Then we may with confidence pray for suffering humanity, while our feelings are drawn out toward them in sympathy and love. The Gospel of salvation is God's Gift to us; it is our treasure; may we keep it pure. Then we shall be ministers of strength to the brotherhood of the "Household of Faith," and be as angels of love to one another.

We need the united effort of both brethren and sisters, to carry on the great work that is committed to our keeping. We cannot work alone; we want the aid of men of God, who are strong in the power of truth; those who are honest, pure, and just; who are able to defend the right, and bless our earnest efforts. Thank God, we have such in our beautiful Zion, and we claim them as our spiritual fathers and brothers in the glorious work of redemption.

Eldress Mary A. Gillespie, Alfred, Me.

A SHINING PAGE OF HISTORY.

I saw a page of history written in words of gold — Truth — and gleaming with the light of the sun — Revelation. Other pages were turned, but none were so lustrous; some bore the stain of blood — war; some had dark spots — spiritual sins; others were wreathed in chains, implying tyranny and oppression, on others, again, there was light in the beginning, while a cloud overshadowed the close; signifying a commencement in the Spirit, and an ending in the works of darkness.

I could not clearly define the reading on the shining page, because of its brightness; but, was impressed thus.

The history of all religions is stamped on the ages, and on humanity. Behold what God hath wrought in this latter day. The organization of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, purely spiritual, and founded in revelation which arose cotemporary with the free infidel American Government, has stood a century in the rectitude of the undying principles of righteousness and practical religion. Its history is untarnished by any of the unhallowed deeds of vain ambition, gross superstition, or sanctified lust, which have dimmed the lustre of goodness, and set the "mark of the beast" in the forehead of religion, in times past; stifling the sources of inspiration, and binding the consciences of men with priestly power.

"The wisdom that cometh from above" has confounded the wise of this world, and brought to naught the understanding of the savants of earth, through the mediumship of an unlettered woman, whose soul drank in the inspiration of the heavens, until it was divinely illumined, whose spirit was uplifted to the Christ sphere, where she was imbued with a baptism of God's love, which is fire to evil, and which led her to confess and forsake sin, regenerating her life through the agony of death; thus preparing her to come forth, clad in the armor of righteousness, with the breastplate of truth, to bear a testimony so powerful that it has shaken the foundations of the old heavens — false theology, the pompous mockery of religion; and the old earth — the Adamic life in man and woman; supplanting these with the foundations of a new Order — with virgin purity (the Christ life) as the basic principle, on which shall be reared the glorious structure of the Second Christian Temple.

Behold the consummating work of God's perfect plan for the redemption of mankind, turning the powers of mind and soul into channels of divine thought and lofty aspiration. Thus is His Spirit (through His appointed mediatorial agencies) acting on the souls of honest men and women, who drink in the Christ testimony, in its second unfolding, "as the thirsty ox drinketh water." Such are the virgins, standing on a sea of glass, the white "cloud of witnesses" who testify of the efficacy of the work of God in the "latter day." They worship neither man nor woman, but the attributive principles which constitute Deity — the Eternal Father and Mother of all intelligences. Their toil is worship, because consecrated to the good of the greatest number, and performed in the high-toned spirit of Christian love, which redounds with blessing to the Giver. Their altar of prayer is the hallowed sanctum of the heart, where faith supplicates, hope inspires, and conscience rules. Their strength in unity is goodness. Their pledge of honor, truthfulness of word and action. In daily duty, Progress is the watchword.

No formal creed, with bolts and bars, confine the soul within the narrow limits of sectarian dogmatism; but broad as the universe of our beneficent Creator, so lie the unexplored fields of scientific and spiritual truth, which stand in harmonious relation one with the other. Search for the diamonds and gold; bring hither the sparkling gems of wisdom and knowledge; for the Lord's Temple shall be the conservatory of all good, and His people shall be a praise in the earth, because of the righteousness and purity maintained in their lives.

Martha J. Anderson, Mt. Lebanon.

GRATITUDE.

We thank Thee, Holy Father,
Thou Source of love divine,
For all Thy Gospel givings,
Which worldly joys outshine;

Our Fathers and our Mothers,
Who kindly for us care;
Good Sisters and good Brothers,
Whose sympathy we share;

Pure bonds of Christian friendship,
Which ne'er can broken be,
Deep wells of pure affection,
And sweets of liberty;

A blessed home of beauty,
Where peace and plenty reign —
A hundred fold of substance —
Industry's honest gain;

A golden cross to carry,
In mercy handed down
From Christ, through Ann and Jesus,
By which to win the crown;

The fires celestial kindled,
To burn within our breast,
Till, through Thine own appointment,
We find supernal rest;

Until we reach the fountain
Of Thy redeeming love,
Which floweth down the mountain,
From out Thy throne above.

For all Thy gracious givings,
While here in time we live,
In fullest consecration
Our hearts to Thee we give.

Julia Johnson, Hancock, Mass.

THE Social Evil, as a public question, has submitted itself to legal adjudication in St. Louis. The decision contains the following correct sentiments by Judge Calvin: "The Judge says further, it is a special law in its application to but one sex and not to both sexes. In this it is against the spirit of the Bill of Rights. The law should operate uniformly. The offense charged in the information could not be, if the other sex were not participants in it. It is unjust and unfair that of the parties to the offense one should be required to conform to multitudinous and grievous and burdensome regulations, while the other party does not even receive a tacit recognition."

"A WOMAN CLOTHED WITH THE SUN."

(Rev. xli.)

As my eye glances eagerly over the precious outbreathings of the last S. and S. how grateful I feel for the truthful thoughts on "Sun-light." Truthful, because they commend themselves to our reason, our knowledge of science, our experience, our intuitions, and last, but not least, to our own inspirations, as well as those of the Scriptures.

For it would seem that the Prophets and Apostles of the past, from their oft-repeated allusions, understood and acknowledged the powerfully-curative influences of sun-light. The truths of religion are compared to light, sun-rising; and one of the Prophets foretells, "But unto you that fear my name (or that dare not violate my natural laws) shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his beams; and ye shall grow up as calves of the stall."

As the light of the natural sun pierces into the dark and chilly abodes of earth, it cheers, invigorates, and tones up the circulation, making even the desponding feel that life is not so bad after all; and one more effort must be made. Even so, when the rays from "the Sun of Righteousness" begin to penetrate the crust of worldliness and sin, which, like a damp vapor or chill, has kept the eyes from seeing, and the heart from feeling, the warm and salutary influences from the spiritual Sun; then each dormant germ of love and goodness responds to the quickening and vivifying influences, and, starting in the spiritual life, begins to put on conditions of growth.

And, when they become awakened to see and feel the love from that blessed Mother who is represented as "the woman clothed with" the warmth and glory of "the Sun," and that when like her the moon (and works of darkness) are under their feet, they too can become conquerors, and have dominion over themselves; and their crowns will manifest the progress they have attained in the Christian virtues.

And, as their victory becomes more complete, and these twelve stars shine more brightly, they find that this power with which they become clothed, heals them from their earth wounds, and gives them "joy for the spirit of heaviness;" and they would fain live and bathe in the invigorating influences of not only the spiritual Sun, but its most fitting representative in the natural heavens. As the aches and pains of the body vanish away under its rays, and life becomes healthy, labor ceases to be a burden, self-denial seems easy, cares and burdens vanish, and, with the Psalmist, we exclaim, truly, "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart!"

While no forces in Nature are so potent for growth in use and beauty, so are none so sweet, so silent, and withal so powerful, as those represented by the loving, feminine attributes of Deity, as unveiled in the Revelator's thrilling vision of the maternity of the two manifestations of the Christ Spirit, through "the woman clothed with the sun."

And that through her painful travail, and repeated persecutions, the Christ manifestations have found access to mortals, we will ever rejoice; for "now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ;" and "whosoever will" may take of these saving influences freely.

Thanks, then, for the blessed sunlight, with its healing and consoling magnetisms, so significant of the powers of good, in banishing the sins and wrongs of the past, and the darkness of superstition, with the gloom of ignorance and oppression. And may it never be said of any of us, that "this is our condemnation that light has come into the world, but we chose darkness rather than light, because our deeds were evil," and would not bear the searching light of the full-orbed Sun of day. May we ever be "children of the light," walking and toiling, speaking and breathing, in the light, that the image of our heavenly Parents may shine in us, even the "Sun of Righteousness," and his purified Bride, all "glorious within."

E. H. Webster, Harvard, Mass.

SELF SACRIFICE.

I LOVE to reflect upon the deeds of noble self-sacrificing souls, both in the past, and at the present time; those who have not counted, and who do not count, their lives dear unto them, nor fear the bitter envy, scorn, and contempt of the masses, if by any means they can uplift humanity in the scale of moral purity, and spiritual truth. Such see many evils afar off, and seek to evade, or fend off their direful influence; and they give their minds to search out the causes which create unhappy conditions, and strive to remove them, that the effects may cease; and they willingly endure hardship and toil while they keep the one object in view.

Although war is unchristian, and belongs to savage tribes (if anywhere), yet I often think of those who struggled to free America from British rule, that there might be one place on this broad earth sacred to liberty, where all nations, kindreds, and colors, might worship God, after this or that manner, as seemed right to them; and I bless the motives which prompted them to action; while conscience, and all the better feelings of my nature, recoil at the means used to accomplish so desirable a result.

I love to think of our pilgrim fathers who endured persecution even unto death, rather than violate the truths which were committed to their charge in that day; how they wandered from mountain to mountain, through dark forests, footsore and weary, the cold clods of earth their couch, the starry heavens their canopy, and the wild beasts their watchers.

I honor the Menonites, the Quakers, and the early Methodists, for their self-sacrifice and devotion to principle; for it was the love of God in their souls which prompted them to hold the truth more sacred than their physical lives, or creaturely comforts. They were once known by plainness of dress and manners, and truthness of life. Where shall we look to find them now? Where are the suffering martyrs of to-day, who count the truth of more value than worldly honor, riches, carnal pleasure, and self-indulgence? Is the martyr spirit dead? or does it only sleep, to awaken again with renewed energy? As we come down to the Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, what a noble band of self-sacrificing souls were the pioneers in this work! and what mental labor and soul struggles they passed through! In tears and strong supplication, they sought for wisdom from on high, to aid them in laying a foundation for the Second Christian Temple, so deep and strong, that neither the winds of false theologies, nor the vile passions of men, could ever undermine and overthrow it; and, at the same time, to have it broad enough to admit of an endless increase of all that is true and good. They endured physical, mental, and spiritual suffering, that God might be honored, Truth progressed, and human souls uplifted from moral degradation, and spiritual death, caused by transgression. They did the work of their day nobly, and have gone to their reward in the heavens. Angels bless their labors, and many honest truth-loving souls, who have built upon the foundation of Gospel law and order, which they laid, by the assistance of Divine Wisdom and Love from the high heavens, honor them, and praise their good deeds, while they give glory to God, with hearts abounding in love and thanks.

Are we as prepared to give our strength, time, and talents, as freely in our day, and to do and suffer, according to our ability, as they were? This is a question that all should earnestly put to their own consciences. Shall we be willing to subsist upon the labors of others, without striving to render an equivalent therefor, and to put forth our strongest and best efforts to do something for others? If so, we shall prove ourselves unworthy, and unprofitable servants in the Lord's vineyard. They who seek to occupy an easy chair to-day, expose themselves to be driven by the winds of adversity to-morrow.

If we would wear the laurels of immortal renown, such as purified spirits in the heavenly spheres are constantly weaving into glorious crowns that will not fade or tarnish, then, let us work; work with the Angels, and with all the good and true in the earth sphere. Let us bless every true reform, and encourage every sincere worker in that field, while we ourselves remain careful to keep the clear line of demarkation and separation between the generative order and life, and the angelic life, which belongs to the resurrection order.

Margaret Pattison, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

FOR THE "SHAKERESS."

WHEN I was a child of but eleven years of age, I was taken from the outside world and placed with Believers (or Shakers), where I found spiritual parents and guides, and I learned to understand the meaning of the Apostle's words, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right." When I was wayward, my good mothers reproved me kindly, and told me "to go and sin no more;" and I obeyed through love, not through fear. They faithfully instructed me to resist all temptation to seek pleasure through sensual appetites, and warned me not to set my affections upon the perishable riches of this world, but to seek the durable riches of the kingdom of Christ, and to lay up treasures in heaven, and seek those joys that are found at God's right hand, which will never fail. They taught the necessity of imitating the example of our Saviour, and to remember his words, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Although I was placed under the guardianship of kind friends, and received much good instruction, yet I was left to be tried, and to feel what there was in my own heart. My youthful mind (as I became older) was tempted, through passion for worldly pleasure, to look for a more pleasant way than the one marked out by Jesus of Nazareth. I turned my thoughts toward the broad road of sinful pleasure and looked to see what was to be found and enjoyed there; and I saw that all that could be obtained from that source was but momentary, and ended in disappointment. And God (through the medium of my conscience) forbade that I should renounce a life of virgin purity, and leave "an hundred-fold of fathers and mothers, and brothers and sisters, and numerous other blessings, for a dish of pottage."

I reflected upon the superior advantages for physical health, and the comforts to be derived therefrom; also of the kind care bestowed in sickness, and of the beautiful surroundings in my Gospel home—of living in companionship with kind loving brethren and sisters, ever forbearing and forgiving, and who were cleanly in their habits of life. It is said that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and I think we may add that there is very little true godliness without it.

"O! then I gazed upon my peaceful cot,
Where the clement bowers entwined;
The land of the strangers tempted me not—
O nay! nor could their home be mine."

Then I turned my eyes and thoughts, and came to the conclusion, that the most excellent and honorable character that any one can form, is by resisting temptation to evil, practising virtue, and shunning vice, and by consecrating all his or her powers to honor God, by living honestly, justly, and truly.

Those who seek to be shielded from temptation, and for protection from sin, feel that it is a privilege and blessing to be retired from the multitude who throng the broad road, and from the society of those who seek pleasure in unrighteousness.

A truly religious life is not fraught with gloom and sadness; nor does it deprive us of enjoyment in this present state of existence. If we learn to use the things of this world, and not abuse them, we shall find that "pure and undefiled religion" will enhance, not diminish, our happiness.

Amelia Lyman, Enfield, Conn.

Let us, like Moses, choose the wiser part,
Willing to suffer with the good and pure,
Rather than sin, and thus corrupt the heart,
By grasping pleasures which cannot endure.

A. Calver, Mt. Lebanon.

THE POOR.

"THE poor ye have always with you," said Jesus. As the cold, bleak winds of winter are howling about our dwellings, and we gather into our comfortable apartments, made so by the consecrated labors of our predecessors in the Gospel work, coupled with the toils of many who are still with us, how appropriate it is for us to reflect upon the condition of thousands of our fellow-beings who are as good by nature, and perhaps as sincerely desiring to please God (according to their conception of right) as ourselves, and who are filled with dismay at the prospect before them of not being able to meet the inclemency of the winter that has opened upon us with such severity.

There are strong forebodings of suffering among the poorer classes, in consequence of the recent financial crisis, which has thrown many honest laborers out of employment, and which is, more or less, affecting all departments of business.

What an opportunity is now offered for the exercise of Christian charity, that most precious of all Gospel virtues. Many are destitute of suitable clothing, and are without the means to procure fuel to make them comfortable, while others are not even sheltered from the piercing blasts so keenly felt by the homeless wanderer. How sad the reflection that so many human beings (who are brought into existence without their own volition), who are forced by circumstances over which they have no control, to eke out a miserable life of suffering and want, only now and then receiving temporary alleviation. Nor is this all; degradation and crime frequently follow in the wake of those who are destitute of the means of subsistence; for it has been said truly, that "hunger is a sharp thorn;" and, under such circumstances, temptation to sin is very great.

The prayer of Agur, recorded in Scripture, was dictated in wisdom: "Give me neither riches nor poverty, but feed me with food convenient for me, lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, 'Who is the Lord?' or I become poor, and steal, and take the name of God in vain." Would it not be well for those who are rolling in affluence and luxury to pause, amid their lavish expenditures, and remember the words of the Saviour: "The poor ye have always with you." And again, "Inasmuch as ye have ministered unto the necessities of the least of these little ones, ye have ministered unto me."

Rhoda R. Hollister, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

THE REWARD OF SACRIFICE.

God will lead forth to fountains pure,
And robe in love divine,
The souls that follow Christ in truth
And all to Him resign.
He will uphold the constant mind,
Through envy's fiery darts,
And spread before the valiant soul
The rest that faith imparts.
He will uproot the strange, wild vine,
And sow the precious seed,
That Christ may keep, and angels bless
In truth and very deed.
And He will raise an ensign high
Above the false and vain,
And call the honest and sincere
Its glory to sustain.
For them a house He will create,
With treasures rich and rare,
Which shall have power to elevate
And bless each loyal heir.
And, when they pass from death to life,
New prospects shall appear;
And they shall walk the golden streets
With kindred spirits dear.
And He will place within each breast
The snow-white dove of peace,
And safe shall be their heritage
Whose joys shall never cease.
He'll cause them there in strength to grow.
And bloom in endless light,
Where seraphs and bright angels meet
With anthems of delight.

THE GLAD NEW YEAR!

m mp

1. A - long the sha - dowy aisles of time, there floats a murmur soft and low, Now swell - ing in har - mo - nious chime, sweet notes in mea - sured numbers flow. With joy we catch the glad - some strain, which fills our hearts with lov - ing cheer,
And, echo - ing back a true re - frain, give wel - come to the Glad New Year!

2. 4.

Our hopes on starry pinions rise, High aspiration thrills our soul,
A nobler life to realize, Ascending to perfection's goal.
The past with joy and sorrow fraught, Shall from our vision disappear;
The present claims our earnest thought: All hail the bright, the Glad New Year!

We tread the vale of time and sense, Amid its phantom-fleeting dreams,
Still longing, with a hope intense, For something that enduring seems;
Yet duty's path we will pursue, Without a doubt or cringing fear;
With lofty aim and purpose true, We'll toil throughout the Glad New Year!

Like angels from the realms unseen, Light-wing'd the moments come and go,
The shining links of life, between Ethereal spheres and earth below;
They bear a record of the deeds That cloud, or make our pathway clear;
Broadcast they sow time's precious seeds, And usher in the Glad New Year!

The tender cords of purest love, With peace entwined, shall stronger grow;
We'll bear the spirit of the dove, And kindness to the erring show.
With gentle words, and Christ-like deeds, A monument of good we'll rear;
While bliss, that fills our spirit needs, Awaits us in the Glad New Year!

THE NEW YEAR.

With magic key, he comes to ope
Another realm for us to tread;
He bears the shining lamp of hope;
A crown of stars is on his head.
All silently the crystal gate
Swings forward on the field of snow;
We enter, as by power of fate,
And list its closing, soft and low.

The bridge of ice that spann'd the moat
Is drawn up on the other side;
For us there is no ferrying boat,
No backward wave on which to glide;
But footprints even now are seen;
Time waits not for the tardy feet,
But onward speeds, to valleys green,
To bloom of spring, and summer's heat.

Then to the rainbow of the land —
The season born of sun and frost —
Whose half-bewild'ring glories stand
Like sunset clouds on nature toss'd.
But nought alluring can prevail;
Though flaming leaves his pathway strew,
He presses for the snowy vale,
Where once again his life is new.

And, as we contemplate his round,
And view the miracles that rise,
Rich lessons by our souls are found,
That we may keep, to make us wise.
The year expires upon the snow,
And on the snow its life begins;
And, when we leave the life below,
How slight the change the transit wins.

It is for us to work, and bear
Against the curse that bringeth death;
It is for us to gain and share
The pow'r of the Almighty's breath.
That pow'r that made a living soul
Of him who was a mass of clay,
Is needed, like the winds, to roll
Upon humanity to-day.

By revelation's light we read
The grand old myths, and draw their worth;
See God hath sown the spirit-seed
Through all the nations of the earth.
O that each heart might but unfold,
And let its hidden good appear;
The treasured joy, all unforgetold,
Would crown and bless this true New Year.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE was formed in London in 1846. It has held five conferences previous to the present gathering at New York, the last being at Amsterdam, in 1867. The following nine propositions constitute its platform, which would be simply absurd, or worse, for any Unitarian or Universalist to pretend to accept:—

"1. The divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.

"2. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.

"3. The unity of the Godhead and the trinity of the persons therein.

"4. The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall.

"5. The incarnation of the Son of God, his work of atonement for the sins of mankind, and his mediatorial intercession and reign.

"6. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.

"7. The work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.

"8. The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.

"9. The divine institution of the Christian ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

THERE was a quiet little election in the town of Bushnell, Ill., a few days ago, to obtain an expression of the wishes of the citizens for or against licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor, and the Judges decided that as it was desirable to obtain the general sentiment, they would receive the votes of the women also. This being made known, 125 ladies assembled at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and thence marched to the polls and deposited their ballots unanimously against license. The vote of the town was strong the same way.

WHAT POOR?

"Sell what thou hast, and give it to the Poor."

THE Protestant world has lost the true import and meaning of this saying of Jesus. Hence they consider it impracticable—utterly abstract, if not absurd—having upon them no saving force. Consequently, they quietly ignore it. For instance: "What" (say they) "would be gained by the heads of ten families, in Stephentown, who, by patient, long-continued toil, economy, and good management, have accumulated houses and lands, and a surplus in funds, should they sell all, and collect all, and then distribute it in the town among those families and persons who, from lack of ability, or the non-exercise of the virtues above-named, are comparatively poor? Would Christianity—godliness—be thereby increased and promoted in the town? Not in the least. Those who earned the property are its best protectors, and, in the aggregate, will make the best and wisest use thereof.

"Sell that thou hast, and give the proceeds to the Church," was probably what Jesus did say to the "rich young man." For he desired to found a Community of goods; but the time had not then come. When it had "fully come," rich men and women sold their property, and gave the money to the Apostles, to establish therewith a religious Organization, the Pentecostal Church, with its "all things common." And that is just what rich men and women will do in these modern times, by and by. For God's people, "in the day of His power, will be a willing people."

Look upon the ripening harvest fields of the earth to-day; are they not almost ready for the "sickle" of her who sits upon the "white cloud"—the Shaker Order—looking so "like unto the Son of Man?"

What means this general Communistic spirit, that is so wide spread, and so potent? Combination, Association, Co-operation, Community: these are the watchwords of the advancing hosts of Reformers and Progressists. The Christ Spirit broods over and upon the embryonic elements of the New Creation, which is already in process of forming and organizing in dissolving Babylon.

A few more shadows, and the nucleus of Pentecostal Churches will be plainly discerned, here and there, throughout Christendom; and the "cities of refuge" already existing, will be found by the wanderers on the mountains of desolation, and by the pilgrims who are seeking a "city which hath foundations," where they will be welcomed home, even as Joseph welcomed the fathers and founders of the twelve tribes of Israel, of which himself was two—Ephraim and Manasseh—father and mother.

The rich in this world's goods, when "called," will cheerfully affiliate with the "poor in spirit," and "rich in faith," although they may have gathered but little of this world's manna; and the rich and the poor, male and female, those of high and those of low degree, will be all one in the kingdom of Christ Jesus and Christ Ann, the federal Head of the Gentile Pentecostal, or Mother, Church.

SHAKER PENTECOST.

ADVERTISEMENT.—WANTED.—Men, women and children can find a comfortable home for life, where want never comes, with the Shakers, by embracing the true faith, and living pure lives. Particulars can be learned by writing to the Shakers, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

In consequence of the publication, on the 7th ult., of the above advertisement in "New York Herald" and "Sun" we received, on the 8th, 56; 9th, 42; 10th, 23; and 12th, 14—total, 135 letters, containing either direct applications to join the Society, or asking information to that end.

Two-thirds of these are from young men; and all (with some two or three exceptions) are well written, and show intelligence, culture, and earnestness of spirit to find the Kingdom of Heaven, if it exists upon earth, and to have a lot and place in it.

To each of these writers we have sent publications, and have written to as many as time would permit thus far. Many more will be written to; and will receive this No. of the Shaker and Shakeresses.

To these friends, and to all who contemplate "joining the Shakers," we address the following:

1. Faith is the first requisite—a belief induced by evidence consequent upon rational inquiry and scientific investigation—that the same Christ Spirit that created the primitive Pentecostal Church, composed of Jewish Israelites, has made its "Secoud Advent" upon this earth, and has created Peutecostal Communities, composed of Gentile Israelites. They have "come from the East, and the West, and the North, and the South, and have sat down in the kingdom of heaven," so much and so long prayed for.

2. Conviction for sin will result from faith; and obedience to the Christ Spirit will "take away all the sins of the world," whether physical or spiritual, of "men, women, and children." He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find an "inheritance in the kingdom of heaven."

3. Riches and Poverty come from false organic laws, and form a large part of the world's sins. They cause luxury and destitution; wasteful, riotous living, and pinching starvation; unphysiological food and drinks, which induce the use of poisonous medicines; extravagant, health-destroying, and body-deforming dresses, and a scanty wardrobe and rags. Thus is God dishonored by the sufferings of humanity; and Christianity has become a by-word and a reproach, as being no antidote for the ills to which flesh is heir.

4. "All things common"—a Pentecostal Order—is as possible now, to-day, as it ever was, to those who, before a witness, will "turn the battle to the gate," and confess their individual sins, and do that which is "lawful and right," and thereby "save body and soul alive."

5. Now "the poor and the rich have the Gospel preached unto them;" and, if these rich will sell all that they have, and give to these poor, thus leveling the mountains and filling up the valleys, there will be Pentecost—a religious Community.

6. Be just toward yourselves, and the Society with which you are about to unite, by collecting and retaining in your own possession, all property, whether in money, goods, or clothing, that you may be not only self-supporting, but a help to those who are poorer than yourselves. He that provideth not for his own kindred in the Lord is worse than an infidel.

7. God's House being a house of order, expect to be subject to the laws of the "household of faith." Community is society in its most compact form; hence there is the greater necessity for laws; as "where there is no government, there is no God." Perfect liberty, in a wordly sense, means individual isolation from all human association. Faith makes obedience practical, and the burden and yoke thereof easy and light.

8. The probationary member is expected to place his property in the hands of the Elders or Trustees, returnable without interest, until, by his own faith, and the consent of the authorities, he is privileged to dedicate it. It does not appear that, in the first pentecost, they waited long for that condition of consecration.

9. The Society puts confidence in individuals as they gain confidence in the Peutecostal Order of the Church; but the Ananias and Sapphira spirit should remain without.

10. Married persons are not received, unless the husband and wife come together; or that they separate by mutual consent, or legal agreement, in relation to their marriage, their property, and their children.

11. We neither take nor reject persons because of riches or poverty. Where many embrace our faith at one time, we may not always be able to provide a home for them immediately, but will do the best we can, according to our ability. Those wishing to visit should notify us, if possible, before they come; and none should come expecting, if not received, the Society to pay their expenses back.

12. "Where a person's treasure is, there will their heart be also." Therefore those who dispose of their property to relatives in the world should remain with it.

13. Persons who dedicate property, and afterward withdraw, may have their property returned, without interest, but it is optional with the Society.

14. Probationary members sign an agreement binding themselves to observe the rules of the Order during their sojourn, or until they are prepared to sign the Covenant of the Society.

15. All correspondence is subject to the supervision of the Elders, whether letters, etc., be sent or received.

16. As no person could join the primitive Quakers, or Methodists, and change from their worldly ways in language, dress and demeanor, without suffering a degree of death, how much less shall they become "new creatures" in all things in this Pentecostal Church, and not become partakers of the sufferings of Jesus, which he has "left behind for his body's sake," of which he was only the Head.

17. Our worship is in spirit, and consists in speaking, singing, marching, and sometimes in "battles of shaking," and again in solemn or joyful dances; in divers operations, as the Spirit moves, and often in prayer and sweet spiritual communings. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

THEOLOGICAL THEOSURES.

—o—

HEREWITH I begin a series of papers which will form my theological bank, or treasury. I purpose depositing therein my best thoughts upon God, and upon Christianity. To me, theology is merely a talk upon God; while religion is an expression in life of the teachings of theology. Many theologies contain much that is good; others are mixed, being very dark with error; while there are few, if any, that are wholly bad, or yet without fault; while some do approach nearer to the standard of "when that which is perfect is come." The best theology will produce the best religion; and this will be demonstrated by the best and purest life. We care but little for theologies, per se; but are more desirous of knowing what their demonstration in life imparts. Of itself, theology is like the leaves of a tree, useful, but not the fruit. "I will show you my theology by my fruits." Better is the expression of a good life, than the world full of theology, without the life. There is much ado over much doctrine; but the result of Christian theology will be a life like unto Jesus Christ.

Theologians, draw up your analogies, illustrate, by the comparison of your lives with his, how near, or how distant you are from him who was "without fault;" and learn to value your theologies by the comparison. Are we, a professedly Christian people, followers of Jesus? If so, what a world of sin and sorrow we are exterminating, and what an incalculable amount of false theology we are burning by the light and fire of truth! Claiming Jesus, endowed by the Christ influence, to be the standard-bearer of our theology, if we fail to draw this comparison, our claim is unwarrantable, and more: if we discover dissimilarity between our theology and the life of Jesus, we must change our theology, bring up arrears by a confession and renunciation of our practices in life that differ from the same in Jesus—or we are hypocrites—wandering sheep, who want no shepherd!

The world is growing better in its theology, because there is very much less of it than formerly. The people read and accept truth easier. Even theological expositors have a distant respect for the truths of Paine, however much they hate him for so boldly enunciating some justice to them as a class. We are unable to find in the whole area of "Paine's Works," a single passage that is more opposed to Christian theology, than are the every-day lives of the bright stars of the popular churches of to-day! If Paine's theology was not Christian, let us recollect that he did not so profess; nor did Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Lincoln, etc.; but in these, and thousands of the same ilk, we find the spirit of goodness active—which very much resembles Christianity; and these have consciences far clearer than those who profess Christ with their lips, but who hate the idea of having to follow him in their daily lives! The persecutors of truths uttered by Paine and others, we are reminded, do make Christianity a profession; are very noisy about it; and express it in every other way better than in their lives!

Let us be very careful about the character of our theology—be the same Judaical, Mohammedan, or Christian. So-called "Christian nations" deal rather in Judaism, than under Christian influences, and in very poor Judaism at that; while common and popular theologies are a conglomeration of "What is its," rather than a resemblance to simple, unostentatious Christianity. Now, we believe in the theology and religion of Jesus, under Christ; and in the same of his followers in life, no matter by what name they are designated. They had, and have, but little theology, but it leavened the whole lump of life—their lives being true religion—practical Christianity.

Our deposits in the Treasury will be simple; our endeavors most sincere. We love Jesus; nevertheless we do not purpose to make an idol or a god of him. We know that he was simply a good Jew; yet became, by his baptism and subjection to the Christ principles, a good Christian! Come ye Jews and Gentiles, can you do better than accept his life as your guide? What among the Jews he wished to be saved from, all will wish to be saved from, if they ever believe in the theology of Jesus, and will make the same endeavors, and take upon them his cross and self-denial; for these made a Christian of the Jew!

There is only one road to this mill—who wants salvation, let him "follow," and live as Jesus lived. Said Pilate: "I find in him no fault"—the clearest definition of a truthful theology! And, though the theology of Jesus, under Christ, has been usurped by passion, and profaned to unholy uses, through all time since its enunciation, still its principles are eternal and true.

G. A. Lomas.

THE following extraordinary accident recently occurred at Brescia, Italy; Two boys caught a mouse, which they bathed in kerosene oil, then set fire to it. The frightened animal seized one by the leg, and before they could detach it from its hold both were so severely bitten that they died within three days.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

—o—

WHILE thousands, with hearts sensitive to the woes of their fellows, are awakened to study the causes which produce such widespread misery among the poor throughout the country, it can but hasten the coming of that golden age when all suffering and wrong are to cease, if the subject be studied from different points of view, and reviewed by the light of many minds.

The immediate cause of this suffering is the disemployment of the laboring class. But why disemployed? Here we meet the evil at the door; the incipient cause is the innate selfishness of the human heart, that prompts the owners of all capital, or wealth in landed estates and manufactories, to use and manage such capital without regard to the normal rights of the laborer. The greed of gain will not perceive the implied and moral obligation contracted by capital to furnish labor a constant means of obtaining a livelihood. Though no human law enforced this obligation, yet the necessities—mutual relation of labor and capital—seal the obligation of capital to sustain, and the right of labor to use, each the other; and every movement of capital which imperils its capacity to fulfill its part of this moral contract is treacherous alike to the interests of both parties; and, when the risks and ventures of capital are extensive, pervading large sections of country at the same time, they sooner or later entail unmitigated suffering upon the laborer.

The broad acres upon which man treads, the air, the sea, and the accumulated wealth of all the earth, owe him a living, if he is willing to return an equivalent in labor. What wonder that crimes increase three-fold during times of destitution? Apparently, the solid men of our great cities would gladly precipitate the demon war upon our already overburdened country, in order to furnish employment to the forty thousand unemployed starving poor.

These panics and business revulsions, with their unmeasurable crimes and miseries, are as surely the offspring of tyrannical selfishness as the constant depression and want which old country people suffer, are the outgrowth of selfishness in their arbitrary governments, which is as subversive of the liberties of the laborers in America as is the present or prospective tyranny of any government that ever ruled and enslaved people.

It is easy to show that the ruling relation of the wealthy to the poor are relations of self-interest and fear. In the most prosperous sections of the grain-producing West, the speculators in grain have doubled their purchase-money in the past half-year, and the carriers of this grain, while prices were still ascending, reduced the wages of employes ten per cent at the outset of winter.

Self-interest may possess a moral value as a motive for action; fear does not; it is always an infliction; and, in such times as these, the fears of capitalists are illy disguised, being forced to give a pittance of employment to their dependents, when, to withhold such charity would invite unmeasurable evils upon themselves, because the unemployed laboring class, if capital should persist, even for a short time, to withhold employment, would inevitably help themselves, although it should fill the country with riot.

Humanity is progressing away from present conditions, from bondage to selfish customs and conventionalism; they are impelled by a little love, great fear, and greater self-interest, toward the plume of human equality—primal truth,—and true liberty, which is begotten by the love of brother.

We look with confidence for the day when all unscrupulous claims will cease, when we shall minister to universal need and comfort, and not to individual pleasure and aggrandizement, when all implied obligations, and the normal rights of created beings, will be respected, although no human laws enforce them; when co-operation of interests (material and spiritual) will become the necessity of society, and the medium of progress toward the ultimate of the highest practical economy, celibate communism—the guarantee of social protection, and the only possible realization of practical love of one for another as professed disciples of Christ.

Henry Hollister, Mt. Lebanon.

LIGHT AND TRUTH.

WHEN the light of the sun shines upon objects that are in darkness, the difference between supposition and reality becomes strikingly apparent.

So, when the light of Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, shines clearly and fully into the mind, and makes manifest the quality of the thoughts, words, and doings, of a comparatively good man or woman, the amount of difference between what he or she really is, and what he supposes himself to be, and what others may suppose him to be, is rendered quite plain to him, and perhaps to some others, and is truly astounding. But how much more is it so in the case of a person whose character is formed of impure thoughts, false words, and unjust deeds?

How necessary, then, it is that we always endeavor to be as pure, and true, and good, in all our thoughts, words, and actions, as we know we should be; and that we be what we seem to be, and seem to be what we really are.

So also is it when a false statement of any one's sayings, motives, or doings, have caused improper reflections, deductions, opinions, feelings, and conclusions, in the minds of others who may be ignorant of the true character of the misrepresented person; how wonderfully the light of truth will change the whole aspect of the case.

Therefore, if falsely accused, or spoken of, or thought of, by any one, and (as a consequence) lowered or lessened in the estimation or esteem of others—perhaps even particular and closest friends—endure it with patience and quietness; and wait a little while, till the Sun of Truth shall shine upon the willful or ignorant falsifier, and upon all those who may have heard and believed the falsity, and who, as the result, may have become unfriendly, or at least distant in their feelings and conduct; for the whole of the darkness and trouble will then be instantly dissipated, and a peculiarly-blessed feeling of justification, complacency, satisfaction, gratitude, and sweetness, will rest upon and within the honest and patient individual so accused or misrepresented.

That will be his and her reward, which is insured, and will be secured to them, by the justice and righteousness of our immutable God—the Eternal Fountain and Source of all goodness, light, and truth.

Truth is a perfectly straight line, which holds, in one unvarying correspondential union, Cause and Effect. That is: the thing produced is the exact result of, and perfectly expresses the cause that produced it. Therefore it is plain, that truth is a prominent and essential quality in the perfect righteousness of God, as is clearly seen in all his works. In other words, the thing created and brought forth by God is an outward expression exactly corresponding to the inward power and wisdom, and to the goodness of the design, of its Author, "with whom is no variableness, nor shadow of turning."

The outward words and acts of Jesus Christ were but the perfect expression of, and precisely corresponded with, his inward life, condition, and motives; so that those who understood his words, more or less partook or received of his spirit; and hence he called himself "the Truth."

Truth is the axis, or central power, that should run through all words and actions; causing words, at the time of their utterance, actions, at the time of their performance, and even gestures, stillness, and quietness, to express the condition and action of the mind. That is, the motive, as well as the meaning of the word or act, should be in the word spoken, or act performed. For words and actions should so precisely correspond to the condition, motive, and intention of the mind of the utterer, as to be the real representation and exponent thereof, just as a shadow of any thing is the real product of the substance that causes it.

Departure from truth through ignorance may be termed error. But a willful, designed departure therefrom, is a falsity—a lie. It causes words and actions to convey an entirely different view of the utterer's mind from that which he really possesses, and which should be expressed. Therefore any departure from truth, even if through ignorance, is a departure from God. How much more crooked, false, and distant from God, then, is the way of him or her who designs, by words or actions, to deceive the hearer or observer of them, in reference to their true meaning? or in reference to the motive and intention which caused their utterance?

All truth proceeds from, and leads to, God and goodness; while all error and falsity proceed from the devil, and lead to evil.

To say what we mean, and mean what we say;
To be what we seem, and seem what we be,
As truly as Truth demands in this day,
Is truth truly clad in simplicity.
All truth is quite straight, and all truth is good,
To all honest souls; for that is their "rod."
May truth, in our acts and words, be our food,
And ever evince our union with God.

William Offord, Mt. Lebanon.

JUVENILE VISIONS.

ELDER FREDERICK.

ON Monday evening, the 29th of December last, I had a pain in my stomach and could not work. I went into the shoe shop and lied down on the counter. I shut my eyes, and, after lying there five or six minutes, I, all at once, began speaking upon religion; the words came into my mouth as fast as I could utter them. Suddenly it became very light; and, although my eyes were still closed, I could see all around me; I also spoke a few verses in poetry, one right after the other. I then discerned a man in the midst of a lot of tall weeds. He, at first, seemed contented; after which he began to feel uneasy. Outside of those weeds there were some beautiful flowers and fruits of all kinds.

As I said, he became a little uneasy, not being quite contented among those tall weeds which swamped him. When he caught sight of those beautiful flowers and fruits, outside of his weedy prison, it made him the more restless. Then I understood that the weeds were bad spirits, and the fruits and flowers good spirits, who desired to bring him out of his sad condition; and I also saw that he himself wished to come out, to be delivered; so both parties worked together to that end against the evil spirits.

I next saw a seed, as it were, fly over the weeds, and take root at the feet of the man, at which he was much pleased. This seed was a good spirit; and then more good spirits went over to him, until, at last, the evil spirits began to diminish, and the man became more comfortable, and soon the good became so powerful that the evil died out and the man was surrounded entirely by good spirits.

This taught me a lesson that I shall not soon forget. It taught me that, however much a person might be surrounded by, and swamped in, evil habits, if they once feel a desire to become good they will be spiritually assisted, and that, as good is more powerful than evil, the victory is certain; the greatest wrong will be removed, and the sinner's heart uplifted, until he becomes fully redeemed from his lost condition.

I am young (fifteen), and this is my first spiritual experience, and I will labor to profit by it practically, for it is an evidence to me that good spirits are sometimes very near me, and I pray that they may ever be near me, and guide me in the path of righteousness and peace.

Sam. Witham, Mt. Lebanon.

A FEW weeks since, another boy (thirteen) was sent from the North Family to Canaan (three miles), early in the morning, while it was yet dark. On coming opposite the meeting-house, a ball of light appeared in the road just before him. It was as large as a coco-nut, and rolled before him, lighting his path fully, until it was dawn of day.

On a previous occasion, this same boy, Ami, was by the watering tub, at the Upper House, Canaan, where he lives, when Charles Haggitt (a youth who had left the Family, but had made application to return, and was then a hundred miles away), came out of the barn and spoke to him as he passed (rubbing against him), and then went on north, Ami being entirely unconscious in regard to its being a vision, if vision it was.

I hail these notices of the youth as good omens and signs of a return of the spiritual manifestations among Believers. They are small beginnings, but more is coming, until the "sinners in Zion will tremble, and fearfulness take hold of the hypocrite," as was the case in the former manifestations, when nothing could be hidden that worked abomination or that loved or made a lie. — Ed.

TO THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

I HAVE spent a portion of my leisure moments in reading, very attentively, the Shaker and Shakeress of several months' issue, and am fully persuaded in mind, and decided in feelings, that it is a pure and wholesome sheet, breathing a purer air from heaven, and a more Christian spirit than can be found in any other journal in our land. Peace, truth, kindness, and love, dwell within its columns; such as was never taught but by the divinely-inspired and lowly Nazarene. How very harmonizing it is to the weary soul, in times of trouble, a panacea for every earthly ill. The Christ principle is here more fully inculcated than I have ever seen it before.

We shall never see the dawn of the great and glorious Millennial day, so long as we instruct our children in the art of war. How long, O how long, shall we continue to tread in the footsteps of our predecessors, and follow the counsels and dogmas of the dark ages? The law of progression tells us that there is to be a turning and overturning in the political and religious world, when war and strife among nations will be abandoned. This grasping after power and wealth, oppressing the poor, and aggrandizing the rich, must have an end, and every man and woman must be free, and entitled to hold and occupy land in common; as God, in his wisdom, hath dealt out to each his blessings of sunshine, air, and water. Then all will be recognized as the children of one Father and Mother. Our souls must be fitted for the society of redeemed spirits before we can enter into the blessings and joys of eternal life. Sincerely presented by Solomon W. Jenett, Rutland, Vt.

WASTE-BASKET SYMPATHY.

BELOVED EDITOR:

KNOWING that our little Monthly has its waste-basket, I have resolved to contribute my mite to its support. Truly, by the aid of the "Shaker and Shakeress," light is increasing. It is a messenger of truth, and that too from the center of Christ's vineyard on the earth. I am with you, in spirit, in your effort to direct, through its columns, mistaken souls to the Fountain of eternal life. Its manner of dealing such persistent, untiring blows at the root of the tree of evil; of defending truth against error; of holding up light against darkness; and the sharp testimony it maintains against all sinful indulgences, make it, not only a bulwark of defense, but an invading power, before which depraved hearts must quail. For not only the Divine Searcher of the heart, but his chosen people also, by and through his Spirit, are made able to discern between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.

I enjoy much satisfaction in perusing the truths set forth in the little sheet for the edification of those who have ears to hear and hearts to receive; that they may be as a lamp to their feet, and light to their path, to lead them from Babylon to Zion. I believe many souls will date the origin of their first light and convulsion in the present testimony of Christ's second appearing—yea, and their final salvation, to the impressions received through this herald of truth.

Then how encouraging to continue its publication. I am thankful for this means provided for the extension of the knowledge of the way of salvation, that honest seekers after truth may be convinced that in Zion is opened a fountain, where sin-sick souls may be washed from uncleanness, and rejoice that they have found their Father and Mother's House.

I unite, with every feeling of my soul, in this call of the still, small voice of the Spirit, to the weary and heavy laden.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Conn.

FRIENDLY.

WE have to acknowledge a very handsome notice of the "Shaker and Shakeress," by the Religio-Philosophical Journal; which paper I am happy to recommend as belonging, since the division upon the sexual question, to the clean class of Spiritualistic Journals. It is free from Free-Loveism, and can be had for three months for 25 cents, or $2 per annum. Editor, S. S. Jones, corner of Fifth Avenue and Adams street, Chicago, Ill.

Also, Friend Williams, of the "Hudson Gazette," has the following:

The Shaker and Shakeress.

We have before spoken in complimentary terms of this neat and very readable publication issued by the Shakers at Mt. Lebanon, but the following from the Boston Index expresses as much as it would be possible to crowd into so brief a paragraph:

"The Shaker and Shakeress, published by the United Society of Shakers, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., is a neat, sweet, fresh, and liberal publication."

THE LECTURE SEASON.

—o—

THE REV. WM. H. H. MURRAY ON "THE CIVILIZED HEATHEN."

—o—

THAT Music Hall was so well filled such a night as was last, certainly speaks well for the attraction which brought together the audience. The second of the Lyceum course was the allurement last evening, when the Rev. Wm. H. H. Murray delivered his new lecture on "The Civilized Heathen." The lecturer began by stating that he had intended, originally, to open up the inner life and character of the American people, so that the faults in each might be seen and avoided. But after investigation, he had found the picture so dark that he shrank from holding it up to view. We live, said he, in a missionizing age. The attempt to civilize a heathen people was based on the idea that American life, customs and religion are better than theirs. This he doubted, and he would put American Christianity against Buddhism, and the American republic against the Chinese empire. He said that if we must call Buddhism heathenism, we must call it civilized heathenism. It is the most popular religion on earth, the people who profess it numbering over 400,000,000. While the basal idea of Christianity is love, the God of Buddhism is the all-knowing one, and the germ of the religion is a belief in the infinite capacity of the human intellect. The religion is pure rationalism, and seeks converts only by argument and persuasion. Against the oppressions, persecutions, and bloody wars, which go to make up the history of Christianity, he placed the 2300 years of peaceful existence which Buddhism has known. It inculcates as simple duties the doing of what we have regarded as intended to ornament and beautify, such as the planting of shade trees along highways. The building of hospitals for the poor and the rich, not only for men but for animals, is a high duty; for of the humblest creatures the Buddhist religion teaches that something of God's mind has passed into it. The Bible charges us to entertain strangers, which we do—at hotels and at our homes, if they are rich and have letters of introduction. But with the Buddhist the stranger, whoever he be, is a guest from God. Should some stranger come to our door, very likely it would be shut with a Christian-like slam in his face. Against the happy nation of the Burmese people and their universal decency, decorum, modesty, and temperance, he arrayed our statutes against prostitution, night-walking, drunkenness, and the long list of foul, dark, and muddy crimes. Massachusetts is hardly able to keep the prohibitory law on her statute-books, which, if nothing more, is a protest in the name of morality and Christianity; but the Chinese Government, when urged to license the sale of opium, on the ground that it would give a revenue of hundreds of millions, refused because it was an evil which would prove injurious to the morals of the people. He spoke of Christianity as exemplified in our business life, our politics, our literature, and the aspirations of our youth, as a spectacle any thing but edifying. Christianity is not a mere system of verbal truth, but is national life and character, and to Christianize China would be to Americanize China. He then spoke of characteristics of the Chinese empire, with an area twice as large as the United States and densely populated throughout; of its wondrous mechanical works; of its antiquity; of its knowledge thousands of years ago of sciences and arts modern to us; of its mode of government and admirable civil service, making officials who are brave, courteous and dignified scholars, with whom even the New England office-holder presents a pitiful contrast, and of the immense devoutness of the people in contrast with the deplorable and growing absence of the religious element in our midst. Where, then, he asked, is our moral superiority? The religion of the Bible he thought as superior to that of Buddha as the flower to the naked stalk; but we do not exemplify it in our lives. Looking far ahead in the distant future, he could see the time when the nation would be wholly and really Christian. Then, and not till then, will the assumption be justified that we are superior to these people.

AN INCIDENT.

—o—

ON Thanksgiving day, a visitor, attending our meeting, arose and spoke as follows:

"I have been a silent witness of what my eyes have seen, and my ears have heard, and I am reminded of that beautiful passage in Scripture, where Jacob (after leaving his father's house, knowing not whither he was going), saw in vision a ladder, reaching from earth to heaven, on which the angels of God ascended and descended; and he said, 'Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not; this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.' So I feel that the Lord is with you, and good angels are among you. The words of the Psalmist will apply to you. 'Give thanks unto the Lord, praise and exalt His name, for He is good; let the redeemed say so, whom He hath ransomed from the hand of the enemy, and gathered out from all lands, from the east and the west, the north and the south; they wandered in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in; hungry and thirsty their soul fainted in them; and He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.' It is my sincere desire to be joined with you in spirit and be one with you, that I also may be led in the right way unto a 'city of habitation.' His desire is granted.

TAKING COLD.—If a cold settles on the outer covering of the lungs, it becomes pneumonia, inflammation of the lungs or lung fever, and in many cases, carries off the strongest man to the grave, within a week. If cold falls upon the inner covering of the lungs, it is pleurisy, with its knife-like pains and its slow, very slow recoveries. If a cold settles in the joints, then it is rheumatism, with its agonies of pain, and rheumatism of the heart, which in an instant, sometimes snaps asunder the cords of life, with no friendly warning. It is of the utmost practicable importance then, in the wintry weather, to know not so much how to cure a cold, as to avoid it. Colds always come from one cause, some part of the body being colder than natural for a time. If persons will always keep their feet warm, and never allow themselves to be chilled, they will never take a cold in a lifetime, and this can only be accomplished by the exercise of due care in warm clothing, and an avoidance of drafts and exposure. While multitudes of colds come from cold feet, perhaps the majority arise from cooling off too quickly after becoming a little warmer than is natural, from exercise or work, or from confinement in a warm apartment.

TITLES of a secular character are convenient and unobjectionable, as they denote one's occupation. Thus doctor, squire, captain, editor, merchant, artist, etc., are appropriate titles; but "rev." is the silliest handle that was ever put to a man's name, and nobody who is not vain and pompous would ever allow himself to be called by it. Only once, we believe, is it used in the Bible, and then applied to no other being than God—"Holy and reverend is his name." Yet almost every beardless boy in a pulpit (except, perhaps, Elder Grant) is a "rev." The title of "elder," as a gospel teacher, is rather modest, and it is Scriptural, too; but just think of saying the Rev. Jesus Christ, the Rev. Dr. Paul, the Very Rev. John, the Rt. Rev. Matthew, and the Most Rev. Father in God Stephen Barjonai! It would be thought an insult, and perhaps indictable as blasphemy by the statute made and provided.

We Americans are great hands for wearing honorary titles, so that plain and democratic "Mr.," when superscribing a letter, for instance, is going out of fashion. "Is the Professor here?" shouted a man as he poked his head into a Boston city street car. "He is!" answered thirteen men, as they all rose up.

 There is one thing in which the Jews excel the Christians: and that is, funerals. The Jewish service is exactly the same for rich and poor. They consider the grave a leveler. Thus, at the recent funeral of Sir David Solomons, the eminent English Jew, there was a magnificent absence of all display—no elaborate trappings, no plumes, no gaudy hearse, no gold-mounted coffin. It is well to live as a Christian, and die as a Jew.

PROGRESS AND CONSERVATISM.

—o—

THE Church is progressive, and the individual is progressive; therefore, either may be conservative toward the other.

The progressive must bear and forbear, while the conservative is taking the comfort of ease.

But woe to the party, whichever it may be, that in such a case is at ease in Zion.

"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God"—does not help the sinning party out of the error of their ways; therefore, the sword of the Spirit—of the true Reformer—must be as keen, in its edge, toward the reprover as it is toward the reprov'd; toward the progressive as it is toward the conservative.

TIMIDITY.—A timorous, dictatorial person, who, when riding in a wagon, exercises constant supervision of the teamster, is broken of the habit by riding in cars where they have no voice or control over the train or its conductor. If such men can give up to the judgment and skill of others in the one case, why not in the other? If in a wagon there be eight persons, have not each the same right of superintendence of the team? Again, the timorous person will often be the most frightened when there is the least danger, and the most quiet when danger is imminent.

"Tis education forms the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

We may educate ourselves a good deal, if we cannot change constitutional proclivities.

"ALL THESE THINGS SHALL BE ADDED UNTO YOU."

—o—

SOME individual writes to the "People's Column" of the Boston Herald for Oct. 11th, presenting the following request, with which we think Mr. Beecher himself would find it hard to comply:

"Mr. Beecher, in his last lecture, spoke with great pathos of the sorrows that come from being finally wrecked in business. There is no feeling heart that does not at once ask, 'Is there no remedy for this?' and could the lecturer suggest one, he would do more good than he has as yet done in all his useful life. And I want to ask of him why he has not rescued from the twaddle of comment in which it has been seeking to pass so long the business rule given by his Master; 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' This promise may have philosophy to it. It may be the very thing we want, but it has never yet had any philosophic exposition. All explanation of it thus far has been dishwater. The man who shall show it to be a reliable working principle will do the world more good than a discoverer of the philosopher's stone. I, for one, could excuse the clergymen of Boston from a defense of the cosmogony of Moses, the astronomy of Joshua, and the zoölogy of Jonah, if they would take the time thus saved to do the thing I suggest."

Gentlemen of the creedal stripe, whose attention is at present turned to God-in-the-Constitution schemes for the suppression of free speech and thought among your fellow-men, here is an opportunity to be of real, practical good. You have the floor—can you answer the inquiry?—Banner of Light.

ALIMENTATION IN ITS RELATION TO NATIONAL PROSPERITY.

—o—

DR. HAMLIN, Bangor, Me. read a paper upon "Alimentation Considered in its Relations to the Progress and Prosperity of the Nation." He said that the subject was far more important than it seemed at first sight, and that it was well worthy of the future consideration of this association. The effect and value of alimentation was a question for the philosopher as well as for the physiologist, and the gourmand gave utterance to a truism when he said that the destiny of nations depended upon the manner in which they were fed. The chemical composition and physiological action of food affected us all, and should meet with universal attention. In the selection of meat for the purpose of food there was not observed in the large cities and towns the care and judgment which health required. Animal food was easily affected in its nutritive qualities. It contained the elements of virulent poison, and a change in its condition converted it into a source of disease and death. The frequent and excessive use of fermented bread had a disastrous effect upon infantile life, for children fed upon this fashionable food and potatoes possessed but little power of resistance to the diseases to which human life was inevitably exposed.

At the conclusion of Dr. Hamlin's report the members took a brief recess, to re-assemble at 7:30

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

THE SHEPHERD'S FOLD.

—o—

WHEN Jesus said, "Other sheep I have that are not of this fold; them also I must bring, that there may be one fold, and one Shepherd," he undoubtedly had reference to the scattered witnesses who were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, suffering for truth's sake; preferring to have their names cast out as evil among the pleasure-seeking throng, and to dwell in caves, and wander upon lone mountains, and in desert places, clad in sheep skins and goat skins, rather than disregard the behests of conscience. "Of such the world" (those who gave their lives and strength to please themselves) "was not worthy."

God has always had Prophets and witnesses on the earth, who endured the cross, and bore the burdens of their day, and testified against the sins of the people; and He gave his angels charge concerning them, to uphold, feed and clothe them spiritually; for upon their integrity and firm adherence to principle, depended the progress and weal of the race. By the history of past ages, we learn that the unprogressed condition of the people was not adapted to organization upon a basis that could stand. Hence, when the Spirit called, saying, "Gather my saints together, they who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," there was not cohesive power enough to hold them together, and they soon scattered into fragmentary parts.

As it would be difficult—we might say impossible—to establish a perfect household in the natural order, without a mother, to counsel, guide, and direct the inmates; so would it also be quite as impracticable to organize and sustain a spiritual Family, or Church, without a Mother's influence and care. The most successful attempt to organize and hold such a body together, of which we are cognizant, was the first Pentecostal Church. Jesus told his disciples that it was expedient that he should go away; that the Comforter, whom the Father would send in his name, would not come, except he went to him who sent or baptized him (Jesus) with the Christ Spirit. The Trinitarians have always placed the Holy Ghost, or Spirit, among their male Gods.

But, why was Jesus so anxious to go to the Father, to intercede and plead for the Comforter to visit the little band of disciples (which only numbered about a hundred and twenty at that time) with whom he had labored, and traveled, and had finished the work that was given him to do? Did he not yearn in spirit that they might also receive a blessing from the Mother in the heavens? And, was not the Comforter that came to them and baptized them on that memorable pentecostal day, a manifestation of the Mother Spirit, sent to gather them as a "kind of first-fruits," and cause them to see and feel, in part, the glories and beauties of the future Church of Christ, when "the Bride would come forth from her secret chamber," and when Christ would appear in his full glory, to establish a kingdom with foundations so deep and broad that nothing could prevail to overthrow it?

While the primitive Christians were true to the Spirit that baptized them, and taught them Virgin Purity, Community of goods, and Non-resistance, they were filled with universal love to God and man, and were "as a city upon a hill, whose light could not be hid;" and they possessed a power that was stronger than men; and a glory rested upon them brighter than earth could give. But it seemed to be well understood, that there would be a falling away of the first Christian Church, before the Church of the second appearing could be established on the earth. The Apostles predicted a declension prior to the time of the second advent, at which period, angels would be sent to sound the trumpet, and gather the scattered sheep—the waiting witnesses—the "elect," from the four winds of heaven, to the feast that should be prepared when the united dual voice of the Spirit and Bride should be heard, saying, "Come, for all things are now ready."

That trumpet has begun to sound. It is not the work of a day of twenty-four hours; but of a day of the Lord—a prophetic period running through many years of time; and those eyes that were steadfastly looking for the second appearing of the Christ "without sin unto salvation," have seen and felt the Divine presence and power. And all who had ears to hear the voice of the Spirit, caught the sound, "Now is come salvation and strength, the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of the brethren" (the generative life) "is cast out" (crucified). And that trumpet will continue to sound, and the angels will pass to and fro in the earth, in search of the scattered sheep, and will gather them one by one to the good Shepherd's fold.

SPIRIT POWER.

—o—

WE do not propose to write a biography, nor an obituary, at this time, but to narrate what was, to us, one of the most marked manifestations of spirit power it has ever been our privilege to witness.

On the 15th day of December last, Sister Margaret Pattison, aged forty years (eighteen of which had been spent in the North Family Shakers of Mount Lebanon), was taken ill. There was nothing alarming in her symptoms until the 17th, when she was attacked with pleurisy. For fourteen hours her sufferings were intense, after which, by the great exertions of those who attended her, she was relieved from acute pain; but, having inherited a frail, diseased body, the weak tenement could not withstand many such violent shocks, and consequently she was left in a very feeble condition, and could only speak in a low whisper. However, she gained in strength a little, and, on the 21st, she was lifted from her bed into an easy chair, and was able to take a little nourishment. On the 22d the pain struck the other lung, and then all hope of her recovery fled. For two hours her sufferings were indescribable; she then sank into an unconscious state, and so remained about two hours more, when she revived and commenced speaking with a loud and clear voice, as if addressing a large assembly. About thirty sisters gathered into the room to hear the utterances of one whose voice (as those who were watching around her bedside thought), it seemed, would never be heard again on the shores of time; but she was resuscitated by spirit agency, and rendered able to speak for about forty minutes. She called every individual by name, and had an appropriate message to every one, and spake as she could not have done except by the inspiration of spirit power! She said, "O how beautiful you look! I see bright lights all around you.

You are far prettier than the lambs that skip upon the mountains; for you have reason and conscience to guide you; but you all have your natural dispositions to contend with; remember, the power of God will enable you to conquer them.

"My dear young sisters, always speak kindly and gently to each other, under all circumstances, however much you may be tried, and you will feel the blessing of so doing. I know this is true, for I have proved it."

To one of the sisters she said, "O Olive! dear Olive! God blesses you, and the angels bless you." To another, "O how many times we have walked and taken sweet counsel together!" To another, "You have always been so kind and good to me, and all have been good to me, every one. O how I thank you!" In speaking to the young sisters, she said, "The angels have come down to bless you; do you know it? We have formed a bond of union that can never be broken. Keep your faith in view, and never lose sight of the blessed gift of purity! Without purity of heart and life, you will never accomplish any thing in the Gospel work. Be modest and comely in your dress; and, if you are tempted to do or say any thing to attract the opposite sex, and draw them away from the path of innocence and purity, stop and reflect whether you are honoring God, in thus doing, and turn to your spiritual faith and lend all your influence to uplift your brother into the divine life. Heed the monitions of conscience; for, under the light of the Gospel of Christ, which shines so clearly in this day, we cannot sin with impunity."

While those who stood and listened to the words of wisdom which fell from the lips and flowed from the heart of one they loved so dearly, and, as they saw the shadows of the death angel gathering over her, the deep feelings of love and affection, mingled with sorrow, found relief in tears, she said: Why do you weep? this is a joyful meeting! Come near to me, loved ones, and dry up those tears; if I go away, I will often come back, and will dance and skip with you on the ever-green hills of Zion.

After expressing great thankfulness and joy, that she had found a Heavenly Mother, as well as a Heavenly Father, a theme upon which she dwelt some time, she sang the following words in a full voice:

"I am never forgotten—never forsaken—
While I trust in my Mother above;
She careth for me, and hath set me free;
I joy in her unbounded love.
O Mother! bright in thy glory,
I see thee, 'mid halos of light,
Crown'd in thy victory, bathed in purity!
Thy robes are eternally white!"

When the song was ended, she said to some of her companions, "Did I not tell you that I should go to Heaven singing?"

Again she sank into an unconscious state, and some who saw her, thought she could not live an hour. But, after remaining in that condition about two hours, she again revived, and requested to see the brethren, and, as they gathered into the room, we said to her, Margaret, the brethren have come, do you recognize them? "To be sure I do," was the reply; "I know them all." She then commenced speaking to them with great earnestness; but her voice was as mild and sweet as the whisperings of an angel. She said, "How thankful I have always been to meet with you on consecrated ground, to worship God. Be faithful, brethren, to devote your strength and life to the upbuilding of the Zion of God in all things. O beautiful Zion! Many of you are young in faith; but you are men of intellect, and have come in at a good age. You have proved the world and could not find peace and rest to your souls there. Now be 'true to your call, and you will grow as willows by the water-courses,' and become rightful inheritors, and Sons, in the blest Israel of God." To one she said, "You have forsaken all for the Gospel; and now you will not shrink from its increasing work." Again she said, "O here is Brother Timothy! You are one who has 'stood by the stuff' many years. In the strength of young manhood you consecrated yourself to the Gospel work; and now you pray that you may be re-baptized; and I know you will never flinch in duty, nay, never! Many are looking up to you for strength and example; and you will be one that will support and help to hold up the hands of the Anointed Leaders in Zion, who watch over and guard the true Israel of God on earth." She said, "A number of you came across the big waters to hear and receive the blessed Gospel of salvation. There is Brother Emil, who left father and mother, brothers and sisters, houses and lands, in a distant country, for the Gospel of Christ; and our Mother in the heavens owns him as her son, and she blesses him; for he loves his spiritual faith more than the riches, honors, and pleasures of this vain world. I once heard Brother Emil say, that, when he engaged in certain duties where he felt that a great responsibility rested upon him, he first bowed his spirit in prayer that he might be directed aright, and honor God in his efforts."

Thus she continued to speak for about 30 minutes, and again joined her voice in singing; but it was a little tremulous and faltering. The last words she was heard to utter were, "My spirit is gathering into heaven!" She then closed her eyes, and lay motionless several hours, except a gentle breathing, when the spirit, quietly, and without the least conflict, left the frail casket of earth, for its home in a brighter land.

The angels have taken a lamb from our fold, that was almost without blemish! Those who have been the most intimately connected with her in life, say they never knew her to speak unkindly, even under the most trying circumstances; and that, in all her deportment, she has been like a ministering angel of purity.

We are aware that our account of the last hours of our beautiful departed sister is meager when compared with the real; indeed, the scene could not be described. Eye and ear witnesses alone know and declare that it can never be forgotten. A number of persons said, it was as much of a miracle to them, as if one had arisen from the dead; and many who saw her, agree that it was the most complete triumph of Christian faith over the power of death that they ever witnessed.

MY MITE.

—O—

"Obedience to God was the first great command
Which in the beginning was given;
And every Believer may now understand
That this is the passport to heaven."

DEAR EDITORS OF S. AND S.

Is not the spirit of obedience as requisite to insure happiness at the present time as in the beginning, or past? "Order was heaven's first law." Where there is no order, confusion reigns, and consequently unhappiness. But where good order and purity are the prevailing desires of the inhabitants, especially of a Shaker community, the countenances of such self-sacrificing souls beam with happiness and contentment, knowing that by true self-denial they are preparing robes of righteousness with which to adorn their spirits here, and consequently in eternity.

Learning to live as the angels do in heaven whether we inhabit mortal bodies on this earth, or are divested of them, and dwell in the spirit land, the same self-denying work will be requisite to insure happiness. Therefore my happiness increases; for it is a privilege to commence this work while on earth, and have my "sins go beforehand to judgment."

If this work of confessing and forsaking sin be faithfully performed in time, shall we not, when we enter eternity, be met with the joyful "Well done; enter into the joys of the Lord?" While, if otherwise, we might have to wander in darkness until our proud natures were humbled, in order to be in a condition to accept the Gospel.

The testimony of the Christ Spirit, in his first as well as second appearing, requiring a life free from all indulgences of the sexual nature, it behooves all who would be called by that name, to deny self, and bear the cross of Christ.

And, as was promised, this Christ Spirit is not left without a witness, but abides in those who are living that life and who constitute the body of Christ. And, as this body is no monster, it has a head to lead and direct it in all matters, whether spiritual or temporal, "a body fitly framed together, growing unto an holy temple." If sin is the only separation from God, true confession and repentance before these witnesses for God, will do much to lessen the distance from Him, and start us on in "the narrow way." Therefore we would "give honor to whom honor is due," and love and respect our leaders for their works' sake.

And we would respect ourselves and walk worthy of our vocation, thus gaining the love of all with whom we come in daily contact. If this we do, we shall feel our union to the angels, and to our heavenly Parents, and shall be daily traveling home to God.

Lucretia Godfrey, Shirley, Mass.

DEVOTION.

—O—

"How blest is the season when, calm and retired,
The soul is by feelings angelic inspired."

THE soul of man possesses no deeper devotional power than that of silently sending out to the Creator its profoundest affections and yearnings, with solicitations for present help and future good. The strength and sweet influence drawn into the inner life by those who pray, is evidence of the worth of prayer. By it, the whole thought and feeling is turned within, and sacred converse is held with pure spirits, by the angel part of our nature, which frequently prompts resolution to better action in the performances of life.

O what an elevation, far above all that is gross and earthly, the spirit feels, when engaged in the sweet exercise of prayer. Jesus made use of prayer, and also taught his followers to pray, and declared that the Father would reward them for so doing. If our great Exemplar had need of prayer, then how much more, at the present time, does humanity need, in its conflict with temptation and besetting sins, to both watch and pray.

Prayer, in the economy of spiritual growth, is like soil to outward vegetation; and, if thoroughly labored on, will increase the growth and fruitfulness of the heavenly graces in the spiritual garden of the soul: from this soil, too, flow those streams which shall be as "a well of water in the soul, springing up into everlasting life." It is sweet to only taste of those waters; but what satisfaction and completeness of joy will be realized in the full supply!

By prayer, and a contrite spirit, this fullness may be gained.

O FATHER speed the blessed day
When peace on earth shall bear the sway;
When love divine shall fill the heart,
And all shall choose the better part;
When universal growth shall tend Discordant sects in one to blend;
When freedom to live right shall rule,
And all be taught in Wisdom's school;
When, meeting injuries with love,
All seek the spirit of the dove,
And prize far more the bread of life
Than wealth and fame with worldly strife;
When young and old alike shall know
That sensual pleasures never flow
But from a lawless selfish state,
And pains upon them ever wait;
When voice of Justice shall be heard,
And man revere her every word,
When woman shall, with purpose pure,
Seek life and love that will endure.
O speed the full and perfect day,
When life of Christ shall bear the sway,
And one vast Brotherhood agree,
In love complete, to worship Thee!

Betsy Johnson, Tyngham, Mass.

BELOVED EDITRESS:

I BLESS the "S. and S." and will lend my influence to its support. I bid it God-speed, and pray that it may be as an angel of conviction and mercy, bearing upon its golden wings glad tidings of salvation from sin to many weary and sin-sick souls. May it find its way to different nations and kingdoms of earth, and be a minister of living faith to souls, and lead them to walk in obedience to truth, in the straight and narrow path of self-denial and the cross, and to thankfully make an honest confession of every sin they have committed, with a full determination to forsake it forever. This is the "Door of Hope;" and those who enter therein "find rest unto their souls."

I feel that a heavenly invitation is sounding to many souls to come to the fountain of pure waters which is opened in Zion in this day of Christ's Second Appearing. The call is, "Come all who will, and partake freely, without money or price."

Enter into mansions of peace and rest—rest from the turmoil and confusion that are abroad in the earth—the fruit of sin and wrong-doing. This will be an ample reward for all sacrifices made in leaving a worldly life fraught with so much misery, and entering upon a new life in the kingdom of righteousness and peace.

SYMPATHY.

—O—

THE subjects of Monopoly and of Capital and Labor have engaged the attention of many philanthropic minds, and much has been written thereupon by far abler pens than mine, showing cause and effect, and the existing relations between the rich and the poor of this world; therefore, I do not purpose to dwell so much at this time upon the producing causes of the poverty and suffering that are among the populace in this and other countries, as to express sympathy and grief of spirit, that so much wrong and injustice abound, especially in this broad and favored land of liberty; and that, while there are millions of acres of unemployed, uncultivated lands, there are also millions of inhabitants without adequate labor to supply themselves and helpless children with food and clothing.

From a youth, to the present time, I have felt a deep pity for, and sympathy with, the suffering poor, the down-trodden and oppressed; and oftentimes, on my bended knees, have I prayed that through the Providence of God the causes of so much human suffering might be removed. And, as I increase in years, which now number threescore and ten, I feel a growing anxiety, and deep sorrow of heart, in the cause of the poor and needy; and more especially since the recent financial upheaval has deprived so many of the laboring class of the necessary means of subsistence. And when I hear of the increase of crime, so many thefts and robberies, and of the expenditure of capital in supporting judges and lawyers to try criminal cases of this kind, and to enlarge and build prisons to hold such within its ponderous walls, O how much I wish that public morals were strong enough to hold them from committing such crimes, and that Justice would enfold and shield them from the inclement storms of vice, which beat so rudely and mercilessly against their frail weak minds, often rendered so by the sins of their parents, and frequently they are driven, as it were, by penury and want, to yield to temptation.

If money that is expended to punish could be applied to prevent crime, by supplying the destitute widow and homeless orphan with bread, what a blessing it would be. We are aware that it is easier to talk than to do, to plan than to execute. There are some who are too conscientious to steal, others are too proud to beg, and prefer to eke out a miserable life, or fill the premature grave of the suicide, rather than stoop to do either.

Were it in my power, I would do much to ameliorate the condition of the honest, suffering poor. But I rest in the hope that the day is fast approaching when there will be less monopoly, and more equality of labor, and a more just and amplified distribution of the products of industry, and that a remembrance that "the earth is the Lord's," and that all his creatures have a right to the elements of subsistence, will lead many to observe the "golden rule," to "Do unto others as they would that others should do unto them."

Betsy Crosman, Mt. Lebanon.

HAS anyone wronged you? Be bravely revenged; slight it, and the work is begun; forgive it, 'tis finished. He is below himself who is not above an injury.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER considers it absurd to believe that intellectual culture contributes to moral excellence. He cannot understand what connection there is between learning to read and getting a higher sense of duty, or what effect the ability to make written signs can have in strengthening the desire to do right, or how the knowledge of the multiplication table, or quickness in adding or dividing, can so increase the sympathies as to restrain the tendency to trespass against others, or in what way the attainment of accuracy in spelling and parsing can make the sentiment of justice more powerful, etc. He does not go so far as to say that intellectual culture is positively demoralizing; so far as the morals are concerned.

VOLUNTARY SACRIFICE.

—O—

THE present is, to some extent, an era of inquiry and speculation, if not of application. Many minds are perceiving and giving assent to truth, and are discarding error, to a greater degree than they have hitherto done; yet, alas! how far short they come of the real work that will renew and perfect the whole life and character.

Many approve the celibate life, and practise it; this is good, and commendable; but more is requisite to wholly fill the Christian character. They who really "put on Christ," by being baptized with his baptism, "crucify the flesh with all its affections" as well as "its lusts;" whence spring selfish relation, and individual private property, etc. In the life and character of Jesus may be seen the heavenly attributes and graces; and he proved his love to souls, by the voluntary sacrifice of his own carnal life—self-indulgence and ease, worldly ambition, and love of riches and honor, that he might receive the Christ-baptism and be a Minister of the same to others.

And herein is a marked distinction between the true Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, who come out of the old inheritance altogether, and form a new home, upon the basis of a Pentecostal Church, in things temporal and spiritual, and those who cling to the old systems, whether they profess to be within the pale of old theologies, or are borne upon the waves of Spiritualism; it matters little, if the life and fruits produced are the same. True Love, which emanates from the Divine, always incites to individual sacrifice for the general good. It is not narrow, and limited to kith and kin, or to partial preferences; but it extends to all humanity as God's creation, who, if deserving of his care and notice, are worthy of our love and sympathy.

Objections are sometimes presented against the Divine Order which recognizes, and seeks to practically carry out the universality of God's Law of Love and Justice, by those who dwell in the limited precincts of selfish loves, and who cannot see much of interest beyond the generative life, and the conditions and relations which grow out of it. Of course to such there cannot be much form or comeliness in such a life, for they are not prepared to enter into a work that would deprive them of their idols. The reasoning of carnal minds is ever earth-ward, and it is difficult for them to comprehend spiritual things. To such we would recommend that they "order their" thoughts and "conversation aright"—on the natural plane of life where they belong at present, and strive to fulfill the law of reproduction according to the original design; then they will soon begin to reason heaven-ward, and will gradually progress from the natural to the spiritual, and be able to perceive that they who dwell in the higher Spiritual Order draw around them Divine influences, which elevate them above the earthly, and lift them into angelic life and love.

J. D. Knight, Mt. Lebanon.

TRUTH AND RIGHT.

—O—

WHEN the "morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy," was it merely because the Creator had laid the "corner stone," and fastened the foundation of a new world, that they thus felt to express their delight and gratitude? Or did they feel the inspiration of that Divine truth which cometh from above, and is stronger than the foundations of the earth, and more expansive than the sea which He inclosed within the limits of His Power and Wisdom; that truth which would eventually overspread the earth, and bring its inhabitants, high and low, rich and poor, under its pure rule and equitable government, that caused them thus to lift their hearts and voices? Undoubtedly, by the eye of faith, they looked through the unborn ages of time, and saw something of the work which God would execute in the earth, and felt to exclaim, "O, ever blessed Truth! hasten thy mission, and speed the work of justice and mercy!"

If, at so early period of time as the laying of the foundations of the material world in which we live, "the sons of God shouted for joy," how much more cause have the daughters of God to raise a shout of freedom and gladness that the foundation of a new heavenly temple is already laid, and that there is a spiritual power at work that will destroy the sinful works of man's creation, and cause all error to be swept away by the mighty waves of the sea of Truth. The spiritual order is not designed to destroy the true natural order, but to condemn its perversions, and by righteousness (right doing) bring happiness to the hearts and homes of many who, through ignorance of a better way, have sought comfort in dissipation and vain amusement, which, at best, bring but a momentary respite to the troubled mind, perhaps to react upon it with fourfold vigor.

The daughters of Zion feel deeply interested in the cause of Woman. We own, as our sisters, all womankind of our race, though many are very low in the scale of morals, and in a willing and forced condition of servitude to vile passions; yet there is a germ of immortality somewhere in the soul that belongs to God, though it may be buried beneath much rubbish. And we pray that they may come to the knowledge of saving truth and willingly obey it. True knowledge and obedience thereto will emancipate them from that slavery which now binds them down to the low animal plane of existence, where they are trammelled by fashion, fettered by pride, and are a prey to vile insinuations. Then they will understand what are "Woman's Rights." Their first great duty is to study to know themselves, and to understand their duty to God and to their fellow creatures, and to purify their hearts and fit themselves to enter upon the duties of life, feeling the responsibility of acting well their part.

CORRESPONDENCE.

—O—

DEAR ANTOINETTE—

I INCLOSE one dollar for the "Shaker and Shakeress" another year. It is more beautiful to me than all the newspapers that flood the land, for its pages are not blotted with a catalogue of sin and crime, but are as refreshing as the springs of Mount Lebanon.

I hail its visits as the face of a loved friend in a strange land. It tells me of a Summer Land, where souls grow beautiful, true, and good. My spirits are often heavy laden, and I long for that rest of soul that dwells with the chosen people of God.

Yours in love,

Sylvina J. Hannibal, Mo.

ELDRRESS BETSEY BATES, in the Spirit Land, sends greeting to the Brethren and Sisters as follows:

THE Angels in heaven, and saints upon earth,
Are blending together in heavenly mirth,
Inviting us all to be of good cheer,
And greet ev'ry one with "A Happy New Year!"
Though cold-hearted Death, with sharp sickle in hand,
May reap from among you, for the immortal land;
Yet we're not divided, our spirits are here,
To encourage and strengthen through the coming new year.

The Sunbeams of light are shedding their rays;
With courage look forward for far brighter days:
For faithful Believers are hastening near
An increase of the Gospel for the ensuing year.
Stand firm in the Gospel, and keep in the Ark;
The trumpet is sounding for souls to embark:
The blind shall see God, the deaf his word hear.
The dumb shall sing praises, and hail the new year.
The harvest is great, and the lab'ers are few;
There's a work for each faithful Believer to do.
Be true to your trust, and be of good cheer,
And you will rejoice at the close of the year.

Eldress Betsey says: With this receive my affectionate Gospel love; and I should be pleased to have every family share of this Union Greeting.

THE WORK OF THE CENTURY.

No. 1.

—O—

SHE stood upon the mountain's height,
The morn of freedom round her shone;
Beneath her were the years of night,
With blood-stained hands and eyes of stone.
They were not her ancestral train,
Her lofty aims they never knew;
She came to bid the people reign—
To form a system grand and new.

She was a stranger sent of God,
Through whom all nations should be blest;
She laid foundations strong and broad,
Provided for the earth's oppress'd.
Priests, kings, and conquerors were they;
The Church and State their throne had been;
By law Divine they claim'd their sway,
And spurn'd the rights of tolling men.

The heritage that God reserved
To be the refuge of the race,
By daring courage she preserved,
Nor gave to Tyranny a place;
Where e'er his direful plans were laid,
Where e'er his treach'rous armies moved,
By sure defeat he was repaid;
Triumphant still the century proved.

And, even in our little day,
How great the struggle that arose
To banish slavery away—
That monster of all household foes.
With glass reversed, we view it o'er,
And strive to fix it on the past;
And yet the fearful guise it wore
Will haunt our memories to the last.

The angels brought the high command,
To "Make Columbi's children free."
They sought the noblest of the land
To hew a path for liberty,
They call'd the justice-loving Friends,
Whom they had taught, in silent hours,
To give the country's eyes a lens
Through which to scan her crushing powers.

They thrill'd the cords in woman's heart,
Drew sympathy from every tone,
Until she made that cause a part
Of all the wrongs that were her own.
Where e'er a generous nature glow'd,
Where e'er was breathed the gift of song,
The floods of inspiration flow'd,
In burning waves against the wrong;
Where e'er the thought was clear and brave,
These angel messengers were found
In earnest pleading for the slave,
Whose limbs and hearts alike were bound.

The hearth, the pulpit, and the press,
Were all invoked to lend their aid;
The lowly heart was claim'd to bless
The efforts that the mighty made;
Until there rested in the air,
An element like subtle flame—
A pressure as of mingled prayer—
Yet who could tell from whence it came?

The angels shook the Nation's gates,
And blew their trumpets long and loud,
Until the crime-encumber'd States
Rebell'd with spirit fierce and proud;
And Sumter's gun that woke the land,
Sent echoes to the unseen realm,
Which brought a war-like spirit-band
To take the Nation's broken helm.

O paradox in human life!
The hands that sought the captives' weal
Were nerved, amid that blinding strife,
To dye with kindred blood their steel.
Yea, those whose hearts for freedom felt,
And strove by righteousness to win,
Because in Babylon they dwelt,
They were partakers of her sin.

The work the angel spirits did
Seem'd lost below that passion blaze;
And yet the gold was only hid,
To be restored in after days.
Those legions of the earthly plane
Performed their work with dauntless rage,
Achieved with speed a precious gain,
But brought a loss that none can gauge:

We pass beyond the broken homes,
The ties that cannot be replaced,
The hearts where never sunshine comes,
The unapprized external waste,
And think of what the Nation lost
In weight and talent richly earned;
Of what her reeking altars cost,
While souls were scarr'd and bodies burn'd.

O worthless fields! O prison pens!
Be ye no more the Nation's shame;
With you all vindication ends
For violence in Freedom's name.
Henceforth must Legislation stand
The only Arbitrer of right;
For God has call'd this glorious land
To be redeem'd from battle's blight.

There but remains a veil of days
Till Woman's servitude shall cease;
I see her, through its shining haze,
The star-crown'd guardian-friend of Peace.
For she who gave the bondman aid
While cruel shackles were her own,
Shall yet, in Council Halls, persuade
That Love and Wisdom are but One.

Cecelia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon.

CITY OF LIGHT.

Andante.

VISITORS.

Casual visitors are expected to pay for their entertainment.

Parents having children, or persons who have relatives, among Believers, are not expected to make those circumstances occasions for rendering our Societies places of resort, or a visit to the country at the expense of Believers.

Visitors seeking religious information, with a view of uniting, are always welcome.

DIRECTIONS.

While the post-office address is F. W. Evans, Mt. Lebanon, Col. Co., N. Y., visitors should take the Harlem Railroad which runs to Chatham Four Corners, whence, by changing cars, they will be brought direct to New Lebanon depot (via the Harlem Extension Railroad), one mile from the North Family of Shakers.

FOCALIZED LIGHT.

HAIL! all hail the hosts immortal,
Tollers from the worlds above;
Lo! they leave the pearly portals,
To extend the work of Love.
They are earnest; shall we trifle
With the precious truth they bring?
Shall our hearts their kindlings stifle,
To retain some worthless thing?
Have we shackles, they can break them,
If we ask their blessed aid;
Have we germs, they can awake them
To a bloom that will not fade.
Nature's tree is split and blasted,
Gnarly, bitter fruit it bears;
Spring and summer quickly pass'd it,
Autumn takes it unawares.

But the tree of Life is bending
With its rich eternal fruit;
Food for souls who are ascending
From the cravings of the brute.
Still the sword of truth is wielded
By the hands of Cherubim;
But the pure in heart are shielded
Underneath each laden limb.
Man has fail'd of true progression,
Crippled by the serpent's huise,
Though he holds in his possession
Strength that he has but to use.
'Tis the power of self-denial,
Scholars, statesmen, know its worth;
All unquestion'd is its trial,
In the outward things of earth.
He who seeks for star or planet,
Will not join the midnight dance;
He who studies plant or granite,
Does not leave his thoughts to chance.
There is system, there is order,
In the wondrous realm of mind,
Science' far extended border
Vanguards forward press to find.
From the ruby tide, thought-freighted,
Flowing through each throbbing frame,
To the spirit chain'd and grated,
By the griefs without a name;
From the mosses on the mountain,
To the sky's bright fleece of snow;
From the bubbles on the fountain,
To the gems the oceans know;
From the wealth that heaven discloses,
To the riches earth conceals;
All proud Intellect encloses
In the circle of his seals.
But the Soul has been neglected
In this royal, mental reign—
Crush'd, unknown, or misdirected;
Hers, the years of cloud and pain!
Let her have emancipation,
Give her sunshine, pure and warm;
As she rises, all creation
Will assume its highest form.
Let us meet in council holy,
To discuss the laws of heaven,
Bravely, yet with spirits lowly,
To receive the truth that's given.

Who would shrink, O, who would waver,
Weighed by stamp of leaden creed?
Who would give his heart in favor
Of the serpent and his seed?
At this time light focalizes,
To consume the power of sin,
To destroy the soul's disguises,
And to usher glory in.
Is there one who would awaken,
One with aspirations true?
Know, the heavens and earth are shaken,
To convey this call to you.
Come! O come! e'er yet withln you
Turns to darkness every gleam,
Come! the Angel hands would win you
To the Home of which you dream.

ABOUT THE MENNONITES.

A LETTER from a member of the House of Representatives, who was asked for information:

"I went first thing this morning to the Department.

Results: Two years ago, U. S. consul at Odessa, addressed Interior Department. Mennonites came from Germany to Russia, the Emperor Paul promising military immunity. Present emperor threatened to withdraw this, hence Mennonites question American consul about his country.

Next, last spring appeared Heller, attorney for Mennonites, and personally questioned Interior Department. Next, in October, came Mennonites in person. Cornelius Janzen, Berlin, Ontario, Canada.

That's your man. He is spokesman, and will spend the winter in Ontario.

Rev. John Funk, Elkhart, Indiana, knows something. I assume this, simply because Janzen visited him before he went to Canada.

They [Mennonites] still speak German; have decided to settle in the United States instead of Canada.

That's all they know here. So you must write Janzen, and mayhap visit him."

MT. LEBANON, COLUMBIA CO., }
December 21, 1873. }

To Cornelius Janzen:

ESTEEMED FRIEND—I understand that you are the authorized agent of the Russian Mennonites, who contemplate emigrating to America. I address you greeting, on behalf of the United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing (commonly called Shakers, or Shaking Quakers), in these United States.

There is a strong bond of religious sympathy between the two Orders. In theological views we may differ somewhat, until we understand each other; but we are one in spirit, and in the desire to serve God without regard to self. Our Founders fled from England, as you propose to flee from Russia, for conscience sake.

And, having "clean escaped the corruptions that are in the world through lust," by all living together as brethren and sisters, a pure holy, religious, celibate life, they and their successors have established, in different States, some sixty Communities having "all things in common." Many flock to these households of faith, partly for the temporal advantages to be therein obtained.

The late general "suspension of faith," or decline in the religious elements, throughout Christendom, together with the universal uprising of the war spirit, which permeates all the sects and churches—Greek, Catholic and Protestant—is turning the Church-and-State Governments of the world into blood, as their highest source of delight, and their most intoxicating drink.

The "two witnesses"—male and female—have borne their testimonies against war as being anti-Christian, throughout the reign of "the beast and his image"—1,260 years—and have endured persecution and death, rather than kill their fellow-beings. The Moravians, the Quakers, and the Mennonites, are links in that great chain, extending from the First Christian Church (whose members would not fight in the Roman armies, and who had "all things in common," in communities, for three hundred years, and did neither marry nor give in marriage during that long period of time), to the Second Christian Church, which is built upon the Rock of a new Divine Revelation; and which, during a hundred years, has been inspired by the same Christ Spirit, and has faithfully carried out the very same principles which, in the sight of even all nominal Christians, formed the crown of glory, and palm of victory, of the Jewish Pentecostal Church.

Dear friend, our object in thus addressing you, is to ascertain whether, among the great body of Mennonites, there be not a small body of deeply spiritual-minded religious souls who are inwardly hungering and thirsting after more righteousness, and who, in response to the voice from the kingdom of heaven upon earth (now in existence), saying, "Come up hither," on to higher ground! would "rise and stand upon their feet," and ascend up, like "a cloud of witnesses," into the Shaker Communities.

If there be such a company (having according to the flesh, fathers and mothers, and brothers and sisters, and children, and houses and land, or their equivalents), who will "for-sake all for Christ's sake, and his Gospel"—all the relations appropriate to the generative earthly order—and will come up into the Resurrection state, wherein these are all forsaken, left behind, and supplanted by their spiritual correspondencies, they would be welcomed, as the children of the Spirit, to our hearts and homes, our houses and lands, now, in this life, and, in the world to come, they shall have, with us, an eternal relation in the heaven of heavens.

From the above remarks, do not adopt the popular error that the Shakers, any more than did Jesus, condemn marriage per se. The earthly or Adamic order is for propagating human beings on this earth. In so doing, however, Nature's laws (as kept by the lower animals, which do not copulate except for offspring), should be strictly observed by men and women. Nor should they war or fight, or kill their own species. Land should be accessible to all, as "Moses, the servant of God," taught, when he gave to each individual an inheritance therein, and appointed a Jubilee wherein to restore it when lost. And while on the one hand, if all were Shakers, the world would run out; on the other, if all men and women were married, and reproduced their kind, the whole earth would soon become, like China, unable to sustain its own children. Hence there would be a necessity for infanticides, diseases, famines, pestilences, desolating wars, etc., in order to keep population in check.

And I submit whether, to be consistent, the great body of the Mennonites, in fleeing from Russia because they will not fight, should not separate from amongst themselves a small body of Mennonites as an "offering to the Lord"—a Prophetical or Melchizedek people, who should be as a holy priesthood: the first or larger portion being as a new earth; the second or smaller portion, as a new heaven.

Again, I would suggest that, as the landed possessions of our Communities are large, and (owing to the aforesaid decline in the religious element in Christendom), our numbers comparatively few, there may be Shaker families, and perhaps Societies, who would be willing to sell out their possessions to the Mennonites. They would thus have, not only large estates in land, but buildings already erected, and ready for use; in which events, both classes of Mennonites would be accommodated: those who choose to "do well," and marry; and those who might choose to "do better," by uniting with the Shakers in a more self-denying and Christ-like life.

With kindest regards, and prayers that you may be providentially directed for the good of your people, and the honor and glory of God,

I am your friend in the truth,

F. W. Evans.

F. W. Evans, Esq., Lebanon, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:

Your kind letter and enclosed pamphlets of December 21, were received in due time, but as the subject is a very important one, and my time at the present much occupied by an extended correspondence, etc., I only wish to acknowledge, with these few lines, the receipt of yours, and to state, that there are several families in Russia acquainted with me, who are in full sympathy with you, and I will not fail to communicate to them about the matter, and to write to you again as soon as possible.

Believe me to be very truly,

Yours,

C. Jansen.

MENNONITES.

"WARD" says, "The Mennonites are descended from the tolerably pure evangelical Waldenses, who were driven, by persecution, into various countries; lived, simple, exemplary lives; in the villages as farmers; in the towns by trades, possessing the most pure Christian principles, which they exemplified in a holy life and conversation. They fled to Flanders, and Zeland, in the 12th Century. There were then two sects of them, the one distinguished by the perfect, who held to celibacy and community of goods; the other, the imperfect. The greater part of them were the most pious Christians the Church ever saw. By the labors of Menno Simons, they obtained a regular state of Church order in 1536. They were formerly called Anabaptists, but subsequent to this arrangement, Mennonites. They are considered in Church Histories as the only Christian community which has stood on the platform of the Judean Christian Church, since the days of the Apostles.

They plead for universal toleration in religion, debar none from their societies who live pious lives, and own the Scriptures as the Word of God. They object to the term Trinity, referring to God. They are utterly averse to oaths, war, and capital punishment, as contrary to the spirit of Christianity. In their private meetings every one has liberty to speak, expound the Scriptures, and pray. They decline salaries from Government for their priests. Their Church worship, at present, is conducted similarly to the Dutch Reformed. There are, already, in the United States, more than two hundred Mennonite Churches, some containing three hundred members."

THEOLOGICAL TREASURY.

—o—
JESUS.

AT the head of Christianity, stands one of "Nature's noblemen"—Jesus. In him we see a man without a creed, unless a fanatical love for a pure life may be considered a creed. This love made and makes all Christian disciples as one in their thoughts, and identical in their lives. Love is not an indefinable, inexpressible illustration, as many would incline to believe—a pretty word, but a myth! There is nothing that can exceed this love in making individuals alike in their life; and consequently, in their theology, which is of small account. If any say they love Jesus, or any one else; or any thing like the testimony and life of Jesus, the only evidence of their sincerity is the assimilation of their character with what they assert they love. We become like unto that which we love, as really as "the sparks fly upward," or "water inevitably seeks its level;" and this truism remains intact, regardless of what we merely express of love by words. This truth has an important bearing upon the constitution of our Treasury. As an evidence: Among the millions who say they love Jesus, let them become like him; and let them commence by simply living a virgin life; or by abstaining from fleshly lusts, as did Jesus!

As a Jew, Jesus loved the Jewish Law; hence he lived out its principles in his youth—kept its provisions with commendable punctuality. He never condemned the Law of the Jews; and, up to the time of his conversion to Christianity, and his baptism by John, we know not that he declared his love for any thing in preference to Jewish Provisions. And even then he did not condemn the Jewish Law; nor did he attempt its suppression; but he did supplant this by superior characteristics in life! One of the noblest instances that could occur in the life of any one, was demonstrated by Jesus' answer to the rich young Jew; "Keep the Law!" To the se-tarians of to-day, this would seem a lost opportunity to make a convert; but the sequel showed the wisdom of the remark, in preference to immediately enjoining the newly-received principles of the Gospel of Christianity. A good Jew, is very much better than a poor, hybrid Christian, and Jesus appreciated this fact.

So long as Jesus loved Judaism better than the principles of Christianity, which he had not yet conceived, he lived like a good Jew; but, when he learned of the higher law of the Christ, which he was the first to conceive, practice, and then to teach, then his love for the better, changed his thoughts and life; and then, by his love for the superior law, came his conversion to Christianity!

We are edified by the spiritualism of Jesus; we love it, and purpose to keep it. We wonder at his paucity of theology; and yet we propose to have only as much, and with this, our Treasury will be filled. True, he did introduce a system, which, when its principles are adopted, will cause a separation from the soul, of all that constitutes the life of Adam—generative, or worldly.

And, as a matter of economy, expedition, and success, the prosecution of a superstructure upon a model Jewish organization is more possible and easy, than upon any other of which we know. Humiliating though it may be, the well-ordered life of a good Jew is sooner and easier carried into a brilliant Christian, than the best Gentile that has yet been presented! And this truth will appear cogent to the philosopher who is able to compare Jewish antecedents, physiology, and law generally, with the same of any thing constituting a departure therefrom.

From the numerous tenets put forth by professedly Christian Churches, we are variously inclined to think that Jesus was an immense theologian; and as erratic in theology, as multitudinous in ideas. I would show him to be a lover and a model Exemplar of a better life, rather than a multiplier of new ideas. If I thought of Jesus as a theologian, I should soon forget him; but, as an ever-enduring monument of living purity I have in him, a morning acquaintance, a noon-day companion, and an evening guest, always happyfying, and always new! With Parker, I have, in this nobleman of Nature, "the possibility of the race," and, by example, not as proxy, a hope of the salvation and redemption of the race from any and every fall, to the highest and truest standard.

G. A. Lomas.

COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE.

—o—

Something like forty years ago, when the Shaker Community at Union Village, Ohio, was full of people, and, in the zenith of its prosperity, Jason and Daniel, Prophets, from Canada, made a visit there.

The Prophets had hospitable reception, and were in ecstasies of delight—for a season.

But the spirit of sadness came over Daniel. He seemed caught up, as were Prophets of old. Looking thro' the Prophetic telescope, he exclaimed, "They are going!—They are going!!—'Twould seem they'd all go—— But they'll not. There'll be some left."

For a time, animation seemed suspended. A new scene burst upon his vision. He arose clapping his hands, he exclaimed—"They come!—From the East, and the West, and the North, and the South!! 'Twould seem the whole world would come."

The Prophets were in a second transport of joy, largely exceeding the first.

SPIRIT CORRESPONDENCE.

—o—

EDWIN M. STANTON, late Secretary of War, to the Father of the Nation, ULYSSES S. GRANT, to whom I bow with respect and honor.

BE not astonished at my communication; but receive it from a heart warm with brotherly affection and love. My spiritual eyes are now open, and I can see the order and beauty of the new creation, and am anxious for the dawn of a new day, when many shall be baptized in the river of life, from which peace and purity perennially flow.

After the close of the war, and a short time before my departure from earth, I was invited to make a visit to the Shakers of Mt. Lebanon, which I accepted; and, in the few days I was with them, I enjoyed the most comfort, and received the greatest amount of good to my soul, that I ever experienced; and I look upon it as the greenest and brightest spot in the field of my memory. I humbly solicited their prayers to God for me, that I might be guided by Wisdom to perform my official duties. I had often bowed myself in sincere prayer to God, and I put my trust more in his power, than I did in my own abilities, or in weapons of war, to put down the Rebellion.

I was convinced that, as a people, the Shakers were nearer the Throne of God, and more accessible to Him, than myself, because of the greater purity of their lives; and I felt unworthy to be in their midst, yet was blest by their kind reception and frequent expressions of tender sympathy, which seemed to pervade their whole being with impartial love for all humanity; and I knew that they had often offered prayers to God in my behalf, as also for all the officials at the seat of Government, that Wisdom would guide all our proceedings; and that the Union of the States might be regained, with a permanent increase.

From a previous acquaintance with some of them, I had gained a love to that people which carried and bore my spirits up, through all the trying scenes of adversity that I was afterwards called to pass through, till my work was closed on earth. I had inquired of them the origin of their Society, their first Founder, etc., and received liberal information, satisfactory to my feelings. They informed me that they originated through the ministrations of some of the French Prophets in England; and that the immediate Founder of their Society was of the Quaker Order. Her name was Ann Lee. Her followers call her their Mother in the New Creation. In 1770, while in prison, on account of her mode of worshiping God in the dance, she received a baptism of the Christ Spirit, and saw in vision the loss and depth of the fallen nature of both man and woman.

She was called to go forth and proclaim to the world—especially to those of her own sex—the way of redemption from sin, and from the bondage of the flesh. In 1774, she received a revelation, directing her and eight of her followers to repair to America, and they arrived in New York on the 6th of August of that year. I had long had a strong desire to see her spirit; and often prayed that I might be gathered to the Shakers in the spirit world, when I had done with time; for I desired to dwell with the pure in heart. In my last sickness, I was frequently impressed that Shaker spirits were near; and the innocence of their angelic countenances soothed my troubled mind, and knit me still closer to them. On one occasion I saw, in a night vision, the answer of my prayers:—

"A woman clothed with the sun, with a crown of stars upon her head, and the moon under her feet;" and a breast-plate with these words written thereon: "And she shall be called the Lord our Righteousness, the Mother of the New Creation, the Redeemer of the human race." She stood with Jesus, the first Saviour of men. Around her was a band of holy angels, who were continually passing and repassing, and receiving from her hand, transparent seals, with these words upon them: "These are the pure in heart." And they placed the seals upon the foreheads of the surrounding multitude of angelic spirits, who stood at her right hand, on an ascending plane, illuminated with her brightness. While those on the left who came the nearest, were only in the shadow, and on a descending plane, and did not receive seals. I greatly desired to possess a seal.

I was a great way off, quite in the rear, and on the left side; but, as my spiritual eyes were open, I beheld the glory of God, and the brightness of eternal Love, upon that female. So bright was its illumination, that it put the sunshine of Nature in the shade; and those living in Nature had only the light of the moon.

There was a gulf between me and that holy band, into which I had got to enter; and, to do this, I had to cast off my filthy garments; I had also to read, before appointed witnesses of God, the record of my whole life—every deed, one by one, as they were engraven on the book of my memory; the good on the right-hand page, and the evil on the left, before I could ascend that plane, so beautiful, or receive the golden seal. I awoke from my vision, and was satisfied that I had seen the spirit visage of Mother Ann.

At my last closing breath, a lovely spirit from the higher Order, asked me what class of spirits I desired to be gathered to; and I said, "To the pure in heart;" and he bore me to that Order, with whom I am now united in faith, and am daily striving to be clothed with the brightness of their glory. And, through their agency, I have selected, from among the Shakers, a Medium.

I remain your friend and spirit brother,
Edwin M. Stanton.

EDITOR—My humble request is, that, if I may be accounted worthy, you would give the above communication a place in the "Shaker and Shakeress."

Given at Mt. Lebanon, Jan. —, 1874.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—ULYSSES S. GRANT—FROM THE SPIRIT OF EX-SECRETARY EDWIN M. STANTON.

My worthy friend and fellow-laborer:

Although you are yet on the earthly plane, and I in the spirit sphere, yet I am privileged to grasp the hand of one whom I esteem as a brother and true friend, with a new year's greeting.

It is the commencement of a new year, and I do not meet you, as formerly, to feast upon luxuries and be merry; but, instead thereof, to present to you my richest and best of all gifts—the greeting of the heavenly hosts. Peace and good will to the earthly man and woman!

The kingdom of heaven is established, and its righteousness must be fulfilled upon earth. For, on every plane, those only who fear God can be accepted of Him. And how can this be accomplished, while the earth is groaning under its heavy weight of sin and condemnation? Even the seat of Government is defiled; its doors are daily darkened by those who are guilty of the blackest of crimes, and think they are covered from the eyes of the people. But they are seen.

These are hard sayings, which all men cannot receive. But you, my brother, I believe, can and will treasure them up in an honest heart, and let them have their perfect work, to the purifying of your own temple, and the cleansing of the official departments in which you are called to toil and labor for the good of all who are subject to your Administration. You are chosen to be the Father of the Country, and that is why I thus address you upon these important subjects.

I take the liberty to converse with you freely, with all confidence, as one friend converseth with another; believing that your noble mind will be in unison with my sentiments, even as they were in days gone by, when these subjects were too delicate, and too near home, for us to talk about, or interfere with, while I was with you in the body. But be assured, my friend, that, when I came to enter the spirit world, and the record of my life was laid open before me, I found my private and official sins of omission and commission stood against me.

And, as there are three years more to come before the close of your Administration, I beseech you to "work while the day lasts," and put forth your best energies to search out the hidden abominations that are daily in operation at the seat of Government, by those who collect there for the purpose of enacting laws for the protection of the people. How can an evil tree produce good fruit? It does not, and cannot, nor can it prosper.

This evil tree, whose branches spread over the entire city of Washington, whose fruits are dens of debauchery and whoredom, together with murders, thefts, deceit, lies, forgery and hypocrisy, must be hewn down, and dug up by the roots.

That city ought to be consecrated to God, and occupied by pure-minded men and women, who will devote every faculty of soul and body to the honor and glory of God, and to the redemption of the human race in the earthly order, inspiring and raising the people up to a higher and holier life; instead of sinking themselves still lower in filthiness and condemnation, until the very atmosphere is dense with its stench and putrefaction. I warn you to be prepared; for the old heavens and the old earth must pass away; and there must be a new heaven and a new earth, wherein not any thing can dwell that defileth or maketh a lie. But the will of God shall be done in the earthly order, even as it is done in the heavenly.

The Lord is searching your camps "as with a lighted candle;" and He will yet expose to the light, and set before every soul his and her true state and standing; and "every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess their abominations; and every error of their life will have to be corrected, and washed away by humiliation and repentance."

Yea, even the mouths of infants will be opened, and they will rise up in judgment against the guilt and shame of their unnatural parents, and the judgment will be justly divided between the male and the female, according to their true merits; for their children will curse the day of their birth, because they were begotten in sin, and brought forth in iniquity and disease.

Thousands are made wretched and down-cast, and are trodden under foot of those "brutish" men, who have caused their ruin and distress, and whose victims rend the heavens with their cries and lamentation; and their visages are engraven upon ineffaceable records, there to remain, as a testimony against the transgressors, until removed by confession, with tears of godly sorrow and repentance from both parties.

These things troubled me some while I was on earth. Now they are a distress to my spirit. I cannot enjoy that true happiness for which my soul aspires, until I have fulfilled the duty in this respect, which is incumbent on me in consequence of my former neglect; that is, clear my soul from these causes of condemnation.

My dear friend, I want that your Administration should be crowned with success; and that the brightness of the glory of God may illuminate the Capital; so that "Peace and Goodwill to all nations" may be the motto engraven on its portals; and that wars and fightings may be known no more.

May it become "a house of prayer," where the laws of the nation shall be enacted by virtuous, pure-minded men and women, raised up to stand in their proper rectitude, who shall fear neither men nor devils; but, in the fear of God, and by the help of their holy Mother, Love (the female in Deity), be enabled, through your fatherly aid, to purge out these evils from the Rulers of the Nation, and liberate their captive sisters, and restore them to their proper order and calling in creation—help-mates together—striving for the honor and comfort of each other in the earthly order. For, I say unto you, that the least among these oppressed ones will be greater in the kingdom of heaven than the greatest among men who fear not God, nor keep his commandments.

The Ten Commandments, when kept, are all-sufficient to rule the whole world. Peace and goodwill "shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the seas."

Edwin M. Stanton.

GREAT INTELLECTS.

—O—

THE abrupt discrepancy existing between the exceedingly splendid hues and colors of the spread tail of a peacock, when it glistens in the morning sun, and his homely feet, has often been noticed. Is there not much the same discrepancy existing between the mental glories of the illustrious brain-workers of Babylon, and their immorality?

How very often it has happened that in the actual every-day lives of these immortals, there was no foundation of character—no pure morality—why go any further?

Is it meet for Shakers to come into magnetic rapport with the incestuous Byron, the rowdy S., the drunken M., the thievish Bacon, or the licentious "Bard of Avon?"

Nay! and yet we will, in due time, have all of their noble, but much abused gifts, without the ugly peacock feet, to mar the beautiful picture of our spiritually-intellectual lives.

RELIGION.

—o—

RELIGION is natural—innate; and its latent powers become developed by the light of intelligence, reason and revelation. Now that "light"—a higher development of religion—"is come into the world, and you have no cloak for your sins."

Religion is good armor but a bad cloak. Man may possess a hundred theological systems of ideas, and still be destitute of real religion—the right acts of life proper to each succeeding development of his religious nature.

Religion is obedience to God, improvement of selfhood, and love to man. It can never be ingrafted on any foreign stock, and retain its original purity. It is augmented and intensified in proportion to the enlightenment of the understanding. It has three phases of development: The physical, the moral, and the spiritual.

Obedience to the fundamental law of animal life—Physiology—and a sacred regard for the proper introduction of life into this world, and the needful training thereafter; instead of that weakness which forestalls defeat—being born vanquished.

The first step toward the attainment of "eternal life," is to keep the commandments and observe the requirements of natural religion—physical and physiological laws.

The second step is to keep the Moral Law—to "do justly, love mercy, and attend to the golden rule." "On earth peace, and unto men good will;" instead of the religion (?) of Christendom—ill-will and war.

"Sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor," or Church, which has all things in common; and not generously give of your abundance; but divide all with the less fortunate, as on the day of Pentecost; and thus be equal—be just—be religious.

Justice is the higher moral obligation. It makes all places a temple; all seasons a summer. It is the prime virtue of those in command, and leaves no cause of complaint for those who obey. It is the bread of the multitude, after which they all hunger. It gives to all their "daily bread," and secures to the meek their rightful inheritance—the earth; for the Church owns the land.

To go no further than bare justice, is to stop at the beginning of a higher virtue.

Love, the offspring of the third degree, or spiritual religion, is the divine sequence of the fulfillment of the law of physical rectitude and moral justice. Love sacrifices all things for its cherished object. Its roots, when in virtue's soil, grow to enduring friendship. But, when it acts independent of justice and virtue, it becomes capricious and volatile, and even malevolent. Love is active in pursuit of friendship, firm in possession.

Can the injustice of inherited imbecility, and legalized sensuality, beget love? Nay; there is no religion in the one, and it cannot be extracted from the other.

"The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment;" so is religion more than theology. "Pure and undefiled religion," is to provide a permanent home for all those wives who make themselves "widows indeed," and for all adult children who make themselves "fatherless" and motherless orphans, "for the kingdom of heaven's sake," as well as for those "men"—husbands—"who will make themselves eunuchs" for the same object; and thus to "keep one's self unspotted, from" a selfish, physically and morally prostituted "world," fortified behind the license of legalized but corrupt human enactments.

For the Second Pentecostal (or Gentile Christian, or Shaker) Church, in which "all things are common" to all, as in the First (or Jewish) Pentecostal Church, is where the "widow and the fatherless" (as above) can not only be "visited," but are amply and equally provided with all things necessary for life and godliness; and where all are required to "keep themselves unspotted from the world."

There is no error in religion: it is as true as truth. Error obtains in the systems of theology—false doctrines, the very reverse of "Do the works, then shall ye know of the doctrines." Religion—the acts (not the resolves), are Scripture; but Scripture record cannot make religion, although it may stimulate and aid in the development of the innate and latent powers to action. Never mistake the road for the city you expect to reach by it; nor a guide-board for a live man—the means for the end.

Water baptism was the symbol of repentance for physical and moral sins; fire, for spiritual sins. Water cleanses; fire refines. Hence the grosser nature perishes in the using, as the resurrection of the spirit obtains supremacy.

Should the classical scholar find his ubiquitous primer an impediment to indulging his matured thoughts; or the mechanic find his boyhood toys constantly thrown in his way to hinder his ambition to benefit the world, they would become hateful to them; not that they were hateful in themselves, but because of their impertinence. And the child—the immature man—would stand amazed to see the objects of absorbing interest to him thus cast aside.

So with the subjects of spiritual and heavenly religion. Their resurrection life causes them to hate natural relationship, and the generative life, when they obtrude out of their own order into the realm of the spiritual; and also to hate the perversion of the generative life everywhere. "If ye believe not his" (Moses') "writings"—physical and moral religion—"how shall ye believe my words?"

"Effectual, fervent prayer"—good deeds—will redeem the world, usher in the Millennium, and "the song of Moses and the Lamb" will be fraught with new harmony, which no irreligious man can ever learn.

ABOUT COAL.—Experiments have been made with a view to ascertain the amount of loss coal undergoes when exposed to the weather. It will, perhaps, surprise many readers to hear that the loss is considerable. Anthracite and cannel-coal, as might be anticipated from their compactness, suffer least; but ordinary bituminous coal loses nearly one-third its weight and nearly one-half its gas-making quality. From this it will be understood that coal should be kept dry and under cover, and that to expose it to rain or damp is to lessen its quantity and weaken its quality.

MORE than 328,000,000 persons, exclusive of season-ticket holders, traveled upon the railways of England and Wales, in 1871. Out of this immense number, only six people were killed by causes beyond their own control. The fatalities were in the proportion of one killed to 53,803,728 carried. Taking all the railways of the United Kingdom together, the deaths from accident were but twelve during the year, of which two occurred in Scotland and four in Ireland.

MODERATION.

—o—

"Let your moderation be known to all men."

WE live in a day of momentous events, and social reforms; and improvements move with lightning speed. Looking back, through a period of fifty years, we behold springing into existence, railroads, telegraphs, ocean telegraphs, ocean steamers (or floating cities), iron-clad vessels, heavy guns carrying balls of 600 lbs. weight several miles, tunnels piercing under and through mountains many miles, costing twenty millions of dollars; Science, in every direction, expediting the labor of man by machinery applied to agriculture, as well as mechanical arts and domestic pursuits, making the farm a great machine shop, and the woman's parlor or sitting room a sewing or knitting factory.

The effect, morally, of these things is to move human society along through time on the journey of human progress with lightning speed, without even a brake to steady the car of Progress around the curves of the track.

The mental powers, especially of juveniles, grasp faster and more than they can comprehend or digest, so as to be thereby benefited. And, while scientific and religious views move so rapidly, the minds of mankind are so completely swallowed up in the rainbow hues of progress, charmed with fine appearances of human gain, eagerly grasping at the variety of human benefits, huddled together, in some minds, in a confused mass, that their mental and physical systems are overwrought and paralyzed, rendering them measurably insane. But, while the mind is thus floating in airy castles of imaginary bliss, grasping greedily the newly-revealed wonders of science, art, and discovery in the universe of God, it is wise to consider that truth never dies, nor grows rusty with age; that those truths which were uttered thousands of years ago, are the same unalterable truths to-day; and that our knowledge of them is very limited, and our comprehension of the dignity and expanse of Truth's realm, yet hidden from our view, very small.

Man is but a mite, a worm,
Little heeded, little known;
A germ of something yet to learn:
Why placed here, to weep and mourn?
Eternity God's works declare,
He's set the bounds for mortals here;
Thus far, no farther, shalt thou share,
Than earn'd by diligence and prayer.
Whence art thou, Mortal? Going where?
Why boast of knowledge gained here?
Eternity!—bewildering thought—
Will teach thee knowledge dearly bought.

Keep steady, ponder well; for safety choose the middle pathway in the march of progress. Weigh well thy talents; be steadfast in the truth revealed to thee, and true to convictions of right, both to thy God and thy fellow-man, then happiness and peace will crown thy efforts.

While the wheels of progress are in motion, and their rapid movements stir the world from centre to the poles, keep the head and heart steady; thus, man will better comprehend and appreciate the purposes of the Divine Mind, relative to the final results of progress.

REFORMS INAUGURATED—CHURCH AND STATE TO BE SEPARATE—JESUITS BANISHED—MONASTIC ORDERS NOT RECOGNIZED—MATRIMONY A CIVIL CONTRACT.

CONGRESS has decreed the following: The Church and State are to be separate. Congress cannot make laws establishing or prohibiting any religion. Matrimony is to be a civil contract. Religious institutions cannot possess property. A simple promise to speak the truth, complying with obligations contracted, with penalties in case of violation, is substituted for the religious oath. Nobody is obliged to give his or her services without just compensation. No contract is to be permitted which aims at the sacrifice of the liberty of man in the matter of work, education, and religious vows. The laws consequently, do not recognize Monastic Orders, nor permit their establishment by any denomination, or under any pretense. And no contract will be allowed to be made among persons consenting to their own proscription or banishment.

EDUCATION.

WHAT is the line of demarcation between an educated and an uneducated person? If the amount of letter learning, the knowledge that is obtained through the study of books, be the criterion by which to determine, then it is an easy matter to define the status of individuals in regard to education. Where it is said of any one he has finished his education, it must be relatively, and not absolutely so considered. A child may be instructed in the elementary department of a common school, and receive all the knowledge that is to be gained therefrom; but it is only preliminary to something higher.

When we get even a faint glimpse of the construction of the human mind, so vast are its powers of receptivity and elimination, we might as well think of setting bounds to Omnipotence as to mark the boundaries of human progress in knowledge and understanding, through the ages of the great future.

In the earth-sphere of our existence, knowledge is bounded by time and circumstances. If children were begotten and born by law-guided and law-abiding parents, and there could be an equal distribution of the elements of subsistence among earth's inhabitants, based upon a just inheritance in the soil, then the distinctive marks of caste between rich and poor, educated and uneducated, would disappear to a great extent. Idiots and physical deformities would pass behind the curtains of the dim past; and a new earth with a new central light—civil polity and laws justly administered—would warm and vivify the earthly Order, while the Sun of Divine revelation would give life and light to the new heaven.

Now, a chance fortunate few, give their whole lives to book-learning, and pleasure-seeking. Such are chiefly theorists, who live by brain-work and speech-making; and they cast all the muscular toils and drudgery of life upon the less favored. But all knowledge relating to the external world in which we live, if justly acquired, and practically applied, to aid humanity in the highway of physical, social, moral, and spiritual progress, is good, and worthy of all commendation. Personal exertion, through honesty of purpose, enriches whole nations. True knowledge attained, descends to succeeding generations, and is a legacy of far greater worth than the miser's chest of gold, which is generally pocketed by a few; while useful knowledge is given to the many; whether it relates to the stellar regions—the Science of Astronomy—or to Geology, where, by the study of the different strata of rocks and soils, knowledge is obtained concerning the historic periods of time, and of the different races of men, and of the lower orders of animals; and also of the nature of the soils, that they may better understand how to apply fertilizers of different kinds to advantage, or whether it be the study of Arboriculture, each and all is profitable education.

But, when we see men (who ought to have been created in the image of the All-Father, through pride and ease-seeking, evade the heavy burdens of life, and willingly eat the bread of idleness at the expense of others, rather than engage in tilling the soil, and thus obtaining their bread by honest and honorable industry), dodge behind a counter in a close room, with effeminate hands, and pale faces, measuring prints, and silks, and ribbons, from early morn to dewy night, while scores of delicate females are out of employment, homeless, and perhaps friendless, left to beggary and want, and who are oftentimes forced to sell their virtue, or starve for the want of proper means by which to earn an honest living, we are led to the conclusion, that, if "God," in the beginning, "made man upright," "he has" since that time "sought out many" senseless "inventions."

And, when we see young women, who are endowed with intellectual and reasoning powers, and are capable of becoming bright-leading stars in the world of reform, and who should be counted with the true workers in helping to elevate the race from moral degradation, and in raising a standard of Freedom for Woman, giving all their time and energies to the study of the fine arts, to instrumental music, to speaking the French language, and to imitating French manners, and in patronizing the fashions in dress, gotten up by the courtesans of France, and call it "accomplished education," how can we help thinking of what the Lord said by one of the olden Prophets: "I plauted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed; how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?"

And is this happiness? Do all those attainments satisfy the real desires, or supply the needs of the human soul? While in this life, those who possess wealth may employ others to provide food and clothing for the mortal bodies; but they cannot feed and clothe the immortal part. They who neglect to do that work for themselves, will suffer hunger, spiritually; and, when they part from the tenement of clay, and become stripped of all their vain and worldly trappings, and shall appear in the real character which they have formed in their earth life, will not such feel shame and destitution?

While, on the other hand, those who consecrate all the powers of their being to useful ends and purposes, who seek to elevate and honor labor by taking part in it, and feel that duty requires them to serve as well as to be served, and to use the things of this world as God's blessings, and not abuse them; when the death angel comes, with his chariot to convey such spirits to their future home, will they not pass the shadowy confines of earth, to new life and joys in the heavenly spheres, there to continue the useful and the true in a world of realities; where they may learn to think, to speak, and to act, as do the angels, and like them be robed in garments of spotless purity, and listen to their sweet melodies?

All that is learned of the true and good while in the earth's sphere will be retained and be of use in the celestial spheres; and knowledge will be added to knowledge while the ages roll.

DR. LETHEBY, of London, the well-known sanitary statist, has just reported as to the adulteration of green tea in that city. He discovered, it appears, that some tea on sale in Mincing lane required looking after, and he succeeded in getting authentic samples from the bonded warehouses in which the article was stored. On examination it was found that this so-called tea contained from forty to forty-three per cent of iron filings and nineteen per cent of silica, in the form of fine sand, which had been cleverly mixed with and added to the leaves before curling, with a view to increase their weight and bulk. After the leaves were curled they had been thickly covered with green pigment. When it was infused in boiling water it produced a very turbid solution, offensive to the smell and nauseous to the taste.

"FREE INDEED."

—O—

"O, Freedom, lovely in mine eyes,
To thee I'm bound in duty!
In thee is an eternal prize,
Thy ways are ways of beauty.
As fawns upon the mountain's height,
Or as the eagles in their flight,
To be in perfect liberty,
My soul does long to be as free!"

EVERY thing in nature, from the bird on the wing to the pearl in the depth of the sea, lives a life of freedom, choosing from among the surrounding elements those it needs to add to its development as part of the perfect work of God; and we see little to mar that perfection, save in those whose simple habits of life have been modified by man, without attention to nature's laws of periods and rests, etc. etc.

And can we believe that humanity—God's highest work—should be less free?

In the words of another, we believe that "There is no greater crime than to stand between a man and his development; to take any law, or institution, and put it around him like a collar, and fasten it there, so that as he grows and enlarges he presses against it till he suffocates and dies."

But we also read, that "whom the truth maketh free is free indeed," and have believed that such freedom was attainable, and a duty. Consecrated to the service of the eternal Good, we have sought deliverance from "the bondage of Sin" (not from its condemnation, for that was mercy's work to lead us to repentance), and have felt called to attain that "glorious liberty of the sons and daughters of God;" liberty to become the Lord's free men and women, and arrive at the stature of manhood and womanhood, which no state of subjection, or slavery, could possibly afford the conditions of attaining.

For, not only was the soul to be cultured and disciplined, but the body, by living in obedience to God's laws was to become "every whit whole." And we see that the same work which the manifestation of the Christ Spirit revealed in the life of oneness and equality of Jesus, when he washed the disciples' feet, or stopped to speak comforting words to the suffering or needy, was emphatically the Spirit of our Mother in the second manifestation of the Christ Spirit. "Hands to work and hearts to God." No matter how high or exalted hitherto. "The common people heard him gladly." They were "the valleys to be elevated." Many had already formed habits of industry; and they had the common people's contempt of monopoly and caste. Then, with the steady habits which come of simple and unstimulated living, there was more hope of gathering a band of self-deniers who could endure "the hardness" which would follow those who could become Apostles of such disorganizing truths, as these were to be, in all the elements of worldliness.

That they fell peculiarly hard upon the rich and elevated, we see from the callings of the twelve, from the words of Paul: "Not many great, not many mighty are called;" and also from the account of "the young man whom Jesus loved," but who apparently had nothing dearer than his "great possessions" to stand between him and self-denial.

But even in this selected twelve, how soon the native lust for mastership commenced, and broke forth, to be met with those profound words of the teacher: "Ye know that the rulers among the Gentiles exercise dominion, or authority, over them. But it shall not be so among you; for whosoever would be great, or chief, or ruler, let him be your minister, or servant. For, which is greater, he that sitteth at (the table) meat, or he that prepareth it? but I am among you as he that serveth" (a servant). "The Son of man came not to be ministered to." Therefore, the sons and daughters who would follow him, are workers and toilers, ministering to their own necessities, and lightening the burden of life in every available way for others. He assured them, that, if they learned to rule and conquer their own lusts of dominion and possession, they would eventually become "kings and priests" (in the temples of their bodies), ministering to all sacred and consecrated uses, not the least of which would be the putting away of sins by confession, through some appointed individuals of their number, as see John 20: 23, and Mat. 16: 18, 19. But, in this stage of the world, growing so fast republican, theoretically, if not practically, "kings and priests" are not enviable characters.

And thus, while the illuminations from the celestial world have, ever since the opening of this Dispensation, been growing brighter and clearer, that equality and brotherhood are the radical truths which these messiahs came to consummate, and which can only be realized through a virgin life, still we see that the struggle will be great and mighty, and that none but those who love truth and justice better than their own carnal lives, can be prepared to endure the trial.

Power acquired and gradually increased, until it holds the mastership and control of other human beings, whether male or female, reacts most painfully upon the person using it; by hardening the heart, and deadening the sensibilities; so that the mind that could once see the beauties and rightfulness of freedom, and equality for all the sons and daughters of God, can grasp its hold even on the conscience, and say, in Spirit, Obey me, rather than thy own weak imaginings. The seeds of anguish which they thus sow in sensitive and afflicted souls, must be harvested in their own spirits, ere they feel the wrong they do.

When the Prophet declared that "all should be taught of God," and that his "law should be written on their hearts and inward parts," he saw, in vision, the day in which we live, when the heavens are opening, and natural, spiritual, and celestial truths are shining on the mind with a force and beauty hitherto unknown.

All new truths, however popular, ultimately have their periods of being heresy to those who so rigidly conserve the old, that they cannot, will not, or dare not, comprehend them. And all receivers and abettors of such ideas are, for the time, heretics and infidels, until the age to which such unprogressive minds belong comes slowly up the hill of time.

Had Jesus Christ never been accused of ambitious or mean and sordid motives; nor Ann Lee, our Mother, censured for disloyalty to her country, or pure womanly instincts, not ere their mortal days had reached their meridian, would they have been called to leave their sorrowing disciples. The support they needed in life came but with their death and ascension.

The truths which Mother saw (most radical in that day), are now acknowledged by the Spiritual intuition of not a few who cannot fully actualize them, as something higher and purer than earth has to offer. But what depths of anguish must they have cost the pure spirit which was called to eliminate them; and, if she had not had the fortitude to strike herself free from every man-made restraint, their birth-hour never would have come through her mediumship.

A late writer has said: "The world still awaits the great deliverance. And the needs press, always imperative, now importunate, and utterly restless. The old hastens to decay; the new is beating in throes. Never was there such a day as our eyes behold. Social reorganization is the question of the hour, but not superseding individual regeneration. The old order has well nigh come to the unbearable state. The competitive selfishness, the low aims, and the mean idolatries, that have long prevailed, have reduced us to the last stages of endurance. What throes in the civil world! and these but faintly typical of the revolutions and transformations that are soon to be; foreshadowings of which are now visiting saintly souls. Man shall know the joy of a full redemption, perfect enfranchisement, perfect doing, and perfect peace."

Those whom God calls, he cheers with the clarion notes of freedom, and they sing accordant strains. No bands can bind them; for compulsory service is of no available use. And, after the soul learns to obey the laws of God in its being, and obedience is its joy and delight, it comes into freedom as spontaneously as the eagle in its aerie, or "the fawn upon the mountain's top."

CORRESPONDENCE.

By the request of friends we give publicity to the following correspondence, which took place between two Shaker Sisters of the North Family, Mt. Lebanon, in the early part of October and November, 1873. They both left the shores of time, to seek a home in the elysian fields on the other side of the stream, on the 10th and 23d of December last.

October 5, 1873.

DEAR COMPANION, FRIEND AND SISTER:

WHAT have I to give thee from my storehouse, dear one, that would serve to cheer thee, or add to thy comfort? I have looked over my treasures, and have found sympathy, love, and a heart to pray for you, loved one. I often think of you in our seasons of solemn and sacred devotion; and I sing and march for you; and many times I visit you in spirit when you know it not. I think I hear you say: "This is all very well, but I want to join in worship and sing and march for myself." Well, be patient; the good time is coming.

Do you remember the time when I was so feeble that I had to stand or sit by, and could not sing, or march, or join "in the dances of them that make merry?" Now that time is past, but I have some fears that it will return to me before I am ready for it, for I often feel very sharp, darting pains between my shoulders, and I have an exceedingly weak stomach. But why do I trouble you with my ails? I will away with them, and take you by the hand, and we will sit down in the most comfortable seat that we can find, and call to mind the many, many soul communings we have had together! O Rhoda, dear Rhoda, how much good they have done me! I would that they might be repeated. The cares of this life ought not to engross the mind to that degree, that such communings should occur but seldom. O for more of God in the soul, and less of earth! My heartfelt prayer is "My Heavenly Father and Mother, give, Oh give me the true riches."

I do not presume to know my own heart as the good angels know it; but, so far as I understand my desires and motives, I am willing to pass through any amount of tribulation and suffering, to secure my hold upon eternal life; and yet, dear Sister, it is an every-day struggle; is it not? The food given yesterday, does not suffice for to-day. O what a wise petition is that contained in the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread."

As I travel in the Gospel, I plainly see that there is no stopping place with the least amount of safety for any individual (no matter what the age or privilege may be), until full redemption from the very nature of sin is obtained, and the divine life fills the soul. The following passages of Scripture often occur to my mind: "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" and "Ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light;" and "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." I resolve and re-resolve to live nearer to my faith; and yet how feeble are my efforts, unless assisted by divine power. I sometimes think the poor frail body has something to do with our spiritual progress. Do you think so? But I would not impute more to the body than belongs to it.

Dear Rhoda, I should have been pleased to have had you heard Brother Levi speak in meeting this morning; it was so good.

Now, Sister, I am going to make you a promise, and I want you to make me a promise; i. e. if I go to the summer-land first, I will intercede for you; and should you go with the white-robed angel before I do, you will intercede for me. Is that fair?

I commenced this letter this afternoon. I have written it for a little union, and I want you to have it this evening. So you will accept the first draft, and extend charity.

Farewell in sweetest love, my tried and faithful friend.

Yours affectionately,

Margaret Pattison.

To Rhoda Offord.

November 2, 1873.

AFFECTIONATE SISTER MARGARET:

IN response to your loving letter, I would say that the pure, gentle and sunny influence that surrounds you comes to me like balm, which soothes, cheers, and comforts my spirit, and brightens my pathway, even in the gloom which physical infirmity brings in these days.

Dear Margaret, I would that I had something to communicate to you, that would inspire and animate, and, in a measure, compensate you for the rich treasure that I received from your benevolent heart; but this is the best tribute that I am able to offer, under my present circumstances. Do accept my grateful thanks for your love and sympathy, and kindly remembrance of me in your prayers. I have unshaken confidence and trust that the petitions of the righteous will be heard by our guardian angels, and that they will be carried by them to the throne of our Heavenly Parents; and that they will be answered, in due time, in justice and wisdom.

I deeply appreciate your extra exertions, from time to time, in my behalf, to sing and march for me, while I realize that your feeble frame has no strength to spare for me; you need all that you can gain from any quarter, to strengthen and support that poor stomach, so weak and tremulous; yet, the interest, love, and affection which you manifest for me is worthy of my heart's best gift in return.

My dear Sister, if you can call to mind any thing that I have ever said that has comforted your spirit, I am glad. The subjects we have dilated and reflected upon, often come to my mind; also those earnest expressions and sentiments, concerning the future increase of the Gospel work, individually and collectively, and they are a portion of my happiest reflections.

I do indeed recollect the time when you did not feel able to engage in active service in our spiritual meetings; that is, as far as the physical powers are concerned; but your spirit was so wide awake that bodily exercises were not needed to show the activity of your mind, and the sincerity of your heart in the work and worship of God. Angel deeds stood as witnesses of your integrity to principle, your Christian life and character.

It is in the house of worship, when every heart is blended in devotion, and seeking for the operation of the quickening power of truth, that we gain our supplies of spiritual food to sustain our immortal souls; and, as you remarked, we need each day our daily bread; the food of yesterday will not suffice for to-day; nor will the gift of the last meeting answer for the next; each and every meeting needs new ministrations, adapted to the present conditions. Therefore, I feel that I am losing much good and strength in being absent from worship so long a time, as I always have felt a living inspiration from the testimonies borne by our beloved Elders and the Brethren and Sisters; but I hope that, through consecrated and quickened exertion, I may yet be able to redeem the time, and unite with you in devotional exercises to my soul's satisfaction. I believe that the power of God is able to resuscitate the mortal frame; and let us seek aid through spirit agency, that health may come to our frail bodies, and that we may live long on the earth, to do good in the household of faith.

Should we not be permitted thus to do, and either of us should pass over to our spirit home, would it not be the better way to gather up the vital forces, and come back as ministers of healing power to the feeble and infirm, instead of drawing from the ranks of our external home such as we feel an affinity for and attraction toward? According to my understanding, that would be practical love, corresponding with our faith and principles. It is thus, my dear sister, that I promise to intercede for you. I do most earnestly pray (if it is God's will), that a healing power may descend upon me, and resurrect me into physical life and health, that I may renew my early vows of consecration, to dedicate all the powers of my being—body, soul, and spirit—to the upbuilding of the cause of truth and righteousness on the earth.

One word more, and I close. I want to express my gratitude for the tenderness and kindly attention of our good Sisters, who watch over and provide for all my wants. You know their worth, their self-sacrificing spirits, and devotion to the sick; how they toil, to comfort and alleviate others. Their sympathy is real.

I would remain, in a spirit of reconciliation, your Gospel Sister, now and forever.

To Margaret Pattison. Rhoda Offord.

BELOVED ELDERESS A.:

I ACCEPT the invitation to the Sisterhood, given through the columns of the Shaker and Shakeress, and contribute my mite freely; and would thus give expression to the feelings of my heart, which often go out in profound love and respect, for the truths which the little sheet contains.

When I contrast my situation with that of thousands who have not been blest as I was, i. e. to be called in early life, by the Spirit of Truth, to leave the paths of sin and temptation to seek happiness through vanity and carnal pleasure, and to devote all their powers of mind, might, and strength, to the upbuilding of a New and Living Order, founded in Truth, by the revelation of God, I give thanks to Him, that I have been thus favored; and that I was not left to grope my way in darkness, without the light of life to guide me; but, through the ministry of Angels, have been spiritually fed, and, by consecration and honest labor, am blest with a beautiful temporal home for the physical part. By obeying the injunction, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," I find that all other needful things are added. The cross which Jesus taught his followers to bear is not heavy when cheerfully taken; and the Christian's yoke, to those who are reconciled to wear it, is far easier, and less grievous, than the yoke of sin. The reward of the Christian's cross is a "crown of life;" while the "wages of sin is death."

My spirit yearns for the many of earth's inhabitants, who are traveling in the broad road of sinful indulgences, that leads to trouble and vexation of spirit; and who find, by sad experience, that it is all vanity, and who would gladly turn their feet into the straight way "which leadeth unto life eternal," if they knew how, and where to find it; and my daily prayer to God is, that He would send ministers of light and truth to show them the path of purity which leads to peace and rest; and to teach them that God is Love; and that He is ever ready to lend a listening ear to those who call upon Him, and to extend a helping hand to those who seek His aid. All such will find that His arm is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither is His ear heavy, that it cannot hear the earnest cries of the humble and contrite in spirit; and, that God is Father, Mother, and Friend, unto all who will draw nigh to Him in spirit through self-denial and the cross; and that a goodly inheritance is offered in a kingdom of justice and righteousness, where there is neither high nor low; rich nor poor; but all are one in labor, one in sacrifice, and one in rewards. The law is, Give all, and receive all.

There is a feast of good things prepared, and all who are ready to don the garments of virgin purity, are invited to partake. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come!" and they who hear, say, "Come one, come all, who will lay down the worldly life, that they may attain unto life eternal in the heavens!"

C. Van Houtan, Mt. Lebanon.

FRAGMENTS.

—O—

PRUDENCE and economy are essential to the success of individuals, and are the main-springs of true and lasting prosperity in families and institutions. All are familiar with the teachings of Jesus, after he had fed the multitude that had followed him, either from motives of curiosity, or for the loaves and fishes, or to be instructed by him; he made no difference, but supplied them all. He then taught his disciples, through whose agency the bounteous meal had been served, an important lesson of prudence, which was, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."

That was a fundamental principle with him, to which he gave practical illustration at that time. He felt the responsibility of his mission, which was to put an end to the Levitical laws and customs pertaining to the flesh—the generative life—in himself, and his followers, and of setting up a new and spiritual kingdom that would be founded on Virgin Purity; the fruits of which would be "Peace on earth, and good will to man." He felt that the physical necessity of those who would gather to the New Order, which it was his work to begin, must needs be supplied, which could not be done, except by strict economy; and this idea he wished to impress upon the minds of his disciples, on whom the burden must rest when he should pass from their sight. The same principle, and the same language, may be applied with equal force to mental, moral, and spiritual, conditions. "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost."

Intuitive knowledge gained through mental perception should be carefully treasured, and not wasted; for through that medium we may gather an inspiration that will enable us to "give to those who ask a reason for the hope that is in us." Instructions and admonitions, and even suggestions, in a moral point of view, should claim our strict attention, and be stored in our minds as too precious to be wasted. Every fragment of truth, relative to the welfare of soul or body, should be gathered up. "Order is Heaven's first law." Then every gift and blessing should have its place in our hearts in order, according to its worth.

All the essential principles taught by Jesus and his Apostles, in the first appearing of Christ, have, after many centuries have passed, been revived by the second advent of the Christ Spirit through Ann Lee. She taught all her followers "to put their hands to work, and their hearts to God," and to be prudent and saving of every blessing, both spiritual and temporal; and that, as we cannot make one spear of grass, nor one kernel of grain grow, it would be sin to waste them, and that it is a Christian duty to gather up every fragment, that not any thing that is worth saving may be lost through carelessness or neglect.

T. P. Hale, Canterbury, N. H.

DEAR S. & S.—We tender our hearty thanks, that you have decided to make your monthly visits to our homes, through the coming year. You bring new hopes and aspirations to our spirits, and our hearts are warmed with the love that is brought to us, through your richly laden columns; and we pray that you may be a messenger of good tidings to humanity; and we also pray, that those who are chosen to bear the burden of conducting the little sheet, may be strengthened and blest.

While reading the January No. (more especially the editorial address to the Sisterhood), my soul bowed before God in humility and gratitude, that there had been so many noble, self-sacrificing workers raised up, who give unmistakable evidence of their love to truth and to human souls, by actual works, and thus show that they are willing to spend time and talent, to promote the righteous cause, and who ceased not to implore Divine assistance and inspirational power to aid them, while they seek to unfold the truths of the Gospel of Christ, and to point out the way which leads to life and peace.

Truly there are Saviors standing on Mount Zion to-day: and the wells of revelation and salvation are full and running over; and we join our voices in harmonious accord with those who stand on the heights of Zion, and who are extending a heavenly invitation to all souls who are thirsting for the living waters, to come and partake, freely; to sell all that is vain, selfish, and unclean, and wash in Jordan's flowing stream, by an honest confession of all sin; and seek that repentance which can be found only by forsaking all that is wrong.

Heaven's storehouse is full of mercy and blessing for the contrite in spirit, and earnest seekers after truth. The angels beckon such, and reach forth a helping hand to lift them up to a higher life, that they may find power to live free from sin, and be like unto them.

They who take Christ's life for their example and guide, will be pure in heart, innocent, and just before God and all men, and thus secure to themselves inestimable treasures in mansions "not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens."

Dear Eldress Antoinette, do receive our love and thanks for your kindly greetings for the New Year; and in response we say, May heaven's blessing—peace and prosperity—ever rest upon you and yours; and may the blessing of God rest upon the whole camp of Israel, and crown every effort with success, is the prayer of your humble sister, Nancy Riley, Hancock, Mass.

Encompass'd here we find we are,
With many who will witness bear,
That 'neath the cross is found a prize,
Concealed from the great and wise;
Then let us cast aside each weight,
And every sin which us beset;
And, with a courage firm and strong,
Toil on, till we the race have run.
Think not the future with success will shine,
Unless the present time you will improve;
Neglect the moments, and the years (you'll find)
Will soon elude your grasp, afar to rove.
Grant me, O Lord, a heart inclined to Thee;
A soul enrobed in truth and purity;
A mind in whose recesses Thou art found;
Yea lips which move, my Maker's praise to sound.
Give me a tongue which speaks what Thou canst own,
And hands which work for Thee, and Thee alone;
O give me feet which tread thy righteous way;
May my whole life be spent for Thee each day.

A. Calver, Mt. Lebanon.

WE hail the anniversary of our Redeemer's birth,
And we bless the God of missions who sent him to the earth;
We acknowledge him our Leader, the chosen "King of kings,"
And join in hallelujas for the peace his Gospel brings.
With angel choirs above us, we'll unite in songs of joy,
And, with spirits who surround us, our choicest notes employ,
For the light that Star has given, thus far, to lead us on;
May it still illumine our pathway, till we reach the shining throne.

THE WORK OF THE CENTURY.

No. 2.

O ye that prize the Nation's life,
 Her honor, and her noble call,
 Awake, arise, and join the strife,
 To gain equality for all.
 Financial systems, based on fraud,
 Like empires, cover all the earth,
 Distorting sacred laws of God,
 And giving countless horrors birth.

Look on the scene that but of late
 Was re-enacted far and near;
 'Tis but the index of the fate
 That swept through ev'ry lowly sphere.
 They stood around with faces pale,
 And eyes aglow with fires of dread;
 Their heavy hearts within them quail'd,
 As if all hope of life had fled.

'Twas not the battle's sanguine heat,
 Nor vessels lonely wreck at sea;
 'T was not the hour when tempests meet,
 And earth convulses mightily;
 But there was wildness in the air;
 Men struggled as with forms unseen,
 While some, close pinion'd with despair,
 Gazed motionless upon the scene.

The tumult of that human tide,
 The darkness of that mental sky,
 All earthly terrors far out-vied;
 For there was heartfelt agony!

The crush of hopes, the loss of place,
 The homes that in their grandeur fleet,
 The pain of ev'ry household face,
 The rugged paths for tender feet,
 The plans that were but idly wrought,
 The schemes for boundless wealth and pow'r,
 The long life efforts brought to nought,
 All crowded through that fearful hour;
 And ever and anon there came
 New messages that seemed like death;
 The failure of each trusted name
 Was listen'd to with bated breath.

Some felt their quivering reason fall,
 Some wept as if to break the spell,
 Some hazarded their little all,
 In hope that it might yet be well;
 But there were some, O hearts of steel!
 Where were your human pulses (warm),
 That, like the wreckers, could but feel
 Exultant through that rending storm;
 That, like the wreckers, fiercely grasp
 The treasures of that sinking crew;
 That callously the hand unclasp'd,
 That nerved itself for life anew?

Yet you and they were of one kin;
 Had fortune but reversed her wheel,
 Like yours, their hands would joyful win;
 Their hearts be dead to all appeal.

Now from your splendid ruins turn,
 To watch the waves that carry woe,
 To where the flickering tapers burn
 In garrets high, and cellars low.

Think of the children starved for food,
 The strong men humbled in their pride,
 The women robb'd of womanhood,
 The crimes to wretchedness allied;
 And pledge, against this weight of sin,
 The time that to you yet remains;
 You have ability to win
 The country from commercial chains.

Change, from the word to very deed,
 "The Declaration" that was given;
 Let Christ-like action meet the need;
 There is no poverty in heaven.
 And when her crown the Century lays
 Upon the young Republic's brow,
 The jewel that will brightest blaze
 Shall be the star* she strives for now.

*Abolition of monopoly.

Cecelia Dwyer, Mt. Lebanon.

VOICE OF THE AGES.

Prophetic eyes see by a lens,
 Which give a double view;
 And oft their vision so extends,
 Beyond what men deem true,
 That they will turn in deep disgust,
 And call him "mad" or fool;
 Or (if a woman) think it just
 To say, "She ne'er shall rule."

Has history no lessons taught
 To those who scoff and jeer?
 Have truths divine, so dearly bought,
 (Which we to-day revere,
 For which the martyrs bore the rack,
 The dungeon, and the flame),
 No pleading voice to turn men back
 From future deeds of shame?

Must those who 're called to lead the van
 On battle fields of right,
 Be ever, by their fellow man,
 Doom'd to destruction's night?
 Will those who pray "Thy kingdom come,"
 Fight all their answer'd prayer,
 When it (although foreseen by some),
 Steals on them unaware?

The ages past, in confluence met,
 Give answer with one voice;
 In darkness all our suns have set;
 The light was not our choice.
 Our histories are quite replete
 With crimes of deepest hue;
 When truth would not from earth retreat,
 (Men did as you now do):

Seized on the reins to guide the steed,
 And hend it to their will,
 They hoped thereby to slacken speed,
 For truth they could not kill.

But we would say, roll up that page,
 All stained with sin and blight,
 And claim, for each succeeding age,
 A love of truth and right.
 For setting suns, with light aglow,
 Oft paint the heaven aflame;

Or span it with a brilliant bow,
 Whose language is the same;
 Foretelling that the morrow's dawn
 Will bring a cloudless day;
 The "golden age," of error shorn,
 Will come with men to stay.

But blindly yet we read the signs,
 Bid progress' car stand still,
 And trace in shining letter'd lines,
 "God has revealed his will."
 We hew with reverence to the past,
 Do homage to the old,
 While on the new, contempt we cast,
 As though all truth were told.

The present age, though devotee
 To forms by Truth once worn,
 Will crucify the truths to be;
 Their votaries treat with scorn;
 Unheeded, still the warning note,
 From age to age is heard—
 The truth still lives, though death hath smote
 The form it once prefer'd.

But suns will rise to set no more,
 Their days will know no night;
 While creeds and dogmas melt before
 The glory of their light;
 Till abject slaves no longer cower,
 But stand erect like men;
 No kingly rule, or priestly power,
 Shall hold dominion then.

But love, within all hearts enshrined,
 Will for the past atone;
 And to oblivion consign'd
 Be names who prophets stone.
 And earth's fair self shall not be wet
 With martyrs' precious blood;
 Nor woman strive in vain to get
 Her rightful womanhood.

But she with man, co-worker true,
 In government of state,
 Shall harmonize their life anew,
 The race to elevate.
 Then earth her harvests will increase,
 God's blessings all will share,
 All hail the perfect reign of Peace!
 And for its life prepare.

O, would that all, before the dawn,
 Might look beyond the screen
 That veils the gleamings of that morn
 Prophetic eyes have seen!
 And heavenly brilliancy behold,
 As each triumphal car
 In splendor rose, 'mid light of gold,
 And shed bright beams afar.

A. E. Persons, Harvard, Mass.

BISHOP SIMPSON said: "I want the day to come when women will vote. Without their vote I fear we will never be able to put down the houses of infamy and liquor saloons of our country. Nothing is so ruinous to the country, it is true, and it is my opinion that we can't get along without women voting."

FIFTY CENTS PER ANNUM

ANN AND EMANUEL,

—o—

WERE both transcendently important persons, as individuals. Far more so as representatives. In Algebra, a, as unit, may represent the whole genus of sheep. Thus it is in the Revelations. Its Angels, Trumpets, Seals, Books — written within and without — Vials, Plagues, Horses and other Beasts. And the symbols, whether of things animate, or inanimate, do invariably stand for quantities, Powers, Ages, Empires, Orders, Nations, Systems, as they operate, succeeding each other and dance in the great kaleidoscope of civil and religious history of the human race, from the beginning, to the end of time.

This algebraic idea is the key to unlock the Revelations. But the lock itself, that has fastened them up and hidden them from human ken, is the actual number, measure, weight and value — the meaning of each character, type or figure, in this great sum on the chessboard of civil and ecclesiastical mundane human history.

As the learned, skillful anatomist, like Agassiz, who, finding one perfect bone of an extinct, or unknown quadruped, constructs therefrom, the whole system, or framework of the hitherto unknown animal —

So it is with the chief of all mysteries — the Revelations.

Having found, with certainty — admitting not a doubt — one great central event, therein described, all else falls naturally into line — “Bone cometh to bone,” and each socket is filled. We have one grand whole. Ann Lee, and Emanuel Swedenborg inaugurated Eras too marked and prominent to be missed, or mistaken for any thing else than what they are.

Swedenborg personified the Angel of Spiritualism. Ann personified the reaping, or Harvesting Angel. The Angel, that should harvest the whole earth. The Female Messiah, with her John the Baptist forerunner, to ripen and prepare the harvest for the Reaper.

Rev. 14; 14. “I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the Son of man, having, on her head, a golden crown, and in her hand a sharp sickle.

And then came an Angel out of the Temple, which is in Heaven — Church in the Spirit world — He, also, having a sharp sickle. And another Angel came out from the altar that is in the Temple, who had power over fire, saying, to that Angel, Thrust in thy sharp sickle and gather the cluster, the ripe fruit of the vine of the earth-Church.”

Thus the earthly order is reaped. And the Heavenly order will be reaped also; being saved so as by fire.

If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?

SWEEDENBORG ANGEL — SPIRITUALISM.

“I SAW an Angel come down from Heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory.” Rev. 18; 1.

The preceding Angel to this was Babylon — Christendom in its dotage — “Mystery, Babylon the great — the mother of Harlots, and abominations of the earth.”

“Horns” — Rational powers, grow out of her, that hate her absurd mysteries — “make her desolate and naked — eat her flesh and burn her with fire.” Thus they cook and live upon her. They solve her mysteries, and resolve them into no sense. They expose the abominations of holy and unholy wars. Holy Inquisitions, and Holy Alliances, with their consecrated wafers and candles — their dipping and their sprinkling, as a sign of a sign — a shadow of a shadow — with their sips of wine and bits of bread, to be eaten with the flesh of the man Jesus, and washed down with his blood. Holy christian cannibalism — Doctrine of Devils. Theoretically and practically, a horrible and bloody theology. Under its blighting influence, the few monopolize the life elements, while the many are forced into the bowels of the earth, to delve in mines, or into hurtful factories, or noxious manufacturing, on the earth’s bosom. The creators and their creations, being alike the subject of ungodly speculation.

Spiritualism is destroying those who destroy the earth. Co-operation and communism wait upon her footsteps. Hear the New York Tribune:

“SPIRITUAL” PHENOMENA.

We present this morning an abstract of a remarkable article in the London Quarterly Journal of Science. The writer of the article is Mr. William Crookes, editor of the periodical in which it appears, and a chemist and physicist of high reputation. He has devoted several years to a careful scientific investigation of the so-called phenomena of Spiritualism, as presented especially by Mr. D. D. Home and Miss Kate Fox, and he writes of them in the calm critical manner that we should naturally look for in a man of his character and calling. That the result of his inquiries will create a lively discussion we can hardly doubt. For Mr. Crookes, though he shows none of the symptoms of religious enthusiasm, feels bound to admit the reality of the mysterious phenomena which took place scores and hundreds of times in his own rooms, in broad daylight, under conditions of his own choosing, and under the careful scrutiny of scientific unbelievers. When a man of his stamp tells us that he has seen Mr. Home floating in the air, and goblets, card-plates, dinner tables, and other solid objects dancing through space, as if the laws of gravity had been repealed; when he describes a “self-luminous cloud” that plucked a hellotrope blossom and carried it to a lady; when he tells us of nebulous and ghostly hands that shaped themselves out of nothing before his very eyes, and rested unresisting in his grasp till they gradually dissolved into impalpable vapor, — we cannot help listening to him with a certain sort of amazed respect. For we must acknowledge that he firmly believes his own statements, and that he is not a person to be deceived by any common trickery.

He emphatically rejects two explanations which are often advanced: one, that the mediums are jugglers; the other, that the observers are insane people or fools. Whether there is some unknown physical or intellectual force which can do all these wonders in ways not yet understood, whether the dead return to visit us, or devils come to deceive, Mr. Crookes promises to debate hereafter.

Going back a few short years, when Prof. Faraday, who preceded Crookes, was the Angel of Science in the Isle of the Ocean, the Mistress of the seas. What a change, a most marvellous change! Faraday, clothing himself with contempt, as with a garment, denied all the facts upon which Spiritualism, as a science, sought to procure a page in the British Encyclopædia, a niche in the temple of English fame. Faraday, to his never-ending shame, refused, in the name of Science, to investigate the claims of Spiritualism.

But its facts — the basis of all science — have prevailed; Prof. Crookes has investigated, and glory will rest upon his name, while Wisdom is justified of her children — the Shakers — who, following their intuition, led by their prevision, and inspired by a Divine Revelation, worshipped the new-born babe, while yet in the manger of public doubt, as to whether it was a quadruped or a human, and helped to nurse it into a vigorous manhood.

THEOLOGICAL TREASURY.

DEATH — LIFE.

—o—

THAT there is a necessity for sacrifice, that atonement with God may be vouchsafed to souls, is a principle underlying the true Church of God. The spirit of the atonement is a right one. The popular rendering is assuredly false. The important features of nearly every denomination, from the Roman Catholic to the Second Advent, may claim the right to be adjudged correct, as pointing, at least, to the spirit of truth. But nearly all of these varied prominent doctrines among sects, are so encumbered by Babylonian rubbish, that long years have, and may elapse, ere the full light of truth will dispel the clouds that obscure the perfect day.

Under the guidance of the Christ, Jesus died for sinners — that Jesus might more perfectly live — and that sinners might live like unto Jesus. The central idea of this truth teaches all, that Jesus more really lived for sinner, than that he died for them; though he did both—died first, then lived. His body was hung to the triangular erection, which, while it teaches us that Jesus was "true to the last," has no reference to his real death for sinners. The same death remains on earth in sinners' behalf; and the same life of saving power is as extant to-day as ever was incarnated in Jesus, and illustrated by him for suffering humanity's sake.

Wherein was the sacrifice? Wherein the atonement? "He that seeks to save his life shall lose life."

Jesus died for sinners—true; and thus he illustrated, how each must die; he not, by any means, relieving us from the necessity of the same death—death unto every unchristian word and work. "He died, that others might live;" most assuredly—thus teaching in his own person, that by their dying as he died, unto the world, the flesh and devil, they might live and reign with him as Christians! "The blood of the Lamb," being interpreted, means "the life of Jesus Christ;" and whichever term we use, we will conclude that our sins are atoned for, when we shall have confessed them, and repented of the same by their entire renunciation—"ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well!" If we will live the life of Jesus, his blood will be efficacious for our cleansing. How truly we can sing with our Wesleyan friends, the sentiments of their little song:

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
Nay, there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me!"

But when we hear the honeyed tongue of the serpent, interspersing among sacred song:

"Jesus paid it all,
All the debt I owe,
Nothing, neither great nor small,
Remains for me to do."

We pronounce these and similar sentiments, the second greatest lie of the devil, the first being, "Thou shalt not surely die!"

Amid the early Christians, one general feature became beautifully prominent—all conformed their lives to the life of Jesus. And this practice led to the organization of the Pentecostal Church.

Had the followers of Jesus left him to bear their cross, and be disciplined in their stead, while they followed their unbridled lusts and selfish inclinations, then would the records fail of being the hallowed pages which many of them now are.

Jesus called men from their nets—some were married, some not; he dissolved the marital relations of the disciples, and united them in the superior relations of unlusting spiritual brethren and sisters. (Why have the Churches, professedly Christian, reversed this rule?) "Follow me," said Jesus; "die unto the world, live the Christ-life—die as I die, live as I live, and even as I am resurrected, so ye shall become the children of the same resurrection. Are ye rich in purse? Ye shall be privileged to bless others equally with yourself. Are you poor? the Gospel will be equally magnified, inasmuch as it elevates your condition to an equality with the formerly wealthy. Were you warlike? You need be so no longer; for the Gospel will show you the folly of such perversion, and give you power to live above resentment. I am the way, the truth and the life. Seek this way, learn this truth, and live this life, and ye shall have treasure in heaven." Such we believe to be the living testimony preached and practiced by his self-denying followers. And no precious blood will produce these results. The sin-forsaking "life" of Jesus alone will do it.

The "blood" that made Jesus what he was is equally operative and powerful to-day. But, whoever waits for Jesus to take the medicine by which they will find redemption, waits in vain, and saves a life that would, by its loss, secure to them the virgin life that peoples the heavens!

Elder G. A. Lomas, Watervliet, N. Y.

REDEEMING WORK.

"LET this mind or disposition be in you, which was in Jesus." Make yourself of no reputation. Take the form of a servant. Subdue pride, ambition, carnal desires, and the love of pleasure. Perform plain duties as they lie before you. To know the Truth, as it concerns ourselves, each one of us, and to practice it; in this consists salvation. Not waiting to do some great deed to manifest our devotion to God; but performing little duties, daily acts of kindness, marking our steps every hour with wisdom. Having found the pearl of great price, go and sell all and buy it.

That which affects my peace of mind, my temper, my health, my present and future happiness, most vitally concerns me. To regulate my life according to the demands of the Gospel, this is my life-work. And to this end we must possess the Christ-like disposition, conquer opposing obstacles that would impede or hinder; crucify the flesh, overcome the world; subordinating every purpose, every wish, every thought and desire, to the chief object of personal redemption from a depraved nature, and a wicked world. What a noble undertaking! What a work lies before us! A labor sufficient to fill the vast capacities of the soul, sufficient to employ every moment, to fill every hope for the future, to engross the mind, and abstract it from sordid objects; a salvation to be worked out with fear and trembling.

Who would desire to prolong mere life, in order to live and die as the animal? Who would desire to live, rendering our whole being subservient to slavish, sensual and selfish wants; and neglecting the concerns of the spiritual and immortal nature? What aids we have by the way, as we journey on in the redeeming march! We have both while we wake and when we sleep, the ministrations of good angels, of redeemed spirits, to assist us. We have the blessed example of saintly characters, here upon earth, to encourage, and the consciousness of duty performed, to cheer us. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly."

We must habitually cultivate the graces of meekness and humility, for an important element in redemption is true humility. In our experience come many chastisements, to lower our pride and implant within us the seeds of humbleness of heart. To succeed, this work must be continued and carried out according to principles of truth, with fixed views, and a resolute purpose and will. The heart is the citadel which must be rendered impregnable against assault.

Though trials often reach us,
Though troubles be our lot,
Yet every thing should teach us,
Our hearts should falter not.

Thomas MacRae, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

APPROXIMATE NEW EARTH.

EXTRACT from report of Overseer of the Poor in Vineland, N. J., 1869:

"With a population of ten thousand, no citizen of Vineland, has, for the period of six months, required relief at the hands of the Overseer of the Poor, and our poor expenses are a mere trifle."

"During the entire year there has been but one indictment, and that a trifling one."

"We have no need of a fire department. We have no debt. Our taxes are only one per cent on valuation."

"The police expenses are seventy-five dollars a year."

Well done for Vineland. Let other Towns emulate Vineland in this respect. We may then hopefully look for the time when there will be no poor, no police, no indictments—except by conscience—no doctors, no lawyers, no sickness, death, nor pain. In place thereof, industry, co-operation, and one perpetual inheritance in the new earth of the meek.

PROBATION.

THAT the eternal destiny of all souls is decided at death is a doctrine of Christendom. Whoever advances the idea of probation, beyond the grave, is supposed to be on the verge of scepticism or spiritualism.

We have no controversy with other people's religion, even if we disagree in theology. Our God is rational, possessing all the attributes of tender parents—father and mother.

All intelligent beings were designed for a purpose, best known to them who, for aught we know, have sufficient power and skill to humble the mightiest man, and bring the most stubborn woman to simple obedience.

The Eternal Parents' mercy is not limited to a few, nor to time allotted here.

All souls must and will have opportunity to hear and obey the truth.

There is manifest incongruity in the idea that persons of equal goodness, virtue and sincerity, who, for want of faith, or because of what others please to term heresy, are devoted to eternal misery, while their believing companions, although polluted with crime, may, through the merits of Jesus, enter the mansions of eternal brightness and ecstatic bliss.

Millions never hear the sound of the Gospel in this life. Other millions are so constituted that obedience to gospel principles is, under earthly conditions, impossible.

Judged by their fruits, not all who profess faith in the atonement are qualified for that heaven where no unclean thing can enter.

In every intelligent being there is a germ of divinity, whose aspiration for angel food will, in some of the worlds, become too strong for resistance.

Entering the spirit world, men and women are still in possession of their former faculties and affections, with all the depravity incurred by indulgence. They have left only the bodily organs behind. All grades and conditions exist in the next world. Naught but indomitable compliance with our holiest aspirations can change the moral status of the soul in this, nor in any world. They, who neglect self-discipline, must inevitably realize the degradation of such neglect. Those who are obedient to their holiest aspirations are drawing nearer to the fountain of good.

Many, who in this world, fared sumptuously every day, pampering every desire, will, on entering the next world, meet with bitter disappointment. No miraculous salvation through the merits of another will transport them to heaven, a place where what each one loves is good for all, and all possess it. Their appetites and passions, intensified by gratification, are upon them—minus the means of gratification.

On the other hand, many, who like the publican, or poor Lazarus, feel unworthy of the crumbs of God's mercy, will stand high in the scale of virtue, prepared for the work of gaining power and victory over every evil propensity by a daily cross.

This work must be performed by every soul before complete happiness is attained.

FRIENDS EDITORS HERALD:—Agreeably to your request, we write to give you and your readers a brief statement of facts, which we have been an eye and ear witness to, of those "spirit manifestations" which took place in our midst some years prior to their going to the world. And this we do the more readily, knowing that the Cleveland Herald is the oldest paper published in Cleveland, and if we mistake not, has the largest circulation of any in Northern Ohio.

It was in the year 1838, in the latter part of summer, some young sisters were walking together on the bank of the creek, not far from the hemlock grove, west of what is called the Mill Family, where they heard some beautiful singing, which seemed to be in the air just above their heads.

They were taken by surprise, listened with admiration, and then hastened home to report the phenomena. Some of them afterwards were chosen mediums for the "spirits." We had been informed, by letter, that there was a marvelous work going on in some of the eastern societies, particularly at Mt. Lebanon, New York, and Water-villet, near Albany. And when it reached us in the West we should all know it, and we did know it; in the progress of the work, every individual, from the least to the greatest, did know that there was a heart-searching God in Israel, who ruled in the armies of Heaven, and will yet rule among the inhabitants of earth.

It commenced among the little girls in the children's order, who were assembled in an upper room, the doors being shut, holding a meeting by themselves, when the invisibles began to make themselves known. It was on the Sabbath Day, while engaged in our usual exercises, that a messenger came in and informed the Elders, in great haste, that there was something uncommon going on in the girls' department. The Elders brought our meeting to a close as soon as circumstances would admit, and went over to witness the singular and strange phenomena.

When we entered the apartment we saw that the girls were under the influence of a power not their own—they were hurried round the room, back and forth as swiftly as if driven by the wind—and no one could stop them. If any attempts were made in that direction, it was found impossible, showing conclusively that they were under a controlling influence that was irresistible. Suddenly they were prostrated upon the floor, apparently unconscious of what was going on around them. With their eyes closed, muscles strained, joints stiff, they were taken up and laid upon beds, mattresses, etc.

They then began holding converse with their guardian spirits, and others, some of whom they once knew in the form, making graceful motions with their hands—talking audibly, so all in the room could hear and understand, and form some idea of their whereabouts in the spiritual realms they were exploring in the land of souls. This was only the beginning of a series of "spirit manifestations," the most remarkable we ever expected to witness on the earth. One prominent feature of these manifestations was the gift of songs, hymns and anthems, new, heavenly and melodious. The first inspired song we ever heard from the "spirit world," with words attached, was the following, sung by one of the young sisters, while in vision, with great power and demonstration of the spirit, called by the invisible

"THE SONG OF A HERALD."

"Prepare, O ye faithful
To fight the good fight,
Sing, O ye redeemed,
Who walk in the light.
Come low, O ye haughty,
Come down, and repent.
Disperse, O ye naughty,
Who will not relent.

For Mother is coming,
Oh hear the glad sound,
To comfort her children
Wherever they're found,
With jewels and robes of fine linen
To clothe the afflicted withal."

Given by inspiration, at North Union, August, 1838, ten years prior to the "Rochester Rappings."

EXPLANATION.

We wish it distinctly and explicitly understood that when the term Mother is used in any of our sacred writings, the highest sense in which we use that term carries us to the Deity, of which Mother Ann Lee was a representative of the eternal Mother principle in the Godhead, as the first born daughter of God, as Jesus Christ was a representative of the eternal Father principle in the Godhead, as the first born son of God, both of whom were divinely inspired. Are we not too prone to make gods of subordinates, and finalities of finites? Ann Lee taught her followers to worship God, manifested in man, woman, or child. Not the creature.

Not persons, but principles; persons must pass away, but principles, never! This may conflict with our education and the doctrine of the Trinity, but it does not conflict with Moses, nor Joshua, nor Genesis, nor Geology—science—nor with good common sense. St. Paul declared, (if he did not understand it,) when he said, "for the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse." Romans 1: 20.

According to Moses, among the first things which God made was man: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion," etc. Them in the plural, including the woman—the mother principle—not him—man alone—nor father alone. "Let us," i. e., Father and Mother principle in the Godhead. "So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them," etc. (Genesis 1: 26, 27.) Is it not singularly strange that commentators of the last two thousand years, or nearly, have failed to recognize this great principle of Mother in the Godhead, as well as Father, when it was impossible for one to exist without the other? The other, is always implied.

On what principle, then, have we, in the past, excluded the Mother from the Godhead and substituted something else, that has no analogy in the universe? when there is nothing more clearly taught in holy writ, and is now being revealed through babes and sucklings. But to our subject—no more digression.

Next followed the little boys in the line of visions and revelations. But, before we take our leave of the girls, we will relate one incident which we saw exhibited, which may have a good effect on those in earth life. The gifts continued increasing among the children. Among these were the gift of tongues, visiting the different cities in the "spirit world," holding converse with the indwellers thereof, some of whom they once knew in the body. And in going to these cities they were accompanied by their guardian angels, and appeared to be flying, using their hands and arms for wings, moving with as much velocity as the wings of a bird.

All of a sudden they stopped, and the following questions and answers were uttered through their vocal organism: Question—What city is this? Answer—"The City of Delight." Question—Who live here? Answer—The colored population. Question—Can we go in and see them? Answer—Certainly. For this purpose you were conducted here. They were admitted, their countenances changed. Question—Who are all these? Answer—They are those who were once slaves in the United States. Question—Who are those behind them? Answer—They are those who were once slaveholders. Question—What are they doing here? Answer—Serving the slaves as the slaves served them while in the earth life. God is just; all wrongs have to be righted. Question—Who are those in the corner? Answer—They are those slaveholders who were unmerciful, and abused their slaves in the world, and are too proud to comply with the conditions? Question—What were the conditions? Answer—To make confession and ask forgiveness of the slaves, and right their wrongs, and this they are too proud to do. Question—What will be done with them? Answer—When their time expires they will be taken away and cast out, and will have to suffer until they repent, for all wrongs must be righted, either in the form or among the disembodied spirits, before souls can be happy. And when the girls came out of vision, they would relate the same things, which corresponded with what they had previously talked out.

Now, we will leave the girls for the present and go into the boys' department. Here we find them holding meetings by themselves, under the safe guidance of their care-takers, going in vision, some boys and some girls, for the work had progressed so as to reach adults, and all were called immediately into the work, whose physical organizations would possibly admit of mediumship. The peculiar gift at this time, was in visiting the different cities in the "spirit world," and in renewing acquaintances with many of their departed friends and relatives, who were the blissful and happy residents therein.

But before we go any further, we will let our mediums describe the first city they came to after crossing the river. Question—What city is this? Answer—The Blue city. Question—Who lives here? Answer—The Indians. Question—What Indians? Answer—The American Indians. Question—Why are they the first city we come to in the spirit land, on the plane, and most accessible? Answer—Because the Indians lived more in accordance with the law of nature, in their earth life, according to their knowledge, and were the most abused class by the whites, except the slaves, and many of them now are in advance of the whites in "spirituality," and are the most powerful ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation.

At another time these same mediums, fifteen in number, of both sexes, were sitting on benches in the meeting-house, saw a band of Indian spirits coming from the "Blue City" in the spirit world, to unite with them in their worship, said, "They are coming, and as soon as the spirits entered the door they entered the mediums, which moved them from their seats as quick as lightning. Then followed the Indian songs and dances, and speaking in the Indian tongue, which was wholly unintelligible to us except by spiritual interpreters.

It is said the white man first gave the Indian rum; in exchange the Indian gave the white man tobacco. Both of which are a curse to civilization. Which was the aggressor? If the Indians are allowed to smoke tobacco in the "spirit land," (which is doubted) is it any wonder that their city is called the "Blue City?"

Now, Editors of the HERALD, if your readers would like to know any thing more about these things, of which we have only begun to give a brief sketch, we would recommend them to take the Shaker and Shakeress, a neat little Monthly, published at Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., edited by Elder F. W. Evans, and Elderess A. Doolittle. It teaches the equality of the sexes, etc., only 50 cents per annum. We like it for the following reasons:

1. We like it because it is the Shakers' missionary to the world.
2. We like it because it teaches the science of a higher life.
3. We like it because its columns are enriched by original articles from some of their ablest writers of both sex, drawn from experience, and a "community of ideas."

4. We like it because of the music on the last page of each number, which is worth more than the subscription price of the paper.

As the sound of sweet music dies away in the distance, so is the passing away of friends we love.

FOR BOOK-WORMS TO THINK OF.

To form a correct estimate of books and of what should be our relations to them, we must recognize the fact that a book, no matter what its outward form or subject, represents, in its spiritual character and magnetism, the life of the person who wrote it. In reading it we are dealing with the same personal force and character as we should be if we were in actual contact and conversation with the living author. The conditions and perils of fellowship are substantially the same. Reading a book is like forming a personal acquaintance. Wise men are careful about giving themselves up to fellowship with a stranger. Ought they to be less careful in coming into fellowship with a book? If salvation and damnation are the results of fellowship, and if books are mediums of fellowship, it would be well to inquire whether in this age of universal book-making and reading, men and women are not in greater danger of losing their souls by this kind of fellowship, than by all others together?

A PRUSSIAN LETTER.

MY DEAR SISTER: Your letter of the 9th of December, came into my hands on the last day of the old year. I felt glad and thankful to hear once more from you, and I readily comply with your desire to learn how I am getting on, in body and soul, in my new Shaker home.

Nearly all the remedies employed here for bodily ailments are, outdoor work, plain vegetable food, unbolted wheat-meal bread, and fruit.

I am glad to be out of the reach of allopathic treatment, which, nine times out of ten, brings ordinary diseases to a fatal end.

Only by giving nature a full chance to work out her own salvation, without counteracting, impeding, poisonous drugs and unnatural obstructions, is she enabled to bring things to a good end.

A full water and hygienic treatment is certainly superior to all other remedial processes.

In this respect there is yet room for improvement amongst us. I should wish to see, in every family, a brother and sister, who were well instructed in hygienic and hydropathic principles.

The "Laws of Life" I want to see read in every Shaker family. By these means, much weakness and disease might be cured in a short time.

I learn more and more to understand, that a faithful fulfilling of the regularly repeating duties and labors of daily life, is one of the surest conditions of contentment and inner peace.

Your report of the members of our family, I have read with sympathy. But I see there so many unfortunate, stunted, crippled, and abnormal states and conditions of life, as well in a physical as in a moral point of view, that the Shakers condemning and rejecting, from religious principles, all natural generative family life, as well as the sexual relations that create it, appears to me less hard and extreme.

I place the Shaker's life higher, by two-thirds, than the average family and social relations in the outside world.

Their constant striving after moral and spiritual culture and developments; their holding on to purity and chastity; by laboring in self-denial, for spiritual life, for unselfish, disinterested, activity and industry, each one seeking the good of the whole; puts them on a higher plane than those who seek to gratify exclusively their own self, and who search for happiness in material and sensual directions.

Even in our Shaker rudimental state of development, the grosser vices, which ruin and emperster human society in all its classes, do not exist amongst us.

Tobacco and spirituous liquors, which transform at least one-third of the human race into physical and moral cripples; sexual incontinence, inside and outside of family life, which destroys and ruins another third of the race; pauperism and material misery; all this is not known amongst us.

But instead thereof, a moderate degree of comfort, with frugality and industry, and a morally clean and pure atmosphere, reigns throughout.

I think such a state includes blessings which can hardly be estimated high enough.

My sincere sympathy and co-operation is sure to our leaders, in the three families of our order, for the progress which has been made in our physical life, in regard to diet, that forms the basis for future moral and spiritual growth.

"Onward" is written on our standard; and the next object to be attained unto, is the sacrifice of super-fine flour.

It will meet with many a short sighted prejudice, and have to struggle against stubborn opposition. The flesh meat has quite disappeared from our family table, but this I would hardly call a progress, if it were not followed by the further step of giving up entirely the use of super-fine flour, and taking in its place the coarse, unbolted meal.

I have for some time eaten no other, and I feel much the better of it. Some time ago, we had the coarse, unbolted rye bread on our table, as we eat it in Germany, where it forms the staple food for the Prussian army, and of many of the laboring classes; and I felt, by the use of it, an increase of strength and vital animation of fifty per cent.

Fine rye flour paste is only fit to be eaten by individuals who contemplate suicide.

If this change, of using the coarse meal of all the sorts of grains, was introduced throughout the families of believers, it would bring about a great many other changes; and not only put away weakness and disease, to a large extent, but also transform our whole conditions of labor and farming.

Half the quantity of grain we now use would be sufficient for sustaining the family, and hard labor would, in consequence, be diminished considerably. We would not need so much hired help then, and that would lighten the burden of the sisters and diminish our expenses, as well as lessening the dangers to our young people, by removing them from low and vulgar influences. More leisure for culture and refinement, in music and mental exercise, would be gained.

Whoever are able to free themselves of false habits and silly prejudices, will recognize and admit, that the way we now select and prepare our food, is not perfect, nor free from objections.

Should we try to change the constituents of the atmospheric air for our breathing, we would not act any more senseless than we do, by sifting out any part of the grain we use. It is an indirect abnegation of God and His divine wisdom, as creator of nature and of all organic life, that furnishes, in vegetable organisms, and especially in the seeds of some of them, the proper nutriment for producing and maintaining the higher life.

In the kernel of grain there are two constituents, the inside non-nitrogenous starch, the outside nitrogenous; the whole enclosed by the husk or hull.

If it were possible to separate half of the white of eggs, and let the germ of the young chickens be developed out of the remainder, we should produce just such a scrofulous, unfinished breed of chickens, as is now the young human raised upon super-fine flour; either directly or indirectly by their mother's milk.

An immense amount of human misery, too large to be perceived at once, would disappear, if these simple, unrefutable truths could be recognized, reduced to use, and the conditions of physical life be transformed according to them.

People are disposed to think that such a change, as is here indicated, when first brought before them, an extraordinary sacrifice and privation; but that is a mistake. It is just the contrary. There is a perfect analogy between the change from an unrighteous to a righteous life.

A person accustomed to indulgence in vain worldly pleasures; in sensuous revelry and debauch, will find the change to a sober, frugal, industrious, pure and chaste life, a sacrifice hard to bear. The regular duties of daily life will appear monotonous; existence, insipid and without charm. But before long a gentle calm will steal over the mind; a feeling of peace and quiet contentment take the place of gnawing restlessness and dissatisfaction with self and others. The turbulent waters of the soul will become smooth and clear, and the rays of divine love will enter like sunbeams. An organism, accustomed to be under the constant influence of stimulants and narcotics, will, at first, find good wholesome food and drink insipid, and without relish to the digestive apparatus, weakened and sickly by improper nutriment, the coarse food will be too rough and hard; but, by persistence in using it, this will soon change.

A healthy, vigorous condition of the bodily organs, will enable them to do their work properly; and the preparations of coarse meal and fruits, will afford to the refined and quickened perception of the nerves, a gustatory enjoyment greater than ever before.

Only in this way man will reach that blessed condition to make his body a place in which a divine spirit can dwell.

When we have purified and refined our physical systems, noble, loving feelings and thoughts will enter our heart and mind, with out our being conscious of it; just as surely as a crude, wet, swampish soil, that was only able to produce lower vegetable organisms, will, by draining, tilling, letting sunlight and air penetrate it, have higher forms of plant life germinate, and be finally able to bring forth grain and fruit.

We must never forget that God is Love, and that means, happiness is insured to his creatures as a condition of their existence.

In this way alone we shall attain the blessed state of liberty, which every soul longs for, and which Spinoza defines thus, "to do, by our own will and impulse, the will of God, that is to be one with God."

I hope, my dear sister, you have kept alive, and have not got choked by this shower-bath of wisdom, that I have poured down upon you, but that you may profit by it and be happy.

Yours affectionately,

Julius Assmann, Cannan, Feb. 25, 1874.

WATCHMAN.

—O—

TELL us, watchman, what of the night? Has the hour of midnight passed? do stars shine out; or, is it all dark, dark, darkness? Or, do you see the signs of the coming day beginning to appear? Tell us, for we have work to do, and with the first signs of the day we would be astir!

O, Seeker! yet a little while and the day shall come, bright and beautiful, for the sky is already aglow with beams of morning light, such as tell of a glorious day! Wrong, injustice, tyranny, superstition, avarice, falsehood, with all their attending followers, who, through the long, dark night, have tramped the streets of the great earth with polluted feet and violent hands, leaving misery in their wake — these are already trembling for their deeds, which testify against them, and one by one they are being banished from the face of the earth; and men and women are speaking without fear, undaunted by the darkness; they are rising up in judgment against the wrongs of night, and, as the day dawns, they are running to and fro, asking each other anxiously, "Where shall we go to wash ourselves clean; to clothe ourselves; to find employment for our hands and feet, fit for the light of the noonday?"

And they who have not bowed the knee to the powers of night, nor sacrificed on her altars, shall point them to the running stream, to the garments bright, to the work of the day, that the Kingdoms of this world may become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and His knowledge cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

THE TERROR OF THE INQUISITION GONE. — The Inquisitorial halls of Rome have rung lately with words that contrast marvelously with the entreaties, cries and groans which they have heard in other days. Father Grassi, the priest who was recently converted at Rome, has appeared before the Tribunal of the Holy Inquisition, and in the course of an exultant justification of his course, he uttered the following words, which must have burned into the very hearts of some of the priests present.

"In this room, to-day, I come to bear witness to the truth, and you no longer have the power to touch a hair of my head; you have lost all authority; the work of God has commenced; and soon these walls, these chambers, these instruments of torture and this tribunal will be ground like so much dust under our feet. Now listen to what God has promised to do here in Rome against the enemies of his church. Here is the infallible order that God sends to the Roman believers: 'The God of Peace will soon grind Satan under his feet.' Do you not tremble at these words of the Lord? Is it not Satan who has imposed and directed so many judgments, so many tortures, so many butcheries and massacres in these very rooms? But already Satan begins to be conquered; the torch of the dog of the Inquisition is forever extinguished, the breath of God has blown upon it, and from this time forth it can never more be ignited."

SHAKERESS.

A. BOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

A PARABLE.

ONCE upon a time there lived a good patriarch, who had the great misfortune to have a large family of decidedly bad children; yet somehow these children were not legitimate at all; they were owned by a kind of proxy; and although, to some minds, how this thing could be is a paradox, yet in tracing their lineage to its origin, as nearly as we can, we find that not one of them ever had a mother. And indeed the great Primogenitor, to whom they claimed relationship, in reality, never had but one child, and that was a beloved son, who was as old as his father, and dwelt in his bosom, which, we will suppose, signified his love and entire confidence. He was also as good and perfect as his father, and kept his injunctions, and did always those things which pleased him.

But the other adopted, accidental, or incidental children, were disobedient, heady, highminded and rebellious, daily doing those things that displeased their good father. He gave them lessons which they would not heed, and he pleaded with them, and sent messengers to warn them, but they would persist in doing as they pleased.

At length he decided that forbearance toward them had ceased to be a virtue, and his patience became so exhausted, that he was angry with them every day; and he finally concluded to destroy them all. The good son, who had been safely ensconced in his father's bosom, happened to be in a more calm and considerate frame of mind, and he looked upon those wicked children with tenderness and compassion, for he saw many good traits of character in them, which he thought would be better saved than destroyed, and determined to appease his father's anger. So he said, "Now my ever adorable father, I pray you listen to me, and do not carry your design into effect! I offer myself a willing sacrifice, a propitiation for their grievous wrongs. It is but just that they should die, and justice must be satisfied! And now, all I ask is, let mercy rule and exonerate them, and I will die in their stead!

And the following shall be an everlasting bond, or covenant, between you and me: You shall give all these children into my charge, and I will stand as mediator between you and them, and I will give my blood to seal this covenant; and I will become a palladium to the whole family, and they shall trust in me, and whatsoever they ask of you, they shall ask in my name. And this covenant shall endure through all coming ages; and should the children multiply and become as numerous as the sands upon the sea shore, it shall remain the same. You shall accept my life as the ransom for all their past, present and future violations of just and righteous laws; provided they will believe that I am able and willing to forgive them as often as they transgress; and that there is sufficient efficacy in my blood to wash away even the very stains of sin.

The great and good father was well pleased with the generous offer of his wise and humane son, and he joyfully accepted him as a sacrifice in lieu of punishing and condemning any of the rest; and that, on account of the righteousness, sufferings and death of his innocent and only son, he would absolve all the guilty ones.

Now, all that remains to be done is, since it has been decided that sin is the unavoidable concomitant of human life, to confess in some closet or secret place that they have broken their father's laws and done many wrong deeds, and ask for one drop of the atoning blood, and all is right! Who, we would ask, can help admiring such a benevolent character? Is it not worthy of all praise? say the popular theologians through the orthodox churches. Jesus Christ, through John of the Apocalypse, said, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be. Which shall we accept?"

We offer a simple remedy for some of the ills of humanity; it is not a compound of condiments, nor mineral substances, but of good common sense.

Keep the hands employed in some useful avocation, the feet dry and warm, head cool, body clean, and the stomach supplied with plain, healthful food, taken at suitable intervals; keep good hours, and remember that night is the time to sleep and rest; store the mind with good mental food, carefully avoiding every kind of trashy and unclean literature, that would serve to act upon and stimulate the animal passions; keep the thoughts pure; and do precisely "unto others as ye would that they should do unto you;" then you will make progress toward a healthy soul and body.

INNOCENCE.

O innocence, thou spirit bright,
Thy pathway we have found!
And, guided by thy angel hand,
We'll tread thy holy ground.
We look with joy upon thy face,
That hath no cloud or shade;
And pray thy voice may yet be heard
Through every rank and grade.

When shall we see thy temple fair,
Adorned with souls in white,
Who drink from thy eternal springs,
With chaste and sweet delight.
In them false honor is dethron'd,
With all its glittering train;
By them the tyrant's chain is rent,
And truth has pow'r to reign.

In Truth is found simplicity,
And liberty combin'd,
And whoso'er will seek for her
The tree of life will find.
She leads through virtue's flowery path,
To wisdom's quiet vale,
And crowns with lasting life the soul,
Whose courage does not fail.

Betsey Maynard, Harvard, Mass.

GENTLENESS.

"Thy gentleness hath made me great," said the Psalmist, in one of his inspirational moments. Whose gentleness? God's gentleness; the Wisdom and Love elements from the Father and Mother in Deity; but more particularly of the Mother, who (in speaking of her own Maternity and Eternity), said, "Hear, for I will speak of excellent things; counsel is mine and sound wisdom. When He (God) appointed the foundations of the earth, then I was by Him, as one brought up with Him; and I was His delight, rejoicing always before Him."

And Jesus, who was called the "Lamb of God," a name so typical of gentleness, how mild was he in his intercourse with all with whom he came in contact, holding in reserve the indignation that his pure spirit must often times have felt at the glaring wrongs around him.

Once, at the desecration of the temple when there was a grievous departure from Law and Gospel, such a letting down of principle to the greed of worldly gain, he gave vent to the deep feelings of his heart, and cast out the money changers, and sellers of doves, and overthrew their tables. He felt that the temple of God was defiled; and that they were seeking to supplant the blessed ministers of purity and love. That rebuke administered through the medium of the "small cords," probably made them feel more like a company of thievish transgressors, than like honorable merchants. But the Spirit of Truth, with which he was baptized, being "quick and powerful" to discern the true from the false, was constrained, at times, to exclaim in the ears of his hearers, "Ye adulterous generation!" "generation of vipers!" etc. But gentleness of spirit, as the rule, marked his course of life.

Some recent writers have sought to prove that the good Jesus was at fault, because he abjured the relationships which belong to the natural plane of life, for the spiritual and heavenly relationship of the kingdom of heaven; they say, "What we want of our teachers, is not abdication, but conquest." They urge that Christianity, as taught by his professed followers, has erred in the same way.

But we ask, what is Christianity worth, if it does not affect a change of life and character? "The Law made nothing perfect," for the reason that it was "weak through the flesh," and those very permissions which some of our modern writers are urging as essential; nor did it bring deliverance to a groaning world; nor did the philosophers and sages who preceded Jesus Christ, or who were contemporaneous with him, give such relief. The earth still remained unredeemed with sin and misery predominant, and goodness the exception.

Christ, with his self-denial as the terms of discipleship, and call to follow him in a daily cross, taught the purity and holiness required, when he said, "Be ye perfect even as your Father who is in Heaven is perfect." He then taught a degree of self-renunciation beyond what had previously been required; and not only taught it but lived it. Evidently he gladly would have gathered his disciples around him, and formed a nucleus of a community, if he did not positively require it of them at that time. It would seem that a part of the twelve were unprepared for a communion of interest; and the truths of that day were so far in advance of the travel of its receivers, that Jesus spoke to them in parables, and said: that all could not receive his teachings as a whole, but, "whosoever is able let him receive it." The Pentecostal baptism, for a time, made those who believed, of one heart and mind, and then they had all things in common; but they were only "a kind of first fruits," and were not able to carry out the principles to perfection. Persecution, and the worldly spirit within, and from without, overcame and scattered them, and all who did not wish to be disturbed in their worldly life and possessions, doubtless breathed easier when those who were turning things "upside down" were divided and scattered, or gathered to the spirit-land.

In those days, there was a high mark set upon virginity, those who were "holy in body and spirit," saw the luster and charm thrown around the character of the Virgin

Mary, and many others since, who have suffered every indignity, and even loss of life itself, rather than violate the law of Chastity. How marked was the description of John the Revelator, concerning the Church of the future, which would be composed exclusively of undefiled virgins. The world has had Convents and Nunneries to represent the devotees to the principle of Virginity; but never until recently, has the world been permitted to see the fruits of the teaching and example of Jesus, when carried to their ultimates.

Through the inspiration vouchsafed to an uneducated woman, who belonged to a society that believed in the solemn ministry of silence, and inward waiting upon the Lord, have the principles of the first Christian Church been revived, which were nearly swept away during the dark ages. Her inspiration was professedly from the Saviour, who conversed with her as with a friend, and enlightened her as to the cause of the degradation and misery of humanity, and the means by which Eden could be restored to more than its primitive glory, which would be effected by re-generation instead of generation.

And now, by the continued living influx of Divine revelation from the Spirit-world, by which the Second Christian Church is vitalized, and through the power of the Dual Order in the highest heavens, a new spiritual Household is formed, under the supervision of a representative father and mother; and sons and daughters are brought forth, who become brethren and sisters in Christ; and, although in the world, and performing all needful duties pertaining to the earth life, are not of the world.

The old heavens are now passing away in confusion, the religious of the world having proved themselves inadequate to supply the soul needs of humanity; and a new heaven is appearing. The new earth is also beginning to appear, in which physical reforms are working for the elevation of man and woman relating to the physiological and generative life; that a new and a better race may be brought forth to occupy and recreate the earth.

But let not that class decry and seek to destroy those who follow the Lamb, and who sing the new song of victory over the "beast and his image,"—the earthly and sensual nature; for, without the new heaven, where would be the ministration of light and heat, which is to vitalize the new earth, and inspire in the heroic struggle for a nobler and more harmonious race? They must advance both together, and move on toward the goal of complete redemption. The one must act upon the other, like "The wheel within a wheel," which the Prophet saw in vision. The motion and force of the whole is deponent upon each, and neither can say that the other is unnecessary.

The happiness and redemption of the race is the object in view; and, if that can be accomplished by the denial of the generative instincts, in those who "are able," and who feel the necessity of thus doing, that they may form a connecting link in the chain of progress, and be joined to those who are more elevated, and thereby improve the race, can it be a matter of regret, or an occasion of fear, that "the world will run out," when it is so evidently exhausting itself by excesses, and by wars, pestilence, and famine,—the consequence of physical and generative sins?

The system which Jesus came to teach, never having been fully put in practice, can it be truthfully said, that Christianity has proved a failure? "The whole creation has groaned, being in pain, waiting for the manifestation of the Christ in the second part of his manhood, or for the second Eve, that 'the sons and daughters of God' might appear. 'The Comforter' was to come—'Christ in his glory.'" "The woman is the glory of the man." The Church of the past has been one-sided, and as unproductive of good results as any house would be without a mother, and with nought but a combination of three male principles. This, however, was not a part of Christ's teaching: for none could be more tender and charitable toward woman, than he was, nor more appreciative, as her unbounded love to him would show; which constrained her to be last at the cross, and earliest at the grave.

When "all are one in Christ Jesus, neither male nor female," but all take part in the various industries, and branches of government, according to their ability, neither being independent of the other, but supporting a pure brotherly and sisterly relation, in the innocence of little children; where the labor, toil, and energies of all, are freely given for the benefit of all; who will say that the "kingdom of heaven is not pretty well advanced on earth? In this spirit of consecration, men or women may "buy as though they possessed not, and use this world as not abusing it;" for all is ours; not mine, and thine.

When souls in this manner give cheerfully of time and talent to the public good, sacrificing their natural desires and loves, which would lead them to the pursuit of beauty in nature and art, and instead, turn their steps to the bedside of age and weakness, to minister care, food, and comfort, or to bestow the mother love upon the orphaned and lonely ones of earth, can we not feel that this self-renunciation is one in which the "man of sorrows" would sympathize? And will he not claim such, as his true sons and daughters, who are thus striving to grow more and more into his likeness? Can they not say with the Psalmist, "Thy gentleness hath made me great?"—great in self-abasement, that the good may be exalted; and in self-denial, that the heroism of the Chief of self-deniers may be ours? for he possessed the same nature that we possess, yet relinquished all for the higher life, and became a pattern for others to follow, and practically showed that "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city;" and those who gain this victory, and are attracted to, and vitalized by, the "Women clothed with the sun"—truth and light—"having a crown of twelve stars upon her head," representatives of the twelve Christian virtues, do really "partake of the waters of life;" for they have dug deep to find them.

Happy are they who have heard the voice of the heavenly Bridegroom and Bride, who are calling for wise virgins to appear in clean and white raiment, to grace the marriage supper: for the "Bride hath made herself ready;" and let them be sure to supply their lamps with oil, that neither the darkness of the way, nor the length of the journey, may dishearten them. Some have come in, and their sorrow has been turned into rejoicing, and their souls have been cheered with music and dancing. And the "Spirit and the Bride" continue to say "come," and the children of Zion repeat the invitation:

O come, all ye wand'ring and motherless ones,
Whose cup of affliction with mis'ry o'erruns;
Come, strip off your garments of sin and of shame,
And bathe in our fountains, ye blind and ye lame,
For nothing is sweeter in heaven or earth,
Than love from the Mother who gives the soul
birth;

The Mother, blest Mother, who taught us the way
To enter the mansions of heaven's bright day.
E. H. Webster, Harvard, Mass.

TESTIMONY OF AN AGED SISTER.

I AM now eighty years of age, and it is about thirty-nine years since I united with the Believers in Christ's Second Appearing; and I feel a strong desire before I am gathered to my fathers and mothers, who have passed on before me to the spirit land, to say a word to the stranger, and to the young of Zion's fold, concerning that faith by which I was called to come out from a world of sin, to embrace the Gospel work, which contained the power of salvation, and which has been, to me, the "Pearl of great price."

When I was fifteen years of age, I united with the Baptist Church, and continued with them many years, striving to find a power that would satisfy my heart's desire, and redeem my soul unto God, who gave it. At the age of thirty-seven, I trembled to find, that I was yet a sinner in the sight of God, and a wanderer from Him.

I united with the Presbyterians, and strove to renew my zeal, and work righteousness, and live more to my own justification, and to God's acceptance. I continued in this soul-struggle seven years, but could not find food sufficient to sustain the spiritual part; for my soul hungered and thirsted after the bread and waters of life, and demanded a greater supply than I could obtain.

At this time of need I read some of the publications of Believers (commonly called Shakers), and was led to investigate their doctrine, which, at that time, seemed strange to me. At length I visited the society at Canterbury, N. H., and spent four days there, and then returned to my home. In about one year from that time, revisited the people at the same place, where I was kindly received and entertained.

No pains were spared to enlighten my understanding, by giving me such information as I required; and I had an opportunity of judging of their principles by the fruits brought forth. I perceived that a true Christian life and character must be based upon self-denial and the cross, which crucifies the carnal mind, and all selfishness; and brings souls into a oneness of heart and life, and enforces the golden rule.

Each ray of new light that shone into my soul, warmed and gave life to my immortal spirit; and I became satisfied that it was the true way of God, and that it would bring life and salvation, if I would be obedient. My understanding was enlightened to see the cause of my loss from God; and that if I would become a true follower of Christ, the lower animal nature in me must be mortified and subdued.

I resolved to prove the work, by being obedient to my convictions, and find a life in God, though it should be at the expenso of every self-pleasing desire; remembering Christ's words, "Forsake all and follow Me." Circumstances rendered it more convenient for me to unite with the Society of Shakers in Enfield, Conn. I did so sincerely, according to my best understanding, and placed my all upon the altar of justice and truth; and by so doing, new and increasing light, joy and love beamed into my soul, yielding a satisfaction which I had long sought, but could not find, and I am now satisfied that true peace of mind and rest to the soul cannot be obtained except by a full sacrifice of the worldly life, through watching and prayer.

I have never regretted the choice that I made, nor had one desire to return to my former mode of life. And now, at the age of four score years, I feel to raise my heart and voice in praise and thanksgiving to God, for the great salvation that I have found; and with my feeble hand I pen these few lines, hoping thereby to benefit some of my fellow creatures who are now, as I once was, wandering in darkness and sin. My prayer is that all such souls may find resurrection life in Christ, which alone will insure happiness in this world, and eternal bliss in the world to come.

Mary C. Wright, Enfield, Conn.

DEAR ELDERESS A.:

I would show my appreciation of your beautiful description in February No. of Sister Margaret's departure to her spirit home, by returning thanks. I read the account with deep interest, and was edified and strengthened by the inspiring expressions which fell from the lips of our dear Gospel sister, as her spirit was about to take its upward flight to the unseen world. Her example in life and death is worthy to be imitated by every one who "names the name of Christ," and professes to love the truth.

Without purity of heart, we are not practical Christians; and true "love is the seal of discipleship," and will so remain; and only through self-denial, and the same cross which Jesus bore, can any soul "be crucified unto the world, with all its affections and lusts." Such is the faith implanted in my heart; and by it I am resolved to live and die. I would have my life all pure and righteous; and my latest breathings like sweet Margaret's, drawn out in prayer for Zion's prosperity; and, that her inmates may be filled with love and peace, and songs of rejoicing and praise.

Do we not see how death may be swallowed up in victory, and the grave robbed of its terrors by a sinless life, while the spirit rises in triumph over all inferior things? Those who thus live, do not die when they pass out of the material form; by throwing off the grosser part, life becomes intensified—quickened—and we often feel a power, and sweet influence emanating from them, which give peace and rest to our spirits, while engaged in the arduous duties of the earth life. They become as guardian Angels to those whom they have left on the shores of time; and they often gather to the circles in the Eden home on earth, which, through consecrated labor, themselves have helped to create; and they continue to strive to enhance its beauty, and to adorn all its walks; and they delight to encourage and uplift each struggling soul, and to guide the young in the beautiful path of innocence, which leads to peace. How safe we feel while confiding in such holy watchers, to protect and guard the little flock.

Now, my dear mother, I want to say to you, that Sister Margaret is not gone far from your embraces; she is still your own, and her spirit lingers to bless and to cheer. And, since leaving the clay tenement, her spirit is happy and free in the society of the good and pure, in the Church of God on earth, and in heaven. Death to her, is but a birth into the higher life with enlarged powers of action. And, I feel to rejoice with her, that the messenger of life (not death) hath opened the door of liberty, and set her spirit free from the frail body, which it was her lot to inhabit.

I feel renewed courage and strength, to press on in the gospel work; and I will toil patiently and wait until the time shall come for me to be gathered to my heavenly home; and I hope to be found worthy to dwell with the shining saints in glory. I pledge myself to be with you in the progress of truth, now and forever.

In bonds of Christian love and affection.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

"The eyes may brighten, and lips may smile,
And the heart with anguish be torn the while."

For woman (generous toiler)

Can bury sorrows deep
Till oft, in cloister'd moments, 'lone,
She finds them but to weep.
And yet her grief must silent be,
Her burden she must bear,
Till truth can fetter error strong,
And heed her time-bound prayer.

She was not form'd for man to rule
With firm relentless hand;
She was not form'd a chattel slave,
To be at his command;
She was not form'd to be the means
Of bearing down a name
Unto an offspring cursed, debased,
That cause her spirit shame.

She feels her rights, but she is bound
By those whom passions hold;
She knows her claims to earth and heav'n,
For this her heart is bold.
She presses through the flood of thought,
Sarcasm, scorn, and ire;
She holds her way undaunted, firm,
Enrobed in Love's attire.

She knows, when Reason, Justice pure,
Shall place within each heart
Those living truths which guard the soul,
Then slavery will depart,
And Freedom can her course pursue,
Sustain her glorious cause,
While Wisdom helps to form anew
The Father's broken laws.

Then priest, or priestcraft, ne'er can stay
Equality, or right;
But man shall own and bless the cause
Which gave to earth new light:
And, through her powers for good and right,
Life's burdens shall decrease;
While 'neath her influence, chaste and pure,
Disease and crime shall cease.

Through her shall gleam the golden light,
And inspiration true
Shall touch with love the soul of man,
His life for God renew.
And then, as one, they'll toil in peace,
And seeds celestial sow;
While heav'n and earth the chorus swell,—
God reigns with man below!

Charlotte Byrdsall, Mt. Lebanon.

It is argued that woman is not in servitude, because she voluntarily places herself in certain positions, and chooses her own condition; therefore, to her it is not bondage, but freedom. We would ask, Are not the organic laws of the land, and the usages of society, such as compel some women to accept conditions that would otherwise be repugnant to their feelings? Before American chattel slavery was abolished, its abettors claimed that thousands of the negro slaves did not desire emancipation; that they so loved their masters, under whom they served, that they could not be induced to leave them, and accept of freedom.

Freedom for woman has a deeper and broader signification than is generally supposed. There are gleamings of light upon the subject; but as yet, many who think they have advanced ideas, and understand the matter well, will find, as light and truth increase, that their present views are undefined and chaotic. That woman is measurably a willing slave, while she panders to fashion, and yields herself, without constraint to libidinous desires, and seeks to satiate sensual passions in herself, or in others, we will not deny. We pray that a divine power may descend from the heavens, that will open the eyes of those who are spiritually blind, and shake both priests and people, and awaken them to a consciousness of the real conditions and needs of humanity at the present time.

EDITRESS.

SONGS.

THE peculiar gift of song that is given to Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, is beautiful, and highly prized by them. The breathings of the soul in measured strains of melody, filled with inspirational power from the interior spheres, is like balm to the spirit.

The first founders of the Second Christian Church, Mother Ann, and her co-laborers, father William and father James, were very much blest with the gift of new and inspirational songs. The Christ-Spirit that baptized them, seemed to say, "Sing unto the Lord a new song; and chant no more the melodies which properly belong to the old heavens; for behold the time has come for old things to pass away, and all things to become new in the coming New Dispensation. The songs of Zion shall be filled with prayer and praise ever changing and constantly affording new food to supply the soul's needs through all the progressive stages of the travel and growth of Believers."

Thus far, we have confined ourselves to vocal music, and spiritual inspirational songs have been given, until they may be numbered by thousands. They are simple in style, but are peculiarly adapted to the religious feelings, and they touch the harmonic chords in the human soul, and lift it into the Divine element.

Hitherto, we have not aimed so much to be scientific, as to be spiritual in our singing. And many who have given their attention to the mere science of music have criticised us; while others, more spiritual, say, if you can have but the one, it is better to retain the spirit and essence, than to have the science without them. But as we claim that God is the Source of all true science, we may with safety cultivate our voices, and work with the inspirational powers toward perfection in music, as in all other things; for the more refined and harmonious we become in worship, the more beautiful shall we appear in the sight of Angels, and the more acceptable will our offerings be.

Then, dear Gospel friends, let us strive to correct our faults, while we cherish the gift of new and inspired songs as a rich ministrations from Angels and departed friends.

Anna Dodgson, Mt. Lebanon.

POWER OF PRAYER.

By a young Shaker Sister fifteen years of age.

PRAYER is the desire of the heart, the breath of the soul. The humblest petition which flows from a sincere heart is more acceptable and effective than the most eloquent words that may pass the lips without sincerity and true simplicity. Prayer is essential to a true life; for it is a shield. Jesus said, "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation."

God looks at the heart. He does not measure prayer by the quantity of words uttered, nor take into account the eloquence of those words. David said: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination unto the Lord; and He knoweth them afar off; but He heareth the prayer of the righteous." The prayer of faith is powerful, as many have proved who have asked Divine assistance in times of trouble and affliction.

Jesus said: "Use not vain repetitions as the heathen do, who think they shall be heard for their much speaking." If we have faith in God—possess childlike simplicity—are contrite in spirit, and ask with a confiding trust, we shall receive; and shall find the promise true: "If we knock it will be opened unto us."

Eliza Midgley, Enfield, Ct.

LABOR OF LIFE.

Andante.

1. Dream not a way life's gold-en hours In realms of transient bliss; And tar-ry not in pleasure's bow'rs, In quest of hap - pi - ness.
 2. Fair fields in God's own her - i - tage In-vite to nobler aims, The stronger powers of good engage Through virtue's ho-ly claims.
 3. The cham-bers of thy soul ex-pand, And stretch thy tents abroad, Clasp La-bor in its il-lu-min'g hand, And aid the work of God;

For there the sy-ren sings her song, The wand'-rer to de-coy, There sub-tle charms like magnet strong, Allure but to de-stroy.
 A-wake! for glorious themes to strive, Above earth's sordid pelf, In broad phi-lan-thro-phy to thrive, Beyond the sphere of self.
 Till the mil-len-nial day shall shine Unto earth's distant bound; Till per-fect love, and peace di-vine, A bi-ding place have found.

LAMENTATION.

A wild cry arises from memory's haunt,
 From depths of conditions of woe!
 Where children of darkness, of sorrow and want,
 No ease for their sufferings know.
 There is cursing, and wailing, and anguish of heart,
 A writhing in torment and pain!
 O why this injustice? what aid will impart
 The pow'r that will freedom obtain?
 This cruel oppression that crushes the poor,
 And gives to the wealthy their weal,
 This un-christian spirit turns from the door,
 The needy to starve, or to steal.

'Tis asked, "is it true that the houseless descend
 To join with the ruinous train,
 Whose brief lives of vice in infamy end,
 And this for some slight paltry gain?"
 'Tis true, ah, too true, we are forced to reply,
 Fair virtue to mammon doth bow,
 For gaunt destitution is still waiting nigh,
 To stamp with starvation the brow.

We look for the soul—that is buried from sight,
 And dross is piled up in its place;
 Like gold in the ore, 'tis obscured from the sight,
 But little of it we can trace.
 Yea, the "seed bud of beauty" is withered and crushed

By storms of adversity's hour,
 And the small voice within is stifled and hushed
 By passions strong pleading for pow'r.

But ye who can shake from the rough, iron hand,
 The chain of oppression so cold,
 Go, unbind the weak and the poor of the land;
 Be fearless, undaunted, and bold.
 'Tis God fires your purpose, ye noble and brave,
 And angels inspire you still on!
 For truth, that's almighty and able to save,
 Is seen in the work you have done.

No more be ye faint at the sight of distress,
 Dismay'd at recitals of woe,
 Which now from the lips of the suffering press,
 Whose hearts only bitterness know.
 For happier days we are gifted to see
 Dawn o'er this sin-blighted race;
 When men in a brotherhood equal shall be,
 And poverty find not a place;
 When the standard of purity higher is raised,
 And the blind are enabled to see
 That only through holiness God can be praised,
 And only the truth maketh free.

Elvah Leavenworth, Mt. Lebanon.

If I were suddenly asked to give a proof of the goodness of God to us, I think I should say that it is most manifested in the exquisite difference He has made between the souls of women and men, so as to create the possibility of the most charming companionships that the mind of man can imagine. — Arthur Helps.

OF SUCH IS THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

WORDS, O, how full of meaning, uttered by lips so mild, revealing a pure undefiled heaven to man! Not the heaven the haughty priesthood preach of, in fanes where the wealthy and fashionable meet one day in seven.
 Those devotees of fashion, may proudly kneel in cushioned pews—read from gilded books long liturgies—but, their practices are such, as tend to impoverish the nation, and foster crime.

Their church steeples may point heavenward; but, while their church communicants, are so fraught with avarice, and have so little righteousness that they will not feed the poor with bread; God's Angels will not recognize them; their heaven is too gross. God will not own a hireling priesthood who are pampered with every rare luxury, while the orphan, and widow, hardly obtain scanty fare.

There is no such enslavement for the meek and lowly born, in the heavenly city, whose streets are paved with gold. Truth's grand fruition, that will bring to earth the heavenly prize, will be a baptism which will sweep away all priestly superstition, and establish brotherhood.

If earth shall ever roses bear,
 Where thorns are wont to grow,
 The idlers must do their share
 Of labor here below.
 Come, come ye Angel forces,
 From your Eden realms above;
 And dry up sin's foul sources,
 By the reign of Peace and love.

From the upper spheres of Wisdom,
 Come spirits pure and bright,
 To herald in a kingdom,
 To bless the world with light.
 Bright vision, when we see thee come,
 All souls shall childlike be;
 And earth shall be the happy home
 Of Christ's community.

S. Crittenden, New Haven.

RICHTER'S DREAM.

I DO not know that I can conclude this number better than by quoting Richter's dream, in which he shows the feebleness of man's imagination in the presence of the infinite wonders of the universe. It is translated by De Quincey:

"God called up from dreams a man into the vestibule of Heaven," saying, "Come thou hither and see the glories of My Kingdom," and to the angels that stood around His throne He said:
 "Take him! Strip from him his robes of flesh, cleanse his vision, and put a new breath into his nostrils; only touch not with any change his human heart, the heart that weeps and trembles."
 It was done, and with a mighty angel for his guide the man stood ready for his infinite voyage; and from the terraces of Heaven, without sound or farewell, on a sudden they swept into infinite space. Sometimes, with the solemn flight of angel wings, they passed through the horrors of darkness, through wildernesses of death that divide the worlds of life; sometimes, they passed over thresholds that were quickening under prophetic motions from God; then, from beyond distances that are counted only in Heaven, light dawned as through a shapeless film; by unutterable pace they passed a light—a light, by unutterable pace passed them. In a moment the blaze of suns was upon them—in a moment the rush of planets was around them.

Then came eternities of twilight that revealed, but were not revealed. On the right hand and on the left towered gigantic constellations, that by self-repetitions and answers from afar; that by counter-positions, built up triumphal gateways whose archways, whose architraves, horizontal, upright, raised and rose at altitude of spans that seemed ghostly from infinitude. Without measure were the architraves, beyond memory the gates, past number, the archways. Within were stars that scaled eternities around; above was below, and below was above, to man stripped of gravitat-ing body. Depth was swallowed up in height insurmountable; height in depth unfathomable. On a sudden, as thus they rode from infinity to infinity;
 on a sudden, as thus they tilted over abyssal worlds, a mighty cry arose that systems more mysterious, that worlds more billowy, other lights, other depths, were coming, were nearing, were at hand.

Then the man sighed and stopped, shuddered and wept. His overlaid heart uttered itself in tears, and he said: "Angel, I will go no farther, for the spirit of man acheth with this infinity.
 Insufferable is the glory of God. Let me lie down, and hide me in the grave from the persecution of the Infinite, for end I see there is none." And from all the listening stars that shone around there issued a choral voice: "The man speaks truly. End is there none, that ever yet we heard of." "End is there none?" the angel solemnly demanded; "Is there indeed no end, and is this the sorrow that kills you?" But no voice answered, that he might answer himself. Then the angel threw up his glorious hands to the heaven of heavens, saying, "End is there none to the Universe of God! Lo! also, is there no beginning!"

THE more and the greater are life's difficulties, the more honorable it is to carry off the victory. Man may be disappointed in his greatest hopes in life, without, on that account, becoming unhappy.

TEMPERANCE.

—o—

"Not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit," intemperance is being suppressed. The movement has a spiritual origin.

There is, in the Spirit World, an organized company of men and women, who are appointed to the work of suppressing intemperance, in this country. It is their mission—Woman has been, by intemperance, the chief sufferer. It is meet that she should be the medium of "the powers of the world to come," for its removal.

If woman will be content to be the instrument, and not aspire to the Leadership, in the work, prosperity will attend her efforts—for the cause is of God.

In her hours of trial and doubt, let her look to God—not to man—and all will be well.

Attending a temperance meeting in New York, on the 11th instant, there being present Dio Lewis, Gayland G. Clark and other master minds, nothing more favorably impressed me, than the recognition, by the men, of the fact, that the women should not look to them, as leaders; but rather to their own inspirational impressions.

Woman is at school—to-day she is doing the very thing that man has said, for her to do, would spoil her as woman.

Appearing in public—learning to organize—what shall keep her from the Polls? Who may exclude her from the Courts of Justice, or Halls of Legislation? What power shall let, or hinder the Millennium from being realized through such instrumentalities, and by those agencies, that it is alone possible for God to establish a Millennium?

Private virtue is the Granite Rock, upon which the structure of public virtue can safely rest, without fear of settling.

Unless the individual women who compose the praying bands, do, in truth, commence the reformation with themselves, by contrition and repentance, their labors, with others, will be in vain. Not being in the Lord, their prayers will be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

What we possess, we can minister. When women have suffered and been helped, they can suffer and help others.

"Come not at your wives,"—was an injunction of the Ruling Spirit of the Hebrews, to them, when they fain would come near unto God, to be indued with power from on high, in order to overcome and conquer the Canaanites.

Come not at your Husbands, should be the word, in all praying bands, to those women, who would prepare—arm themselves beforehand—to fight the battle of the Lord against the sins of the world, and the giant sin of intemperance in particular.

Thus can they say—We have set you an example. Follow us, in self-denial—We are refraining from things as dear to us, as are the things, to you, that we ask you to sacrifice—things as pleasing to our lower, sensuous nature.

Then will they speak as having authority—as capable of charity. And they will cast out evils, that go not out, save by fasting and prayer.

When the praying women fast from the lusts of their generative nature, they will be weighty in word, and mighty in work, against the minor evils of humanity.

Who shall go forth to the battle—The Young Women of the Princes of the Provinces. Let them enlist at once in the effort to overthrow the saloon keepers.

As soon as the Mothers have inaugurated the movement, in a place, if the Young Women will take it off their hands, and let the Mothers remain at home, in prayer, a double blessing will ensue. At once the Spirit will lead the Young Women to discard many extravagant and false things, about their persons, that now disfigure them, and which disqualify them for active service in their appointed field of labor—of battle.

The time saved from personal disfiguration will be ample for all their public duties.

Sexual purity agrees with simplicity and utility in dress, like the verb with its nominative.

Also, I would suggest—modestly—that all mourning dresses be at once omitted, and all useless and vain funeral trappings and expenses be abolished, and that the money thus saved be appropriated to purchasing praying dresses for out-door labor.

Be ye temperate in all things. Temperance in drink is but one item in the bill of reform that has now begun to roll over America.

If the American women will yield themselves to the influence coming from the higher spheres in the Spirit World, a new era will begin, that will, in its unfolding, be of vast national import.

Let the women be just what they seem to be, and seem to be just what they are—God fearing women—and after the young women have passed through the present disciplinary, preliminary phase of education, a portion of them will become good wives and mothers in the New Earth, and another portion will arise into the New Heavens—the Resurrection Order—to go no more out forever.

By my spirit, saith the Lord, the redemption shall come.

Let woman look, labor and pray for the wisdom from above, not for that which cometh from man—the wisdom from beneath, and by which man has been so largely guided in organizing and conducting all so-called civil government; and, in due time she will vote, with man's consent, and sit by his side in courts of justice and halls of legislation.

The Millennium dawns!!

MY DEAR SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

Your continued administrations of Gospel Truth, being a necessity, your friends, who are legion, expect more of the Truth, as it is in Shakerism, from you, than they can get otherwise.

This being the fourth year of your labors, we associate it with the "fourth dispensation," under whose benignant enlightenment, our Social Order is established.

Your words of counsel, of warning, of cheer and comfort, have fallen, in many places, in good and honest hearts, with singularly healing and soothing effect. May a strong band of holy angels have a supervising influence over your very existence, and instill, more abundantly, through its consecrated Editors, a new Life—The Pure Life of the Spirit—as our New Heavens are to be peopled with a spiritual people. Let your voice, in clarion tones, summon the guests—"Come, for all things are now ready." Zion, in all her branches, can bear replenishing, with redeemed souls, or those who feel the necessity of being redeemed, from their evil natures.

Not only do our present established places require filling up, but a further increase, in the near future, will demand more establishments.

Spread your wings, ye angelic messenger of good tidings. Rest not, till earth's inhabitants have all heard the good tidings you carry.

There is a rest for the people of God. All, who will, may come and partake, and work out their own salvation. No "atonement,"—no war—no slavery—neither physical bondage, nor spiritual bondage—or bigotry. You are charged with the support of, and have well maintained, a higher standard of religion than any other publication.

From this extreme southern home of Shakers, receive our meed of commendation, which we cheerfully give.

Your mission, to sow the good seed, and to rend the veil of the covering cast over all people—the flesh—is one of vast importance to suffering humanity.

Shakers Wanted.

100,000 Shakers wanted, soon as convenient.

None need apply, who cannot shake, or learn to shake themselves free from all prejudice, all wrong, all sin—all evil of every name and nature. But, all, who apply, bringing with them the following credentials, will be welcomed, as inquirers, and given every facility to learn of this doctrine, whether it be, or be not, of God:

1st. All honest people. The dishonest would shut their eyes and say, there was no light.

2d. All wishing to live a pure virgin life.

3d. All looking for refuge from the social evil.

4th. All looking to community life, for happiness.

5th. All expecting to work out their salvation.

6th. All who wish to attain the highest good, in this life.

7th. All who will control their appetites and passions.

8th. All who will confess their sins and quit sinning.

TAKE UP THE CROSS.

The Gospel, or Mission of Jesus Christ, stands in rebukeful antagonism to all mere human systems of theology. And the originators and supporters of such systems ought to be ashamed of ever thinking that Jesus could approve of what these leaders, with their followers, allow themselves to engage in. There is not a single feature, which distinguished the Pentecostal church, that is not discountenanced by the majority of churches calling themselves Christian.

To this sweeping charge we will endeavor to attach equally sweeping evidence.

Where, among modern churches, can be found, in practical operation, the cross that Jesus bore against generative lusts and relationship, against wars and fightings which come of those lusts, as against the monopolizing selfishness, inseparable from the natural order?

Is not fashionable Christianity the desideratum of the multitudes who follow on to do evil? Is not union, with some popular sect, needful to success, in the process of adding house to house, till no place is left for the homeless poor?

Wherein would carnal mammon worshipers desire a change in New York churches, or in church theology?

Great is Diana of the Ephesians — cry the craftsmen and craftswomen, who are made rich with the abundance of money contributions.

To have a substitute to bear the cross for us, may be comforting to the worldly professors. But they who deny themselves, and bear a daily cross against all the lusts of the flesh and mind, bear their own burthens, work out their own salvation. No substitute is needful nor desirable. The folly of living in sin, is apparent.

To misinterpreted atonement must be ascribed grave errors. By it many souls have been robbed of salvation — salvation from actual sin.

The cross of Jesus saves others just as it saved him.

A man or woman may be saved by faith alone, from sins they daily repeat, when an oven may be heated by snow-balls.

To comprehend, somewhat, the extent to which the cross of Christ has been evaded by our modern Gentile Christianity, let us revert to the model — the Pentecostal church.

In Jesus, a virgin life was requisite to constitute Him a Christian. And, without exception, his immediate disciples adopted that rule of life. Those, among them, who had been married, became as brothers and sisters to each other. They who were single so remained. Hence, the Pentecostal was a virgin church.

When Paul permitted marriages among the Gentiles, he did it under this protest: "I would that all men were as I am."

These Gentile churches have annihilated the virgin cross, and instituted marriage as one of their sacraments, in direct antagonism to both the first and second Pentecostal churches.

Through the life of marriage the cross is abandoned — a life is saved — eternal life is lost. Peace is far from the sects who marry, as is the cross; those who marry being the proper ones to do the fighting.

The community system of the model church exists no where among marrying, fighting Christians. These do not seek each others' good rather than their own; nor live together as brothers and sisters, faring and sharing alike the fruits of each other's labor; calling all things — not mine and thine — Ours.

The community cross and the non-resistant cross are abrogated by marriage. Hence, it is a worldly and not a christian institution, and many go in thereat.

The world over, there is an inseparable connection between marrying, blood-shedding churches and worldly civil governments.

What a contrast between these and the practice of Jesus under instruction of the Christ spirit.

Let all desist from pressing into our constitution the God of these people, until they cease to worship the Heathen Deities — Venus, Mars and Bacchus.

GOOD NEWS.

"Of the increase of His government and peace, there shall be no end."

One of the most pleasant features connected with the Gospel work is, that there will be no end to its spiritual unfoldings. It is to be forever a new revelation to those who love to walk in the light. We may pass from faith to faith on our Heavenly journey, without fear. No barrier can impede our onward, upward march.

Angel minds may have preceded us, on the way to the Kingdom, from whom we can, and gladly will, accept the discipline which insures our safety, and harmonizes us with the life of Jesus Christ.

It becomes our privilege to sit as pupils in the spiritual school, accepting the divine mission from those who are in advance of our position, we embodying their life in our own souls, and as faithfully transmitting the same blessing, to those who accept the work of the cross at a later date.

From the first ministration of God's Law to man, there has been a gradual increase of divine revelation of "government and peace," adapted to the condition of those who were separated from among men, to be denominated His chosen people.

The good old prophet understood this, when he said, "Of the increase of the ministration of God's word there shall be no end," and we live to attune our minds to the spirit of this prophecy. We have no reason to believe Infinite wisdom will be indifferent to the successful prosecution of his own work, knowing, as we do, that finite minds will exert every faculty to acquire a desired object. Jesus understood this fact, when he said: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets." He accepted the Mosaic dispensation, as one phase of God's work for the development of human souls.

The law was no less essential for those who became his disciples, than it had been for the children of Israel.

As Jesus received increasing spiritual light, he unfolded greater spiritual truths to his followers corresponding with that light.

While the teacher, Moses, justified his followers in hating their enemies, Jesus, with a deeper love for humanity, taught all who would walk with him, to "pray for those who despitefully used and persecuted them."

Admitting that the spirit of God was manifested in the two dispensations, there was evidently a great increase in the latter, agreeably to the words of the prophet — of the peace and government — to which there was to be no end.

Our Gospel privilege embraces within its boundary lines all the testimony of Jesus. To enter this sphere of divine light is to be under the spirit of progression — in an endless increase.

SCIENCE VS. FAITH.

"Science shall free itself from the influence of Religion and Faith. Faith is a hindrance to Science." Carl Vaght.

Is it of Religion and Faith, as exponents of creeds and forms of worship, blind beliefs in dogmas, in themselves uncertain or useless, that the above assertion is made? Or, does it apply to Faith and Religion as elements of Christian life and practice?

Can true faith hinder science in her endeavors to unfold nature's laws, or cloud her accumulating array of facts in unbelief?

Is it not equally as necessary to distinguish the true from the false in treating of religious faith — a perfect theory — as it is in the unfoldment of nature's laws by mere science, and are not the issues involved, as vital to the interests of man? We think they are.

When scientific investigators would darken counsel by words without knowledge, and seek to becloud with doubts, and darken with unbelief, faith — religion and the historic record, the Bible, — they undermine their own foundation — Spiritualism.

There is no possibility of keeping science — an orderly arrangement of facts — and Faith — religion — apart.

Honest, truth-loving, patient investigation, correctness of observation, precision of statement and logical deduction, belong to one as to the other.

The scientist, be he materialist, deist or pagan, whose writings and life evince love for humanity, will not be tabooed by the spirit of our age, which judges the tree by its fruit and not by the name it chances to bear.

What is faith? A belief — confidence — prescience. What is that instinct which permeates animal life from the coral to the human? If we deny God, in any of his works, do we not deny him in the whole creation? If we accept God in man, have we not the key to science?

Science will have made her most wonderful discovery, when she acknowledges the source of all knowledge — faith — as her Lord and master — the soul of all things in Heaven and upon Earth.

The dual principles of male and female are not more inseparably associated and connected in man, their highest tangible exponent, down to the nomad, or chemical affinities of nature's laboratory, than are Religion and Science.

Creation is alive with change and progress. Cosmical affinity — chemical attraction — develops into instinct an offshoot of the dual parent cause — Father and Mother — God.

Intuition in man, oft-times precedes investigation and knowledge. It is the law that pioneers the soul in all growth.

To be destitute of the power of impulse, would be the death of all deaths. Impulse is the power to be, and to do.

Faith is the soul of spiritual life in man. It insures eternal progress. It is the evidence of things not seen — the substance of all good things hoped for. If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye should say to this sycamore tree, be thou plucked up and planted in the sea. That is but a statement of the possible. And in our day of the probable — provided there be cause.

Faith, without, or unaided by science, can better comprehend nature and her laws, than can science, while warring with faith, see beyond her facts.

As an art, faith must be classed among the "lost Arts."

When Huxley, Darwin, Spencer and Vogt, have discovered the source of life, they will be as learned as the way-faring man, who although a fool in science, has seen God, with the eye of faith — through purity of heart.

That which is hidden from the materialistic wise and prudent, may be revealed unto babes in science.

Finally, it is to faith, above instinct, intuition, or mere science, that all truth's investigators are indebted for what we, as humans, have been, are, and are destined to be in the glorious future.

HARVEST HOME.

—o—

Then gather up the useless tares,
Convinced Angels blind,
And cast them in the Gospel fire,
And thus release your mind.
For now the reaping time has come,
And Angels shout the Harvest Home.

Now if this work you truly do,
And are indeed sincere,
Then Gospel peace will freely flow,
And you will have good cheer.
For now the reaping time has come,
And Angels shout the Harvest Home.

CAPTIOUS CRITICISMS.

—o—

AMID the avalanche of letters we are receiving, comes one from an unfriendly stranger — woman. She criticises the Shakers, and their paper — THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.

Friends, who feel an interest in the success of the little monthly, confer a favor by pointing out its defects and errors, whether grammatical or typographical. They do it in a kindly spirit.

Of enemies, essaying to instruct us, the least we require is, that they do it in style as chaste, in language as correct, in as good honest English, as that which they criticise.

She credits us with being "well-meaning, and staunchly moral." We would willingly spare a good deal of literary ability from some of our cotemporaries, to have the same said, truly, of them.

Our critic charges, as a fault, that the Society reserves the right to charge "casual visitors," for entertainment. While enquirers, for practical purposes, are made welcome, the gossiping pleasure-seeking multitude, are not welcome. Nor are such as travel, seeking to live upon the labor of others, making a Shaker community a place of common resort.

Our Society is not a public establishment — a free hotel, or boarding house, for curiosity-seekers. Nor for city people, seeking "an out in the country," at little expense to themselves. It is our home. The class who unfortunately demand free fare at our hands, would be the last to convert their own homes into free restaurants for the use of all strangers who choose to call upon them.

The rule, that correspondence is open to the Elders, is especially obnoxious to our feminine critic. We publish that rule to deter just such people from joining the Shakers. Those "who creep in among us unawares," to spy out our liberties, who desire to carry on private correspondence with parties in the outside world, in whom they have more confidence than in their Brethren and Sisters in the Lord, should go out from among us. They are not of us. Such persons we do not confide in, because they do not confide in their spiritual relations — their community associates. Thus, the want of confidence is mutual.

These should hang upon the tree of nature, until they have progressed up to the Order, where "that which is without, is as that which is within," "and where the male, with the female, is neither male nor female." Those wishing to live in the selfish order of single persons — isolated individuals — as well as those who have progressed to the family — me and mine order — have our free permission to devote their talents, wealth and affections, to upbuild that order. They may toil for No. One, or they may marry, raise children, and buy and sell for their other selves. In these relations, the privacy and secrecy, appropriate to the selfish, normal life, is in order.

But, when they weary of such contracted circle — such narrow sphere — and seek a higher life in which to expand their affections and usefulness, they must come to religious communism.

Again, our critic asks, "Are you a progressing people — a light to the world in literature?"

We rejoin — The Shakers, at present, make no pretensions to high scholarship among the literati. Having sought to be honest, industrious, temperate in meats and drinks, cleanly in person and morals, as a basis for religion, rather than to be popular and learnedly great. In the practice of these virtues, we find happiness and contentment.

"The social evil" is far removed from our borders. Neither the poor, the naked, nor the hungry are to be seen among us. Peace and innocence abound. So far as this is "light" and "progress" to the world, they are welcome to it. But the credit is to Shaker communism — a community of interests, and a community of ideas, feelings and affections, being one.

WARM FEET.

—o—

BELOVED EDITOR — At the risk of being thought trifling, and telling people what they already know, I beg leave to remind them, through the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, of the secret of warm feet. Many of the colds which people are said to catch, commence at these extremities; and colds are not the worst effects of damp feet. Persistent neglect, in this respect, produces disease of the internal organs, which once chronic, can never be cured. To keep the feet constantly warm, is to effect an insurance against the almost interminable list of disorders, which spring from "slight colds." 1st. Never be tightly shod. Boots, or shoes, when they fit closely, press against the veins of the feet, and prevent the free circulation of the blood. On the contrary, when they do not embrace the feet too closely, the blood flows freely, and the spaces left between the leather and the stockings, are filled with warm air. Those who pride themselves on having small, handsome feet, will perhaps, be unwilling to admit this assertion. They are earnestly recommended to sacrifice a little vain display, for the sake of comfort and safety, by wearing what the makers call easy shoes. 2d. Never sit in damp shoes. It is often imagined, that unless they are positively wet, it is not necessary to change them when the feet are at rest. This is an error; for when the least dampness is absorbed into the sole, it is attracted further to the foot itself, by its own heat, and thus perspiration is dangerously checked. Those who doubt this, may prove it by neglecting this precaution, and their feet will feel cold and damp, after a few moments, although, on taking off the shoe and stocking, it will appear to be perfectly dry.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Conn.

Also, the feet may be too warm, inducing debility of the whole system, as they may be too cold, by reason of being thinly clad, and yet not feel very uncomfortable, because they are drawing heat from all parts of the body, the result of which may be a general cold, a pleurisy, lame back, or rheumatism, according to previous conditions of the subject. — Ed.

BREAD VS. WHISKEY.

—o—

Away back in my teens, near sixty years ago, I went to Quaker meeting — an evening meeting — at the house of Benedict Robinson, in the now town of Milo, in our county of Yates, State of New York, a land then flowing with bread and whiskey.

Whiskey was as much one of the family necessities as bread. The corn and the rye had, from the beginning, been regarded as whiskey. Nothing more, nothing less.

The whiskey mills had begun on the wheat with no sparing hand.

The Spirit moved Caleb Macumber, of Farmington, Ontario county, a man of giant frame, giant voice, giant every thing, and he arose with one hand in coat pocket, the other behind his back; he began to speak — "It is — our — duty — to — be — thankful — for — blessing's — as — well temporal — as spiritual.

I — shall — take — for — the — subject — of — my — discourse — vegetables — especially — that vegetable — of — which — we — make — Bread — wheat."

His words fell like sledge hammers upon our ears. Not upon our ears only, but upon our very souls.

In breathless silence we followed the preacher. He told us that "in the staff of life that land had been blessed above all lands; that we had turned that blessing into a curse; that the day was not far distant when there would be a scarcity in the land," "and children will cry for bread."

We didn't see it then. In less than two years we saw the word of the Lord by the mouth of the prophet fulfilled to the letter. There was not bread to be bought, and no money to buy it. Many families were breadless for weeks, and children did cry for bread.

QUERIES.

—o—

ELDER FREDERICK — To the query, "Will not this Second Christian or Shaker Church — this Gospel of Christ — create its own literature?", your answer, "Yea, and that right speedily," meets with a hearty response in my mind, and suggests the following questions, or rather, renews them:

Shall old phraseologies, which should have perished in their using; and which only lead to error, and serve only to hinder and blind — be perpetuated by mere force of habit?

Is it proper to use the term Jesus Christ, as the name of, and applying to one individual exclusively, and that, too, in the masculine gender?

Speaking of Jesus, as a man, should we say Christ, He, etc.?

Is Jesus, or is Christ, our Savior, or do we save ourselves by obeying the Christ as Jesus did?

In common usage, Jesus and Christ are improperly used as synonyms. Does this convey an intelligent idea?

Shall we not accept the dictum of Jesus, "The Son of Man" — "the seed of Abraham;" and when mediating for the Christ Spirit, "I came down from Heaven"?

Jesus said, "It is expedient for you, that I go away, that the spirit of truth may come unto you;" and you become mediators. "They shall guide you in the way of all truth, and they will show you things to come."

Which shall we follow — the individual Jesus, or the Christ — the Spirit of Truth — the Comforter, which glorified Jesus?

Which is more proper — going to Heaven, or bringing Heaven to us — making Heaven? Why not have Heaven within?

Does not the term — "Adam's fall," relating to one individual, thousands of years ago, Induce a feeling of irresponsibility, and blind the eyes to Adam's fall of to-day? Have we not all sinned, after the similitude of Adam's transgression?

Since Spirits are no longer stigmatized as Ghosts, would not Holy Spirit—instead of Holy Ghost—be an improvement?

Would it not be well to think, study and phrase our literature, to the understanding of the present living age, and not pervert language and sense, through time hallowed customs?

If all, or any of these questions can be answered, through the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, more than one might be enlightened.

Elijah Myrick, Harvard, Mass.

END OF THE WORLD.

—o—

A prophet said—"An end, an end, has come."

It is beginning to be considered as an actualized fact, that this earth is periodically populated and depopulated.

Various genera of vegetable growths and different species of animals, organic beings, come into existence, and passing away, become extinct; evidence of their existence only to be found in the inorganic stratified layers of the earth.

During the intervals of total extinction, the globe undergoes necessary repairs, which fit it to again become the garden of plants, and the field of animal life.

We have evidence that this process of life and death is eternal.

The numerous and divers species now in existence on this planet have been running their periodical race some thousands of years.

The indications are, that many of the cultivated species of plants and vegetables, and some of the domesticated genera of animals, have passed their zenith and approach the winter of the ages.

Also, there are races of humans, who, like sick Turkey, are dying out. As witness the Indians and the Yankees, or New England people, who, co-operating with this great law, are losing the love of offspring—becoming extinct.

Something may be done to prolong the lingering existence of these worn-out plants, animals, and tribes of humans; but their dooms-day draws nigh, and new and superior classes impatiently await their exit from the sentient scenes of life.

I have heretofore given you my views upon this important subject, and now allude to it, that you may see the great importance of discussing it in the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.

Touching the human race, I think it is the design of the Powers Above, who overrule mundane affairs, to bring forward the younger races, and compel them to observe the law of animal reproduction, under the tuition of the spirit of Moses—thus forming the new earth.

While the older and worn out races will be harvested by the spirit of Christ, into the new Heaven, or by Death, into the spirit world.

The unwillingness of men to marry, and of women to bear children, preferring thereunto the horrid crimes of fœticide and infanticide, are signs in the old earth; while the growing dissatisfaction with individual and family life; and the spread of co-operative ideas, and of a community spirit, are signs in the old heavens not to be misunderstood; that soon it shall be truly said—an end, an end has come.

Thus it is, progress for the younger and undeveloped animal human races, and resurrection vs. death, to the already refined, progressed, intellectual and spiritual kindreds, nations, races and tribes of earth. To these the Revelator referred:

"I saw an Angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the Everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell upon the earth."

"And the Earth was reaped."

Man cannot cause the Sun to move in space, nor change the relation to each other of the members of the solar system. He cannot make the seed to sprout out of its season, nor make the oak to produce apples.

Man must take the phenomena of nature as he finds them—as they are. And in learning this, he learns truth and humility. He learns that what exists in nature is true, and to value truth, that he must bow to what is—to what, in the nature of things, he cannot change.

J. B. Poole, Hancock, Mass.

HAPPINESS.

—o—

THE desire of the Creator in bringing human beings into existence on this planet was for happiness. We deal with facts—facts within the reach of mental ken. In this world, happiness is the result of obedience to law—misery, of law's infraction. Why not so in other worlds?

By universal law, cause and effect are bound together. No power on earth, nor in Heaven, will divorce them. "The reward of every man's hand shall be given him." "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap;" and wisely so.

The suffering, inseparable from law's infraction, is the remedial agent—man's best friend, Heaven's best mercy—without which, man might be an eternal transgressor.

The writer of this article has had a somewhat diversified experience—has been associated with men in various conditions in life—rich and poor, wise and otherwise. He has now had a brief acquaintance with the Shakers; finds them the most law-abiding—physiologically, morally and spiritually—of any people of his acquaintance, and, of course, the balance, Happiness vs. Misery, is decided in their favor; not because they are a superior race of humans, but because of the advantages of community over isolation, for self-disciplinary and other purposes, enabling to divide the cares, and double the enjoyments—all that is worthy of the name of enjoyment—and thus preparing them for happiness, in all future states of being, in the most rational manner conceivable.

James Hart, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

COLD BATHING.

—o—

DR. DIO LEWIS writes: Just now I am sorry to see that there is a reaction against daily cold bathing. A medical man of my acquaintance cautions his patients against too frequent bathing, for fear the oil may be removed from the skin. He tells them that twice a month during the winter, and twice a week during the summer, are quite enough for anybody. A well-known writer has recently cautioned the world against the removal of the skin oil by too frequent bathing.

This is an entire misapprehension. In hydropathic establishments, the patients are sometimes bathed three or four times a day, but never lose the oil of the skin in consequence. Pugilists, in preparing for the prize ring, are bathed two or three times a day, and rubbed with rough towels by the strongest arms. Heenan was bathed three or four times a day, and was rubbed by Donald and Cusick with all the power of their strong arms, fifteen minutes at a time, and with the roughest towels and brushes, and yet the account says when he appeared in the ring his skin was as beautiful as a baby's.

If cold water were used without soap, a bath every hour, with the hardest friction, would only increase the secretion of oils.

A more frequent objection—one urged by the patients themselves—is that they can't get up a reaction. A lady said to me one morning: "I have tried this cold bathing, but it always give me a headache; besides, I can't get warm for an hour."

Many others have made the same objection. Now, this is all because you don't manage right. If you will manage as follows, the want of reaction and consequent congestion of the head and chest will never occur again. Purchase a bathing mat, or make one by sewing into the edge of a large piece of rubber cloth a half-inch rope; on rising in the morning spring into the middle of it, and with an old rough towel, folded eight or ten inches square, apply the water as fast as your hands can fly; then, with rough towels, rub as hard as you can bear on until the skin is as red as a boiled lobster. This will take one minute, and leave you in a delightful glow.

I have never met any one who, taking the bath in this rapid and vigorous way, was not satisfied with it. — Ex.

POSITION IN SLEEPING.

—o—

IT is better to go to sleep on the right side, for then the stomach is very much in the position of a bottle turned up side down, and the contents of it are aided in passing out by gravitation. If one goes to sleep on the left side, the operation of emptying the stomach of its contents is more like drawing water from a well. After going to sleep, let the body take its own position.

If you sleep on your back, especially soon after a hearty meal, the weight of the digestive organs and that of the food resting on the great vein of the body, near the backbone, compress it, and arrests the flow of the blood more or less. If the arrest is partial, the sleep is disturbed, and there are unpleasant dreams. If the meal has been recent and hearty, the arrest is more decided; and the various sensations, such as falling over a precipice, or the pursuit of a wild beast, or other impending dangers, and the desperate efforts to get rid of it, arouses us, and sends on the stagnating blood; and we wake in a fright, or trembling, or in a perspiration, or feeling exhausted, according to the degree of stagnation, and the length and strength of the efforts made to escape the danger.

But when we are unable to escape the danger—when we do fall over the precipice, when the trembling building crushes us—what then? That is death! That is the death of those of whom it is said, when found lifeless in the morning, "That they were as well as ever they were the day before;" and often it is added, "and ate heartier than common!" This last, as a frequent cause of death to those who have gone to bed to wake no more, we give merely as a private opinion. The possibility of its truth is enough to deter any rational man from a late and hearty meal. This we do know with certainty, that waking up in the night with painful diarrhoea, or cholera, or bilious cholic, ending in death in a very short time, is probably traceable to a late large meal. The truly wise will take the safe side. For persons to eat three times a day, it is amply sufficient to make the last meal of cold bread and butter, and a cup of some warm drink. No one can starve on it; while perseverance soon begets a vigorous appetite for breakfast, so promising of a day of comfort.

Hall's Journal of Health.

THE philosophers of India once possessed a book so large that it required a thousand camels to carry it. A king desired to have it abridged, and certain scholars reduced it so that it could be carried by a hundred camels. Other kings came, who demanded that it should be diminished still more; until at length the volume was reduced to four maxims. The first of these maxims bade kings to be just; the second prescribed obedience to the people; the third recommended mankind not to eat except when they were hungry; the fourth advised women to be modest.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

IDLENESS.

IDLENESS is the parent of destitution and want, the concomitant of vice, and the precursor of blight and decay. Idleness is a great sin; it is as sinful now as it was in the time when the iniquity charged upon Sodom was "fullness of bread and abundance of idleness."

The creative forces of the universe are all the time at work, and by the steady and harmonious action of all the parts great results are accomplished. And when we contemplate the magnitude of the material earth and heavens, according to our limited capacity, and realize how vast are earth's resources, and with what amplitude a kind Providence has provided sustenance for man and all the lower orders of beings possessing animal life, and see with what exactness all the evolutions regarding time and the seasons are made, we can but bow in profound admiration, and we revere the creative powers which formed and perfected such noble plans.

And again, when we see how imperfect (comparatively speaking) are the works accomplished by man, how unequal are his ways, and how unjust is he toward his fellow man, a sense of shame flushes our cheeks, and sadness steals over our spirits. And again, we turn to find the image of the Creator in the created, and we fail to find the needed transformation from the natural, which is first, into the spiritual and heavenly. And the words of the inspired prophet are applicable, "My people have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and have hewed them broken cisterns that can hold no water." Also, "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and the people love to have it so."

The present generation of people, have turned their minds to live by mentality and wit, as far as they can find means to do so, without combining physical strength with the intellectual powers, so as to produce a healthy individual and societal action.

Scarcely a century has passed away since America sought to throw off the tyranny of British rule, because of unjust taxation, and she passed through a severe contest to free herself from the strong hand of oppression, that strove by force of might to make right. England has her landlords to-day, who hold their title-deeds to large estates; but every one knows that they have not gained those possessions by honest toil, and that the millions of landless tenants, who work for a small pittance, and others who are forced, through lack of employment, to steal, beg, starve or commit suicide, have been robbed of their rightful inheritance to the soil.

And America, young in years, but old in designing craft, is taking rapid strides toward reproducing the same condition of things on this continent that she protested against in the mother country; and that, too, while some of the scars upon the limbs of the veterans, who fought and bled on the gory battlefield, to make her a free and happy people, and to prepare a home for the oppressed, are still fresh in the memories of their children.

Pauper institutions have become numerous, and the prison houses of free America to-day are a living prediction of a sad future. They are inadequate to hold all who are sentenced by the high functionaries of the civil law, to atone for crimes committed. But do we suppose, that when all things are duly balanced, before that high tribunal where cause and effect are considered, and justice is meted out without respect to position or dollars and cents, that all the crimes against law will be attributed to satanic depravity on the part of the condemned individuals? Or will the ruling "powers that be," which are ordained by self-seeking and ambitious men, who aim to live in luxury and ease at the expense of others, be held, either directly or indirectly, accountable for a part of it? Certainly the foundations of society, in the earthly order, are out of course at the present time, and the ruling of public sentiment is practically against good morals. How then can we marvel at the spiritual dearth that is felt throughout Christendom at the present time?

There is a learned and eloquent priesthood, who make long prayers and speak oily words in the ears of the people. But the power of salvation is not theirs to give, for they do not possess it; nor can they, while they sanction war, which proceeds from the unsubdued passions or lusts of men; for, while they profess to follow the Prince of Peace, him who said, "My servants will not fight," they strengthen the edicts of civil rulers who announce war, and direct that in time of peace the nation must prepare to resent every insult, and retaliate by returning evil for evil.

How unlike the lowly Jesus, who said "Love your enemies." How can the church dignitaries denounce sin in others, while themselves are the servants of sin? The truth is, the priests and the people are immersed in the waters of sensuality. Hence, the giant sin of the land goes unrebuked both by precept and example. They who should be ensamples to the people over whom they preside as spiritual teachers, are eager to grasp the largest stipend, that they may live in luxury and ease, and recline upon their downy pillows and velvety cushions six parts of the time, and a seventh part is spent in spreading a cloak over the sins of the church-goers, and "daubing the walls" of their costly edifices "with untempered mortar," and thus the so-called religious temples are profaned by a hireling priesthood.

We gladly acknowledge that rare exceptions are found; that there are suffering witnesses of truth in the large body of ecclesiastics, who are waiting in hope and praying in faith for the helper to come to Zion, we would not deny; and that they long for a change that the ponderous burdens now resting upon humanity may be lifted, and that sin-oppressed souls may be freed by the truth. But, how can there be an effectual change, except by individual exertion and self-sacrifice? The work of every new cycle or epoch has been commenced by some individuals who have been pioneers, and have worked their way up-hill, against prejudice and pre-conceived opinions, which are always contending forces against true reform and spiritual progression. The dual nature in man, and in woman, is contradictory; while the animal and sensual seeks its life on the lower plane, through the medium of the external senses, the spiritual part reaches upward to the higher spheres of Divine light and love, where God's angels dwell, who constitute his ministry; and all the emanations proceeding from them will be like fire to consume the propensity nature which produces sin and sorrow, while the soul is elevated thereby to purity of life and stability of action.

The aristocracy have degraded labor, and have practically placed a badge of serfdom upon it; while idleness bears the mark of gentility and respectability. Hence, many get their living by over-reaching, i. e., stealing in a respectable way, and are called smart for so doing; while other persons steal directly, and are punished therefor.

Shakers are striving to elevate labor, by all taking part in it according to our ability; and we place the insignia of virtue and honor upon all branches of useful industry, and aim to have our religion take all true science by the hand; and we make honest labor a welcome guest at our social circles, and make honorable mention of it in our spiritual feasts. We think the Apostle Paul, was inspired with wisdom from above when he gave the command to the Thess, "If any would not work neither should they eat," for it remains true to-day that "slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul suffers hunger."

THE Sisterhood of the Shaker fraternity, send kindly greeting to all who are engaged in the Temperance Cause.

We recognize the present movement, as the commencement of a great Spiritual Revival. The Mother in Deity, is now sending her daughters into the field to work. And if they will toil faithfully, and perseveringly, their efforts will be crowned with success. We bid them God speed! Our prayers and blessings are with them.

PRACTICE.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN said, "A good example is the best sermon."

Practice, — not Theory, — should be the motto inscribed upon the Christian's banner. True Evangelists, who are anointed by the Holy Spirit, and sent forth to preach the Gospel of salvation to others, must of necessity become evangelized themselves, by firstly making a practical application of the principles which they would enunciate to others; for it is easier to teach, than to be taught; and human nature is the same in all ages, and in all nations. It would seem that the same spirit that induced some to compass sea and land to make proselytes in Apostolic days, without much practical good resulting therefrom, is rife to-day. Many run to and fro, but they run in vain; because they do not "tarry until they are endued or anointed, with power from on high."

Some persons, as soon as they conceive an idea, and are intellectually convinced of its truth, rush with a blind enthusiasm to teach others theoretically, while they themselves need to be practically taught the first principles of what they are seeking to promulgate. This feeling is innate in every human being; and it grows with their growth, and strengthens with their strength; hence the necessity of self-discipline. The power embodied in, and the influence emanating from, a person who will reduce to practice his theories, are double the power and influence of one who is always preaching, and seldom, if ever, practicing that which he preaches.

Teachers and theories are multiplied in the land, and knowledge increases with greater rapidity than saving truth. When there are more who are willing to solve great problems, by practically working them out at the expense of self-indulgence, worldly honor, and pleasure, the real success in reforming the world will be far greater than it has hitherto been. There is diversity of minds, and various gifts adapted to the needs of humanity, and the work necessary to be accomplished. But, unless those gifts and talents are sanctified to, and approved by the Power which gave them, and honestly devoted to the uses for which they were given, their potency is lost, and the design not accomplished.

Many, whose voices are never heard in public halls, but who are often found in silent prayer, and deep soul communings with spiritual intelligences, seeking to know what they can do to insure their own salvation, and to facilitate the growth of others in the Divine life, exert a powerful influence for good, and do much towards evangelizing the world.

Not one sparrow is forgotten,
E'en the raven God will feed,
And the lily of the valley
Heaven grants its every need.
Then shall I, not trust thee, Father,
In thy mercy have a share?
And through faith, and prayer, my Mother,
Merit thy protecting care?
—Anna White, Mt. Lebanon.

LIFE, REAL AND IMAGINARY.

LIFE is a great drama, in which every intelligent being may take part to profit. There is room on the stage for all. And if all would enact well their part, and honestly improve the talent committed to their trust, humanity would comprise a brotherhood and sisterhood worthy the name. But they who live chiefly in the imagination, are apt to picture great accomplishments, and fancy how they could acquire royal honors, and erect pinnacles of fame. Thus, while dwelling in the sphere of mental hallucinations, they are apt to be discontented in the sphere of real life, and to exhaust their energies in repinings, because circumstances are not molded to their will, and they cannot have a broader and a wider scope to display their powers, and develop their plans; and they seem to be unmindful of the golden opportunities that are continuously presenting themselves, offering a wide field of useful labor, worthy of their attention, and which invite, and even demand their service. In this way time is wasted, and much work, that would tend to elevate and progress humanity, remains undone.

An individual possessing but one talent, who honestly puts forth his or her efforts, and consecrates his or her life to noble purposes, will stand equally justified and accepted with others, of five, or ten talents, who do the same. Will the true parent reject the most simple heart-offering from one of the little group that clusters round the family altar? Are not the least, as well accepted as the greatest? And, if this virtue blossom in the human, how much more in the Divine! Will our Heavenly Father and Mother discard any devoted endeavor, however small the capacity, if all is given? We hear God's witnesses in the ages past, together with our own reason and conscience, answer, Never.

If we would live the real, let us be contented to work within our sphere, and use the means that are within our reach; and never seek position, rank or station, for appearance, or name; but let our ambition, or aspirations be, to do the greatest amount of good, by firstly improving our own condition and surroundings, morally, and spiritually; and then put forth our efforts to help others do the same.

What will caste, in society, or the honor which cometh from mortals, amount to, without true underlying principles, as a basis of action, and, an approving conscience? It is the indwelling spirit—the mind—that makes the man or woman. And, when the mortal part—the outward covering—is laid aside, we shall be judged by the interior. The fair visage, or well formed contour and rich costume, will not introduce us to the society of the good and the pure, in the land of realities.

The constant vying, so largely indulged in among all classes and grades of society, is a barrier to the true development of the higher and nobler faculties, and brings spiritual dearth to the soul.

In this progressive age, the light of religion, reason, science and common sense, combine, to show the pernicious effects of selfish ambition; and should commend the life and example of the Divine Teacher to our better feelings: "He that would be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all," said Jesus.

If actuated by a spirit of true humility, we shall diligently employ what ability we have to do good, in our mission field, whether it be large or small; when opportunity permits. Through culture and self-discipline, we grow new strength and power, and thereby add to the original gift, or talent. Life is fraught with toil, in every phase, and under all circumstances; but contentment sweetens each duty, and there is ample scope for willing hands and cheerful hearts.

If we cannot mount the summit of fame, we can silently collect the gems of wisdom which fall at the base. If we are too weak to engage in the heaviest conflicts, and are incapable of bearing the most weighty burdens and responsibilities of society, we can lend a helping hand to aid those who do, and sustain and comfort them with gentle words and kind ministrations.

The mighty oak may tower among the clouds, while the modest violet blossoms beneath its shade, perfuming the air with its fragrance. So may the least one of us, shed a benign influence in all the duties of life. Then, let us seek to bring forth the fruit of a diligent contented mind, unalloyed with indolence and selfishness, which would claim the reward that justly belongs to their righteous neighbor.

—Emma J. Neal, Mt. Lebanon.

DEAR EDITRESS:

I feel indebted to you for the continuance of the "SHAKER AND SHAKERESS." I have derived much satisfaction and strength from it. I always hail its arrival with pleasure, and peruse its columns with eagerness. I feel a divine inspiration from the truths it contains; and, I trust it is a blessing to Believers—a cementing bond of union. And, I pray that it may also be a messenger of glad tidings of joy to many souls, who are as "pilgrims and strangers on the earthly plane, seeking a better country," or a better state of things than they have hitherto found. I pray that it may be a power in the land for good—a dispenser of light and truth—and make its well-timed visits to cottages, where the lone widow and helpless orphans dwell; and that, through it they may receive counsel and the balm of consolation, by learning how to flee the producing causes of sorrow.

I am satisfied that there are many truth-seekers at the present time who are faint and feeble, because they do not find spiritual food to nourish and sustain the immortal part; and who sincerely ask for light and wisdom, that they may better understand how to walk more justifiably in this present evil world, and to secure the love and blessing of God. And I have reason to believe that our little "Monthly" is a valuable aid to many; for I have heard repeated expressions, from friends outside of our community, of their appreciation of its worth, as a means to convey knowledge of our principles and life, to many who have hitherto known but little.

As the years of my life roll away, my thankfulness increases for the gift and power of salvation from sin, that I find in my Zion home. And I often feel to say, "Beautiful is my home! and its beauty is enhanced an hundred fold by Gospel kindred dear, whose bond of union is pure and undefiled love. The banner under which we serve is Liberty and Peace! Through unselfish devotion to true principles, the subjects of this work are raising the standard still higher. And that it may wave in the breezes of Divine inspiration, and its brightness increase until its glory shall be seen from afar, many heavy laden, sin-sick souls gather beneath its folds, as children gather to the arms of a loving mother and to the strength and protection of a kind father, is the prayer of your humble sister. I would unite with all my brethren and sisters of the household of faith, and pray for more energy of spirit to conquer self; that we may be able to make a stronger covenant with God and with each other, by greater sacrifices; and gain more of the treasures of immortal life, and receive a new name (or character), and become practically "kings and priests unto God"—medians of Divine truth to other souls, as it was given to us by our Gospel parents.

We are called to be saviors, to stand upon the mount of Zion, and have lamps well supplied with the oil of truth and virgin purity; to "be clad in garments clean and white"—to be increasing in the knowledge that will make us wise unto salvation, and thus be able to diffuse that knowledge to others. In this way, we may pull down the strongholds of evil without, and strengthen the good in Christ's kingdom. And we shall be joyful in following the example of the good physician of souls, who bound up the wounds of bruised and sorrowing hearts and administered the balm of consolation. Let us do likewise, that we may drink at the fountain of life and love.

—Joanna Randall, Shirley, Mass.

"THE WORLD MOVES."

In this age of advancing Science, and controlling Reason, we behold law and order brought forth from the realm of mind and matter. The intellectual genius of to-day, untrammelled by the chaotic and blinding influences of superstition and ignorance, delves deep into the mysteries of things, and finds the key of knowledge, which unlocks the vaulted treasures of the earth, and reveals the cosmic forces underlying growth, action and harmony, so admirably displayed in the face of nature.

Who would now attempt to controvert the universally accepted and established facts appertaining to Astronomy? Yet, only three centuries have coalesced in boundless eternity, since the same facts were branded as false notions. The teachings of the noble Galileo, relative to the Copernican theory of the earth's revolution, were interdicted by Romish ecclesiastical powers. He was severely reprehended, and thrown into prison, because he persisted in the belief that the "world does move." It was not a mere fancy of the mind that led to the conclusion. He invented the telescope. Through that wonderful instrument he scanned the heavenly bodies. Its powerful lens seemed to condensate space until it almost disappeared. Then, was revealed to his extended vision, the fact, that the scintillating stars were not mere luminous particles of light, sprinkled like gold drops across the blue expanse, as they appear in the distance to the naked eye; but, worlds beyond worlds, similar to that on which we live; differing in magnitude, moving with circumrotary motion, each revolving within a given sphere around a grand central orb; subject to the immutable laws of attraction, cohesion, and repulsion, which govern, and harmonize the universe.

No baseless hypothesis that had previously been cherished could change his conclusion; for actual evidence had transfigured the hitherto dark and mysterious regions into glorious realms of light where order and harmony reigned supreme. Nor could the opponents of Science prevail to counterpoise his opinion, which tangible evidence had placed beyond a doubt, or the power of circumvention. With transport of feeling he published the glad news. And we see that the world continues to move, in more than one sense of the word; for the triumphal car of Progress overrides the narrow dogmatical sphere of priestcraft and superstition; and it will roll on with speed, over the yet trackless fields of unexplored truth, leaving light in its path; while vaning error will sink into oblivion, no more to rise in the glory that will flood the earth.

—Martha J. Anderson, Mt. Lebanon.

PHILANTHROPY.

—o—

If philanthropy, as defined, means love, benevolence, and universal good will toward the whole human family, where shall we find a word of broader significance, or one that will include so much good, and exclude so much wrong?

In scriptural language it is said, "God is Love." When a human soul is filled with love, there is not much room left for envy and hatred. True love will elevate the soul, and carry it away from the world, and cause it to place its affections upon heavenly beings, and those things which are eternal in the Divine spheres, where God dwells, and "is all in all."

Love has its counterfeit; but it leads away from God and fills the heart with impure desires—blinds it to the false and vain—and its fruits are manifest in deeds of darkness, in selfishness, retaliation and hatred—the opposite of benevolence and universal good will. Those who possess this kind of love choose to dwell in the world, their life and interest are given to support the principles which constitute the world, which the Apostle defined thus: "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, are not of the Father, but are of the world." But all who possess true and genuine love, have their home in the truth—their dwelling is in God.

If our hearts are aglow with philanthropic zeal, we shall strive to comprehend our whole duty, and to exemplify the life and character of the baptized Jesus in every act which we perform; and we shall assimilate our feelings with all that is true and good, wherever it may be found, and co-operate with every movement that tends to progress mankind toward the ultimate for which they were created, i. e.—a perfect at-one-ment with the Creator.

Philanthropists, in the truest sense of the word, will stand self-adjusted, and manifest their sincerity by instituting a strict and impartial investigation of their own life and character, giving heed to the Savior's injunction, firstly, "To cast the beams from their own eyes, that they may see clearly how to pull the mote from a brother's or a sister's eye." This will necessitate a cross, and will call Gospel faith into exercise; but it is vain for any one to attempt to evangelize others, while they themselves are in the wrong. Eventually, all false coverings will be taken off, and every thing will be judged according to its merit, or demerit. Then, exaggeration of wrongs, or depreciation of virtue, will avail nothing.

Philanthropy will lead to tenderness of feeling, and to compassion for an erring brother or sister; and will teach, that if we would facilitate their growth, it is better to throw a mantle of charity over their shortcomings, than to rebuke them in an unchristian spirit. If we condemn faults in others that we approve in ourselves, we neither love nor do the truth, and are not on a christian basis, but are on a shaky foundation. Pride and selfishness induce us to judge unrighteously; and in this condition we are not fixed in our purposes, but are weak and vacillating, and are liable to be moved by any adverse winds that may blow. When Love is at the helm of the ship, as we sail upon the sea of life, we fear not the storms that may arise; and Benevolence—an amiable, sympathizing friend—will help to guide the vessel safely into port.

Ann Offord, Mt. Lebanon.

SELF-DENIAL.

—o—

It has been said, and that justly, that "there is no benevolence without sacrifice." It is very easy to give that which costs us nothing, or that which we do not want; but, is there any virtue in such benevolence? Is it not like sacrificing the halt and blind, under the Jewish dispensation, which was said to be an abomination?

As Believers in Christ's Second Appearing, we profess to have consecrated ourselves, soul and body, time and talents, all that we have, and are, to the Work of God, and the cause of humanity; but for this, "we have received an hundred fold in this life," with the blessed assurance of eternal life in the world to come.

As I prize my precious privilege in the sin-destroying Gospel, and feel its pure consolation, I would gladly do something towards making known to those who are yet subject to bondage, and the fear of death, how they may gain the liberty of the children of God. I would prefer to be a tarry-at-home missionary; and I think that much knowledge of Believers' faith and principles, may be communicated through the medium of our little paper; and as many have contributed freely to its support, and have also made efforts to give it a wide circulation, I thought that I would make a proposition to those who feel disposed to unite with me, but more especially to those who are young; that is, that we make a free-will offering of some little idol, if we have any; or, that we deny ourselves of some luxury—or resolve to abstain from stimulating food, and drinks, that are not essential to life and health, and thus help to roll on the little "stone (of truth) which is to become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth." Great things often result from small beginnings.

"Bring all the tithes into the store-house," said the Lord by the Prophet, "and see if I will not pour out a blessing, till there shall not be room to receive it." Every tithe will be accepted; and, through sacrifice, prayer is made effectual.

The Savior accepted the offering of the poor widow, who "cast two mites into the treasury." The gift was not estimated by the quantity which she gave, but by the sacrifice which it cost; for she gave her all; and if we do the same, we shall likewise be blessed.

We should regard the laws of health, in a physical, and moral point of view; and be temperate; using the things of this life, as not abusing them; practicing strict economy in our Zion home—laboring diligently with our own hands—employing a portion of the proceeds in disseminating light, and truth, by sending forth "leaves for the healing of the nations," in the form of the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.

Ruth Webster, Union Village, Ohio.

BLESS ONE ANOTHER.

—o—

JESUS said to his disciples, "Love one another as I have loved you." If the example of Jesus in this respect is fully exemplified in daily life, it will destroy selfishness, and eventually "create a new heaven and a new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness."

"In blessing we are blest." It is natural and easy for us to "love those who love us," but "what reward have we" for so doing? Christ said, "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you." We, who bear the Christian name, and profess to follow our blessed Gospel Parents, should be careful that we do not violate our profession upon this point. Let us not be deceived. "We shall reap what we sow." If we sow and cultivate Love and Peace, we shall reap Love and Peace as our reward. On the contrary, if we sow Discord and Strife, we must reap the bitter fruits which grow therefrom.

If we follow the example of our Savior and return blessing for cursing, we shall be safe. "When he was reviled, he reviled not again;" but patiently endured persecution. And when his enemies bore false witness against him, and even spat upon him, he opened not his mouth in his own defense.

Are we willing to suffer like our blessed Master—like him "endure the cross and despise the shame"—and like him wear a crown of thorns, if need be? If we are true Christians, we must follow him, and learn to be like him; "meek and lowly in heart;" and to love and bless one another in the truth. If this we do, the blessing of God will never depart from us.

Mary Middleton, Union Village, Ohio.

THE pure in heart shall see God. What a sublime and beautiful promise. What holy inspiration must have possessed the soul of Jesus, when before a gazing multitude he uttered that Divine promise! A blessing was pronounced on the peacemaker and the mourner—the poor in spirit—and the seeker after righteousness; but the God-seeing are the pure in heart.

One of our Gospel fathers, Elder Wm. Lee, left his testimony concerning the means by which purity of heart may be obtained. He said, "When I set out to follow Christ in the regeneration, I felt it to be my duty to confess all the sins of my life, and then to forsake them; and I felt such fear of God in so doing that I chastened my thoughts, and every turn of my eye that was not after God. And by this self-chastening, my eye became single to the honor and glory of God, and my heart was made pure."

And it is a happy thought that we have in our midst, to-day, Gospel brothers and sisters who through self-discipline have become "pure in heart," and can see God according to the promise of Jesus, who also "endured the cross, despising the shame," and said "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." By thus doing, he became to us a Holy and Divine teacher, whose bright example we revere, and whose sayings we delight to roll beneath our tongues as honey for sweetness, and as bread for strength.

Anna Dodgson, Mt. Lebanon.

CHARACTER.

—o—

It is true, as has often been remarked, that human beings are "creatures of circumstances," to a great extent. But every individual, in a greater or less degree, has the power to form a character independent of circumstances. All are gifted with the power of will and of choice, and also possess the germs of a dual life—the natural and the spiritual—or of good and evil.

A child, both by inheritance and the influences to which its tender and rapidly growing brain is exposed, may receive that which will quicken either the evil or the good within it, which, without doubt, will have a weighty influence upon its future course of action. But, as reason and the will-force are developed the immutable laws of cause and effect are more potent than circumstances, and many are induced by the stronger, to control the weaker, and to examine principles, draw their own conclusions, form their own plans, and decide upon their future course of action through life.

As the brain is moulded by the spirit or mind, its present development will not be a bar to future change and growth into the true, or the false, which will produce joy or sorrow according to its kind. Either must be effected by the action of the will in co-operation with ministering spirits of whatever class we attract to us.

Character is not reputation, and cannot virtually be changed thereby; nor can it be accurately judged by emotional feelings or impulsive words and actions, but by the habitual neglect of, or adherence to, certain principles which may be exemplified in the small acts of life, which help to form the real character.

As the majestic ocean is formed of little drops of water and its extended shores of tiny atoms, so each silent thought, as well as thoughts uttered in word and deed, have a part in shaping the character and destiny of individuals.

Happiness is the desire of every human being, and how to attain the desideratum requires a careful study of all the laws which pertain to physical and spiritual life. How to attain unto true exaltation of character, necessitates thorough investigation of principles, and careful scrutiny of motives, which prompt to action, and of the rules by which we are guided.

The natural life, in its perverted state, is fraught with misery and sorrow. Its highest pleasures are unsatisfying, and will be outgrown in the soul's progress God-ward.

We need a divine unction, that will quicken the spiritual germs of life in our souls, to enable us to form a perfect character. That will insure to us imperishable wealth, joy and glory, and establish us in principles that are immovable, over which circumstances can have no control; and neither the hope of heaven nor the fear of hell will dominate. We shall do right from love of right.

Is it not a point of wisdom for those of us who are young in years, and inexperienced in life, and are now laying the foundations of our future characters, to mark well those who are more perfect than ourselves, that we learn to imitate their virtuous examples and follow them as they have followed Christ and walked in the truth? If purity be the basis upon which we seek to build, and Love our motto, it will be easy for us to assimilate our spirits with theirs, and to harmonize with the pure and good; and with them to drink at the Love-fountains which perpetually flow to earnest truth-seekers, like holy baptisms from the inner heavens.

Catharine Allen, Mt. Lebanon.

LAND OF LOVE.

1. Vell not from us Ho - ly Spl - rit, Beau-ties that are ev - er rife, In our fu - ture home of glo - ry, Land of love and end - less life.

Lift the cur-tain from our vi - sion, Fan the mists that dim our eyes; We would scan the in - ner hea - vens And from earth - li - ness a - rise.

2.
We would take the wings of morning,
And explore the mountain's height;
Or descend in pleasant valleys,
Seeking treasures free from blight;
In a blessed sweet communion
With the loved ones gone before,
We would clasp them nearer to us,
Range with them the heavenly shore.

3.
But we'll bide our time in patience,
And improve each moment well,
In a life of consecration
We will labor to excel.
Forming here a joyous heaven,
By creating one within;
And a home of love and beauty,
Free from discord, strife and sin.

4.
Then abide, O blessed spirit!
Purify us unto thee,
That a tower of strength and glory
To the nations we may be;
And our earthly home foreshadow
Our eternal home above;
Dwelling place of truth and goodness,
Paradise of heavenly love.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

It is a glorious work God has begun;
Hold sacred in your hearts its trust of power;
And when some little vict'ry you have won,
Let that but nerve you for the adverse hour.
O, put your faith in agencies divine!
That can inspire beyond all human strength,
And "greater works" than those of old, will shine
Along your pathway's steep and rugged length.
'Tis said a fearful river flows through hell;
But, can it match the alcoholic tide,
With rock, and whirlpool, and demoniac spell,
That scatter desolation far and wide?
We may conjecture that they are but one,
Connected by a dismal open flume,
Where raging rapids unimpeded run,
To dash their victims through that gate of doom.
And, as we trace the world's broad winding life,
Our minds no darker, wilder flood can see;
Its miry banks with hideous reptiles rife,
Are shaded only by the gallows tree.
It is no myth; we know its burning streams
That carry blight where'er their currents flow,
That bear away the hearts ennobling dreams,
And sink the soul in passions base and low.
The waving harvests, that the Father will'd
From year to year, to show his mindful love,
Are first usurp'd, then wastefully distill'd,
To make his blessing but an evil prove—
To bring to earth the waves of liquid flame,
Whose touch is madness, and whose force is death;
To exile man, from that parental claim,
That fills the soul with inspiration's breath.
If, but the horse-hoof pools along the road,
Miasma to the sunny air exhale,
Will not the river and its marshes broad,
With deadly venom laden every gale?
O, woman, there is work that must be done!
You have but enter'd on its weighty care!
Its darkest sands the hour of sin hath run,
The morning dawns with incense of sweet prayer.
The day shall brighten on your faithful toil;
The will of God within your hearts reveal'd
Will give to them the balsam and the oil.
By which the sad and wounded shall be healed.
God pleads through you; then let him freely speak,
"Grieve not the Holy Spirit," give free course,
And you no more shall timid feel, nor weak;
He has prepar'd for you a strong resource.
For never in the his'try of Reform,
Has man attained a more illustrious plane.
He nobly bears you through the conflict warm,
His heart and hand your energies sustain.
O! we, the sisterhood, who toil apart,
To bring redemption to the earth below,
Know how to prize each brave and manly heart,
That gives its might to evil's overthrow.
Life is so mingled on its every side—
United efforts must its good achieve;
The father may all lib'rally provide,
Yet, must the mother tenderly relieve.
Go forth, as on a mission sent,
Cloth'd with the snowy robes of fervent prayer;
That all who see you may to God repent,
And seek his law—his character to bear.
Your own true purpose, like electric wire,
Will flash conviction through the harden'd heart;
Your supplication like the altar's fire,
Will holy light to all around impart.
May angel choirs assist you when you sing,
And may the Comforter your words impress,
Until the desert in its blossoming,
Shall bring your hearts the blessing of success.
Cecilia Deyr, Mt. Lebanon.

FORGIVENESS.

"Father, forgive them!" The waves of the air
Bore the sweet music of this holy prayer;
When in keen pain and anguish he with'd,
Drinking of gall this petition he breath'd.
"Father, forgive them!" O, heaven inspire
My soul to breathe forth the same pure desire!
Let its sweet music float down to my soul,
Waking to being the same self-control.

Whence came this pow'r, this strength to control
Waves of temptation, that peril'd his soul?
While in the wilderness tempted with wrong,
Kissed in betrayal, and mock'd by the throng.
Here, down the aisles of my heart's home, I find Essence of this love—forgiving—resign'd;
Life is as sweet as the dew the bee sips,
When words of kindness are found on the lips.
Maria Wheeler, Union Village, O.

CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

Struggle yet, thou soul in bondage,
Rend thy ties, and stand thou free;
Find thy fair and bright ideal
In true Christian liberty.
On and upward ever pressing,
To enjoy still purer loves;
Holy independence gaining,
Which the higher law approves.
Holy independence gaining,
O prolong the joyous sound,
Until ev'ry clime and nation
With its gladness shall resound;
Until ev'ry heart shall vibrate
In this universal strain,
Until hearts and voices (blended)
Join in Zion's sweet refrain.

Julia Johnson, Haneock, Mass.

MY CREED.

I hold that Christian grace abounds
Where charity is seen; that when
We climb to heaven, 'tis on the rounds
Of love to men.

I hold all else named piety
A selfish scheme, a vain pretense,
Where center is not, can there be Circumference?

This I moreover hold and dare
Affirm where'er my rhyme may go,
Whatever things be sweet or fair,
Love makes them so:

'Tis not the wide phylactery,
Nor stubborn fast, or stated prayers,
That make us saints; we judge the tree
By what it bears.

And when a man can live apart
From work, on theologic trust,
I know the blood about his heart
Is dry as dust.

J. G. Whittier.

HAPPINESS.

THE conscious pursuit of happiness is found to be one of the most degrading motives in the world. The objects are so various; the points to be considered so numerous; the difficulties so unexpected; the most worldly man is still so mysterious to himself; that what we call happiness is to a very large degree provided for us or denied to us, as air, sunshine, and water are, which may be said to be universally supplied, though there are instances when each of these may fail us. The idea of what happiness consists in varies from the briefest physical indulgence to the faith and patience and fortitude of the saint. The extremes of the idea are as far apart as the clod of earth is from the star in the heavens. A man might as well think of providing for the digestion of his food, or the circulation of his blood, as of successfully keeping in view as a motive of life that infinitely various condition of existence which happiness is found to be. The Epicurean descends to become the epicure. The most determined and narrow-minded willfulness, the coarseness of sensuality, the violence of the brutal, the heartlessness of the idle and frivolous, all come within the limits of happiness, as one or another would define it. When our Master declared for self-denial, both by precept and example, he showed that it is in lives of usefulness, deeds of charity, labors of philanthropy, sentiments of affection, that the true good is to be found. Not by seeking happiness, but by true work in the world, is human destiny best wrought out.—Christian Register.

EDITORIAL WANTS.

WANTED, for coming number of SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, one short, well written, well condensed article, from each Society.

By one, we mean one from Brethren and one from Sisters.

To secure this, each Family might write one article, as above. The surplus may be placed where we often go for some choice contributions.

In the SHAKER are one hundred and twenty inches—about six inches to each Society. In the SHAKERESS, there are ninety inches, being five and a fraction to each.—[ED.]

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

THE Kingdom of Heaven is like a man, who, out of his treasures, bringeth forth things new and old.

Very good. If correct, that kingdom is a system of constantly unfolding truth.

Also, under the figure of a harvest of the world, we conceive the grand idea of a time when human organization, in its ultimate, should conserve the truths of all previous epochs and dispensations.

Dividing our immediate spiritual history, according to our religious records, into two parts, first, the history of the Jewish race, or people, second, that of the Gentiles; we have this map before us.

The spiritual seed time was in the days of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and his twelve sons.

The spiritual harvest of that Jewish race, was in the days of Jesus, his twelve disciples and the Pentecostal Church, with its community of goods, and the resurrection of its members, up and out of the individual and family relation that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob founded; as the basis of the twelve tribes of Jews, comprising the House of Israel.

The intervening history, between Abraham, with the twelve sons of Jacob; and Jesus, with the twelve apostles, is simply the growth of the grain, from the sowing to the reaping.

The progress of the Jewish Nation, was from the individual, to the husband and wife — with their property possessions — gradually increasing into a private family; and that family swelling into a Tribe, and the twelve Tribes uniting into a Nation.

Unto that Nation the Christ Spirit came, as a Savior, to bring that world to an end.

Henceforth, that which God Himself had planted and sowed — the generating family relation, with its selfish property — its individual life — was ruthlessly plucked up. And, that which God had builded — a people, who should dwell alone, and not be numbered with the nations — was unsparingly pulled down. And the whole race of Jews became as a handful of corn, in the top of the mountains; to be scattered, as a spiritual seed, among the gentile nations of the earth, as is recorded, "In thee, and in thy seed, shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

That Order, of resurrected Jews — Jesus, the twelve disciples and Pentecostal community, which the Christ Spirit had thus harvested from the world; was, itself, also translated — cut off from the earth — in about three hundred years. The Holy City — Religious community — was trodden under foot of the Gentiles — the Roman people. Their ensign — the dragon — devoured it by persecution; and it was caught up to the spirit world, where it exists to this present time, a source of prophecy, from which the Kingdom of Heaven will draw old things — Jewish truths — that will revolutionize its agriculture, its physiology, its dietetics, and its community business relations, until all that is worldly and Gentile, all that offends, is, in all respects, abolished and purged out of the Kingdom.

Happy day! Glorious anticipation!! Heavenly light, to enlighten the Gentiles!!!

We have beheld the harvest of the Jewish nation, Christ incarnated in a Jewish man, a representative of the Eastern, or masculine part of the earth — Christ, in their first manifestation. We have seen the power of the holy people scattered, the seed sown among the Gentiles, the Gospel of the Kingdom preached to all nations, living in perverted generation, perverted property relations, and in perverted nutrition: and then the end came, and the Christ Spirit was incarnated in a Gentile Woman, as a representative of the Western, or feminine part of the earth.

A second Pentecostal Community has been formed; and is now, in its several branches, nearly an hundred years old.

"What hath God wrought?" The history, twelve hundred and sixty years, of Gentile christianity. Regeneration taught, and Generation practiced. Peace taught, and war universal. Forsaking all, laying all at the feet of Jesus, preached; keeping all they have, and getting gain without right, from all whom they can circumvent, the rule of Priest and People.

This is confusion, worse confounded. But the peaceful Kingdom of the Branch, that has grown up out of Jesus, and out of the root of the stem of Jesse, is a refuge — a home for the Gentile — and his rest is glorious.

LANGUAGE.

WE are pleasantly bearing in mind the voice of the Prophet, calling our attention to the beautiful future, when God shall return, to his people, a pure language — Zeph.—III.—9.

With what joy we anticipate that heavenly blessing — an Angel visitation of deeper spirituality — "when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

Indeed, they who have already tasted the good word of God, are even now, speaking to us in a language, understood only as we enter the resurrection order, and accept the life of Christ as our heavenly guide. We would ask, in prayer, its adoption, by all who turn their faces toward the City of Peace.

It is recorded, that illuminated minds, in the Pentecostal Church, spake with tongues of fire that came down from Heaven. Should not those who have recently entered the Pentecostal Church, of the present day, seek to be inspired by the same consuming element, and by a baptism of speech from the same elevated sphere? Why should we retain the language of the children of this world? Why should we accept it, knowing, as we do, that its corrupting influence awakens only shame and contempt?

A reference to this subject seems highly necessary at this time, when there is so much license given to gross improprieties of speech, designated as "slang phrases." Added to this is the list of idle words, unkind words, vain words, silly words, angry words, revengeful words, that, in the world, are used, without regard to place or persons. This recklessness of language, like the plagues of Egypt, threatens to deluge the land. Would writers and speakers occupy the same time in speaking truthfully and affectionately, what immeasurable blessings would be the result.

Our home, our beautiful gospel home, consecrated to God, should never be contaminated with the virus of the carnal mind, this blighting sin of the world.

Were these objectionable features confined to the society of the vulgar and abandoned, whom we are obliged to meet in every city, town and village, it might seem to bear a correspondence to their lives. But we find them accepted and used, by those who stand as teachers in society. Ofttimes, the man, who shudders to hear the voice of the blasphemer, does not hesitate to intersperse his conversation with slang, or licentious phrases. He, who uses the first form of speech, if heard, expects to be condemned; while one, who pours this undercurrent of filthiness into the minds of hearers, looks up to be approved.

Upon all deviations from strict propriety — from moral rectitude — the disciples of Jesus Christ and Mother Ann should let their light shine, in serious protestation.

Moses — in Leviticus, chapter V — taught his brethren, that if they even heard the voice of swearing, and did not report the case to the minister at the altar, they should stand equally guilty with the transgressor, and should bear the iniquity. Are we not equally negligent, if we fail to walk as carefully as did the children of Israel? And in any wise not reprove our neighbor, suffering sin upon him, lest unpleasant lessons be impressed upon the minds of the young — lessons which may not become obliterated while in the journey through life. Should one be so careless as to mutilate a sentence, by the introduction of a profane, or vulgar word, it is certainly fastening a bad habit, one which may ultimately lead to serious consequences. It is equally as improper to force vulgar expressions upon hearers, or readers, as it is to oblige them to inhale expired breath.

Ironical expressions are censurable and in many cases no better than falsehoods.

Speak, carefully and distinctly, words worthy to be repeated, and we are safe in saying, there will be but few expressions of which to repent. Be as the Lord's servants, advocates of that pure language, which should have the first place among the followers of the Christ Spirit — the children of the Resurrection.

Eld. Henry C. Blinn, Canterbury, N. H.

THEOLOGICAL TREASURY.

—o—
CONFESSION—REPENTANCE.

AMONG the instructions given to the early Christians, none were more essential than that they should confess, and forsake their sins. This should not be overlooked by honest seekers after truth.

To those who feel that they are whole, this medicine of the good physician is very distasteful, even to abhorrence; while such as have been trained in popular sectarian channels, will pronounce the confessional a supporter of a spiritual inquisition—a relic of barbarism.

Be confession a Roman Sacrament, or not, is quite immaterial. Confession is a Christian dispensation, nevertheless; and is, after conviction, the first step in Christian progress.

We honor the Roman Church for retaining, even though imperfectly, this Godly ordinance. And while Protestants sneer at such humiliating procedure as the confession of sin, we would that God in his mercy, inaugurate something equally effective for the condemnation of sin, in Protestant Churches, the world over. True, these latter churches have protested against the wrong-doings of their Mother; and so zealous have they been in their protests, that the vices and virtues of the Mother have shared the common fate of denunciation by the Daughters; while the latter are wanting in some of her redeeming features.

The Confessional was a Jewish establishment. John Baptist was a confessor.

Among multitudes of Jews, who came to be baptized of John, in Jordan, was one JESUS; and as John baptised them—they confessing their sins—Jesus passed the same ordeal, with other Jews. As a good Jew, he had accustomed himself to do this, once a year. If Jesus, as Christian, was tempted in all points, yet without sin; there is wanting evidence that he failed to fulfill his Jewish obligations in the confession of his physiological, or Jewish sins.

Jesus taught his followers to confess, and repent of their sins. Did Jesus err, under either Jewish or Christian government, he confessed and repented of the same.

Protestant Clergymen are realizing the fact, that some of the blackest crimes, commonly committed by their flocks, are almost unknown in Catholic folds. Some of them are noble enough to make public this admission, and attribute the greater protection to the Confessional.

It is interesting, though not positively necessary, to allude to the consternation in Thos. K. Beecher's Church, when he recommended the practice of confession, as making a man feel nobler, by going to some confidential friend and confessing the wrongs of his heart.

Confession of wrong is not only a reasonable requirement, but through this door of hope—the valley of Achor—individuals are enabled to pass to the higher condition of life—repentance—the forsaking of sins confessed.

But confession may be made a mere churchal formality, which, without the necessary accompanying repentance, is like faith without works—dead.

To souls burdened with Pilgrim's bundle of sins—with the knowledge that God requires confession to Him, witnessed by the most confidential friend, ere absolution can be obtained—confession becomes a balm for all their woes; while repentance reinstates them in justification.

Confession was demanded in Hebrew times, but was not followed by Christian mercy. In Joshua's address to Achan, we have clear definition of rational Jewish confession—"My son, make confession unto God, and tell me what thou hast done. Hide not from me."

Confession is made to God—narration to the Elder. "Whoso covereth—hideth—his sins shall not prosper." He that confesseth and forsaketh shall have mercy."

Coming down to Apostolic times, we are counseled to confess our faults, one to another: "If we confess our sins, and forsake them, He is just to forgive our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "They that believed, came and confessed and showed their deeds."

Under the baptism of the Pentecostal spirit the same fruits will be manifest.

As a legal document, void of signature, so are the Nations and Sects who forget God by denying auricular confession.

Mother Ann Lee's testimony revived the form and spirit of oral confession. As Jesus confessed to John, so did Ann confess to Jane Wardley. Thus Ann became the Mother of a New Order—a New Creation—wherein should be confession of sin—Males to Males—Females to Females—and wherein, as a consequence, should dwell exceeding righteousness.

Said Mother Ann—"I love the day I first received the Gospel—I call it my birthday—I felt such a sense of my sins, that I was willing to confess them before the whole world. I confessed my sins to my Elders, one by one, and repented of them in the same manner. When my Elders reproved me, I felt determined not to be reproved twice for the same thing, but to overcome the evil for myself."

Many were Mother's counsels concerning the definiteness of honest confession. The same testimony is maintained by her followers; and their growth and spiritual prosperity are commensurate with their punctuality to the order of confession, and renunciation of their sins.

Some one asked Mother—"What is repentance?" Mother instantly replied—"Leaving, forever, the sins we have confessed." This, as an accompaniment to the definition of Truth, by Jesus, can hardly be excelled.

To those who would experience thorough and eternal abandonment of error—who would have their sins go beforehand to judgment, and not follow after them to condemnation—we advise honest confession to God, and the narration to some bosom, or confidential friend. And let him, or her, understand that confession and repentance are the door to Shaker homes and heavens.

To the sin-sick and heavy laden, the invitation is, "Seek and ye shall find—Knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Elder G. A. Lomas, Watervliet, N. Y.

SCATTERING CHIPS.

By J. M. PEEBLES.

It was a beautiful inspiration that led the apostle to write "Not as though I had already attained, either were absolutely perfect." (Phil. iii, 12.) So long as there is a consciousness of imperfection—so long as there is a willingness to confess—to forsake—and try again to "overcome;" there is hope—yea, certainty of a harvested soul.

There is a marked distinction between Spiritualism and Spiritualism. The first is a mere science—the demonstration of a future existence! But Spiritualism in its broadest, divinest sense, spans every thing that is spiritual and holy. "God is a Spirit"—and to be "spiritually-minded is life." Those only are spiritualists who believe in the ministry of angels and spirits, and make that belief not a philosophy only but a religion, a practical power in their lives. The fruit reveals the tree.

Though there are "many mansions" in our Father and Mother's house—one door only leads into them—and that door is purity. The pure in heart alone have the promise of seeing God.

Our good Quaker poet John G. Whittier is a celibate—a "virgin unto the Lord." That glorious picture-gallery of apostles, martyrs, celibates, that crown with gold the pages of history, is reflected and made immortal upon the jasper walls of the New Jerusalem.

"Resist temptation," is a rational biblical command. Though the thread of magnetic sympathy, which the enchantress winds around her victim, is unseen, it often binds the individual so firmly that escape is next to impossible. Mind must govern the physical—soul conquer sense. "I keep my body under," writes the apostle, "and bring it into subjection, lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

It is not philosophical to say—"man has a spirit"—but rather, man is a spirit; and the "death-rattle" is the angel-signal for moving out, and up into the better mansion of immortality.

Melchisedec, over the purple of the priesthood, was an individual baptized of Christ. Abraham recognized this at once:

"Wherever a real saint has lived, and worshiped, wherever a great seer has appeared, walking thousands of years before his time, and lifting the soul of generations into a higher civilization, there is an element of historic authority for Spiritualism. Spiritual philosophy is the living science of all time. Its priests are such souls as Pythagoras, Socrates and Plato; Jesus, Swedenborg, and Ann Lee;* Copernicus, Kepler, Galileo, and Newton; Leibnitz, Descartes, and Laplace. These have been the ministers of an ever-advancing religion, whose ideas and discoveries have given names to certain epochs of thought. Members and chiefs in God's infinite spiritual republic are they, from whose souls whole civilizations have sprung. The historical authority behind Spiritualism is equal to that behind all the thousand and one theological sects of the whole world."

Modern Spiritualism is having much to do in the politics of the French nation. A late London Daily has this:

"M. THIERS A SPIRITUALIST.—The Paris correspondent of the Echo of Aug. 28 says:—"M. de Lavedan, the Prefect of the Department of the Vienne, furnishes us with the following authentic details:—A few weeks ago M. Thiers did me the honor to inform me that he was occupied with a special work, independent of his other labors. 'I should be glad,' he exclaimed in a tone of noble indignation, 'to confound materialism, which is a folly as well as a peril. There is a fine book to be made on this subject, and I have as yet only written the half of it. Certainly I devote myself with my whole heart to the liberation of the territory and the reorganization of the country, but at times I cannot help regretting my peaceable and cherished studies. For twelve years I have been engaged in this work; during all that time I have been exploring botany, chemistry, and natural history for arguments against the detestable doctrine which leads honest people astray. I am a Spiritualist, an impassioned one; and I am anxious, I repeat, to confound materialism in the name of science and good sense.'"

As death is no savior, and as there are spirits mischievous, erring and fallible, John wisely said—"Beloved believe not every spirit but try the spirits." Try them how? by our judgment and the reasoning faculties that God has given us. "Men shall judge angels."

* Jesus and Ann, through a Christ baptism, were anointed Mediators of a New Covenant.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANSWER to a letter from an outside friend, who states that our best public men are dropping off the stage — that plundering the public by corrupt officials exceeds any thing ever experienced by the citizens of this Republic — that huge rascalities are coming to light every week; and that dull times prevail.

RESPECTED FRIEND:

The public officials of to-day demonstrate that human nature (the lower nature in man) is the same now as in the past. Office holders in this country imitate, as far as they can, their cousins in England. There is Earl Derby, he is in office, and paid out of the public purse to sustain an order of things which enables him and his compeers to take the cream off the industries of the nation, every day. These men have been so long at such kind of work, that they have organized their robberies into order and respectability. In this country, stealing and lying about it, go on bravely; but are not yet respectable. Tweed is in the penitentiary. Now if we could contrive to send these dukes to the penitentiary too, how pleased I should be. I would not have anybody be at the trouble of keeping them in doors, in a costly building, and bringing victuals to them. I would leave them out doors on a ten acre farm. And seeing everybody desires to be Duke or Duchess, I would send them to a ten acre penitentiary too. All being engaged to get a living, the Duke would not be able to coax anybody to work for him. Hence, he would have to dig his own drains, and grub out the scrubs for himself. And the Duchess might enjoy the poetic duty of milking her own cow, and stand a chance of being kicked over as well as anybody else. As regards the legislative wisdom in council assembled in Christian nations (so called), I am down on the whole of it. I would have no such gatherings; everlastingly doing something that does not and ought not to stay put. They breed corruption. Let every man stay at home, save mileage, and do the voting and talking by mail. Why not? As far as personal behavior and public honesty are involved, the assembled legislative wisdom of Christendom is rather rude, windy withal, and rather devilish. I venture to say, that the monkeys in the woods manage their affairs with more dignity than do our male Solomons. At all events, they never confound their own confusion, by creating panics that last more than an hour or two, and that cannot be healed over by a good night's rest in the trees. In the morning the monkey is right side up; no soup kitchen in the midst of plenty; no sending of their food out of their country (as in India) during a famine.

Carlyle thinks, that a hundred years ago, matters in England were in a better condition than they now are. A London editor shows up the state of things about that time. Going back on the record does not improve the aspect. Some think there is more good on the earth now than at any former period. The indications are, that justice between nations and individuals will increase. But I have not time to wait till the animal emotional man has brought forth a civilization bearing only good fruit. A civilization based on divine human emotions is my choice. The result is, I am where peace, and something more than justice is the rule — where dull times never come; and where obedience to Hygienic Law will triumph over hereditary taints, and induced disease; and where the power of sinless life will finish transgression, put an end to sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness — a new creation. In the land of souls, states and conditions — the growth of our past lives — will be to us, as the case may be, heaven or hell. To heighten the joys of the former, by loving the neighbor at the expense of self; and to utterly extinguish the latter, by an application of the same Law, will be the employ of every good spirit. To "Speak peace where discord reigns,

Appease the flood;
And for revenge,
Persist in doing good."

Daniel Frazer, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

NATURE AND REVELATION.

It is related that the first Ambassadors of the English Government to the King of Siam, told him many strange things concerning their country, and among the rest, that the water of their rivers sometimes became so congealed by cold, that his elephants could walk upon their surface. To this he replied, that they had previously told him many things hard to believe, but now he knew they lied and he did not believe the rest of their stories.

Did disbelief alter the facts, or prove any thing but the king's ignorance? Does the assertion that it is impossible for all mankind, in the final event, to become Christians or Shakers, either in this or the next world, have any better foundation than did the disbelief of the king? Is it not assuming to know more than God has given nature wisdom to teach? Is not the argument upon that side confined to negations, like those of the materialist, who disputes beyond the test of his physical senses?

Who, without the previous knowledge of the metamorphose, would prophesy a moth from a caterpillar, or even believe the change possible, without witnessing the fact? Who, without any previous knowledge of eggs, could tell, the first time they saw one, what it would produce under suitable conditions?

Is not man frequently discovering new developments of facts, for which his previous experience affords no satisfactory clue to an explanation?

What does man know of the latent powers and faculties engendered in his own being, awaiting proper seasons and conditions to call them into activity and growth? What can he know of what will be his state, after putting off the mortal form, except by revelation of a wisdom superior to any yet found in material nature, or by the physical senses? And that Revealing Spirit which has proved itself superior to all the reasons and philosophy of man, by its power to control the destinies of nations, and direct the kingdom of the world, claims to emanate from the Creator, which none can dispute, while man's greatest wisdom is unable to scan the mystery of his own being — or to certainly ascertain whence, or why, he came, or whither he is going.

Should not these plain facts teach us humility and dependence upon a wisdom and love superior to our own? "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." When man approaches the subject of Deity, as a learner, and investigates his religious and spiritual nature by the light of Divine revelation, with the same care and diligence that he now investigates material nature and science, being careful to reduce his light to practice as fast as he obtains it, he will cease to obstruct the avenues of spiritual and religious knowledge by hastily deciding the truth or falsity of that which he does not comprehend. When he enters the realm to interrogate, consider and practice, his advance in true religious knowledge will be as rapid and marvelous, as has been his advance in science and useful art since he exchanged theorizing for the inductive methods. But man is born in a natural state which was designed to be a preparation for the spiritual and superior; hence "that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, afterward that which is spiritual."

Nicodemus did not comprehend how a man could be born again, and comparatively few know any thing about it now. Still, it is a fact known to have occurred with many individuals. And yet, of the many who barely suppose the thing possible, how few desire to understand any thing of its nature and character.

We think we know, universal experience being the proof, that mortal death is sure to every living creature. This is a fair type of the death in Christ, of the earthly generative nature by which the sentient life principle of the soul, is liberated to mount higher, broader, into purer fields of light, to expand in blissful activities, free from the blight of sin and shame, wrought into the texture of its earthly covering by its own transgressions and those of its natural ancestors; amid the discords of a previous transient, shadowy, and mole-eyed existence.

What is possible for one in this respect will, soon or late, be possible for all. As none are exempt from physical death, so none will be exempt from death to the pleasures and satisfactions of the earthly, generative life. But according to the plan of human free agency, which God does not arbitrarily control, it is left to man's option, after being fully enlightened as to consequences, whether he will accept that life which is eternal, or cleave to the earthly and shadowy unto the second death, from which as yet we have received no certain knowledge of the issue.

Hence the divinely inspired Teacher and Father of the New Creation says, "He that loveth his (natural, generative) life shall lose it," for it shall expire by natural limitation, according to the law of growth and decay, which inheres in all natural things — or by the limitations of Time and season, natural and spiritual, in the gradually unfolding plan of the world, of which men's earthly being forms a part; unless it be previously destroyed by the operation of the seed of "Faith in Christ." But "He that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal," receiving the latter in exchange as he puts the former off. For, as no man can receive a reward or permanent possession of happiness in himself, except by his own labor voluntarily performed, therefore, this first life is the price put in his hands, wherewith to purchase the next and superior one by toil and sacrifice.

Then, "diligently agonize to enter in at the strait gate," all ye who desire the privileges and immunities of the New and supernal Creation, which is not formed by a partial Deity for a specially favored few, irrespective of choice and works, but for every soul of Adam's race who is willing to earn it by paying the full price necessary to gain it. For now, the disabilities referred to by our Savior, in his first appearing, are being removed from every creature that hears and obeys his voice; and are laid upon the body of sin, from which the soul is liberated by confession and repentance — and the daily cross — while the call proceeds from the Spirit and the Bride saying, "Come, for all things are now ready" — "Come whosoever will, and let him that heareth, say Come, and partake of the water of life freely."

Alonzo Hollister, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

THANKSGIVING.

—O—

AT Pleasant Hill, Kentucky, Thursday, Nov. 25, 1873, the Shakers, as is their wont on such occasions, in all due respect to the powers that be, regarding them as ordained of God, for the protection of both the civil and religious departments, each in its appropriate sphere, assembled. Kindly invited, by the Elder of the congregation, I spoke; in substance, something as follows:

Much beloved Brethren and Sisters,

We are met here to-day in compliance with the Civil Department, through the instrumentality of the Governor of the State. I hope and believe it will result in the fact, that it is good for us to be here. If ever I felt thankful for any favor, I feel thankful to-day, especially to-day, for the government under which we live — believing, as I sincerely do, from overwhelming evidence, that it is the way — the contemplated Highway, which the good Lord said should be cast up, accompanied by the Way of Holiness.

The aforesaid two Ways were, according to the true letter and spirit of prophecy, introduced into the world simultaneously, at the proper time and age of the world, as a special act of the Divine providence and grace of God, for the true foundation of both the Civil and Sacred departments, and their eternal progress and prosperity.

Now, permit me to express my surprise, to find a party of Americans, either native or adopted, under the auspices of this, the best government God ever gave to man, who are making strenuous efforts to place their sectarian God in the National Constitution. The Constitution, framed, under Divine Guidance, by our revered Revolutionary Fathers, for an everlasting Bulwark of Human Liberty, both civil and sacred.

Let every American, with a Soul in him, and her, unite as the heart of one man and woman, and stand up in support of our Magna Charta, and not suffer a faction to plunge us back to ages of oppression and wrong, entailing abject depression upon coming generations.

Let this favored land of Liberty be, for ever be an asylum for liberty-loving souls, for the oppressed of all nations—of all lands—until Earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Geo. R. Hudson, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

THE HIGHER LIFE.

MAN is a duplex being, represented by two opposite conditions, the earthly or generative life, and the higher, spiritual or regenerative life. These two states are often in conflict with each other; the one urging him to look for enjoyment in sensual indulgences; while the other urges him to seek his enjoyment in the development and growth of his intellectual, moral and spiritual nature.

The internal life of man is like a flower, that gradually unfolds itself from the dormant bud, swelling and bursting its covering and expanding itself in its utmost beauty,—the immortal, spiritualized man or woman. In his rude and undeveloped state, man seeks to supply merely the wants of his animal nature, but as his mind expands, his intellectual nature must be nourished with its proper aliment. The pleasures that once delighted him, now prove inadequate to supply the wants of his being. Rising still higher in the scale, his moral faculties claim attention; the spiritual now begins to unfold itself and demands the necessary nutriment. He is called upon to hold in subjection the propensities of his animal nature, and bring them to the law of use. If he allows them to control him as they formerly did, heavy penalties are sure to follow; for light has come from the higher spheres and illuminated the soul, influencing it to advance beyond its former condition, and attain to that which is the ultimate of human aspirations.

This is not a myth, nor a dream, but a reality. The spiritual life is in harmony with all of nature's laws, and hence perfectly natural. Though the higher faculties be buried in the grave of sensuality, yet, some day, they will rise to life and hold complete sway over the lower propensities. To a soul who is living in the indulgence of perverted passions, the idea of the sexes living together in the enjoyment of the higher life, in daily association with each other, appears mystical, and unreal, if not quite impossible. As James Peebles says:—"You might as well talk metaphysics to mummied gorillas as to talk of a love divested of passion and earthliness, to those who swelter in the lower departments of their cranial organisms." The fact is, their minds are not developed enough to comprehend the higher life; there must be a gradual unfolding of the mind up to the plane of morality, and then onward till the higher life is attained.

If we trace the history of mankind back for thousands of years, we see the higher life unfolding itself in the establishment of institutions designed to aid the soul in its aspiration for something above the merely sensual. The sexes secluded themselves, in such, from each other's society, for the purpose of attaining to that which they thought it impossible to gain by association. History does not furnish us, in all the past, the example of a religious community, that has practically carried the higher life to that degree of perfection, which the Shaker Church has done. Here there are no bolts to prevent social and spiritual communion, sex commingling with sex in accordance with the law of divine love, but every thing tends to give growth to the whole man and woman, intellectual, moral and spiritual. Brethren and sisters feel the band of union growing stronger as time passes, while faithful performance of the duties of the present life prepares them for the enjoyment of every thing which awaits them in the future.

Hamilton De Graw, Groveland, N. Y.

TRIBUTE OF THANKS AND LOVE.

As it is a cardinal principle, and standing order, in Shaker organizations, to pay all just debts, I feel it incumbent on me to present my thanks and love to the editors, contributors, and all, who bless and sustain our Gospel messenger. I have been edified and instructed in reading valuable articles, on various interesting subjects, all designed to help the mind develop and grow into the angelic life—to form a heaven now, on this terrestrial sphere. I offer my union and blessing, as a link in the chain of universal love—now being created in our Zion home—to draw the wandering and erring under the benign influence of peace. In purity is peace.

An eye single to the glory of God, and the testimony of Christ, now in the Female Order, is good religion. It yields the peaceable fruits of righteousness. I pray for a living increase of resurrection life and power, to carry us away from all that is held in high esteem, in the narrow selfish, generative order. We want a higher, purer and holier relation.

Here are the germs of Life Divine unfolded to us, as we, by virtue of the Cross of Christ, live a true, consecrated life of self denial. I love my Shaker home. For the blessings found therein, I freely sacrifice all that is dear to the carnal mind. In bonds of Love,

John M. Brown, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

BURNING, BUT FRIENDLY.

LIKE an oasis to the desert traveler—like a city of refuge to the ancient criminal—Shaker villages stand, with hospitable, open doors, inviting the sin-sick and needy to partake of their spiritual verdance—to come and claim their spiritual birthright—and, if not accusable of hypocrisy, or deceit, to be judged worthy the rights and privileges of the Sons and Daughters of God.

Had I a voice, loud as the Archangel's Trumpet, I would gladly proclaim to that world of sin, that maelstrom of iniquity, from which I have so recently severed myself, that I have found Christ—a Savior, risen anew. Come, and behold what wondrous things are wrought here, by the Lord—Men and Women, who have washed and made themselves clean—living lives of virgin purity, by day, and by night, doing only what is pleasing in the sight of just Heaven. Formerly, differing in language, religion and blood, now agreeing in one faith, living in sweet harmony, dedicated to the Lord, to do his will—at all times willing to spend and be spent in the cause of their God, and for each other—void of selfishness, inviting all, who will, to come and partake of their blessings and favors, and of the waters of life freely.—Come, and having tasted of heavenly fruits, and breathed the air of purity, say if this is not the way of God—the very Gate of Heaven. Nothing other than heaven-born love and influence could make the sons and daughters of fallen, degenerate, sensual man, to be, from virtuous principle, so self-denying, generous, forgiving and self-crucifying.

To me, a novice, it is most encouraging to know, that though many systems of so-called religious reform, with their Vesuvius-like, fitful ebullitions, have been, and gone, the true, radical, adamant principles of Shakerism remain entire—the same living testimony to-day, as in the beginning—like the thunderings of Sinai, sharp, powerful and convicting—a terror to evil doers—yet a praise to those who do well. Built upon the Rock of Ages, it shall stand! It shall stand, a witness for the truth, until no one shall say to another, Knowest thou that new way?

All shall know it, in spirit and in truth, rejoicing in this new Jerusalem, Jesus and Mother Ann being the key and corner stones. Though threatened, at times, by foes within and foes without, the sea of life, with its passions and prejudices surging around, the spiritually deserving can read on her portals, Holiness to the Lord. Thus far shalt thou come, and no further. We have the assurance, that though angry billows assail, the righteous shall surely prevail.

I rejoice in that which makes me free from the power of sin and death—that in the midst of so much darkness and delusion, there is so much life and light. I rejoice in the testimony of Mother Ann, which, compromising nothing to truth, wages eternal warfare against the growing evils—the damning sins of society, in this and other lands—particularly fornication and infanticide.

What ground of hope, for radical reform, is there, while Government Officials barter and betray the interests of their common country? while wealth, not principles, is the criterion by which they are measured? while spiritual guides—blind leaders of the blind—remain hushed, in the midst of such vice?—while luxury and sensual gratification are the desideratum?—while science is prostrated to mercenary purposes?—while scholars are pensioned flatterers in Church and State?—while education and talent can be bribed?—while the medical profession, from being the handmaid of nature, can, for filthy lucre, be seduced to dig elbow-deep in ways that are dark, soul-destroying and damning? How long—how long, O God, shall the working of such iniquity go unpunished?

In view of the plague spots, in all grades of society—thankful that I have been called to the higher life—my constant prayer is, that in childlike obedience to my spiritual Father and Mother, I be fitted and prepared, a living stone in the Temple of God—a light, to such as walk in darkness, that they, too, may come forth and partake of the resurrective power of life.

Robert G. Moore, Enfield, Ct.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

"THE Christian world is looking forward to a time when all men will be judged. But they look too far. They overlook the great fact that every day is a day of judgment; that the trial is going on, convictions are obtained, and sentence is being pronounced upon men every day, and they are taking their places at the right hand or the left, according to the verdict.

"The laws of the divine order extend to the minutest events of life, and to all the operations of nature; there is no escape from their jurisdiction, and no possibility of evading their police. Men vainly think they can do wrong and evade its consequences; but it is impossible. Wicked men conspire to rob a city. They succeed. They take millions of money from the people; they gain immense power; they control elections, and legislators, and courts of justice. There seems to be no limit to their power, no means of bringing them to justice; and they riot in their stolen wealth, and laugh at the feeble efforts to punish them.

"But their trial is going on while they least suspect it. The witnesses are being called, and the evidence of their guilt is accumulating. They may defy the civil law for a time, but they cannot escape the power of a higher law than the civil, and in the end they cannot evade that. Every new act of fraud or robbery, and every word of defiance and contempt for the principles and the friends of justice, is one step toward conviction and punishment.

"It may not always be the punishment which the civil law prescribes, but it will be quite as severe. They may escape to foreign lands; but their escape is banishment and disgrace. They may revel in their stolen wealth, but it will not bring them happiness. Even if they become so hardened as not to feel any compunctions of conscience for their evil deeds, that hardening of the heart and indifference to right is a greater punishment than the civil law can inflict. It is imprisonment of the worst kind. It bars the soul from all that is good and true; it renders it incapable of enjoying the greatest blessings of life; it imprisons it in a dungeon to which no ray of the highest light can ever gain access. There is no condition more terrible than that.

"We come to wrong conclusions concerning the certainty and the severity of the punishment of sin, because we judge it by too low standards, and regard the civil penalty as the principal one. We forget that the divine laws operate whether human laws are executed or not, and that it is impossible to escape their penalty, which in all cases is exactly measured by the guilt. It is not a feather's weight more or less. The civil penalty is only the shadow of the real one. So far as the criminal is concerned, it is of but little consequence whether he escapes the civil penalty or not. The real one he certainly will suffer."—New Jerusalem, Mo.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

COURAGE, TOILERS.

Life and growth, or death and decay, are stamped upon all things in a terrestrial sphere of existence. Inaction precedes decay, and indolence endangers the health of both body and mind.

In this world of ours, where human suffering abounds, caused by either ignorance or willful transgression of natural or spiritual laws, and where so much is needed to be done, how can any, who are capable of feeling the convulsive throes of hearts struggling for liberty, and longing to burst the chains that bind them, and to flee the prison houses whose massive walls encase them, be willing to withhold their efforts from doing what is in their power to bring about a better state of things? Everyone may do something; no one who has strength should fail to give it in a good cause. Does the question arise, what can I do? I am but as a grain of sand upon the sea shore, when compared with millions of earth's inhabitants, who possess talent, wealth, and power, that would far outweigh all that I possess. The answer would be: Every grain placed in the scale of truth, against error, will be of use; for ten thousand such grains might turn the scale in the right direction; and it is far wiser to cast our mite into the balance than to do nothing. It is better to sympathize with, and to pray for, those who feel the bitter pangs of destitution, whether in a physical, moral, or spiritual point of view (each condition produces misery and woe), than to turn a deaf ear to the cries of the needy, and think that God is able (if willing), by some miraculous power, to change conditions, without the agency of man and woman, and thus shirk all responsibility, and seek the epicurean's part. The orderly arrangement of God's laws through mediative agencies cannot be changed; as well might the agriculturist attempt to plow, and sow, and reap, without the utensils of husbandry, as for God to accomplish his work unaided by the instruments which He has created for that purpose. Man and woman, assisted by a superior intelligence, are his implements to effect his designs in relation to the elevation and salvation of the human race.

Those who deposit seeds in the soil, expect them to germinate and return an increase to the sower. Some may bring forth "thirty, others sixty or a hundred-fold," according to conditions; but all are expected to return something. So should it be with created beings who are endowed with reason, whether they possess one talent or five. God will call for his own with usury. There are diversified gifts and talents, and there is a place for every-one; for there is a large field open, and a great work to be done, to pull down the false, and build up the true; and that work should commence with every individual.

The exercise of true wisdom and charity would lead to self-discipline—to the correction of error in the individual life and character—before attempting to destroy the wrong that is in others. "Ah, here comes the rub!" There are thousands of brilliant talents employed at the present time in advocating right principles, depicting the wrong, and decrying the flagrant sins and crimes that are increasing with fearful rapidity throughout the length and breadth of our land, who have never subdued the producing causes of those crimes in themselves. That is the reason why so many who are professedly in the work of reform accomplish so little; they point the way, but do not practically lead the van.

There is power in Truth; and, when uttered by the tongues and lips of the righteous—those who do the truth—"it is like choice silver," and brings health and life to the hearer. Words, thus spoken, breathe vitality to the fainting spirit, and give solace to the afflicted, rest to the weary, and meat in due season to the famishing. But seers may well be ashamed, and learned divines confounded and cover their lips, when there is no answer from God, and no response from the hearts of the people.

Talent, when rightly improved, is a great blessing, not only to its possessor—it is a gift to humanity. Wealth of mind is of far greater value than gold of Ophir; for gold cannot buy wisdom. But when talent is profaned, and laid at the feet of ambition, self-seeking and self-pleasing, then we feel that an enemy has usurped what should have been the inheritance of the needy; and God, the Giver, is dishonored thereby. If, on the other hand, all worldly and selfish considerations are sacrificed to just principles, and, with integrity of purpose, talent grasps the hand of virtue, and holds it with unflinching purpose, then we feel that there is a triumph of truth, and a victory gained for humanity.

Without doubt, many of the ancient philosophers, knowing the frailties of the human heart, and the danger of temptation to desecrate their God-given powers to false uses, were influenced to avoid such temptation by seclusion; and through prayer, ablutions, sexual purity, and extreme self-denial, to do their work; and they were blest in their trusting devotion. They became so far lost to worldly attractions and pleasures, derived through the medium of the external senses, that they were linked to the Divine.

The earth was younger then than now; and her children reasoned less and believed more; they were guided more by conscience and intuition than by reason. Now people reason much, and believe little, for the voice of conscience is but little heard or heeded.

Those Ascetics were "the salt of the earth," the Saviors in their day. Many of the sublime truths which they taught, have overleaped time and space, and have come down to us in their soundness, freshness, and beauty; and they will descend through history to future generations. Truth never grows old.

Now, if we can strike a middle line between Epicurism and Asceticism, and boldly engage in the Christian warfare, and meet temptation and overcome it, and let both reason and conscience have a place to work and perform their proper functions, then will Justice and Truth join hands, and Mercy and Peace embrace each other, to the joy of mortals, and the delight of Angels.

Our credentials to the higher Christian life, and our claims as workers in the fields of physical and moral reform, must be presented in life deeds—real tangible works. Then we can with confidence declare our faith whenever and wherever there are ears to hear. Living, active faith, attended with righteous deeds, will conquer death and bring new life, and will give new soul-aspirations for the companionship of Angelical beings in regions supernal.

A MENTAL VISION.

I RETIRED to rest with a feeling of anxiety on my mind, as to the future growth of Zion. And turning restlessly on my pillow, I exclaimed aloud, "O Lord, what will attract souls to Zion! What will make them willing to accept the cross, come in and fill up the ranks, and build up the waste places in Zion? What will bring laborers into the Lord's vineyard?" And immediately a ponderous wheel rolled up before my mind's eye, the motion of which was perpetual. Each cog appeared to represent a cycle of time, within a general cycle, and attached to the central part or shaft of the wheel, grouped together by fine thread-like fibres, each group in its distinct place, was the advancement of art, science and religion.

Every element and principle that bore a close relation to practical life was represented, each one good and indispensable to the harmonious growth of intelligence. The continual motion of the wheel brought some one of these within the sphere of mind, which appeared to engross the general attention of mankind at a given time; and then came the words, "It is just as easy to excite the religious element as any other element, when the proper time rolls around; and souls will as surely be attracted by the magnet of truth in religion, as in any other element."

Art and science have engrossed the public mind for a long period of time; the results of which are seen in railroads spanning the continent, coursing their way through hills and over mountain tops—in the electric wires threading the air and sea from shore to shore—the very elements of destruction reduced to the control and use of man. As they facilitate the advancement of knowledge, may they not be the very means needed to advance the Gospel, and spread it over the earth?

When the proper time rolls around, the beautiful truths in religion, and a spiritual life in holiness, will attract souls, and cause them, through increased light, to loathe the hollow theologies and false doctrines upon which they now depend; and nothing but practical truth and goodness will satisfy them. Then they will accept the cross of Christ.

I am waiting and watching the motion of the ponderous wheel. It is moving.

Eldress E. Farr, Union Village, O.

THE earth is thine, O Lord! and all that is contained therein; notwithstanding thou hast given the possession thereof to the children of men. We heartily pray thee to send thy Holy Spirit into the hearts of them that possess the grounds, pastures, and dwelling-places of the earth, that they, remembering themselves to be thy tenants, may not rack and stretch out the rents of their houses and lands; nor yet take unreasonable fines and incomes, after the manner of covetous worldlings; but so let them out to others that the inhabitants thereof may be able to both pay the rents, and also honestly to live, to nourish their families, and to relieve the poor. Give them also grace to consider that they are but strangers and pilgrims in this world, having here no dwelling-place, but seeking one to come, that they, remembering the short continuance of their life, may be content with that which is sufficient, and not join house to house, nor couple land to land, to the detriment of others; but so behave themselves in letting out their tenements, lands, and pastures, that, after this life, they may be received into everlasting dwelling-places: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TRIBUTE.

EVER LOVED ELDERESS A.:

I HAVE often felt that I would be pleased to show my appreciation of our precious little paper, that I love so well, by offering a small tribute to its columns. I feel my inability to contribute any thing that will be worthy to occupy a place; but I am eighty-two years of age to-day, and feel conscious that I am nearing the banks of that river which divides the earthly and super-mundane spheres, and cannot reasonably expect to remain on this side of the stream many years longer, and I wish to say to my friends, that I feel that my prolonged life has been a blessing to me. I am thankful that in early life I was brought to see and to sense, in a degree, the purity of angelic beings, and the work that was necessary for me to do to prepare myself to dwell with them in their pure and happy mansions.

And to-day my soul is filled with thankfulness to our Father and Mother God, for their loving kindness in calling me into this purifying, soul-saving work, that I might become a perfected stone, squared and fitted to fill a place in that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Dear friends and Zion travellers, we have much to encourage us to pursue the heavenly journey, to be valiant and strong, knowing that every step we take brings us nearer to him who said (speaking to his brethren), "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." We must all do the same work, be baptized as Jesus was baptized, bear the same cross of self-denial that he bore, to become his true followers; and we must be resurrected into newness of life, if we would reign with him over the power of sin and death.

I rejoice in the blessed gospel of salvation, through a full consecration of body, soul and mind to God. By living a pure angelic life while in time, the spirit is raised above earthly things; and I feel, at times, as if I was wafted on angels' wings to the abodes of the blest in the immortal land.

I thank our Heavenly Father and Mother that I have lived to see the commencement of a glorious era, wherein the Sun of righteousness rules the day, and excludes the darkness of night, the sequence of sin.

Now we hear the joyful sound "Peace on earth, good will to all, who will do unto others as we would that others should do unto us." Thus doing we become one with angels in heaven.

Seventy-two years of my life have been spent in proving the power and efficacy of this work, and I am now prepared to recommend it as a sure and safe way to happiness in this life, and the best work of preparation for the life beyond. With a loving and prayerful spirit, I have written this, with my own hand, hoping it may encourage and comfort those who are seeking to find the path that will lead them home to God.

Cassandara Brewster, W. Pittsfield, Mass.

THE SUN'S ORBIT.—A Tennessee philosopher has made the discovery that our solar system travels about the star Alcyone, in an elliptical orbit, taking twenty-two billions of years for the trip. He claims that this huge cycle has its spring, summer, autumn and winter, and that in its changing seasons the vegetable and animal life on the earth are liable to be extinguished, to be followed by a new order of things. These are very nice contingencies to contemplate, but the process is so terribly slow that we have little hope of being there to see.

LOVE.

THERE is much said and written at the present time, upon the subject of love.

Without agitation, there would not be thought; therefore, it is well to have the subject investigated and analyzed, that it may be thoroughly understood; and when it is understood, we hope there may be sufficient honesty of purpose to carry the highest ideal of the law of love into practice; for knowledge, unless reduced to practice, is ineffective.

Our highest conception of wisdom and love takes us to Deity, the primal source of all good. In scriptural language, "God is Love." We also read of a wisdom that cometh from above that is pure and peaceable; and of a wisdom that is not from above, but is earthly, sensual, and demonic. Will not the same justly apply to love?

There is a Divine love, and a human love; and a love (so called) that is sensual, and is the antithesis of true love, producing opposite results. Those who acknowledge two Orders, the natural and spiritual, accord to each its proper sphere of action, and the love, or bond of relationship, which governs, and holds them on the plane where they belong.

The love that rules in the highest spiritual Order is from God, and will lead to Him; Human, natural love, is also God-given, and has its uses, and is a necessity; it flows to the whole brotherhood of man. It is that which obtains in the family relation on the generative plane, where the affections center to kith and kin; it is good, if unperverted, and is necessary while the temporary relationship exists.

We see that there are various kinds of love, but at this time we will only contrast the higher, which is Divine, and leads to all that is pure and noble—to peace and happiness—with the lower, which is antipodal; and should be called inordinate lustful desire, for it leads to all that is low and degrading—to war and misery. The higher love makes no provision for the flesh, while the lower provides for nothing else.

There is great confusion in society at the present time; and many minds are bewildered by the commotion. There is a disintegrating power at work; monogamy is being superseded, in a degree, by polygamy and incest. Infanticide is practiced to an alarming extent, and foundling hospitals are crowded with the innocent offspring of guilty parents.

It has been stated that there are thirty thousand female prostitutes in the city of New York at the present time. How many male prostitutes must there needs be to support those vile women? They are not supported by vagrants; for many of them dwell in splendid palaces, and live in luxury. Who, we would ask, are their supporters, if not men of wealth and station, who cover themselves with a cloak of respectability, while their associates of the opposite sex, are marked and consigned to infamy and disgrace? But these "respectable" hypocrites—whited sepulchres—are the more dangerous to society, because their true character is unknown.

It would occupy too large a space in our small sheet to notice all classes, from the lowest stratum of society up to the highest; who in desire and practice are one and the same, differing perhaps in degree, and name, and we shall be under the necessity of following Paul's example, of "including all in unbelief." We look upon all, from the perverted marriage institution, as it now exists, (which is a cloak for licentiousness) to Mormonism, Perfectionism, Free-lovism, down to the seducer and procuress with their poor captives, as adulterers and adulteresses in the sight of God; all seeking to save the carnal life. And the reader will not think us too plain and severe, if we quote the words of Jesus, "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart."

It is not our purpose to condemn any who are living up to their highest convictions of right and duty; but to strive to "show a more excellent way," by pointing out the Christian life, as distinct from it all.

We give place to the orderly seed-sowers on the plane where they belong, and honor them if they do their work honestly, and replenish the earth with healthy offspring. But we accord the highest place to the harvesting angels, whose mission is to reap souls from the generative plane and gather them into the resurrection Order, where marriage has no place, and the male and female live in virgin purity, and toil together to upbuild Christ's kingdom.

"All cannot receive this saying." In other words, all persons are not prepared to enter into the angelic condition of life on the higher plane. But they who have heard the voice of the Spirit calling them to "Come up higher," are thankful to enter the school of Christ, and learn of the heavenly teachers, that he has sent, how to love unselfishly, and to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them; and how to gain that perfect love which casteth out fear—that kind of fear in which there is torment. The prize to be obtained is worth the conflict. If we do not attain unto perfection in this life, we shall continue in the same work when we enter the spirit world, and complete the heaven there, that we have commenced here. We rejoice that woman is putting forth her efforts in the work of reform; she has been the greatest sufferer in the sexual relations of life, and from intemperance; and she will be the most diligent worker. Let her assert her freedom, the right to own and govern herself, and work her way steadily up to her proper position; i. e., to stand side by side with man in framing and keeping the civil laws of the land, and be his true help-meet in all the duties of life; and thus move step by step in the work of progression.

Ruth Webster, Union Village, O.

PRAYER.

PRAYER is the breathing of the soul—its desires unfolding towards its Creator.

At the approach of judgment or impending danger, those who fear God, involuntarily look to Him through the agency of prayer for deliverance. Why is this? Because in the human mind is sown the knowledge of a Being, Supreme, whose power pervades immensity, and whose beneficence forgets not the least of creation. Thus, how instinctively the mind seeks its Creator. Those who love God seek to know him better, and there is no greater medium for this purpose than fervent prayer.

In this state of mind the veil seems rent, and we are permitted to look beyond the limits of earth, into the "holy of holies," where the soul bows in penitence, seeking forgiving love, or weeps in silence its gratitude to God for his manifold mercies.

How many instances are recorded of our Savior, when in the depths of his sufferings, he sought relief in prayer to the Father. In one of those seasons, we read, that there appeared unto him an angel from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood. How deep and earnest must have been that prayer, made doubly fervent by his approaching trial and the knowledge of his dependence upon Divine power for support.

He also taught his disciples, "Pray that ye enter not into temptation," because, the act of prayer concentrates the powers of the mind upon the subject of its desire; thus guarding from present evils and drawing strength from other sources towards its accomplishment.

How necessary then, to the Christian, is the spirit of prayer. As man communes with man, so may the soul commune with its God; and the more constant and fervent the desires of the mind are, the nearer will be our relation to God, and the clearer our knowledge of Him.

From whence come the strong resolves of the devotional hour? From whence the new life-power, the assurance of victory, and the strong emotions of love and reverence for the Divine—inciting us to greater self-denial and watchfulness, greater trust and more elevated feelings—if not from the presence of the holy Spirit of God, more fully recognized through prayer? Let us bear in mind that God is not only Wisdom, but Love; not only

Father, but Mother. Here then let us bring all the burdens of the soul. As a child seeks the guidance of its kind parents, in whom it has perfect confidence, let us ask in faith to be led according to the wisdom of God; and, though we may walk in unknown paths, let us fear no evil; for God is with us, and He has promised to sustain all who obey and serve Him.

Let us not forget the fact, that there are many agencies between our souls and the Supreme; spirit friends, who are ministers of love, and messengers of truth, from the source of all love and truth; bearing the gifts of consolation to the soul. We have long cherished this truth, because we have felt its power; and it is no less potent for passing through those agencies; for God is Infinite and Omnipresent, in all, and through all.

MUCH ESTEEMED EDITRESS:—

Your beautiful and well-laden little sheet has (for some cause unknown) failed to reach me. I am truly sorry to miss a single number, as it contains so much truth and spiritual food. I believe true Shakers are nearer the Kingdom of God than any others.

Most of their doctrines I fully indorse, and trust that their works agree therewith. My firm conviction is, that God is now raising up instruments in the great "Woman's Reform," or uprising of the people in the Temperance Cause. We, the Ladies of Lafayette, are holding daily prayer meetings, often twice a day, which are very largely attended. This great Temperance revival is spreading, not only through our State, but in Ohio, Illinois, and other Western States.

May the God of Heaven grant wisdom and strength to those devoted workers for the elevation of man; and this accomplished, many will be prepared to join you in a higher, holier cause.

Now, I do not wish to dictate to you; but I would suggest that it would add a number of names to your list of subscribers would you treat more largely on the evils of intoxicating drinks. I solicit the attention of many persons to subscribe for your valuable paper; and the uniform response is, Does it treat on the temperance movement? any thing to encourage that warfare let us have.

We are an earnest band here; and our motto is, victory or death! In this noble cause we are banded together in one great Sisterhood, all denominations (Catholics excepted), without distinction of sect, mingling our hearts and voices together in prayer to Almighty God for the destruction of this great evil, Intemperance. Please give us your sisterly aid in your next.

Go on, beloved Sister and friend; for a great work is before thee. May the angels of God hold up thy arms.

Thine for the truth's sake,

Sarah A. Nagle.

P. S. Pray for our cause.

THE mild face of Henry Bergh, the apostle to the animals, who sits in his ornamental office, with blue and gold surroundings, looking placidly out of his window, receiving the grateful nods of recognition from the quadrupeds which pass, particularly from the mild steeds of the Fourth avenue cars, will be grateful for the opportunity of perusing the following extract by the author of "Travels on Horseback": "The Chinese," says this writer, "are always kind to animals and never punish; hence a mule, that in the hands of a foreigner, would not only be useless, but dangerous to every one about it, becomes, in the hands of a Chinaman, as quiet as a lamb and as tractable as a dog. We never beheld a runaway, a jibbing or a vicious mule or pony in a Chinaman's employment, but found the same rattling, cheerful pace maintained over heavy or light roads, by means of a 'tur-r or cluk-k,' the beast turning to the right or left and stopping with but a hint from the reins. This treatment is extended to all animals they press into their service. Often have I admired the tact exhibited in getting a large drove of sheep through narrow crowded streets and alleys by merely having a little boy to one of the quietest of the flock in front; the others steadily followed, without aid either from yelping cur or cruel goad. Cattle, pigs and birds are equally cared for."

In the small state of Rhode Island there are no fewer than seven divisions of Baptists.

FOR THE SHAKERESS.

—o—

We often meet with persons who anxiously inquire, "How we became members of the Shaker fraternity, and why we continue our connection with them?" I offer a few words of personal experience through the columns of the "Shakeress," and hope they will be acceptable to those inquirers who feel interested in this question.

In early childhood, I was brought to Mt. Lebanon by my parents, residents of the town of Saybrook, Conn. Both received faith in the principles of Believers (or Shakers), and being obedient thereto, united with their family. I was then five years of age, and was subject and obedient to them, as my proper guardians. They placed me in a condition, where I was taught the principles of prudence and industry, and my morals were so strictly guarded, that I grew up in innocence and virtue.

As I increased in years and strength, I found that I had an enemy within my own heart to contend with, that was seeking to bring me into bondage to sin—to allure and draw me away from the path of purity—and thus destroy my peace of mind by robbing me of innocence, which I found had hitherto been negative in a degree, because it was untried, and had not been subjected to stern discipline in the school of self-denial, and the cross of Christ.

This brought a conflict; and I was forced to decide whether I would yield to the lower part of my nature, which would prompt me to seek indulgence in worldly things, or turn from the wily temptations to sin, and give my heart to God, and spend my life in his service. I chose the latter, and by obedience to the testimony of the Gospel of Christ, I have been protected from sin, and from its direful consequences.

I have now attained unto the age of three score years, and fifty-five of those years have been spent with Believers at Mt. Lebanon. I look back upon my life, and feel an inward peace and joy that worldly riches or carnal pleasures could never give; and I reflect with thankfulness upon the choice that I made in early life, to dwell with those whose pure and innocent lives were like incense of praise to their Creator. God requires purity of heart in thoughts, words and deeds, and to be privileged to dwell with the pure in heart on earth, with the prospect before me of an eternal union with them in the unseen world, is an unfailing source of joy to me.

My heart often wells up with gratitude and love to the benefactors and guardians of my early life. And I also raise my voice in thanks and praise to God for the Gospel of salvation, and to his chosen witnesses who kept the testimony in its purity, and through suffering of spirit paved the way for others.

An invitation is sounding to-day for the weary and heavy laden to "Come to the home which God has prepared, through agencies of his own choosing, for those who will cast off the yoke of sin, and accept Christ's yoke of purity, which gives true liberty." Then can they join with the poet and sing:

Now, freedom waves her golden wings,
And spreads her mantle round;
Can we be slaves to earthly things,
Who have this treasure found?

CHANGE.

—o—

WE live in an eventful time—a day of change. Science, Literature, Art and Theology, keep the elements in commotion; and there is a perpetual turning and overturning. Each has its place, and is doing its work, with more or less interest and profit to humanity. While we cannot say much in favor of the mixed theologies, which prevail at the present time, we recognize a religious power and fervor which come from the hearts of the people, and which rise above the false dogmas and church-creeeds of our time; and are far superior to them.

Religion is good, wherever it exists, and always does good. It possesses power, and its influence is felt in the suppression of wrong, whenever it is allowed a place to work. But where, among all the multifarious church organizations, shall we look for the embodiment of those principles, which constituted the first Pentecostal Church? We find church goers and mammon-worshippers in abundance; but practical cross-bearers and yoke-wearers—Jesus like, and like his Apostles, and followers whom he baptized with the fire of truth, and unselfish love—are rare examples. They were induced to lose their individuality, for the good of their brethren and sisters, in a new spiritual relation, in that kingdom which he was sent to inaugurate.

The deep soul cry "Lord, increase our faith!" and "What shall we do that we may work the works of God and be saved from the sins of this adulterous age?" is seldom heard. Yet, we are convinced, that there are earnest struggling souls, who would willingly and thankfully lay their all upon the altar of truth, and pay the price for the pearl of salvation, if they knew how and where to find it.

Many, at the present time, are looking for the millennium; and a cry is heard, "Watchmen, what of the night?" A response cometh from the high watch-towers, "The morning dawns—the sun is rising in brightness!" Again it is asked, "How shall we distinguish the day of the Lord? Unto what may it be likened?" The parable of the seed sower put forth by Jesus, exemplifies the true idea of the kingdom of God. Like the grain of mustard seed it is small in its beginning, but great in results. Not with outward observation, attended by great signs, and miracles, and pomp and show, may we look for the true millennium. But for a deep heart-work, accompanied by a spiritual power that will change the whole life and make new creatures of all its subjects.

And, we testify, to those who may be inclined to hear, that "Now has come salvation and strength, the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ." And that a few have found power, through the cross of self-denial to "cast out the great accuser," and rise above the sensual, selfish life, to a spiritual plane; where we have been enabled to form a brother and sisterhood, upon the broad basis of universal love.

Paul in his day, asked, "Why it should be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" And we ask, "Why should our testimony be discredited? If any are doubtful, we say, let them come and practically live the life; then they will know of the doctrine, if they will do the works," and be able to prove for themselves, whether we testify truly, when we say that Christ's kingdom is already commenced on earth.

Elvah Leavenworth, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

WASTE NO TIME.

—o—

TIME lost can never be regained. After allowing yourself proper time for rest, don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study, whatever it is, take hold at once and finish it up squarely and clearly; then to the next thing, without letting any moments drop out between. It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day; it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost. And if ever you find yourself where you have so many things pressed upon you that you hardly knew where to begin, let us tell you a secret. Take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file, and follow after, like a company of well-drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line.

DR. CHEEVER says: "If you imagine that you have nothing to do after this prayer, you are greatly mistaken. You must have an incessant watchfulness. When you make this prayer—'Breathe in me a pure heart'—you have entered upon a life-long struggle. It is an unceasing, never-ending fight between the higher and the baser nature, which are both working to obtain the mastery. Therefore your work must last with your life."

OUR MISSION.

1. We all have a du - ty of life to per - form, A mis - sion of love to ful - fill;
A work that is wor - thy our pow'rs to en - gage, With firm - ness of pur - pose and will.
We all have a jour - ney of life to pur - sue, The high - way of pro - gress to climb;
A strife to en - dure, and a vic - t'ry to win, 'Mid per - ils and dan - gers of time.

2.
And should we not linger to proffer our aid,
To those who with trials oppress'd,
Are leaving the earthly for treasures divine,
Who're seeking but finding no rest?
And shall we not give all our feelings in prayer,
For souls who are yearning for light,
And place in the pathway of safety and truth
The upward bound traveler aright?

3.
O, yea! we can brighten with smiles of good cheer,
The way of the downcast and sad,
And give to the sin-sick a promise of hope,
The sorrowing spirit make glad.
We can comfort the mourner with tidings of joy,
And lighten life's burden and care;
Uplifting the spirits of those who are bound,
The blessings of freedom to share.

4.
We can hush the wild tumult of discord and strife
With love's gentle accents of peace,
And welcome the weary worn pilgrim to rest,
Where storms of contention shall cease.
O, this is our mission, and this is our call,
To resurrect souls from the earth,
And aid them, through high aspiration, to rise,
To joys of the angelic birth.

LINES written for, and read at the funeral of Sister Nancy Osment. By E. H. W.

Pearly gates, are ye unfolding
To receive from earth a soul?
Angel guides, O, are ye holding
Her, in strong and firm control?
Bearing from our life a mother,
Who did tenderly impart,
To each sister, and each brother,
Love to soothe the weary heart.
Shall we see no more her presence,
Beaming gladness around?
Shall we long for spirit-presence,
When no more her smile is found?
Dark and lonely, if no angel
Lights with joy the narrow way—
If no heaven-sent Evangel
Cheers us with its blessed ray.

Never fear! I hear her whisper;
Trust in God and I'll be near;
Ye are my interest—my treasure—
Let your hearts be of good cheer.
Just the thinnest veil between us,
Loving souls 'twill not divide;
Mother's love around—within us—
O, how sweet to there abide!
Mother's love! how like a glory,
Pure and blest encompass'd her—
Made her life a record holy,
Of the Christ that dwelt in her.
Leave thy mantle, O beloved,
As the mortal drops from view!
Comforter that Jesus promised,
Still remain to bear us through.

Not one sad farewell we'll utter!
No more tears bedim our eyes!
May thy peace be as a river;
Hush'd be all our selfish sighs.
Striving for a world's uplifting
We'll unite with saluts above,
Stem all careless downward drifting,
Till we perfect grow in love.

Harvard, Mass.

MY GOD.

And can I live one day to Thee
In that perfection which I see?
Not merely without sin that's known,
But without fault before thy throne?

How straight the path, how easy stray'd;
What strength by which we must be staid;
What thought, what interest, all to keep
Thy laws, the blessing full to reap!

We see amiss, we speak untaught;
And folly's acts are often wrought,
Where principle and simple men,
Should ours possess'd be ever seen.

Where is the center of our ill?
Do we the laws of life fulfill?
If house is kept in graceful way,
Then grace may there descend each day.

The noblest structure that is found—
Its basis rests upon the ground;
Though many stories nearing heav'n
Strength to uphold from earth is giv'n.

Then, our foundations can we shun,
And build our hopes the winds upon?
Or, must we seek through light yet dim,
To build for God and live to Him?

CHEAP FOOD FOR THE STARVING.—Here is a suggestion for the starving poor of our large cities.
The Boston journals furnish it gratuitously for the great number of destitute people in New York.
Oat-meal is, of all foods, the cheapest and most nutritious. It is stated that three cents worth of oat-meal, milk costing the same sum, and sugar enough to sweeten it, will give a hearty meal to six persons for twelve cents. This, it will be remembered, is the price for milk in the East.
Properly prepared, oat-meal possesses more bone and muscle-making material than any other food that can be purchased for the same money, and,
though but little appreciated in this country,
forms the staple food of a brawny race, remarkable for their devotion to athletic amusement—the Scotch. The fact that oat-meal possesses a large amount of nutriment has long been proclaimed by scientific men, and has long been prescribed by physicians as a diet for invalids. The suggestion of its use as food by the destitute people of the great cities is timely, and will doubtless be heeded.

SHAKERISM SCIENTIFIC.

"In Christ, are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

If this be so, then is the cross of Christ scientific. And the Shaker, who, on a spiritual plane, lives a celibate life, is no less naturally normal than the truly married man, or woman, on the earthly plane, who, like the inferior animals, observes propagative laws, and abstains from all "unfruitful works of darkness"—unfruitful sexual intercourse.

When love has conceived, it brings forth life—like begetting like. When lust has conceived, it brings forth sin—is sin—and when sin is finished, it brings forth death.

Disease is the forerunner of death. All loves—affections of the soul—produce corresponding bodily secretions. It is therefore scientifically true, that they who sin, sin against their own bodies. Their soul-inordinate loves create diseased bodily secretions. The lust of Opium, Tobacco, Betel root, of alcoholic mixtures, produces thoughts, and those thoughts create secretions. It is the same of all loves, and of all lusts.

"Keep the heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life"—and of death.

Exactly so. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, might, mind and strength. Love the good and true—desire to do only right—to be in use, whether it be in eating, or drinking, or any other bodily function, perform it only in the love of God, and for the honor of humanity, which is the honor and glory of God. For in man and woman is the highest manifestation of Deity.

That there is a God—Father and Mother—that there are intermediate orders of intelligences—male and female—who, by duration of existence, accumulated experience, extending back hundreds, thousands and millions of years and ages, is a glorious idea—a tremendous fact. The capacity to conceive it demonstrates its verity.

Hunger—a demand for supply of earth elements to support physical life—is an appetite for food. The thought is of some particular kind of food. At once, the glands of the mouth secrete saliva; the glands of the stomach, gastric juice.

"Blessed are the pure in heart"—pure in thought—they see God—are like God—having no unhealthy, diseased secretions—"God being in all their thoughts."

"He that looketh—thinketh—on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed adultery already with her in his heart—by his secretions—the result of abnormal, ungodly, unscientific desires.

Human love, or license, under the name and cover of marriage, does not, cannot change the nature of an act. It does not transmute lust into love, wrong into right, nor uncleanness, lasciviousness, fornication, adultery, wantonness, into chastity. The legal marriage bed is too short, the covering too narrow. "For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take unto thee much soap, thy sin is marked before me, and thine iniquity is not hid—may every true Shaker say, to all anti-Christian-married-people. They are not Jews, keeping the natural laws, nor are they Christians, risen with Jesus, in the resurrection—where marriage hath an end.

The cross of Christ is self-denial of all perverted appetites, disorderly affections, disease-producing, abnormal propensities.

"My loins are filled with a loathsome disease," was the exclamation of the "man after God's own heart"—the heart of the God of Israel.

David was a Saint, in that dispensation. But he was a sinner in the next dispensation.

"David had not ascended into the heavens," was the Christian testimony—not into the Christ heavens. He needed the gospel preached unto him. He needed the cross of Christ, against his own generative life, the root of his warring and fighting. He was a man of blood, and was not permitted to build the outward temple.

Neither can marrying, generating, fighting Christians build the Spiritual Temple—a Pentecostal Church, or community of goods.

Christian celibacy is, therefore, as scientifically normal to the natural man and woman, when they grow up to it, as is manhood and womanhood to the boy and girl.

The Church and State governments of Christendom have legalized generative lust, in Priest and People. They have incorporated war into every constitution, civil and ecclesiastical. It is established by statute, and sanctified by the Priesthood. Yet the universal voice of instinct, in animate nature, is "Thou shalt not kill" me.

All war, is all murder.

Moses could not separate generation from its lusts, and therefore he required a sin offering for each and every act of sexuality, as defilement, whether of the single or married.

Jesus, by the cross of Christ, against his generative life, by living upon vegetables, fruits and farinacea, escaped from bondage to the Mosaic Priesthood. Penal laws were made for transgressors. Jesus ceased to be transgressor, in diet, generation, or property. His last supper was of unleavened bread, of unbolted wheat, eaten with twelve celibates, in a community of goods. All their money was put into one bag, and that bag was carried by Judas.

"The covenant with death is now annulled," and "the agreement with hell" can no longer stand before either the light of science, or the Gift of Revelation.

WALKING WITH GOD.

THE vision, of human conditions, to day, perceives man so far strayed from his Creator, that a portion of the race is seriously questioning the existence of a Supreme Being. Other millions, admitting the fact, are so blinded by transgression of the laws of God, that they are forming idol gods, imaginary deities, professing all the transitory and pas-sional characteristics of degraded humanity. In fact, man has for ages been wandering in a sinful night of darkness, lost from God. But light is beaming forth from the throne of Truth; a portion of the race is being warmed into life by the rays of the sun of righteousness. Myriads of Angels from the Heavens are on pilgrimages of mercy and love to humanity, on the shores of time, to return lost man to a knowledge of, and union with, his Maker.

Humanity is boldly toiling in a wondrous field of truth, From her palsied age recoiling, putting on immortal youth, Science, art, religion, peering, to the Soul's mysterious realms, Truth's blest mariners are nearing Heaven's port, with virtue's helm.

The characteristic order, of creation itself, is a living testimony of the relation of man to his Maker. From the lowest grade of animate existence, manifesting instinct, to the highest intelligence, exhibiting philosophical powers of research into laws that underlie science, and art, still upward to supreme intention, there is a rising scale of being; until it is anchored in God, the Supreme Intelligence. "We cannot properly study science, and ignore God, who is at the beginning of it," from the vast realms of space, occupied with innumerable worlds, obeying fixed laws of motion, to the delicate forms of the most tiny mite.

"But, to godly men, physical and metaphysical proofs of the existence of God, have no interest; they feel the Divine within themselves." And, in all forms of intelligent existence there is a degree of intuitive knowledge; the voice of the Creator, giving law to the creature; talking with him.

The crowning model of God's handiwork—man—has not only instinct, but intuitive knowledge, and reason, a susceptibility to spirit influence—the consciousness of ministrations of angels and spirits, not clothed in mortality.

In his normal relations to universal creation, he is sympathetically conscious of the laws that govern all inferior creation; and sensible to the consequent happiness, attachable to all life, by moving in conformity to those laws; or the misery, sufferable, by their infraction. All his senses could appreciate the presence of God, giving minute instruction in the ways and duties of life; saying, 'This plant, or its seed, is good for food, eat it; that is poisonous—a scavenger of the atmosphere, and the soil—touch it not; this fruit is wholesome; that contains the bitterness of death. This knowledge is profitable, receive it, for out of it are the issues of life; this is a sophism; taste it not; drink not at its Lethæan pool.'

Thy senses were given thee for happiness, surfeit them not; and thy pleasures shall not end in pain. Bide the seasons of thy development; creep till thou canst walk; walk till thou canst run; and apo not the bird, in thy pursuit, but observe the laws of thy own being; let thy pleasures be confined to use, and their usago shall not bring thee sorrow. Thus, in every lane of life, man, when perfect, walked with God. He gave him law in regard to the use of every pleasure, and the performance of every duty; and the law of God was the normal delight of the Edenic man, while living in submission and obedience to the Divine behest of his Creator.

Man was the gladsome compeer of Angels and the laws of the Heavens were open continually to his enchanted vision. Man recognized God, as he recognized his fellow, and the love of God enshrouded him as a garment and magnetized his whole being with bliss. He had no need of creeds of faith in God; he believed in the possession of absolute conscious knowledge of his continual presence administering His will and law. Living in obedience to the Divine law of his existence, man would talk with God as a child would talk with its father and mother; receive his law through instinct, understand it with reason, perceive His purpose by intuition, love it through affection, and thus be guided in his every step of progress.

Revelation of the laws of God was an after-thought, an adaptation to man's condition, when, by disobedience, he had lost sight of God's presence and his law.

Returned to God by obedience to His laws, man will need no abnormal supernal visions to behold the laws of God and the movements of the Heavens. Rising from the material to the spiritual: from the sensual to the inspirational, God will be in him; He will not speak to him from without, as in the thunderings from Sinai, but from within. Gushing from his own heart, will he hear his Heavenly Father's and Mother's will, as Jesus when perfected by suffering, lived in the bosom of God, by uninterrupted communication. Thus conditioned, in the Edenic state, man would not behold God as through telescopic vision—afar off; nor yet as through the dreamy land; but, in his fellow man, see Him stand erect, and hear Him speaking in the desires of his own heart. So lived Jesus, and this gave him authority to preach; not creeds; but, "Follow me, and thou shalt have treasure in Heaven."

To the man redeemed from sin, and thus returned to Edenic union with his Creator, the foibles and follies of sinful humanity are as froth on the ocean's surf, the waves of life roll on and heed them not. Assurance of the triumph of righteousness possesses his soul; in calm confidence he sees the hand of God guiding humanity's bark to salvation and rest; dwelling in God's love, he has hope, robed in surety, shorn of fears of disappointment; spiritual life, an eternal well-spring of action, gushing forth from the eternal fountains; and peace flows like a river as he recognizes, himself bosomed in God.

Elder Giles Avery, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

DUTY OF ELDERS.

DEAR ELDER FREDERICK W. EVANS.—By a forward number of your May issue you ask that each society contribute "one short well-written, well-condensed article for the S. & S."

I propose to furnish "one short" article. If the requisites of "well-written, well-condensed," should not be manifest, you are quite at liberty to consign it among your "choice contributions."

What I may write may be of no particular interest to our own people, but may furnish some reflection, if not information, to outside readers of our little sheet.

I often hear erroneous ideas set forth in regard to the government of our institutions, by our friends in outside society, and no class among us are more misjudged than Elders.

To correct these wrong impressions will be the object of this article so far as it goes.

What are the duties of a Shaker Elder? To answer this we will quote from our "Constitution, article 4th, section 2nd, 'Duties of Elders'—As faithful watchmen upon the walls of Zion, it becomes the duty of the Elders to watch over their respective families, to instruct the members in their several duties, to counsel, encourage and admonish, exhort and reprove, as occasion may require; to lead the worship, to be examples to the members, of obedience to the principles and orders of the Gospel, and to see that the orders, rules and regulations pertaining to their respective families are properly kept."

From the foregoing it might appear to the uninitiated that the Elders are empowered with, and do exercise at pleasure, arbitrary influence over the members of their respective families. But so far from this is it, that in truth they are the most self-sacrificing individuals in the fraternity, as we can make appear by letting the reader look behind the scene that shuts us from the view of common society.

For a number of years the writer of this article had the honor of occupying as an Elder in a large family of about 100 persons, of both sexes, ranging in age from six years to ninety. There were four persons of us who constituted the Eldership, and, as is the case in all our government arrangements, the sisters were represented by two of their own sex and the brethren by two of their sex, and these four constituted what we call the Elders Order, and correspond to what is known in outside society as the parentage of the family.

And although there are great powers to govern placed in their hands, it is used very seldom, and only in extreme cases, just as wise and loving parents would do in a well-regulated family.

The secret of a Shaker Elder's influence to govern mainly consists in the amount of individual consecration and devotion with which he lives out the principles and teachings of Jesus the Saviour. The golden rule "Do to others as ye would have others do to you," must be kept continually before the mind. In fact he must be a living example of the Christ life, and a bright and shining light going before his brethren and sisters. And above all things he must live out in daily life the virgin continent life of his profession.

Again, another very effectual way, that a Shaker Elder gains influence with his people, is by the amount of diligence and industry he practices in hand labor. Paul's rule on this point is fully believed in—"If any work not, neither should he eat;" therefore, it is a precept with us, that a good man must be an industrious man; and this precept has been inculcated from the beginning or origin of our society.

"Hands to work and hearts to God," was one of the maxims left by our truly wise Mother, Ann Lee, to her followers, and by them believed in to this day. It is a trite saying among our people that the Elder who can only say Go, to his brethren and sisters, seldom has the confidence or respect of his people; while the Elder who addresses his people in the magic language of Come, brethren and sisters, let us pull together, and then places himself at the head of the undertaking, be it never so disagreeable to perform, seldom fails of having the love and confidence of his people.

These are some of the secret silken cords that bind the Shaker order into a brotherhood and sisterhood, and these are the things that the dishonest and insincere are little disposed to counterfeit.

Such an Elder is not obeyed because of his official position in society, but rather that he is loved.

Sometimes people, in outside society, have said to me, "If I could only be one of the head men among the Shakers I would be willing to be a Shaker." The way is open into the kingdom and you may become a "head man," but first you must "drink of the cup" and be baptized with the baptism that will kill those ambitious feelings, and then you will occupy that place which by nature and grace you are qualified to fill.

Elder W. Reynolds, Union Village, O.

HARVEST FIELD.

ON a certain occasion, when Jesus' Disciples were putting off the Spiritual Harvest-day, he rebuked and instructed them; for they were dull of comprehension.

He said, "Behold! Lift up your eyes and look on the fields—the villages and cities of Judea—for they are white, already, to harvest." Ready for the willing and earnest reapers. "Can ye not observe the signs of the times?" "Ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth. How is it that ye cannot discern this time?"

Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter are divisions of time, well calculated to meet the natural wants of man. With these the Spiritual seasons harmonize. And he who, by the laws of correspondence, discovers these, and acts accordingly, will have reason to rejoice, when the Lord's "summer is ended and the harvest time passed;" for he has worked with God.

The great field of God's care is the whole world. In this his servants have been sowing and reaping, alternately, from the beginning. To-day, the same work is no less demanded. To-day, well might we catch the inspiration of Jesus, so potent to all who have accepted his life. Lift up your eyes! Behold the harvest field!! Are you waiting for other signs to come to pass, before you commence your work? Lift up your eyes and watch the course of the Angels of God, and go with them into the field. Reap while your day lasts. Now is the harvest time! Work!!

From the past and present, we may, to a certain extent, be justified in anticipating the future. There may be a hundred thousand or a million of servants, working in the Lord's vineyard. They are shaking the old heavens and earth, from center to circumference, causing their very foundations to pass away, with much noise and battles of shaking.

What a victory for the right was the gift of freedom, to the millions of slaves, in America, and of serfs, in Russia. No less important was the freedom of religious thought in Spain and Italy.

God's care is over all advanced minds, who are earnestly toiling to elevate their fellow-men, and women, from moral and physical degradation. Over those, enlisted in the cause of temperance, leaving their homes of affluence, and taking the responsibility to act in the name of the Lord, through prayer. Over the great body of Iconoclasts, who are sweeping so rapidly over the earth, and preparing the way for other minds, whom God has raised up, to manifest his spirit for the redemption of the world. All belong to the armies of the Lord. Each division has its duty assigned, and will reap a blessing, corresponding with his and her faithfulness in the work.

If we—Shakers—were alone in the contest, how trifling would be all that we might accomplish. May we, in the gift of our high calling, lift up our eyes and behold the manifestation of the spirit of power, which is abundantly illuminating the earth. Indeed, Shakers are in the land, as the stars of heaven for multitude—"of all nations, kindreds, tongues and people."

Development is the law, from sphere to sphere. All goodness emanated from God, and every order of workmen must pass up the ascending grade of goodness, which finally culminates in the spirit of union and love.

Elder H. C. Blinn, Canterbury, N. H.

TESTIMONY.

"They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony." Rev. xii., 11.

The founders of our several societies lived in a slanderous age. Orthodoxy was rampant. It held that belief, not works, was the one thing needful. That a wrong article of faith might consign a human soul to everlasting broiling, in the eternal world. That lies, told by the saints, about heretics and infidels, were acceptable to a God of truth and justice. "The Dragon poured, out of his mouth, a flood to carry away the woman"—Ann Lee "and the remnant of her seed"—the Shakers. The priests and people, whom they used as their tools, were the most unrelenting enemies of the early Shakers. Falsehood was their cannon—lies, their ammunition. It took fifty years to establish, in the public mind, what is now admitted—to wit, that Shakers do live as they profess—pure, celibate or virgin lives. The Life of Christ is the Blood of Christ.

They who do not wish so to live, go out from among us, because they are not of us. The black sheep do not remain in the fold.

The time is coming, and now is, "when the accuser of the Brethren and Sisters, is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. They overcame him—the tongue of slander, by the blood—life of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."

No testimony is having more weight and influence, at the present time, than what is communicated, monthly, by and through the columns of the Shaker and Shakeress, which is read with increasing interest, by many in Northern Ohio.

One man said he felt amply paid for his subscription, by reading those two messages from Edwin M. Stanton, late Secretary of War, given through a reliable medium of Mt. Lebanon, N. Y. He believed every word of them, and wished they might be copied and republished in every Spiritual and Secular paper in the United States.

They were copied, verbatim, into the R. P. Journal, in Chicago, Ill., and some other papers.

Such communications will have weight in the minds of all candid people. We have also seen articles published in Melbourne, Australia, copied from the Shaker and Shakeress. Thus, our little Missionary is doing a work—bearing a testimony, as a witness for the truth, unto all nations.

But this can never supersede the necessity of a verbal testimony, by living witnesses, at home and abroad. They, who live the life of Christ, can bear a testimony, that none others can, against the "social evil," and all other evils which afflict human society, and it becomes their duty to do it.

James S. Prescott, North Union, Ohio.

CREMATION.

THE idea of being buried alive, is, to me, perfectly horrible. This awful dread is, no doubt, shared by thousands.

We have reason to believe, that throughout this wide world, there are many, every year of our Lord, who wake up and find themselves boxed and buried, six feet under ground.

To poor mortals, in this situation, a few minutes must seem like an eternity. No language can describe the anguish of a human being thus incarcerated.

The horrible accounts, we frequently have, of persons buried alive, are enough to sicken the heart of humanity.

Cremation is now agitating the public mind. I have, of late, read many articles on the subject. Many good arguments have been advanced, in favor of cremation. But one, most important, has, in my opinion, been overlooked—to wit, cremation puts the danger of being buried alive entirely out of the question. So I go in strong for cremation.

Hallelujah! the day dawns, that when our spirits shall have shuffled off these mortal bodies, the elements that composed them shall melt with fervent heat.

Daniel Sizer, Canaan, N. Y.

The male Editor, of this little waif, advocates trenching all land. Digging graves six feet deep, and planting a tree by every grave. The graves to be ten feet apart each way. This would insure the blessing of each generation, upon the preceding generation, for the good they had done with their bodies.

INFLUENCE.

WE throw off our magnetism all around us, carrying with us our own atmosphere. According to the condition of our minds, our influence imbues the house in which we live. Very sensitive persons can feel this quite distinctly. On entering a room, they know, by the impressions they receive, whether the persons, there living, are good or bad. A person being in the habit of going every day, at a certain hour, into a closet to pray, drew such heavenly influences around him, that the whole closet was filled with them; and others, on entering that little room, felt such divine sensations, that they dropped involuntarily on their knees, and prayed fervently. A virtuous man, not knowing what had transpired in a certain room, inhabited by vicious people, on entering, felt directly a very disgusting and oppressive feeling—a shudder of horror shook his whole frame. And why? The magnetism of these wicked people was left in the room, and the virtuous man felt it. We cannot set our feet upon the ground, without leaving an impression, a part of our magnetism behind us. We must be very careful with whom we associate, because we are drawn into their magnetic atmosphere, and absorb their peculiarities. Many persons without knowing the cause, have adopted the habits of others, by exposing themselves carelessly to their magnetic influence. If two persons meet, both being very positive, there will be a harmonious blending of feeling. If one be positive and the other less so, he who has more magnetism will impart to the one less favored, till both are equal. But, if one is positive and the other negative, there will be a clashing. An antagonistic feeling will arise between them. This explains why, at the first meeting of some persons, they feel instantaneously drawn toward each other, or the reverse. Those who are of one mind, who are spiritually minded, of a refined and elevated culture, feel their souls flow together as drops of water. But those whose desires are of a more earthly nature, cannot find their happiness in the intimate fellowship of the pure-minded. Neither will the last-mentioned blend with the worldly-minded, but both seek the society of like-minded persons, each living in his or her own appropriate sphere.

Our Creator has so constituted the human race, that they act and react upon each other, and are dependent upon each other for strength and support, both temporal and spiritual. We cannot come in contact with any one, but our emanations impart something to him or her, and we in return receive. Every silent thought, as well as the utterance of our thoughts, helps form our character. They work into our spiritual natures, and leave an enduring impression on our souls; and the influence is felt, sometimes years afterward. The Angels exert their influence over us, more than we are aware of; and if we would live more spiritual lives, we would be more able to commune with the blessed Angels, and the loved ones gone before, who are in close associations with us. Our spiritual eyes would be more opened, our inward senses more quickened, and we could behold the rapturous beauty and glory of the Spirit-land. We could better appreciate the benedictions, the tender watchful care and protection of our resurrection Spirit-Guides.

Edwin Sevester, Groveland, N. Y.

WITCHCRAFT.—In Gathering Families, where many of the most powerful and influential minds concentrate, great care and watchfulness is required on the part of those who come into communication with them, to preserve intact a spiritual gift. For a spiritual person to be magnetized, by a mere natural man or woman, is to be bewitched—to descend from a higher to a lower sphere, for unworthy purposes. This may occur, without any well-defined intent on either side.

OUT OF THE BELLY OF HELL.

"Out of the belly of Hell, cried I, O Lord, and thou heardest my voice."—JONAH.

ON the subject of religion, men think alike less than they feel alike, although on one point sensible men may be found to think substantially the same.

That the mass of humans grovel, pursuing things beneath their dignity, needs no argument; the painful fact is patent.

The religious element, in our make up, is the lever whereby the powers above us, can lift us to higher planes of being. In this cardinal, philosophic truth, sensible people agree.

To enable a soul to cry unto the Lord, out of the belly of Hell, 'tis not needful to be swallowed by a whale.

When, by the Divine Afflatus, the religious element in us is stirred—when our souls reach out to grasp the purity of angels—when the strong current of lower law influence sweeps us back only to the things we abhor—when we feel our want of power to be what we seem to be—when, for lack of moral stamina, we do the things we would not—then out of the belly of hell we may, and will, cry unto the Lord, and our voice will be heard. When we say, Lord, what shall I do to be saved from the things I detest—things beneath my proper dignity? When reverently we bow to our holiest aspiration, by hand unseen will we be led in a way we know not; and when our integrity has been tested, we will hear a voice from the interior, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

And now comes the tug of war, the test of manhood and womanhood.

WRATH.

"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

But the wrath of God revealed from heaven, against all that defiles the temple of God, is Heaven's richest blessing; it should be regarded as a friend.

We shall need much of such Divine displeasure to fit us for the mansions of eternal brightness.

O. P. Mt. Lebanon, April 26, 1874.

HORTICULTURE.

In the fall of 1872, after gathering the exceptionally large crop of apples of that season, we organized a corps of pruners. Going through our several orchards, we took off, first, the unfruitful lower limbs. Then the superfluous branches, giving the trees a heavy trimming.

Rationale. Reasoning thus. These trees have so exhausted their vitality, that next year, they will not bear. We will help them, by removing all that can be spared without detriment. Thus the strength, of the whole system of roots, will be concentrated in what limbs and branches remain.

This fall, the trees will form fewer, but stronger fruit buds, for next season.

We will have a middling fair crop of apples, in the ensuing non-bearing year.

Result. One thousand bushels of apples — giving us an ample supply, and we sold $500 worth of apples and other fruit, in the panic, when $100 were equal to $200 in ordinary times.

The wounds made, heal sweetly — clean as clean can be. Last year, we let the orchards alone, to recuperate. This season, we are thinning out the branches, to reduce the excess of blossoms, that give promise of a large crop the present year. This process we propose to continue through June and July, thinning out, where we had previously trimmed. Small apples will go mercilessly, if they set before we get through.

Borers. In the past, having washed our apple trees with strong soap-suds and potash once or twice a year, no borers have made their appearance in our orchards. In Heathen orchards, they are making havoc, or labor.

It may be well to state, that a shovel full of tan bark, or two, has been put around the young trees, in the fall. This is to keep the mice away. Perhaps the borers do not approve of it.

Inasmuch as "the Lord our God" blesses our orchards, by inspiring us to observe Nature's Laws, may we not hope He will do the same with our own bodies, so far as we "mind the same thing and walk by the same rule"?

ONE of the foremost of English medical writers, Dr. James Johnson, emphatically says: "I declare my conscientious opinion, founded on long observation and reflection, that if there was not a single physician, surgeon, apothecary, chemist, druggist, or drug, on the face of the earth, there would be less sickness and less mortality than now obtains." And Professor Magendie is reported to have addressed his students at the Medical College in Paris to the following effect: "Gentlemen, medicine is a great humbug; I know it is called a science. Science indeed—it is nothing like science. Doctors are mere empirics when they are not charlatans. We are as ignorant as men can be. Who knows any thing in the world about medicine? Gentlemen, you have done me the honor to attend my lectures, and I must tell you frankly that I know nothing about medicine. True, we are gathering facts every day. We can produce typhus fever, for example, by injecting a certain substance into the veins of a dog; we can alleviate diabetes; and I see distinctly we are fast approaching the day when phthisis can be cured as easily as any disease. But I repeat it to you, there is no such thing now as medical science. I grant you, people are cured; but how? Nature does a great deal; imagination does a great deal; doctors do—devilish little.

WATCH for little opportunities of pleasing, and put little annoyances out of the way.

THE WORSHIP OF MAMMON.

—0—

"Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

Matt. vi. 24.

If it be granted—and who but the Atheist will deny it?—that eternity should be the theme of deepest study and most serious contemplation, and to do the will of God our constant and most earnest aim and endeavor, an end to which every thought and action should be subordinate; and further, if the definition be accepted, that religion is a living faith in a future spiritual existence, and a consequent present effort at preparation for that existence, then we shall get a view of the world sufficiently sad and sorrowful, for the millions of the earth, whatever profession they may make, are really and indeed without religion. Or, if (admitting a wider definition) it be conceded that a man's predominant passion, that which shapes and directs his life, and the code of morals which, spite of Sabbath day sentiment and canting hypocrisy, really regulates his intercourse with his fellow-man; if these practically constitute his "religion," then the people of the earth, deadening their spiritual senses in a cold and dreary selfishness, are engaged—not in the service of God—but heart and soul in the worship of Mammon.

In England, see how false pride and a selfish, narrow spirit of exclusiveness—the vile offspring of a vicious God-supplanting idol yclept "Respectability"—rear impassable social barriers between the different classes of the community.

What emotion there so strong as the love of caste and a contempt for those lower in the social scale? A contempt by no means confined to the aristocrat, who with his long lineage and "blue blood," is naturally proud and haughty, but permeating the whole rotten system of British society. The professional man despises the retail trader. The diploma-dubbed doctor unmercifully snubs the pill and draught-dispensing druggist, and he in turn scorns the companionship of the butcher and baker. The goldsmith contemns the blacksmith and the blacksmith the tinker; and it is presumable that the very tinker is tinctured with this wide-spread idiotic mania and denies the social equality of some other brainless nonentity. In short, a contempt for those beneath them on the social ladder, and an envy-tempered reverence for those above them, is the strongest sentiment of British society, before which the truths of Christianity pale, as the fading stars before the Orient sun.

Is a preparation for the life to come by curbing the animal propensities and developing the spiritual powers and perceptions, the leading characteristic of the French people! Is it not rather the indulgence in gross sensual pleasure—a stimulating dietary, an uncontrolled exercise of the sexual emotions, lewd and libidinous stage plays and feuilletons, lust awakening dress, dances and music, and all the wicked folly of the café chantant?

Or what does the more stolid Teuton prize above his huge tobacco pipe and his Rhein wein or lager beer? How blithely roll forth the rich gutturals under this powerful but unholy inspiration! Or the "Sing-verein" and its roaring patriotism flashing, dashing and foaming over with enthusiastic love for the Fatherland and hatred of all its enemies? What reckes our Teuton of love of God and hatred of all unrighteousness?

Or does the Brazilian fazendeiro value most the gain and welfare of his immortal soul, or his coffee, and cotton plantations, and the chattels, in God's image, who till the rich Virgin soil, wait upon the person of their owner and minister to his lustful passions in return for the privilege of existence?

Or what is the chief concern—nay, the all-absorbing aim of the American people? Not to live a Godly, righteous and sober life, but to amass wealth. An insatiable greed of gold resulting in tricky trading, legalized robbery, and custom-sanctioned swindling, and a selfish strife of political parties for place, power and pelf, such is the "religion" of America.

And so the wide world over, in lands Christian and civilized, as in Pagan and barbarian, do not human beings seem to lack all conception of the solemnity and meaning of existence, and utterly to ignore the great fact of human immortality? Do they even aspire to rise Godward? Are they not all worshipping mammon?

"Where are thy joys O babbling earth?
Whence does thy glory come?
Hast thou the pearl of priceless worth?
Art thou the pilgrim's home?
In thee does Mammon reign supreme
And seas of passion roll.
In thee does pleasure's fleckle dream
Bring sorrow to the soul."

Happy the little songstress that could pen these verses—happy while yet an infant to have escaped from the turmoil of Babylon and found shelter within the walls of peaceful Zion. Thrice happy to have exchanged the life of self-indulgence for the life of self-denial—for the service of God, the worship of Mammon!

Hewson Brown, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

THE RELIGION NEEDED.

THE religion needed is the only religion there is. But we need to have this religion applied. Science is well, but the chief use of science is in its application to human wants. The chief business of the Minister of the Gospel is to apply it in the manner indicated below, by the Christian Times of August 2. The fearful developments since will suggest other applications:

We want a religion that bears heavily not only on the "exceeding sinfulness of sin," but on the exceeding rascality of lying and stealing—a religion that banishes small measures from the counter, small baskets from stalls, pebbles from the cotton bags, clay from the paper, sand from sugar, chicory from coffee, alum from bread, and water from the milk cans. The religion that is to save the world will not put all the big strawberries at the top, and all little ones at the bottom. It will not make one-half pair of shoes of good leather, and the other half of poor leather, so that the first shall redound to the maker's credit, and the second to the cash. It will not put Jouvins' stamp on Jenkins' kid gloves, nor make Paris bonnets in the back room of a Boston milliner's shop; nor let a piece of velvet, that professes to measure twelve yards, come to an untimely end in the tenth; nor a spool of sewing silk, that vouches for twenty yards, be nipped in the bud at fourteen and a-half; nor all-wool delaines and all-linen handkerchiefs be amalgamated with clandestine cotton; nor coats made of old rags pressed together, be sold to the unsuspecting public for legal broadcloth. It does not put bricks at five dollars per thousand into chimneys it contracts to build of seven-dollar material; nor smuggle white pine into floors that have paid for hard pine; nor leave yawning cracks in closets where boards ought to join; nor daub the ceilings that ought to be smoothly plastered; nor make window blinds with slats that cannot stand the wind, and paint that cannot stand the sun, and fastenings that maybe looked at, but are on no account to be touched. The religion that is going to sanctify the world pays its debts. It does not consider that forty cents returned for one hundred cents given, is not according to the Gospel though it may be according to law. It looks on a man who has failed in trade, and who continues to live in luxury, as a thief.—Ex.

WILL HE SUCCEED?—In nine cases out of ten man's life will not be a success if he does not bear burdens in his childhood. If the fondness or the vanity of father or mother have kept him from hard work; if another always helped him out at the end of his row; if instead of taking his turn at pitching off, he stowed away all the time—in short, if what was light always fell to him, and what was heavy about the same work to some one else; if he has been permitted to shrink until shrinking has become a habit—unless a miracle has been wrought, his life will be a failure, and the blame will not be half so much his as that of weak, foolish parents. On the other hand, if a boy has been brought to do his part, never allowed to shrink from any legitimate responsibility, or to dodge work, whether or not it made his head ache, or soiled his hands, until bearing burdens becomes a matter of pride, the heavy end of the wood his choice—parents as they bid him good-bye may dismiss their fears. His life will not be a business failure. The elements of success are his, and at some time and in some way the world will recognize his capacity.

THINK before you speak, and think before whom you speak, think why you speak, and think what you speak.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

HONESTY AND CONTINENCE.

HONESTY and Continence are the king and queen Principles. Through fidelity to those principles, martyrs have been crowned with victory. Cold, cheerless prisons have been made to smile with gladness, when God's noblemen and women, through inspired hope, and with the approval of Angels, have pledged their all, even life itself, rather, than through fear of sufferings of the body, to sacrifice conscience—the law that Deity has placed in the human soul, for its guidance—which, if honestly adhered to, is superior to any law that men can form.

Many monarchs have swayed the sceptre of power, and gained eclat from mortals, whose names have come down to posterity through shining pages of history, written by men; but, when those records appear as written by Angels, who see, and judge differently from men, they will illy compare with the records of many individuals, in more humble capacities who so loved truth, that they would not sell their Continence and Honesty, through sinister motives, nor in seeking vain glory. But the strong love of virtue, and force of conscience, caused them to approach the stake and its devouring flames with heroic fortitude, and face the rack with its tortures, and venomous reptiles, and ferocious beasts, without fear. Neither could the syren chants, that sought to allure to pleasure, and open up a flowery path before them, induce them to swerve from their integrity, and throw themselves into a caldron of unholy love. Nor, to rest upon hopes that were vain and worthless. They saw that goodness and truth, maintained through honesty of purpose, were all that could be relied upon; and without which, the soul would be like a garden where flowers had ceased to bloom,—the rose-leaf had withered, and naught but dry and thorny stalks remained.

Honest men and women are always alive to increasing truth; and are found traveling the highway of spiritual progression. Such persons never wrap themselves in a garment woven of selfish, individual ideas, nor take a seat in some easy chair, at the expense of others; vainly trusting in the attainments, or in the goodness, of any human being. Neither will they bound their faith, nor limit their sacrifices by time-honored persons or customs. Honesty will lead every intelligent being to seek to know what God requires of them; what to do, and what to suffer for the advancement of true principles.

Intellectual culture may lead to honor and renown, in the eyes of the finite; but goodness and continence are of far greater worth in the sight of the Infinite. Without those principles in operation, there would be no salt in the earth—no balancing power, to keep the nations of the earth from dashing one against another like the wild waves of the great ocean. As society now exists, land-sharks are quite as numerous, and are as ready to devour those who have less teeth than themselves, as sharks that float in the waters, and live upon smaller fishes.

We often hear the remark, that it is seemingly an impossibility for an honest man, or woman, to keep from starving at the present time. That all trade, as now conducted, is based on fraud.

"Double dealing" is its true name and character; and it is guarded, and guided by false and lying spirits, here in this professedly Christian nation! Could we not take some profitable lessons from Mohammedans in this respect? A Platonic philosopher once said, "Why persuade me to embrace this new religion? I have been cheated by Christians; but I never defrauded any man. A Christian has broken his oath to me; but I never violated my simple word to any man." That honest philosopher would not have feared to look any man, woman, or child in the face, as far as honesty was concerned. Dishonesty, if allowed between man and man, will lead to dishonesty between the soul and God.

There is no fraud in God's creation (when unperturbed), from the least atom, to the most majestic mountain; all are subject to laws within their own sphere; and the same hand that guides the destinies of nations, feeds the ravens, and clothes the lilies. And the same sun that gilds the mountain tops, sends its rays to cheer and vivify the valleys below. The trees are not at variance with each other; if some reach a higher altitude than others, it is through a normal growth, and not through strife; and the loftiest and most vigorous trees shelter and protect the smaller ones from the rude storms, as naturally as the mother protects her infant child. If there be abstraction from, or blight upon, any of God's creation, it has come through man's influence. When man was placed as lord and ruler over the lower orders of creation, the forces of nature were young, and immature; but they were not corrupt; and they possessed latent powers, capable of development and growth into strength and beauty.

And, as the ages roll on, God's work will be accomplished, and his plans will be perfected. The great book of life, which contains the history of nations, and empires, is stored in the archives of the unseen world,—ever open to the inspection of those Angels who hold the scales of mercy and justice in their hands—ready to give to all a just recompense; not a farthing more nor less.

It has been said truly, that "an honest man is the noblest work of God." And we add: A virtuous, continent woman, is the glory of an honest man,—the joy of Angels,—and will be blest and honored by the Mother in Deity. The heavens are open to receive such souls; but the hells are not strong enough to hold them! Purity of heart is the soil, and Honesty is the central plant in the garden of the soul, around which all other virtues cluster. Industry and Innocence (her handmaid) hold sweet communion together, as they wend their way to the city of Light and Love.

REV. THOMAS K. BEECHER, brother of Henry Ward Beecher, has created no little stir among the Congregational brethren in New York by an elaborate essay in one of the leading religious weeklies, in justification and advocacy of auricular confession. A few years ago the Congregationalists were afraid this reverend gentleman was going to turn Episcopalian. Now, they are a little apprehensive that he is going beyond ritualism even, if not to Catholicism itself. Among other things of the same kind, Mr. Beecher says: "If it were the habit of a man to go to some reverend and trusted man of God once in two months and unbosom himself truthfully, can any sane man doubt that he would receive a benefit? * * * Penitence of sins is usually much deepened when a fellow man knows of it." Et c.

THE SHAKER WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

THERE is much written and spoken in these days with regard to "Woman's Rights," though we do not remember to have seen any article treating upon this subject with the qualifying word Shaker prefixed to the title. We, therefore, propose to say something about a class of women who have already obtained their rights, and who, though among the humblest in a worldly point of view, are the only women, we believe, whose rights of body, soul and spirit, are truly respected.

"Ah!" says the reader, who glances at the title, "A Shaker Woman's Rights! In what do they consist? A woman of the Shaker Order, if I am rightly informed, is cloistered for years within the confines of a rural home, possessing, apparently, but little actual knowledge of the busy world without—its rights or its wrongs—and how is she able to appreciate the rights of woman?"

Again, living in a communistic order, surrounded by diverse dispositions, one might suppose each individual would incline to cherish her own favorite views of happiness, seeking to secure her personal rights at the expense of others. Can she obtain these rights and the result be harmony?

With all due respect to your mode of reasoning, dear reader, permit us to repeat that, notwithstanding we fully comprehend your views on this subject, we still claim that those to whom we especially allude are the only persons in the civilized world who have equal rights with their brothers in the daily struggles of an earthly career.

Here let us state that it is by virtue of our loyalty to our God and to the covenant which we maintain, that we come into possession of all that truly ennobles, elevates and enfranchises woman. True, we are daily associated with various minds, where all strive to square their lives by the Saviour's Golden Rule. They are also bound to respect the rights of their sister companions; and where many live according to the dictates of an enlightened conscience, mutual good feeling prevails and harmony is the rule.

Do not think it a disadvantage, my friends, to be in daily sympathy with many kindred spirits, to be greeted by friendly countenances wherever your duty calls, and to feel a right to this pleasant association by living, yourself, mentally and morally independent of selfishness. Is not this state desirable above all others to the truly aspiring mind?

Our Shaker brothers, who have been impressed with singular views of their moral obligations toward God and their earthly companions, have also left all for Christ's sake and the gospel, and share with us the discipline of self-denial. These are among the best advocates of woman's rights, though their voices may never gain the popular ear by eloquent appeals for her independence.

Yet the God-like influence exerted by our brothers, combined with their unselfish lives, is a power to aid us in living virtuously. It is thus that they help to secure, to their sisters, the inalienable rights of Virgins.

We wish to be clearly understood that self-denial is the first, the second, and the third requisite, by which one may attain to the position of a truly enfranchised woman. One must "put Christ fully on," before realizing the depth of love possessed, the height of joy experienced, and the moral grandeur and beauty of the lives of those persons, whose characters are molded by the universal law of love, by which the Shaker sisterhood is guided.

Come then, kind reader, investigate, analyze and discuss the vitalizing principles of our communistic church, and see if the blessings of equality do not exist therein; where all have the Right to think, act, and live according to their highest conceptions of divine light, and where each aspires to wear, as her chief ornament, the royal insignia of Virgin Purity.

Asenath C. Stickney, Canterbury, N. H.

COLD words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them wrathful. Kind words make people good-natured. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much.—Pascal.

A SIMPLE VISION.

WHILE in deep thought discussing a grave subject, I seemed gradually and gently lifted mid clouds, fog and mist, in which for a moment I was enveloped. Suddenly the clouds parted and I emerged through the rift, when lo! such a lovely panorama! Houses, farms, gardens, forests and shade trees, beautifully interspersed with lakes and meadows, opened to my view as I had never before conceived.

The avenue through which I passed then closed. I remained seated on the billowy clouds, as they seemed to continue their undulatory motion, without disturbing my repose.

The landscape before me was of the richest green, the buildings pure white. No dazzling brightness pained my sight. A soft mellow light pervaded the atmosphere as far as my vision extended, rendering it marvelously transparent, so that I could discern the remotest object.

The nearest approach to any type of loveliness is the sweet, fragrant atmosphere, succeeding a short, refreshing shower in the balmy month of June, when earth is attired in her richest mantle of green; when every leaf and blade of grass glistens with the cooling rain drops, their tiny vessels have retained. So boundless the expanse I seemed lost in infinite space—my whole being absorbed in intense delight.

While surveying the beautiful scene I was impressed that it was a view of Believers' possessions; but whether in this or the spirit world I could not tell.

A crowd of thoughts rushed through my mind as follows: How deeply would I regret had I proved recreant to my faith—my high, sacred trust—and lost my place in the gospel work. I clasped my hands in joy and thankfulness, that I had kept my integrity through the vicissitudes of my short life, while a tinge of sadness somewhat neutralized my joy as my many imperfections passed before me, causing every cross and trial endured to sink into comparative insignificance, in view of God's love and goodness to one so erring. Then, a deep shade of sorrow and regret for those who had fallen by the way, losing the inheritance reserved for such as endure to the end.

On returning to consciousness of my surroundings I found only a few moments had elapsed, yet, they seemed expanded into hours, so much had I experienced in the interim. The day was bright, yet the very sunshine was murky from the contrast so plainly realized.

To those gifted ones, often blessed with beautiful visions of the better land, the momentary glimpse enjoyed by me will seem of little value. As a drop in the boundless ocean of God's love, through the multiplicity of avenues open for spiritual ministration, I hold it as a choice and precious gift, having been seldom privileged with so bright a ray from that beautiful shore—my spirit home. Or, perchance, the future of our Zion home on earth.

LOVE OF TRUTH.

THE Holy Spirit must find access to the inmost feelings of the soul, in order to educate, instruct, and become the governing influence to bring forth deeds of righteousness, that will form a Christian character, thus casting evil out of the soul.

Some imagine that God, or His Holy Presence, may be found in any place, and everywhere, because he fills immensity. But we have many evidences that God never intended that man should hide his transgressions from his fellow man, and he cannot hide from God who is everywhere present. And in this, the Fourth Dispensation, there are both male and female Confessors.

The most hardened in transgression acknowledge some authority, and feel the need of some atonement at a distance; but a present Savior, or Redeemer, is what every one needs, to help them to cast off their old imperfections and to become new creatures. To do this, souls must come before human witnesses, and make an oral confession of every known sin, and transgression of the moral or religious laws of their being.

Many say, it is their choice to confess sin to God in secret, whom they fear and regard more than any man, or woman; yet have not these same people more fear of a man, or woman, like themselves, than they have of the invisible presence of God? Because when souls are confessing their sins, or praying to God in secret for remission, without any fear or dread, were they conscious that a person of like passions with themselves, especially a hater of sin, were within hearing, would they not be alarmed and filled with consternation, simply because the fear of the individual presence of man, or woman, is deeper in the heart than the fear of an unseen Deity?

If, then, it is infinitely more mortifying to confess sins with faith and honesty in the presence of a witness, than to confess them to God abstractly, it conclusively proves that this is the deepest work; and that evil is more effectually slain before a witness; and thus confession before God's appointed witness is the nearest possible approach to purification.

This work is not a mere ceremony; but it is a direct act of duty, to be continued throughout the process of redemption. It is a fixed principle; and every soul walking in the light will love this essential obligation. It is clear to the wise and considerate, because it proves sure death to the generative life of nature, and gives complete victory over sin. Those who desire to know what they shall do to be saved from the power of evil, will be willing to make any sacrifice, that they may come into the light which will redeem them.

Rhoda Blake, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

WE hear a great deal about woman's sphere as though there was but one calling in which woman could move without robbing herself of feminine accomplishments.

There are many occupations in which women labor with advantage to themselves and others.

Are these women in their element? Do they not know their sphere as well as men? Must all educated, intelligent women perform household service, to be crowned with the plaudit: "She has labored in her sphere"?

In barbarous nations women are used as beasts of burden, having no association with their lords and masters except for sensual indulgence. Are those women in their sphere?

And among other nations, more civilized, females are articles of merchandise. Are they in their sphere on the auction block?

What of our America—our own free, noble and would-be-liberal republic? Civilization has taken as deep a hold here as in any country on the globe. Yet, woman is a slave. An unpleasant declaration, but true. Cradled in folly, dandled on the knee of fashion, taught to esteem personal charms above moral excellence, how can she be otherwise?

In the marriage relation, when woman has not the control of her own person, is subject to legalized outrage, without any regard to nature's laws or physical ability—is she in her sphere?

What of the poor sewing girls in our large cities, who work eighteen hours of twenty-four for a mere pittance on which they can scarcely subsist, frequently compelled to sell their chastity to live—are they in their sphere?

Why should the sphere of woman be limited more than the sphere of man?

A law compelling all men to be farmers would seem bad legislation.

Do not women make as good lecturers, writers, teachers, as men? Why could they not make as good lawyers, senators and presidents?

Against woman suffrage we have the argument—"It would tend to the neglect of domestic duties."

Would the number of women detained from the polls by domestic cares exceed the number of men who are absent from sheer indifference?

What shall be done with the surplus women? They cannot all be wives and mothers unless polygamy be adopted.

Another argument is: "The majority of women do not want to vote." Is that any reason why those who do should be disfranchised?

Woman's sphere, as well as man's, should be working in humanity's cause, each bearing part in public service.

Thank God there are noble-hearted men and women who dare be independent, who brave public opinion, who protest against the vices of the age, and devote their powers to reform and elevate the down-trodden. May their numbers increase, and may God bless their labors, and may all the people say Amen.

Rosie Morse, Shirley, Mass.

HARMONY.

THE word Harmony presents to the human mind a fitness of one thing with another, and bears the impress of congeniality and consistency.

If God's creation had not been perverted, it would have been like a musical scale, differing in tone, and degree, but acting in concert; the natural in its place, the spiritual in its place; each doing its proper work, in its time and season, in perfect accord.

Harmony would form a covert of peace and love; and would bid mankind lay aside all envy, and malice, caused by its opposite—inharmony—and take shelter under its gentle wings, and be at rest.

It is sad indeed, to witness the effects of inharmonious relations existing in the human family at the present time; to see how hatred, strife and revenge bear rule; and how often its subjects resort to violent measures to accomplish their evil designs; and that spirit, if indulged, knows no limit.

Disobedience to law always produces inharmony. According to Bible history, the first parents of our race sowed the seed of discord which brought forth its fruit; and for which they lost their abode in paradise. The sin of disobedience has been more or less augmented and propagated by their descendants, down to the present time. The effect has been—suffering. The causes of inharmony have become so deeply rooted in the human heart that it is natural for every one, unless influenced by a higher law, to bring forth works that will cause dissension and division in the relations of life, instead of union—the cementing bond which harmonizes and blends in one.

We all exert an influence for good or evil. Each act, word, or look, produces an effect. The founders of our institution realized this fact; and they set the example of crucifying the lusts of the flesh, and of the mind; and putting away the causes of inharmony. They destroyed the foundation principles in themselves, which would divide soul from soul, and prevent them from gaining and enjoying heaven. They received a baptism of spiritual faith, that taught them to cultivate union, harmony and peace; and which caused them to look forward, through hope, to a more glorious future.

They were pioneers in the Gospel work; and of necessity passed through a fiery ordeal. But their faith in God sustained them. Discord, is a reef, whereon many vessels have stranded, that were sailing on life's sea. But obedience to those principles which create harmony, will give all a safe passport to the haven of rest.

Jane Weldon, Union Village, Ohio.

A LATE number of that stirring Calcutta weekly, "The Friend of India," says that a remarkable movement "headed by a native has set in among the people of Eastern Bengal." They read the Scriptures, live up to the examples of the apostles, have visions, discard medicines, and heal the sick by "laying on of hands." They are rigid vegetarians, and have great faith in the efficacy of prayer. Though nominally Christian Hindus, this "native" and his followers are Spiritualists. "The gift of healing" was highly esteemed in the apostolic age—why not now? Are mineral and vegetable medicines ever necessary? is a question yet to be settled. Dr. E. D. Babbitt, 437 Fourth Avenue, N. Y., has just brought out a volume entitled the "Health Guide," which must prove exceedingly valuable to both the physically and mentally afflicted. Dr. Babbitt not only tells the people, in this volume, how to get, but how to keep well! Ex.

REFORMATION.

I LOOKED upon society and wept, because of the flood of sensuality and crime deluging the earth! Then, through faith in immortality, hope sprang up within me. I looked again; and lo! I saw the thick darkness that had so long enveloped the earth begin to pass away before the sunlight of millennial day.

Intemperance, of every kind, creates darkness. Intemperance in eating and drinking destroys physical health—demoralizing individuals and nations. In streets and lanes of great cities, where wantonness is most rife, groggeries abound. Intemperance has draped the land in mourning; and we rejoice in the present movement for its suppression. Our prayer is, that it be not only rebuked but abolished! This great work effected, the way will be open for practical reformation in other things. One wave of truth will be followed by others in the work of human progress. Let us bless even the shadow that precedes the substance. The things pertaining to this life, if temperately used, are blessings. The reverse, when used beyond the actual needs of physical sustenance.

Plain, simple diet is far more healthful to the body than highly concentrated food with condiments and viands of the most delicate kinds. The former, as it gives health physically, is also conducive to sound, healthy mind—keeps it calm and collected—and gives good moral tone to the whole being. The latter engenders disease, and enfeebles both body and mind.

Many times children inherit diseases, desires and appetites of their parents; thus the effect of wrong-doing descends from generation to generation.

Intemperance is not a new evil. The Israelites, in olden time, ate and drank, and rose up to play (commit fornication). They ate and drank for pleasure—not use—therein they sinned—were self-corrupters.

Children in this day are precocious—they reach beyond the childhood state at an early age—and show unnatural development of intellect, and of the passional nature. They crave the indulgence of animal appetites; they taste, and are not satisfied; but cry, give, give, and the more they have, the more they want. And thus they fever body and brain, often resulting in premature death; and many opening rosebuds are crushed before fully blossoming into life. What a pity that the vital energies should be thus wasted in self-gratification.

A century has now passed by, since a band of listening souls heard a voice, saying, "Cast off the garments of sin—wash in the river of judgment—renounce all carnal indulgences, and be temperate in all things." That voice came from the interior spiritual heavens, and taught that there was more to be done. The ax of truth must be applied to the root—the very nature whence sin proceeds.

As we have listened to sad experiences of disappointed, heart-broken mothers and children, who have been made wretched by the power of intoxicating drink, we have looked for the helper; knowing, that when the proper time arrived, Woman would have a part to perform.

Now, that Woman begins to awaken to duty—is finding her proper sphere of action, and putting forth her energies in the right direction—there is hope. We see many noble workers of our sex, bending their knees and bowing their souls in prayer to God, asking in deep tones—not vengeance, but mercy for the inebriate. We, in our interior Zion home, also bow and supplicate our Heavenly Father and Mother to bless the work, and aid the toilers in the field of temperance reform.

Charlotte Byrdsall, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

DR. CHARLES DRYSDALE has written a very sharp reply to Herbert Spencer's saying that the "arrest of evolution" in the female brain is the cost she has to pay for the functions of maternity. "Whenever," writes Dr. Drysdale, "science has decided that women are nobler, happier, more useful, and less apt to deluge the world with excessive numbers of children, when educated and enfranchised, than when ignorant and tied to domestic servitude, I admit that evolution has brought about the time for us to insist on the enfranchisement and education of the sex." So it seems to us.

GROWTH OF THE SOUL.

THE soul's capacity for growth, and its longings for something higher and more enduring than earth can give, is a subject that has engrossed the attention of mankind, and should continue to claim deep and earnest thought.

The soul is often spoken of as a vessel that may be filled with wisdom and virtue, and vice versa. Some have thought that view conveyed the idea of limitation to the soul's advancement, in contradistinction to the sublime truth of eternal progression in knowledge and goodness, and that it would have a tendency to check the aspirations for growth and improvement.

But shall we not conclude, that if the vessel is the soul, then the vessel expands from time to time and makes room for more, and still more. The mind of a little child may be fully occupied to-day, but its unfolding life capacitates it for increased receptivity to-morrow.

If spirit existence and progression are to be represented by material things, I would select the fairest type of seed that can be found in the vegetable kingdom, which contains within itself the germs of future life and unfolding.

In each seed, within its tender rind,
Where golden threads in endless circles wind,
Maze within maze, the shining web is rolled.
And as they burst, the living germs unfold.

In the material world, the germ exhausts itself in growth; but the spirit is ever increasing its capacity and gaining more strength and vigor, being watered by the dews of a perpetual spring, and the soul is continually putting forth new branches and forms of beauty. There is an innate desire in every intelligent soul to grow and to rise into higher conditions. As a child aspires to manhood, so does man seek a broader, wider range of thought, and to enlarge his sphere of action.

Florence Martin, Union Village, O.

DEAR EDITRESS.—Although I have not been a contributor to the bright little Herald of Truth (The "Shaker and Shakeress"), I have felt a deep interest in its growth and prosperity, and have read its pages fraught with so much good, with real satisfaction. And my prayers have been fervent, my hopes firm, and my faith strong, that it may, and will be, a Light-spreading medium, and that it may be a means of raising the banner of truth higher, which must eventually prevail over error.

I have felt for a long time past, that God is at work on the earth (though somewhat out of sight of the natural mind), to bring about an effectual change. And when I read the first published account of the "Temperance movement," I was impressed that its origin was spiritual, and I was glad to learn through the columns of our paper, that my feelings were in unison with those of my brethren and sisters, in this respect.

I fully believe that earnest, soul prayer, will be more effective in pulling down the strongholds of sin, and conquering the dragon power of intoxicating drink, than any carnal weapon or destructive instrument that men can invent.

Let our united prayer be, that the work may increase until the evils which flow from intemperance may flee the land. In faith, let us say unto this great sin which has become a mountain, "Be thou cast into the sea," or abolished.

And to my sisters, who compose the Virgin Band, I would say: Let us toil on—pray on—hope on. We will not be faint-hearted; for God is with us. If we work for Him, He will hold us as in the hollow of his hand, and keep us from all harm.

Louisa Young, Groveland, N. Y.

THE Pythagorean Hierocles said, "there is nothing more worth seeing than the Brahmins of India, a people addicted to philosophy, who eat no manner of flesh, who live almost entirely in the open air, who have all things in common, who maintain continence, who cultivate the truth, who wear clothes made of linen, and who when eating adapt their motions to music."

MAN judges of the inward disposition by the outward acts: God judges of the outward acts by the inward disposition.

INDIVIDUALITY AND COMMUNISM.

WHEN Jesus, after instructing his handful of followers, that they were the salt or saving principle of the earth, said further to them, "Have salt in yourselves," he was giving the most direct confirmation to the idea of individuality. The righteousness of Noah or David was nothing to them, nor even his own, vicariously. Enough of this salt, or saving principle, in the soul, to make the individual invincible to all the attractions which lower the tone of goodness is essential.

How can the salt retain its savor and be resistant to the putrefying and destructive elements around? A slight sprinkling of salt gives a relish and zest to some articles of food and is a stimulus to vegetable growth; even as the society of individuals, polished by some of the Christian graces, is highly prized, even by worldly men. But the integrity of the salt itself is lost by entering into chemical combination with the elements to which it is thus subjected; and unless in quantities sufficient to be decidedly unpalatable, is not saving. But, if gathered to its like, and sheltered from all unnecessary exposure to the elements, it can retain its characteristics and be ready, if needed, to furnish the evidence of its savor, pungency, and use.

Continually are operating on our spirits the unselfishness or the ambition which will transform the latent good into pollution or decay, if the testimony pungent and strong is not burning within us, which prevents all compromising with evil, or amalgamating with deceit. Perfect transparency, as illustrated by those whom the Revelator saw "standing on the sea of glass," is desirable.

E. H. Webster, Harvard, Mass.

DEAR ELDERESS A.:

In a recent Number of the "Shaker and Shakeress, I read some remarks made by the 'Travelling Daughters of New York.' And I was strongly impressed with the importance of Woman's sphere and duty; and that she should clearly understand her mission, and not run as uncertain, nor fight as those who beat the air.

Woman, through ignorance and false education, has been a medium of unholy loves and vain hopes to man, and has ministered to his sensual desires and appetites, by seeking to be to him an object of pleasure, rather than a minister of principle, and a preserver of integrity.

Now, a new Era is dawning. Divine light is breaking forth, dispelling the dark clouds which ignorance, superstition, and sinful practices have formed; and its piercing rays have entered woman's soul—vivified her conscience—and she is found praying. Now with strong cries she is heard to say—"Lord, what shall I do to be saved?" and what can I do to save my brother from ruin? The answer to that prayer will be, Let Woman come forth, and through toil and a self-sacrificing spirit, act well her part in raising the standard of moral purity higher than it has ever been raised before, and become an example to her own sex, in regard to dress and wasteful expenditure in every department of life. Then, she will shed a saving influence, and be a bright example of virtue and integrity.

And in thus doing, she will speed the day when men and women will act in concert together in all the duties of life, and be found side by side in the Council Halls of the nation as mutual guides and helps to each other. In ethics, in religion, and in civil government, the voice of Woman will be heard, and by her quick intuitive perception of right, and her inspirational emotions springing from the love element of her nature, she will be as a cloud of glory overshadowing man in his arduous labors; and her counsel will be sweet solace, and will help to solve many dark problems, and dispose of intricate subjects, and disrobe malice and envy of their power.

C. Van Houten, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

CELIBACY AND WEDLOCK.—If single life is bad, then it stands to reason that double life is twice as bad.

THE bread of life is love; the salt of life is work; the sweetness of life, poesy; the water of life, faith.

VALEDICTION.

Farewell, blessed of thy Father!
Enter now thy bright abode!
Well beloved of thy mother,
Cherish'd by the saints of God.
Dearest sister, "very pleasant
Thou hast ever been to me;"
Still, O may I feel thee present,
Breathing love and purity!
Now, thy loss, we'll not deplore it,
Though it may seem hard to bear;
God is good, He will restore it,
With his blessing everywhere.
We will mark thy footsteps lowly,
Walk the path of peace and love,
And with Angels blest and holy,
We shall join with thee above.

CHARLES NORDHOFF has been engaged in collecting the materials for a detailed account of the Communistic Societies now existing in the United States. He has been visiting and personally examining all of these societies—no slight undertaking, as they are scattered from Maine to Oregon. He proposes to give an account of the religious creeds and practices, the peculiar social customs and regulations, the history and present numbers, condition and industries of each society. The subject is novel and attractive, and the facts collected by him will be so presented as to be not only of interest to the reader for amusement, but of value to the student of social science, for their practical bearing and illustration of the possibilities and difficulties of a community of goods, a subject which is now widely agitated among workmen here and in Europe. Such a work will be a valuable contribution to the discussion.

THE CURSE OF THE AGE.

THE words which should be written in every home and impressed upon every mind are that the education that is to avail in this life is not to be learned from books, piano-stools, drawing-schools, and French tutors alone. This idea has cursed the people of this country long enough. Men and women are to-day wandering about with nothing to do, who have spent time enough poring over Greek and Latin, or drumming on a piano, and mental and muscular force enough, too, to have acquired knowledge of and skill in a business or trade that would have placed them beyond the possibility of want. The field for intelligent and skillful labor in this country is large and poorly supplied; that for accomplished imbeciles is small and terribly overstocked.

In a late number of the New Haven Evening Register, we find the following paragraph: It is said that there is not now living a single descendant in the male line of Chaucer, Shakspeare, Spencer, Milton, Cowley, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, Goldsmith, Scott, Byron, Moore, Sir Phillip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Drake, Cromwell, Hampden, Monk, Marlborough, Peterborough, Nelson, Stafford, Ormond, Clarendon, Addison, Swift, Johnson, Walpole, Bollingbroke, Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Grant, Cannib, Bacon, Locke, Newton, Davy, Hume, Gibbon, Macaulay, Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, David Garrick, John Kemble or Edmund Kean.

There is a law under which the procreative forces pass from the back brain to the intellectual and turn from the intellectual to the spiritual faculties.

GODS.

"I said, Ye are Gods," John x., 34.

Who said?

In Bible times, if not now, all the nations, and most of the peoples, had their Gods. They were "called Gods," because those, unto whom these Gods ministered, took them so to be; each believing his God was the very Deity—so did John the Revelator.

The lower down, in the scale of soul travel, men and women were, the more fully were they confirmed in the idea, that every thing spiritual—supernatural—was direct from Deity. Physical phenomena, as thunder and lightning, earthquakes and epidemics, were often believed to be the voice of God, or arbitrary visitations of his displeasure, independent of human agency, or natural causation.

When the Gentile Roman Centurion saw Jesus exercising authority over disembodied spirits, and likened him unto himself, who, as a military officer, had soldiers under him, to whom he issued commands, and was obeyed, Jesus declared, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."

A Gentile was discovered, who was more learned—better educated, in the knowledge of the Spirit world, and the Laws which there obtain, than any Jew; Jesus alone excepted.

Jesus was an extraordinary man. His love of truth and goodness was so simple and intense, that it resurrected him up, into the Heaven of all Heavens. He loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, to that degree, that it exalted him above the sectarian prejudices and national pride of his people and day.

He could detect evil, even among the Pharisees—the highest professors—and discover good in the Infidel Saducees, Samaritans and Gentiles.

This religious condition of soul, necessarily made him an enlightened spiritualist. He communed, socially, with Moses and Elias, and, no doubt, with thousands of others of the saints and prophets of earth, long ago departed. He spoke of having "bread to eat," beyond the comprehension of his disciples—Talked of "ten legions of Angels," and what help they could be to him. The Spirit World was open to his vision, from the hells into which the antediluvians had immersed themselves; up to the universal Christ Heavens.

He was born Jesus; just as Napoleon was born Napoleon.

When a boy, at school in Corsica, Napoleon played war, with forts of snow, and cannon of frozen water. He was Napoleon.

As a boy, Jesus learned to obey his earthly parents. As a Jew, he was obedient to John the Baptist. And then, as a spiritual man—a prophet—he learned obedience to the Christ Spirits, and became the Messiah.

Those Spirits were drawing him inward and upward, through all the spheres in the Spirit world, causing him to say, "If I be lifted up—resurrected—I will draw all men unto me," as fast as I can.

The Devils, in the Hells, and the Cherubim and Seraphim, in the Holy of Holies, were before him. He opened the everlasting gates of Truth, to all nations, kindreds, tongues and people—to all souls, in all worlds. He was a King—a Priest—a Prophet. He was just what every other soul becomes, who comes into the same soul-condition—"Kings and priests unto God," over others who have not yet attained unto that high religious estate—a simple love of truth and goodness—of God.

Moses was God to Pharaoh, as the Israelites were Gods to the Egyptians—"I said ye are Gods, but ye shall die like men."

The God of Abram, Isaac and Jacob was the God of Moses; and the God of Moses belonged to an Order in the Spirit World, who acted as "Angels of the Lord, and unto whom the word of God came," from the spheres above, even from the Lord their God.

The prophetic order existed in Israel and in all nations. It was universal.

Melchisedec was a prophet, and was Abram's superior—his elder. Yet Melchisedec was not even a Hebrew, but a Gentile. He was what "anti-christians" call a Heathen.

Jethro was a prophet, who instructed Moses and the whole Jewish Priesthood, in the art of civil government. He was their religious superior. Yet Jethro was a Gentile—an Ethiopian Heathen, who would not be allowed the rights of American citizenship, until the Civil Rights Bill, of Sumner, becomes American Law.

Jesus said, to the spiritually ignorant Jews, "If he, called them Gods, unto whom the word of God came," from spheres still above them; why call ye me a blasphemer, who claim to be only a son of God, and just what, even your own selves, by obedience, might become?

The Prophetic Order of human souls, to which Enoch, Melchisedec, Jethro, Baalam, Samuel, Elijah, Isaiah, John Baptist, Jesus, and "the Two Witnesses," down to George Fox, and James and Jane Wardley belonged, were Spiritual Media. When in their highest spiritual, religious condition, they were Mediums of Christ Spirits. At other times, they were capable, like Baalam, of being mediums for Spirits of lower Orders.

Prophets were expected to love truth, better than they loved life itself. They were often sent to reprove Priests and Kings, who had the power of life and death over them. They instructed and reprov'd Levites, who were mediums of the God of Israel; as they did the constituted authorities—media—of the Gods of other nations—the powers that be. These often put them to death, as Herod did John, striving to drown the truth, in the blood of Prophets and Martyrs—so that Jesus inquired of the Jews, "Which of the Prophets have your fathers not stoned, or killed, when they were sent unto them?" sent by the rock—Christ—who thus "followed them," in all their deviations and wandering, in the wilderness of sin?

And it was thus that the word of God came to them that were called Gods—even to the God of the Hebrews, and the Gods many and the Lords many, of the so-called Heathen nations of Earth.

UNIVERSAL LOVE.

JUNE 16th, 1841, I felt impressed with a wonderful sense of universal love. I had a clear manifestation that all good, all love comes from God, and is God; for the reason that "there is none good but One God;" and that "God is Love." This love is infinite, extending itself, at least potentially, everywhere; and can only be excluded from the experience and enjoyment of any soul, by the repulsive force of the selfish principle. Who ever is governed by this intense selfishness, has circumscribed feelings and ends of his own to pursue, which are out of harmony with universal love; and he therefore rejects and shuts it out as an enemy. Yea, though it may be offered to, and approved by his better judgment, if he is determined to pursue his own selfish ends, he only hates and resists it most where it is most manifested. This may be plainly seen in the conduct of the Jews against the highest manifestation of love that has ever been presented to the contemplation and acceptance of man, in the person of Jesus. This love then is the universal medium of harmony to all intelligences who will truly renounce all selfishness, self-seeking schemes and devote themselves wholly to do and suffer the will of God, and minister to the equal good of all his creatures. All such are brought into a holy union and harmony, and whatever may be the distance, as to space, which separates them, their state is one, and they are, by this universal medium, brought into contact, to dwell in one Center. This union—this holy sympathy—this sublime and endearing relation to all the good and the pure in the universe, is plainly seen and felt by those who are let into its sphere; and truly every perception of goodness and glory that ever entered the mind of man before, sinks into nothing when once this is enjoyed. As this love is infinite, it surrounds, and really does, in some degree, permeate every intelligent being. But those who are in the selfish principle, are thereby prevented from perceiving its presence, or enjoying its happy influence, in a greater or less degree, as their selfishness is more or less intense. While my soul was wrapt in this sphere of love, my affections seemed not only in union and sympathy with all the good and the pure in the universe, but to have a compassion and benevolence which ardently desired the redemption and happiness of every intelligent being, however debased by selfishness. Nor could I conceive of one single being so totally wrapped up in self as entirely to exclude all influence of the universal Love; and this little spark was so much of God, and made the possessor appear lovely. Yea, that little spark appeared sufficient, if cherished, to light up a fire in the soul that would consume the most intense spheres of the selfish principle, and ultimately unite the soul to the sphere of universal harmony. This made all souls appear lovely, as they evidently appeared the objects of God's love, belonging to Him; living in His universe; supported in existence by His power; constantly upheld by His love from sinking still lower into the black abyss of selfishness; and rendered as happy as they would permit themselves to be made. Another consideration which made all these appear more or less lovely was, that they were all equally under the care and providential government of God, and there appeared no discrete degrees in the gradation from the most dense sphere of self love, up to the confines of the sphere of universal harmony; though there was a vast difference between the two extremes. Indeed, the evil seemed so inconsiderable in the whole universe, when compared with the Infinite Goodness, that it was swallowed up in universal beauty and brightness, and seemed as nothing. This was undoubtedly viewing the bright side of the picture; yet, of this I am certain from experience, that however much real or supposed evil there may be in the universe, God may so fully inform and possess the soul with his Goodness and Love, and thus so completely happily and deliver it from all sense of evil, that it could not be more so if evil were really banished from the universe. And I apprehend that so far as I, as an individual, am concerned, with the evil that exists, I have only to see more specially to the destruction of that portion which exists in myself. Whenever this work is effected, and my soul shall be brought into complete submission to, and union with, the Divine nature, and filled with impartial love to all souls, then, if there be evil existing in the universe, it will not be evil to me. There is no good but in God, no evil but selfishness and that which flows from it. As far and as fast as we recede from the selfish sphere, we enter into God and come into harmony with all the good in the universe. Our souls are enlarged; our love is expanded, and partaking of the divine nature, we possess as it were a kind of ubiquity. Our love is co-extensive with the dominions of God; because, loving God supremely, we love whatsoever He loves and owns as his. Thus, as the apostle John says, "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." Oh, my soul, what has selfishness ever done for thee, but make thee wretched, shut out of thee the Universal Good and led thee to forsake thy Father's house and suffer famine in a far country? Then, at last, arise and go to thy Father—hate and deny selfishness in all its instances. When thou art emptied of sin and self thou wilt be filled with the infinite good and be enabled to love God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor—every creature of God—as thy self. Thus, thou wilt enter into the sphere of Universal Harmony and Eternal Peace.

A MAN diseased in body can have little joy of his wealth, he it ever so much. A golden crown cannot cure the headache nor a velvet slipper give ease to the gout, nor a purple robe fray away a burning fever. A sick man is alike sick, whosoever you lay him—on a bed of gold or on a pad of straw; with a silk quilt or a sorry rag on him. So no more can riches, gold and silver, land and living, had a man much more than ever any man had, minister unto him much joy; yea, or any true or sound joy at all, where the mind is distract and discontent.

NATIONAL SINS.

THE constant use of superfine flour bread by the American people, is a prolific source of trouble in the flesh, and also in the bones, of the American nation. Its immediate effect is clogging the system with effete matter, through the constipation of the bowels.

Its remote effects are legion. Children raised upon it exclusively can never come to much, as doers of good works, though they may expend inherited energy; for it takes a few generations to waste the physical powers of a healthy ancestry. This, the real genuine Yankees are rapidly doing, and becoming extinct. They have ignored hygiene and physiology, to make paper money, and themselves are liable to perish with that money. Dyspepsia is their father, debility their mother, and their brethren and sisters are colds, fevers and unmentionable maladies calling for incomprehensible doctors and mysterious remedies.

Give children and youth bone-making material—bran-bread, milk and oat meal, with plenty of good vegetables and abundance of fruits. They will prefer to play with the lambs rather than to eat them.

Digestion is necessary to individual existence, yet it wears out the stomach and ends in death. Progress is equally necessary to the existence of an organization, but it is also destructive of old things. Better is a dinner of herbs with love and peace, than a stalled ox, and contention therewith; because love helps digestion, while cold indifference benumbs the whole digestive machinery.

Our forefathers and mothers fought the lusts of generation, while laboring under the disadvantage of physiological lusts, from which we are, in good part, released. If they traveled twenty miles an hour, it was by an expenditure of skill and labor we may not equal. We can go sixty miles an hour—three times as fast. Are we their superiors in either case?

Our spiritual ancestors used food and drinks that stimulated the reproductive powers. Unless we avoid such food and drinks, we shall not take up our crosses as successfully as they did. No one calls in question the fact that certain drinks affect the mental and spiritual status of those who use them. Why should it then be thought incredible that certain kinds of food do also affect the mental and spiritual status of men and women?

Dr. Whitlaw declares that all the prohibited articles of diet, under Moses, produced in those who used them, unphysiological conditions, tending to immorality, and to an unspiritual frame of mind, unhealthy to the soul, no less than to the body, and that this is the scientific law upon which "the law" rested. The Jews received the command. We are beginning to discover the science—the reason of the command.

AN examination of the flesh of one of the Indiana victims of trichina disclosed millions of the creatures colling and uncolling in the tissues. Such reports are calculated to give us all a truly Mosale horror of pork and pork eaters.

TRUE greatness consists in doing what deserves to be written, or writing that deserves to be read, and in making mankind happier and better for your life.

No manners are so fine as the most awkward manifestations of good will toward men.

PEACE AND WAR.

"PEACE on earth, and good will to men," was proclaimed by the Angels, who came to the Shepherds, bringing the glad tidings, that a Saviour was born.

The lowly Nazarene preached the Gospel of Peace and good will, eighteen hundred years ago, and has been worshiped as a God. But, how few have followed him in deed and in truth—like him, denying all ungodliness and every worldly lust?

Many pretend to believe in the teaching of Jesus, but in their works deny him. These draw nigh unto him, with their lips, but their hearts are far from the truth. They will stand up and declare their belief in Jesus Christ, and, in the next breath, excite the members of their churches to go and kill their brethren on the other side of some range of mountains, or waste of waters—thus preaching in direct opposition to the teaching of one they so highly extol.

"From whence came wars and fighting? Come they not of the lusts that war in your members?" So long as the lustful passions have pre-eminence over the more God-like part, so long will the day of universal peace be deferred. In time of war, the armies, of each side, pray to the same God—the God of war—to assist them in conquering the opposite party. If their God answered their prayers it would result in the destruction of both armies. Their prayers would exterminate them.

O, wicked and adulterous generation! Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts, and consume each other.

In prosperity, man is never content. On some kind of trouble, he ever is bent. Peace brings him riches, these heget pride, A vain, haughty spirit, o'er others to ride; Pride begets war, with its horror and waste, This, down to poverty, brings man, in haste; Poverty humbles, and lowers his pride, Humility leads him to work and provide; To mind his own business, from wrangling cease, Which brings him again, to plenty and peace, He seldom rests here, the same round he'll go, The cause never learning of comfort nor woe.

"He that ruleth his own Spirit is greater than he that taketh a city"—and finds a much better reward.

Willis De Grav, Groveland, N. Y.

UNION.

"But one thing is needful." Luke 10, 42.

HAPPY, most happy the soul, who can simply bring all things into union. To center in one point, more than one object, perplexes the mind. Double minded we stand and pause where we shall first begin, and neglect both. What is the one thing needful? It is plain our Saviour means the soul keeping close company with himself. This Mary did. She sat at his feet and heard his word. Every thing else is but cumbering work compared with this. This one thing comprises all the holiness, happiness and heavenly mindedness of the soul. If we have the presence of Christ's spirit, guilty fears vanish, dejecting doubts are scattered, legal terrors silenced, anxious cares subside, strong temptations lose their force. Satan is resisted, afflictions sweetened, turbulent passions calmed, raging corruptions subdued, pride is brought down, humility excited, peace with God enjoyed, holiness promoted, fear of death conquered, hell chased away, the prospect of glory in the full fruition of truth is aspired unto. Earth loses its charms. Heaven is in the heart—to be free from sin becomes the one desire of the soul. Say, O Christian, what one thing else can produce so many blessed effects as close communion with God? Is not this the one thing, above all others, needful? Needful at all times and in all seasons. Needful in the hour of prosperity and in the day of adversity. Needful in the solemn hour of death, and in the tremendous day of judgment. O, if this one thing is maintained in the soul, Believer, you may live as you list, and do what you please; for sweet communion with holy souls in Christ ever subdues the will, attracts the affections, and begets holy conformity to rules and orders needful for the protection of the "household of faith." You will not list, you cannot like, you dare not follow any thing contrary to your Gospel Brethren and Sisters, while you live near to and dwell in holy fellowship with them.

Thus, religion is brought to a single point. Holiness and happiness are resolved into one thing. Love thy neighbor as thyself, each one seeking another's wealth—goods—and not his own. Here is but one faith to make you holy and happy. But there are a thousand things to prevent this.

O may this one thing—needful—Gospel Union—rise superior to all! Think, O my soul, of Mary's choice. Remember the Saviour's approbation of it. Choose thou also this good part, which shall never be taken away. Sit thou at the feet of the Saviours of to-day, as did Mary in her day.

Walter Vann, Pleasant Hill, Ky.

ANCIENT IRELAND.

IRISH law threw a shield around the woman's weakness. It never robbed her of her property and self-respect under pretense of making her more completely one with her husband. Such was the Celtic sense of equality. The property she brought to her husband in marriage remained her own, and could not be disposed of without her permission. How different the spirit of this provision from that of the law which makes a woman little less than a chattel, and magnanimously makes her husband her lord and master, and, it might be added, her proprietor.

The luxury of poor law unions was unknown in ancient Ireland. Apart from the authority of the old poem, in which a tourist of the day (the seventh century), giving a description, social and topographical, of Ireland, says:

"I traveled its fruitful provinces round,
And in every one of the five I found
Alike in church and in palace hall,
Abundant apparel and food for all."

The orphan was not victimized like another "Gin's baby," by being thrown mercilessly on the parish. The law provided for his adoption and support in some family in the neighborhood to which his parents had belonged. It is somewhat singular that the most recent suggestion in behalf of destitute children tend in the direction of a system similar to that which prevailed in Ireland more than a thousand years ago. Yet this is the country which English writers, in their ignorance and self-conceit, have been pleased to call "barbarous," and on which they pretend a benefit was conferred when it was brought under the tyranny of the feudal law.—Christianized.

A prominent feature in the legal system was the law of fosterage. By this law the children of nobles and gentry were placed in families of respectable persons of inferior rank to be brought up as their own. The different ranks of society were thus cemented and bound together by ties which in our colder and less emotional age can hardly be understood. Class distinctions, if not abolished, were made the means of uniting the members of the community in bonds of mutual loyalty and brotherhood more secure than the most stringent laws could ever have created. Among no other people that we know of was the sentiment of affection made so subservient to the stability of society. It is interesting at the present time, when the possession of land has become one of the great questions of the day, to know how it stood in the times of our Celtic ancestors. Absolute possession of land among them was a thing unknown. Even the chief, or king, was regarded as holding the portion he enjoyed merely by virtue of his office, and for the term of his office. Throughout all the grades of proprietorship the idea that the occupiers of land held it by a sort of trusteeship for the benefit of the tribe of which he was a member, prevailed. It may seem somewhat singular, within hearing of the arrogant assumptions of landlords in Ireland, to say, that a document exactly similar lies at the root of the English law of real property. "The first thing," says an eminent writer on the subject, "for the student of English law to do is to get rid of the idea that there is such a thing known to it as absolute ownership of land." English law regards the sovereign, in other words, the representative of the nation, as the only absolute owner, and the ordinary landlord as merely a trustee, holding it for the nation's benefit. How imperfectly this doctrine is understood or carried out, it is not necessary to describe. In ancient Ireland, however, the theory was not only acknowledged, but put in practice.—Ex.

SUTTON—a subordinate on a railway train. "The conductor," "sent him to the rear to flag another train coming up behind. On his way he fell on the track, and was run over by five cars and the caboose. His legs were completely cut off above the knee, but, remembering his orders, he cleared the track of the dismembered portions of his own body, and taking a flag out of his pocket, waved it until he had stopped the approaching train. Without this, a collision would have been inevitable."

TELLING EXPERIENCE.

BELOVED EDITORS:

In perusing your precious little paper, I came to the piece—"All these things shall be added unto you." I read it with astonishment and deep interest. It led me to reflection.

Upon reviewing my life, for the last fifty years, I can, with humble gratitude to God, truly say, that, notwithstanding my many short-comings, it has been a practical demonstration of the truth of that scripture.

I was born in England, of poor, but God-fearing parents. Was put to work at seven years of age. No education, except what a Sabbath-school afforded. There I learned to love, read and study the sacred scriptures. I had faith in God. That led me to face a frowning world, by a religious profession, when only fifteen years of age. My motto was, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven and its Righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." I was encouraged by the glorious example of many spiritual heroes, in scripture records. I passed through many trials and persecutions. I followed on to know the Lord, whom I was seeking, early in life. I had the means of saving a little money, to give me a start in life. In my twelfth year, my natural mother died. Life has passed roughly with me since that event. Now, I am thankful that I have found a Heavenly Mother who loves me as her son. When, in a far country I received indefinite tidings, that in America, there was a second, and brighter manifestation of Christ, than that which occurred in Jewry 1800 years ago, I felt that it was the call of God, to my soul. Then came a test of my faith, of a practical character. I had not the means of transportation thither. Here was a problem to be solved. Having lived in two excellent families, some eight years previous to my marriage, I went and laid the matter before them. They had religious union with my desired search for the Kingdom of Heaven upon Earth, and freely gave me eleven sovereigns, over $50—, and sent me more, after my arrival in America. It came just when I was sick in body, and grieved in spirit, at the loss of a little boy, two and a half years old.

Then I visited the Shakers at Watervliet, Montgomery county, Ohio. This visit, after coming so far to make it, I had dreaded and deferred, fearing I might be deluded, as I had no definite reliable knowledge of their faith, nor of the lives it produced.

My Visit.—In a few days I began to receive internal evidence that I had, in fact, found the "Kingdom come," for which I had been so long praying. I had also ocular demonstration—not "in deep sleep and in the visions of the night," but when wide awake. I was powerfully shaken, while in bed, and heard a voice, saying—"This is what you asked in prayer. If you can accept it, upon my terms, well. If not, that is the end of all your praying."

I arose, and on my knees, promised God, and covenanted with myself, to be "strictly obedient to the Heavenly vision."

Next morning, I went to the Elders and confessed to God, my sins. I was blest—never before did the Sun shine so brightly, as on that, to me, joyful morning. The whole creation looked beautiful. Nor was my rejoicing evanescent. To this day, "my cup of salvation—of blessing—runneth over. Blessed be the Lord; for he hath heard the voice of my supplication. I have been helped. Save, O Lord, thine inheritance. Rule and Exalt it forever."

My conclusion is, that simple obedience to God's requirements insures the actual fulfillment of his engagements, and we have the happy experience, that by this Second Gospel testimony, the ax is laid at the root of the tree of evil, which causes all of human woe.

Nothing short of a deep sense of duty to God, and obligation to my fellow creatures, could induce me to make this public confession of faith. I am thankful for a resting place.

"Thou shalt not see a fierce people, a people of a deeper speech than thou canst perceive; of stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand." "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall see Jerusalem, a quiet habitation."—Isa. 33:18.

But I congratulate you on the mountain. "In the last days, the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountain—exalted above the hills. Many people shall say, Let us go up to the mountain of the Lord—to the House of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord, from Jerusalem."—Isa. 22.

I have sent the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS to the families I lived with, in England, and hope they will be as noble as the ancient Bereans who "daily searched the scriptures, to see whether these things were so, or not so." But, if in this life they reject my testimony, when they enter the Spirit world, and "their souls walk in dry places," I hope it may prove to be a seed; and that then they will lay hold of eternal life—that they may understand the scriptures, when they say (Ezekiel, 22, 24):

"Thus saith the Lord God; I myself will take of the marrow of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off a tender twig from the top of the branches thereof, and I will plant it on a mountain, high and eminent. On the high mountains of Israel will I plant it, and it shall shoot forth into branches, and shall bear fruit; and it shall become a great cedar, and all birds shall dwell under it; and every fowl shall make its nest under the shadow of the branches thereof. And all the trees of the country shall know, that I, the Lord, have brought down the high tree, and exalted the low tree; and have dried up the green tree, and have caused the dry tree to flourish. I the Lord have spoken and done it.

And more are the children of the barren—Shaker celibate Ann Lee—than of the married, wife, saith the Lord."

One of those children,

WRITE.

The Spirit says, "Write"—What shall I write?—"Write what cometh unto thee."

Now, more than ever before, is soul atmosphere permeated with elements of progress—of human elevation—more than ever before, are the old heavens—old religious organizations, creeds and forms, on which men did rely—being dissolved—the elements, thereof, melting with fervent heat. Henceforth, will men and women work out their salvation, instead of having it rubbed in from the outside.

New Heavens are being formed in the Souls of the People. In the souls of such as aspire to the purity of Angels. No darkness in the New Heavens—neither act, word, feeling nor thought, that will not bear the searching light.

Who will ascend the hill of the Lord? Who will be living stones, builded into the Living Temple of the Living God? Splendid opportunity now, to draw the highest prize.

What of the old Earth—the generative order? That, too, has become affected. The fact is—the old Heavens, and Earth—religion and generation—have been so mixed up, compounded and confounded, that both are sick, past recovery. No D. D.'s nor M. D.'s can resuscitate them.

We must have new earth, as well as new heavens. In the New Earth—new order of generation, USE is the motto—the cardinal—the organic law—no abuse—no prostitution of generative organs. Those, whose aspirations reached not to the highest prize—the new Heavens—may find a field, lower down—in the new Earth. We do not say they will get lower-priced article. We only say they will get an article not worth so much.

What per cent, of what is called humanity, will aspire to the new Heaven—what per cent to the new Earth remains to be seen.

The remainder, through delicacy, we'll call debris—of no account.

THE SHAKERS IN LYNN.

HAVING seen, by the papers, the Shakers were to speak in Lynn, I took the cars, Sunday P. M., May 31, and there found Elder Vance, from Maine, and Elders John Whitely and William Leonard, of Harvard, Mass.; Catharine B. Walker and other Sisters gathered at Oxford Hall, occupied by the Supervisors.

Elder Wm. Leonard spoke at some length on the confession of sins, to Elders and Eldresses, and was listened to with marked attention.

The meeting was addressed by Elder Vance, and by J. M. Peebles, the champion of Spiritualism, setting forth the doctrine of practical religion, by good works, and of doing to others, as we would others should do to us, taking the Bible and Inspiration as our only rule of faith and practice.

The singing was truly delightful and enchanting; the faces of the audience seemed to shine with admiration.

In the evening, Elder Vance spoke, at some length, on the true marriage question, as taught in the Scriptures — and as practiced at the present day, showing the absurdities and misery growing out of the latter.

Sister C. B. Walker gave a deeply interesting account of her experience — why she became a Shakeress. She spoke in a clear tone of voice, that seemed to carry conviction to the hearts of all present. Every word seemed to be clothed with inspiration and love.

She said it would be impossible to convey to the human soul the joy and peace of mind that thrilled her heart, in self-consecration to Shaker faith. I never saw an audience so completely spell-bound and delighted as on that occasion.

The time has fully come, I think, for the Shakers to go out into the world, and let their light shine. The world is in darkness and needs the light.

I have visited, and been conversant, with the Shakers, more than a score of years, and have ever found them truthful, kind and honest.

WE REAP WHAT WE SOW.

BY H. CLAY PREUSS.

For pleasure or pain, for weal or for woe,
'Tis the law of our being — we reap what we sow,
We may try to evade them — may do what we will —
But our acts, like our shadows, will follow us still.

The world is a wonderful chemist, he sure,
And detects in a moment the base or the pure;
We may boast of our claims to genius or birth,
But the world takes a man for just what he's worth.

We start in the race for fortune or fame,
And then when we fail the world hears the blame
Not nine times in ten, 'tis plain to be seen,
There's a "screw somewhere loose" in the human machine.

Are you wearied and worn in this hard earthly strife?
Do you yearn for affection to sweeten your life?
Remember this great truth has often been proved —
We must make ourselves lovable would we be loved.

Though life may appear as a desolate track,
Yet the bread that we cast on the waters comes back;
This law was enacted by Heaven above,
That like attracts like and love begets love.

We are proud of our mansions of mortar and stone,
In our gardens are flowers from every zone;
But the beautiful graces that blossom within,
Grow shriveled and die in the Upas of sin.

We make ourselves heroes and martyrs for gold
Till health becomes broken and youth becomes old;
Ah! did we the same for beautiful love,
Our lives might be music for angels above.

We reap what we sow — oh! wonderful truth;
A truth hard to learn in the days of our youth;
But at last it shines out as "the hand on the wall,"
For the world has its debit and credit for all.

— The Industrial Age.

THERE is a terrible epidemic of trichina among the swine of Kaskaskia Bottom, Illinois. It is estimated that not less than from 10,000 to 15,000 hogs have died of this disease in that neighborhood within the past nine months.

COUNSEL FOR YOUTHS.

THOUGHTS.

BELOVED Youth in Zion. If you keep your thoughts pure, and bring them into complete subjection to the obedience of Christ, then your life will be blameless. The indulgence of sinful thoughts and desires produces sinful actions. "When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin." James 1st. 15th. The pleasurable contemplation of a sinful deed is often followed by its commission. Never permit yourselves to pause and consider the pleasure or profit you might derive from this or that sin, but close your minds against the evil suggestion at once, as you would lock and bolt your doors against robbers. If our parents had not stood parleying with temptation and admiring the forbidden fruit, this earth might be a paradise. No one becomes a depraved and abandoned character all at once. The mind first becomes corrupted. The wicked suggestion is indulged and revolved in the thoughts, until it loses its hideous appearance, and the anticipated gain, or pleasure, seems to outweigh the evils of the transgression. Your vain imaginations are apt to paint sensual pleasures in gay and dazzling colors. Beware! It is the serpent's charm! Look not upon the picture, neither allow the tempter to gain a lodgment in your hearts. Meet the enemy at the threshold and expel evil from your minds. Destroy it, or it will destroy you! As a rule, the more familiar you become with sin, the less hateful it appears. Therefore the more completely you preserve your minds from sinful thoughts, the better. Never permit yourselves to read any thing unchaste, or immoral; nor allow your minds to become familiar with the details of crime; but direct your thoughts toward pure and holy subjects. Contemplate the spotless characters of our Saviours — Jesus and Mother — and their successors; who have bequeathed to you a rich inheritance of holy precepts and examples; and walk in their footsteps; so shall your lives be virtuous and happy. Take care of your thoughts, and your actions will take care of themselves.

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Ct.

TEMPERANCE.

EDITORS OF THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

Knowing that you take an interest in every degree of moral and spiritual reform going on in the world, which has for its object the elevation of our race, we thought we would let you know how the temperance cause is progressing in Cleveland.

This institution seems to be conducted almost exclusively by women, and has, ever since its inauguration, except being backed by some clergy of all denominations, and these two elements combined are giving the temperance cause an impetus hitherto unknown, and these again backed by the invisible, are very fast becoming a power in the land against the demon intemperance.

That the Temperance cause in Cleveland is gradually gaining strength every day, is evident from the following resolutions passed at a mass meeting held recently, published in the Cleveland Herald of the 16th inst., from which we make the following extracts.

"Resolved, That this movement be continued as it was begun, animated only by the spirit of kindness, and guided only by the law of love, toward those who sell intoxicating liquors.

Resolved, That we manifest warm interest in those who habitually drink, and we will not cease to labor for their reformation, by prayer, by personal kindness, and by proper attention.

Resolved, That through grace, the success attending the women of Cleveland, in their work of the last eight weeks, is most gratifying, and is without a parallel in any previous history of moral reform.

Resolved, That we favor the establishing of drinking fountains (water of course) in our streets, at suitable intervals, throughout every section of our city."

When a praying band of women visited a saloon on the road leading from the city to our settlement, we felt to say in our heart, "God bless the women!" This is their peculiar mission — because they are chosen for this purpose, and they have our union, sympathy and prayers.

Elder James S. Prescott, North Union, O.

NOVELS.

WHAT is the secret of the fascination of novels and novel reading?

There is, in human souls, a germinal conception of a latent power of enjoyment — happiness — not yet attained unto.

As one said, of an evil experience — "That, which I greatly feared, has come upon me" — thus showing that he had formed an imagination of it.

So it is with a good experience. That, which I conceived, in mind, and desired, is actualized in my life.

We are saved by hope. We live, by anticipating something, which will, in the future, be fruition.

Novels are the world's prophecies. The spirit of prophecy is the life of the Christian. The just shall live by faith. Hence, the Christian needs no novels. As truth is stranger than fiction, so is prophecy superior to novels.

Religious meetings, abounding in the Gifts of the Spirit, are far more wonderful, fascinating and absorbing, than any theatrical exhibition — even as spiritualistic phenomena are superior to the acts of the necromancers, the substance, to the shadows, or the true science of government, which will result in the Millennium, to the arts of the time-serving politician.

The love of stimulation — of excitement of the senses, is only the measure of capacity, for enjoying spiritual things, objective to the spiritual senses. Each vice is as the shadow of the corresponding virtue. Vice, like stealing, shows the desire to possess, and the ability to enjoy, that which cannot be rightfully possessed except by honest acquisition. To be enjoyed, it must be earned.

Novel reading, alcoholic drinks, and improperly stimulating food, are like unto a man drawing upon a bank, wherein he has no funds. He is simply borrowing — contracting a debt, which may leave him a prisoner in some jail, out of which he may not come till he has paid the uttermost farthing.

Be real. Be true. Draw not upon fancy, for the good you may gain, by honest toil and unremitting industry.

Be sober — be vigilant — an unregulated imagination will waste the powers of enjoyment ere life has fairly commenced.

NOTICE. — To me, the Temperance movement appears so important as to almost include every other.

I feel a deep interest in every thing that tends to diminish the great and growing evil of intoxicating drinks.

Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.

I would that every bar-room and drinking saloon was banished from the face of the earth, or turned into something useful.

For half a century I have advocated the cause of temperance in all things, and in that time, have experienced but a few days of sickness.

I am thankful for our little Monthly. It bears a true testimony, sifted, screened and purified — a little here and a little there. Every contribution is like a sparkling gem, or a diamond, bright, sharp and flinty.

The Editors have my blessing and love.

MINISTERIAL AGENCY.

—o—

ALL natural children in their infant and childhood state need guides and guardians. Without such guardians, they could not long exist; being not only dependent upon them for food and raiment, but they lean upon them—tell their trials—and look to them for counsel.

And where can we find a man, or woman, who, when in trouble, or pain, either mental or physical, does not seek relief from some sympathizing friend in visible form? If physically diseased, do they not ask to find a physician that will understand their condition and point out a remedy? It would not satisfy them to believe that skillful physicians, or healing media lived on earth centuries ago; they want some person, tangible to their external senses, that they can see, and feel; to whom they can speak and from whom they can receive a response.

The natural is a figure of the spiritual. Jesus said, "Except ye receive the Kingdom as little children, ye shall in no case enter therein." Spiritual children are as dependent for aid and counsel as the natural; and have need of teachers and guides who are higher in the scale of virtue and intelligence than themselves.

Jesus was a healing medium; he cured physical diseases, and cast devils, or evils, out of souls. God works through Agents, and the lesser is dependent upon the greater. There is a connecting chain of intelligences from the lower to the higher, until by progressive degrees, human souls rise into the divine spheres of light and love, where inharmony cannot enter.

It is claimed that God is Omnipresent—is in all places,—and in all things. If we admit that He is everywhere in his own creation, yet he is not seen and felt for the same purpose. We see Him in the stars, in the different strata of soils, in clouds, or in the song of birds; we hear Him in loud peals of thunder, and feel Him as a Power, riding the whirlwind and directing the storm; in all this, there is method—Order.

But in dealing with human beings, we see that God has reasoned with man and woman, through intelligent agencies, all down through the ages. He has appointed ministers and elders who have been as gods to the people, for the time being. Moses was a god unto Aaron—a law-giver to the Israelites. He was a medium for spiritual communication to those who were less progressed than himself—a link in the chain. And the laws which he received from disembodied spirits, or angels, for the people, although imperfect, were the best that they were prepared to receive; and sufficient unto that day, was the good thereof.

The Levitical Priesthood were appointed media, through whom the higher intelligences could reach the lower; and vice versa. It was God's altar of sacrifice for the people. To the order of priesthood, they brought their sacrifices for sins committed, and thus showed their deeds, and through the priests sought remission. Here we see that the principle of oral confession, to anointed witnesses, was acknowledged; a mercy seat was established in a certain place; and there God promised to meet and commune with the people, through the order of the priesthood. The same law held good through the order of the Prophets, who were mediators between the more and less progressed intelligences, in both worlds, the mundane and the celestial.

Jesus of Nazareth, who was baptized with the Christ-Spirit, was a teacher of a still higher law and became the High Priest of a New Dispensation. He did not condemn the law, nor did he abolish the ordinance of oral confession; but when he went with the multitude to the river Jordan, where John, his forerunner, had pitched his tent, for the purpose of attending to those who came to him confessing and repenting of their sins,—seeking to be immersed in the cleansing waters of that river,—did he not give unmistakable proof of his faith in the confession of sin to God's witnesses?

What were the keys that he gave to Peter when he appointed him to be the first Leader of his little flock, that he was about to leave, when he said to him, "What ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and what ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and whose-soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them." Did he not appoint a succession of the confessional through his apostles at that time?

It is written, that under the preaching of Paul, "Fear (or conviction) fell upon the people and many came and showed their deeds."

Jesus said of himself, "I am the light of the world." He also said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world." They who live in sin, and choose to continue therein will not "bring their deeds to the light, lest they be reprov'd." Such persons give evidence that they love darkness, rather than light.

They who desire to accept Christ as a whole Saviour, in the dual order of male and female, are thankful to approach the mercy-seat that was prefigured under the Law; but is now a living reality in the Gospel dispensation. It is the "door of hope," through which many have entered, and found salvation and strength, through the power of the Christ-Spirit, in both male and female. Now the wings of the cherubim and seraphim touch each other.

Appointed ministers of the New Covenant, watch over and guard the mercy seat, where perpetual communion is held, between saints on earth and saints in heaven; and a holy bond of union is formed, which cannot be broken.

CHRISTIANITY.

—o—

JESUS of Nazareth, the founder or exponent of Christianity, came from the exclusive Order of Essenes, and became the corner stone of a more perfect system than had yet obtained among that sect. He opened a new fountain of inspiration to priests and people; and advanced the great work of progress toward the millennium of humanity. In practical life he was a pattern of holiness; and all orders of people have admired him in his virgin character, even if they were not willing to follow his example in that respect.

Although, at the time of the first advent of the Christ-Spirit on earth—embodied in the baptized Jesus—the civil governments were not sufficiently progressed, nor the people prepared for the permanent establishing of a Christian Pentecostal Church upon a basis that could stand; yet, from that time unto the present, effective forces have been at work to prepare the way for a new heavens and earth that would be based upon the Rock—Sexual purity—Non-resistance—Love to God and to neighbor, which would be manifest by an equal distribution of all things that pertain to physical life. Those principles, when received and reduced to practice, will give freedom from many vexing troubles which attend those who live in the generative order.

Strange as it may appear, to the more spiritually progressed, whenever the higher Christian order and work is perceived and accepted by Truth seekers, there is mourning in the land; especially in the nominal churches; and indeed, all who love the world and the things thereof, mourn, because the Gospel testimony is like a sharp sword, proceeding from the mouth of those who bear it, to slay the carnal mind. Those who rise above the generative plane of life receive divine inspiration and power from the inner, or Seventh heaven, where souls, aggregated as Christ's ministers, pass through the spheres of God's creation, whenever and wherever sent.

J. D. Knight, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

ZION MUST BE PURE.

—o—

If the Church of Christ's Second Appearing is to be as a "city upon a hill," giving light to the world, then, how great is the necessity of maintaining a swift testimony against every form of evil within her own borders. How can the higher "Law go forth from Zion," that shall be a teacher of truth and purity to others, unless those individuals who form the collective body within her gates, make a practical application of that law to their own lives? Zion must be pure. God will surely purge His floor; the wheat He will garner, and the chaff will be blown away by the winds of truth.

Those who are willing that the Gospel fire shall burn in their hearts, to consume the false and give room for the true, will make themselves worthy to eat at the Lord's table, and to drink of the pure crystal waters which flow from His eternal fountain. But they who live in carnal pleasure—serve the tabernacle—have no right to partake at the Lord's table."

The Holy Spirit is waiting and calling upon all to make ready for an increase of spiritual truth, by greater sacrifices of that which is selfish and worldly. The good shepherd and shepherdess of souls stand ready to enfold the innocent lambs in the arms of love, and they will lead them into living pastures which are evergreen and growing, being warmed and vivified by the sun of righteousness.

Oh, glorious, happy day!
God speed the rising sun;
Haste to the fields in bright array,
Ye laborers, every one.
There's work for each to do;
No soul should idle stand;
God's numbered ones are few,
And each should lend a hand.
Flinch not, nor doubtful feel—
The Angels cheer you on,
To tread with strength and zeal,
The path the Saints have gone.
For armies from above
Have reinforced our bands;
The banners, Truth and Love,
They bear with fearless hands.

Let hypocrites beware!
The battle will not cease,
Till Zion's borders fair,
Proclaim for love and peace.
Till every soul is sealed
To God and to His truth;
Till justice is revealed,
From aged down to youth.
Till, written on each face
Is Father's holy name;
And, Mother's love hath place
Throughout the heart's domain.

The harvest fields are white;
Then, let us all awake;
From off our raiment bright,
The dust of slumber shake.
The blessed morn is here,
Dull night hath died away;
Brave hearts, with purpose clear,
Shall toil in this new day.

J. Johnson, West Pittsfield, Mass.

THE gentlest spirits, when provoked, are the most determined. The reason may be that, not taking up resolutions lightly, their very deliberation makes them the more immovable; and then, when a point is clear and self-evident, how can one with patience think of entering into an argument of contention upon it? Beware the fury of a patient man!—Ez.

THE NEW CREATION.

—o—

"In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

This sublime oath and sacred promise was made by the God of Israel to Abraham the father of the faith of the New Creation. It embodies a law that has been gradually unfolding in each of the four Dispensations of God's love and grace to man. These had to succeed each other until the mystery of God was fully revealed—finished.

In the ministration, by Angels, of the Law of types and shadows, the ten commandments were written by the finger of God, in Hebrew characters, on two tables of stone, because they could not be contained by one table only.

It prophesied the two Christian Dispensations—Jewish and Gentile—male and female. And the sacrifice of beasts—male and female—pointed in the same direction. The male beast was slain first to make an atonement for animal physical sin, and then the female beast was slain as a peace offering.

Saviours came forth from Judah and Edom with garments died in blood—the generative life—see Zach. (vi. 13), "He shall build the temple of the Lord, and He shall bear the glory;"—the woman is the glory of the man—and "He shall sit and rule upon his throne, and the counsel of peace shall be between them both."

Jesus of Bethlehem, and Ann of Manchester, were heirs of the faith of Abraham appointed to accomplish the purposes of God, included in the oath, that all the nations of the earth should be blessed in his seed. The seed of the spiritual woman would bruise the head of the sensual nature of fallen man—the lust of generation—by resurrection out of the generative Order, thus creating a spiritual woman.

They became the parents of the New Creation which is based upon death to the work of physical, animal propagation. Life is sacrificed and hated—the carnal life and all it produces is forsaken, and a new life, even "eternal life" is revealed. In place of the natural there is the spiritual Parentage with its Brothers and Sisters, and a household of faith where all property is "in common," thus constituting the true Church of the Christ-Spirit, the Temple of God.

The soul that receives this word of faith has the beginning of the New Creation in itself, just as it began in the first son, Jesus, and in the first daughter, Ann. They were the first born of the Christ Parentage, first of many brethren and sisters; for to as many as receive the Christ-Spirit, they give power to become the sons and daughters of God.

Obedience brings the soul under God's everlasting covenant. To enter the kingdom of heaven upon earth, we must become like the first elder brother and sister in all things. Let the word of life have free course in our souls, and let every thing go that would bind us down to the earthly order of generation, and its concomitants.

As the natural child in its infancy knows little of its earthly parentage, and increases in understanding as it grows in years, so is it with spiritual children; they attain to the measure of the stature of men and women in Christ Jesus, and in Christ Ann, by slow degrees.

The natural elements in man and woman must be burned up by the baptism of the Christ-Spirit—melted with the fervent heat of spiritual love, which is as fire to earthly, carnal loves and affections, cares and interests. Then the Bridegroom and bride are revealed to their true sons and daughters.

Thus the souls of all true believers find in the hour of tribulation, that they have an anchor sure and steadfast, and they know in whom and in what they have believed. Even their bodies become pure, fit temples for souls to dwell in, through the chastening virtue of self-denial.

As sin entered into the world by the agency and co-operation of male and female, why should it not also be removed by their union in the Truth, as co-workers together with God?

KNOWLEDGE.

—o—

THAT "knowledge is power," to a certain extent, we cannot deny. According to bible history, a thirst for knowledge was the prime cause of the fall of our first parents, who were placed to dress and keep the beautiful garden called "Eden."

All that was needful for man's sustenance—all that he could use and not profane, was freely offered to him without constraint; but there was a prohibition placed upon one tree called the tree of knowledge, and he seemed to desire to eat of the fruit of that tree more than of all the other trees; although a heavy penalty hung over him, if by disobedience he violated the injunction given him.

As we trace the ancestral line of history back to the original progenitors of our race, can we not detect the same disposition in all their lineal descendants, to crave knowledge of things that will afford present gratification to the senses, irrespective of law and order, notwithstanding the voice of God speaks to them through the conscience, saying "eat not lest ye die?" Obedience to truth is a life preserver. Disobedience gives pain and is a life destroyer.

The desire for knowledge in the human heart, when sought within the limit of law, and guided by wisdom that applies knowledge to use, is God-given, and is in conformity to his designs for the elevation and progress of humanity; and is laudable in the highest degree.

We wonder when we contemplate what the united intellect of men and women, in the mundane and super-mundane spheres, have accomplished, in revealing the hidden mysteries of science. To effect this work, lofty mountains have been scaled, deep caverns have been penetrated, great oceans have been fathomed, by which a knowledge of animate and inanimate things on the land and in the seas has been attained.

The wild lands of America and the jungles of Africa have been explored, and the religious manners and customs of all civilized and so-called savage nations have been investigated. The mausoleums of past ages have been entered, the remains of ancient sculpture and art have been examined, and the fossil remains of men and animals have been dug from the earth. The encyclopedias and halls of science of to-day tell, in part, of the success of the searches and researches that have been made in quest of knowledge. And as the facilities for accumulating knowledge are increased, the desires are enhanced for more; and at the present time great efforts are made to penetrate the ice-bound regions of the North, at the peril of life and property, in search of an open sea at the poles, if such sea exist.

While men and women by searching have found out God, to a marked degree, as manifested in the outward visible creation, so that they can describe the course of the stars, send messages from country to country with lightning speed, under the waves of the mighty ocean as well as over hill and dale; and the iron horse has found its way through the hitherto trackless regions of the far West, carrying untold treasures of wealth, the products of industry, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts; still there is much sorrow and mourning in the land; for the rich are increasing in wealth and luxurious habits of life, and the poorer classes are depressed in proportion.

War, intemperance, sensuality and crime are filling the land and destroying the vital energies of the people. Corruption and fraud are found in the churches, in the legislative halls of the nation, and all down through society from the highest to the lowest ranks.

The wisdom that cometh from above, that will cause men and women to fear God and work righteousness, has been ignored or lost sight of to a great extent. It seems to have been forgotten, or never understood, that sooner or later God will require a strict account of every thought, word and deed; and that in the light of his judgment all will stand approved or condemned before him.

Rhoda R. Hollister, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

GREAT effort from great motives is the best definition of a happy life.

CORRESPONDENCE.

—o—

BELOVED ELDERESS ANTOINETTE:

In perusing a late number of the Shaker and Shakeress, I was deeply interested and edified with the article headed "Courage Toilers."

As I view the present condition of society, the aspect presents cause for great courage and patient toiling, on the part of those who possess wisdom, and have the ability to work for the elevation and redemption of the human race. There is need that every effort be directed to aid the Gospel work; that Truth may triumph, and the voice of Reason and Conscience may be heard.

We should not be discouraged, if we feel that the work progresses slowly; rather let us enter into the sublime patience of the Lord, and trust Him to weave our little threads (one at a time) into the great web, though the whole pattern is not shown us.

God's people must be willing to labor and wait for the fruit; remembering that one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and that the grand harvest of the ages shall come to its reaping in good time, and the day shall broaden into a thousand years, and the thousand shall show one perfect and finished day.

I realize that I am but as a grain of sand, possessing neither large talent, nor power. But my sympathy and prayers are enlisted in the glorious cause of advancing truth: and I will strive to "let Patience have her perfect work," and bring forth her celestial fruits. Angels bless the patient in spirit, and let us all be co-laborers with them; and while we toil to sow the good seed, and look around us for duties to perform, let us look up to a higher source for strength to discharge those duties, and for our reward.

Our Captain and Pattern said, "Lo, I am with you always!" With such a promise to cheer us onward, why should we not willingly toil and pray—trusting in humble confidence—giving our hearts to God in grateful adoration?

Maria Witham, Enfield, Ct.

SELF-DENIAL.

—o—

If we make progress God-ward, it will be through self-denial, the opposite of self-indulgence.

The all-wise God has given laws to regulate and govern our actions. If we study and obey those laws we shall find protection, and be saved from the sorrows and troubles that all feel who violate them.

We, as dependent beings, are but small particles in God's universe of intelligence, and can do nothing without the aid of his Spirit to quicken and animate our souls. We may be endowed with intellect and natural talent, but unless we cultivate the moral and spiritual part of our being, we do not answer the design for which we were created, and shall be accountable for the non-improvement of our highest faculties.

If we realize our dependence, and in child-like simplicity ask assistance, believing that He who hears the cry of the raven, and clothes the lily of the vale, will also hear and reward us if we diligently seek, then we shall realize the truth of the promise, "Ask and ye shall receive."

By denying the cravings of the carnal mind we triumph over the lower passions which yield no abiding pleasure, and make room in our hearts for God's Spirit to dwell, which, by degrees, will educate and lead us into all truth and teach that we were created for a noble purpose—to find and occupy a sphere above the animal plane.

Laying aside worldly wisdom and seeking through child-like innocence and trust, for the wisdom of God, the understanding becomes enlightened, and doubts and fears are dispelled from the mind.

We find that it requires strong faith and as great self-denial in us (as it did in Abraham of old) to make a full sacrifice and give the whole heart to God. But those who thus dedicate all will receive a great reward. Their souls will be as a watered garden, they will be neither barren nor unfruitful, but will eat and drink of living bread and waters and thirst no more.

Mary Middleton, Union Village, Ohio.

BEAUTY.

IN what does real beauty consist?

There is a beauty in personal form and feature; and there are many beauties in Nature and Art, but the highest, crowning beauty of all is, that of souls, made pure by obedience to truth, and love to holiness. Untarnished by sin — faithful in every duty — they shine with a brightness that nought but purity of life can give.

The soul that has subdued, in itself, all that is evil, and is moved and governed by high and holy motives, looking beyond natural things, to the Divine Spirit, for light, life and strength; who freely consecrates time, talents and strength of body and mind, to the service of God, attains to a high degree of holiness and forms a type of soul beauty.

It is not enough for us to perceive, admire, and love such beauty in others; we should labor to follow their example and unfold the true and beautiful in our own characters; and manifest our love to God, by cheerfully sacrificing that which is self-pleasing, for the good of others. To soothe and comfort the weary — bind up the broken spirit and gently lead the erring into the path of truth and right should be our highest aim. This will make the soul beautiful!

Florence Martin, Union Village, O.

PEACE AT LAST.

I sought in vain for comfort, in pleasures of the world;
I saw its brightest visions turn to mis'ries untold;
I walk'd through scenes of sorrow, trusting earthly pow'r,
To sustain my fainting spirit in the trying hour.
I've made (Oh! God forgive me) idols on the earth,
And worship'd them, forsaking things of greater worth;
But all those things have vanish'd, and in sorrow deep
Left me alone — forsaken — to wander and to weep.
Now, rays of light are shining; in the distance I can see
Hope, Religion, — many treasures indeed are left to me;
Forsaking earthly pleasures, I turn to thee O God!
And humbly walk before thee in the path that Jesus trod.
Now, joy and consolation, my wearied soul has found,
In seeking full salvation on Zion's holy ground;
Devoting all my efforts to serve and worship God,
I'll bow in true submission, and bless his chast'ning rod.
He has led me out of bondage — sooth'd me with his love —
And taught me to prepare for a heav'nly home above.

TO THE TEMPERANCE BAND.

We unto you in kindly greeting,
Waft our blessing and our love;
Praying that each temperance meeting,
Will to souls a blessing prove.
Ask for aid, it will be given;
Guardian friends are hovering near;
Look to God for strength and comfort,
He the cause will guide and cheer.

Seraphims of love and mercy,
Go before and chant the song,
Beaming light, truth and conviction;
This will make your army strong.
Hear ye not the voice of Angels,
Hovering o'er each valiant band,
Speaking love and inspiration,
Giving strength to heart and hand?

Persevere, perform your mission,
God reserv'd this work for you,
Many souls in deep contrition,
Will your path with blessings strew.
Fear ye not; fulfill your duty,
Angels chant the song of life!
Female messengers of mercy,
Will subdue the stormy strife.

Nancy P. Riley, W. Pittsfield, Mass.

PURE LOVE.

PURE Love is a celestial gem; nothing earthly-born can compare with it. Love contains within itself the germs of all other gifts and graces. Purity of heart, Charity which suffers long, mercy and forgiveness are all found in love's embraces, and are the legitimate fruits which flow therefrom.

May I be clothed with the beautiful spirit of love; may it constitute my chief adorning while I dwell in an earthly form, and fit me for the companionship of pure spirits in the land of light and love! Then with the wise virgins of our own time, I shall be prepared to go forth bearing the lamp of truth in my hand that will shed light upon the pathway of the pilgrim traveler, and shall be ready to make efforts to raise the fallen, and point them to the path of virtue — the straight and narrow way that leads to happiness — to the Fountain of all good.

Mary A. Whitely, Shirley, Mass.

THY WORK.

A constant dropping of the good
Will wear away the stony heart,
Where flame of fire, and deluge flood,
Could not vitality impart.

Continue then thy little deeds
Of kindness, love, and sweet control;
For greatest gifts are to the needs,
And highest love is to the soul.

Pray on, work on; the light is near,
A perfect light and life in God;
Thou hast no earthly ill to fear,
When with the truth thy feet are shod.

The dawn of day that bursts in light,
Is hid behind one lonely hill;
The sun ascends and flees the night,
That we may work with God's pure will.

And where is God? by things well seen
We trace the order of his place;
In male and female to redeem,
And lead the chosen heirs of grace.

Endued with wisdom and with love,
Whose attributes they jointly share;
Uplifting souls to realms above,
Two powers as one for Zion care.

Mary Whitcher, Canterbury, N. H.

LAWS OF HEALTH.

DR. EVERETT, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, has been lecturing to the citizens of Newburg on the laws of health. He claims that health, moral character, and the temperance question depend upon physiology; that diseased conditions of the nervous system render people peevish and profane, and establish the demand for alcoholic stimulants. The doctor argues that so long as mothers and children are fed upon pickles, pepper and other irritants, there will be an after demand for strong coffee and tea, tobacco and alcohol; that our temperance agitation is a practical failure, because we do not have it on scientific principles — that is, that the food question is at the base of the temperance question. The appetite grows by what it is fed on, and highly seasoned and stimulating food indulged in for a series of years naturally begets an appetite for something still more stimulating.

WOMEN'S PHYSIOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE movement of the ladies to organize and sustain a Physiological Society in this city is certainly deserving of praise. That such a society should be talked about here is a good sign, and that it is progressing and gives promise of long life is a matter of congratulation. How to dress healthfully, to eat hygienically, and to live in all things temperately is what the society proposes to teach, and that the ladies are determined to accomplish their purpose is evidenced by their zeal and enthusiasm in the undertaking. How much wiser such an effort is than the at present useless plans of the women is to be found in this fact, that these ladies have started out to reform themselves. They propose to begin at their own tables, at their own firesides, and with their own toilettes. They will simplify their costumes, and being strong as a society they will grow strong as individuals. This they tell us, in the reports of their meetings, they intend to do, and seeing how much is to be done in the line they have chosen we prefer to believe that they are in earnest. They have made a great move forward when they acknowledge that the dress of women requires social legislation, and with this acknowledgment volunteered, and the as voluntary promise of a change for the better, there is certainly reason for public gratification. — Ex.

If some men died and others did not, death would indeed be a most mortifying evil. — [Bruyere.]

THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

MAY God bless the woman's righteous war between ruin and reform, and bring forth victory by hying low earth's deadliest enemies — intoxicating liquor and lust! Like fiery demons — red dragons — they enter many peaceful home-circles to despoil and lay waste; breeding therein a writhing, wretched mass of wild scorpions, to corrode, poison and bring to the very death, all hope of peace and prosperity. Thereby many noble forms are leveled to the dust, no more to rise, but are shrouded in shame — covered with a pall of black despair.

Again, God bless the women crusaders who have engaged in the temperance cause. That work is committed to their trust. Love and Prayer are the means — the spiritual weapons — by which they must work and win. May they produce mighty results in the glorious reform so much needed.

Ah! woman, worthy worker! Every one who is struggling against intemperance, and for emancipation from the slavery of sin, is worthy. God is your Leader, and we have faith that He will give you the victory.

The Shaker Sisterhood are with you in spirit, and reach forth the hand of fellowship to all who are conscientiously engaged in the work, regardless of station, wealth, color, or sect; and with you we uplift our voices in prayer, that God will speed the good time coming when truth and righteousness shall reign throughout the whole earth; when peace shall fill the land with joy and gladness, and mortals dwell together in unity as sons and daughters of the New Creation of God — blest by Angels of light and love — children of one heavenly Parentage.

Once more we say, God bless the workers in the Temperance cause, and speed the glorious end.

SIGNAL LIGHT.

Is my bark launch'd on an unknown sea
Dividing time from eternity?
Without chart, or compass, by which to steer,
Must I toss on these waves of hope and fear?
In vain I look ahead for a light;
The foam crested billows alone meet my sight!
O! where shall I turn for a skillful hand,
To pilot me safe to the better land?

O that a dove from some isle of the sea —
Would bring as to Noah — a message to me!
But no dove appears — no mast can I spy —
To awaken the hope, that a haven is nigh.
And, while I am looking in vain for a sail —
I tremble with fear, my bark is so frail;
So I lift up my voice, and supplicate aid
From that Power, whose mandate the sea hath obeyed.

Thou Almighty Power, thy help I implore!
Guide safely my bark 'till my voyage is o'er!
And whatever course thy hand shall direct,
I'll trustingly steer, if thou wilt protect.
But what is that glory which bursts on my sight?
Though far in the distance, 'tis heaven's pure light;

A signal on high is hung out for me,
It is the bright beacon of purity.

Can that be a mirage, I see through the haze.
The beautiful landscape that now meets my gaze.
With soft-tinted flowers, and fruit-laden trees,
And groves with green foliage sway'd by the breeze?

Ah, soon shall my soul its reality test!
Devotion secures me the haven of rest;
That soul-cheering thought has inspir'd my mind
To buffet these billows, that haven to find.

A. E. Persons, Harvard, Mass.

NEVER DESPAIR.

THESE are the hopeful words of the Christian. Yet there are times, when even hopeful, trusting Christians have felt sinkings, akin to despair. Jesus, on the cross, cried "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Yet God is ever nigh to aid suffering, humble spirits, though he permits their trials to prove them and show them their dependence on Him. It is often, when the cloud is darkest, that the sun suddenly shines forth. Aid does not always come as we look for it, in our own natural wisdom; but in ways that convince us of the watchfulness of our good Heavenly Parents over us. It is through severe trials and tribulations that the saints are tried as gold.

KEYS OF REVELATION.

1. The type of life progress live, Viewed by a seer of old,

To the en-light-ened vis-ion In mean-ing doth un-fold. As-cend-ing and de-scend-ing

The pure and shln-ing way, The mes-sen-gers of heav-en Re-vis-it earth to-day.

2.
They come, O earth! to bless thee,
Their loving mission hail!
They sow beside all waters
The seed that cannot fail,
Truth's precious germs upspringing
Shall fruit immortal bear,
Rich prophecy of blessing
Which many souls will share.

3.
The ministry of angels
Shall light the darkened land,
'Till earth's benighted children
God's power will understand;
'Till Babel towers of error
To their foundations reel,
And gilded temple glories
A mighty shock will feel.

4.
The keys of Revelation,
Which long were doomed to rust,
Now ope the golden portals
Of saving faith and trust;
The soul unfolds her pinions
To rise from nature's gloom,
For strength of resurrection
Lies not within her tomb.

AN ITEM.—The day has overtaken us wherein we have the happy privilege to be participants in the increase of Christ's Kingdom. In what line of action will that increase manifest itself? Will it be in forms of belief, about which graceless bigots fight? or in a right life, which all can commend, and about which all can agree. If in a right life, what may be the laws which govern that life? The laws of that life are threefold. First. Divine law, manifested by benevolence, mercy and aspirations God-ward. Second. Moral law—love your neighbor as yourself. Third. Hygienic law—do nothing against your own body. The increase of Christ's Kingdom will apply these laws to all the ramifications of human emotion, thought and action, till there is nothing in us that is not of God.

THE BEST PATHFINDERS.—Do my young Americans know who are the best pathfinders on the American continent, the great original pathfinders of the West? I'll tell you. They are the buffaloes. Yes, sir, it's true. Hear what a correspondent of St. Nicholas writes with the quill of a dear gray-goose friend of mine:

As the frosts of winter destroy their pastures in the north, so the heats of summer parch those in the south, and the buffaloes must, each spring and autumn, take long journeys in search of fresh feeding grounds. The large size and weight of these somewhat clumsy explorers make it rather difficult for them to cross the mountains, so they seek out for themselves the most practicable routes; and hunters and emigrants have found that a "buffalo-track" offers the surest and safest path for men and horses. The best passes in the Cumberland and Rocky mountains, and the regions of the Yellowstone, and the Colorado, have been discovered by following the trail of these sagacious animals.

I know this is so, for the great traveler, Humboldt, once wrote: "In this way the humble buffalo has filled a most important part in facilitating geographical discovery in mountainous regions, otherwise as trackless as the Arctic wastes, as the sands of Sahara."—Jack-in-the-Pulpit.—St. Nicholas for December.

RULE.—Eat that which is the best until you love it the best.

HOW TO HAVE SOUND TEETH.—The Science of Health says: "Mushes, gruels, puddings and soups may be made hygienically. But they should also be eaten hygienically. They must be chewed, not bolted. The nursing infant masticates its mother's milk, for which purpose it takes it slowly, drop by drop. Mastication is for the purpose of insalivation. Unless food is properly insalivated, it cannot be well digested. The teeth are the finest, densest structure of the body, and this means they are intended for hard work. Eat solid food at every meal; and when you take semi-liquid, or very soft food of any kind, eat very slowly and take a bit of hard bread, crackers, a green apple, or something similar with it. Then will your stomach please and be pleased, and your teeth, like your eyes and nose, and fingers and toes, will remain to bless and comfort you to the last. If all persons, after being weaned, would only chew their food enough, we would hear very little of aching and rotten teeth, and dentists would be nowhere."

A NEW SAINT.—Among the deceased men and women, good, bad and indifferent, canonized by the present "venerable prisoner" of the Vatican, and set forth for the prayers of the faithful as intercessors with God, is Peter Arbaes.

Being Inquisitor General of the Spanish Inquisition, he won golden opinions by the zeal, self-denial and faithfulness with which he burned heretical men, women and babies.

The Ninth Plus seems as unlucky in his saints as in his dogmas. But tastes always have differed, and Peter Arbaes is not the first red-handed wretch who has been canonized.

"In the prosecution of the examinations," we are told in the Acta Sanctorum, "no groans nor cries could move him; in the execution of the dreadful sentence he was turned aside neither by prayers nor tears." It was in the age when Columbus was preparing to reveal a new world, and when knowledge was already teaching humanity to kings and nobles, that our modern saint was sentencing women and feeble children to the flames, and was filling happy households with intolerable dread; was searching for his victims with barbarous assiduity, and stood among his fellow-citizens dripping with gore. Hated no doubt like Torquemada, who never went unarmed—feared with more than mortal dread—the Chief Inquisitor pursued his career of bloodshed unchecked for several years, and deserved the highest approval of his ruthless church. At last came his martyrdom, or rather the inadequate punishment for his enormous crimes. He was assassinated in the church of Saragossa by two young men, the father of one of whom had been imprisoned, and the sister of the other burned at the stake.

"Such is a Roman Catholic saint and martyr! The murderer of the innocent is held up to his clergy by Pius IX as an example worthy of imitation, and the most horrible form of blind fanaticism receives the sanction of the infallible Pope."

MY GUARDIANS.

Unseen hands are daily sowing
Precious seed of love and care;
In my soul I feel them growing,—
Germs of truth develop there.
And I know the source is heaven—
Whence these treasures come to me;
Though by impress they be given,
Or through mortal agency.

Let me hold a claim upon you,—
Spirit friends released from time;
Deal to me of wisdom, endurance,
Strength and love, from purer clime.
I, so weak and erring, daily
Need a watchful Savior near;
Such be thou to guide my footsteps,
Keep my spirit free and pure.

Teach me lessons true and holy,—
Rudiments of higher life;
Fit my soul to dwell with angels
When I cease the mortal strife.
Teach me, while on earth I journey,
How to live with saints below;—
How to keep my union sacred,
And in heavenly graces grow.

Elizabeth Martin, Canterbury, N. H.

Some time ago petitions were addressed to Congress, asking for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, so that that instrument should contain "an acknowledgment of Almighty God and the Christian religion." These petitions were referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House, and last week that body presented an adverse report thereon. The Committee say that the matter was the subject of grave deliberation on the part of the framers of the Constitution, who finally quite unanimously agreed that, inasmuch as this country was to be the home of the people of all nations, pagan as well as Christian, it was inexpedient to put any thing in the Constitution which might be construed as a reference to any religious creed or doctrine. The Committee are opposed to any change at the present time, and ask to be discharged from further consideration of the subject. This, we suppose, ends the matter for the present.

STOMACH AND CONSCIENCE.

Two manners of people exist—the Jacob class and the Esau class. To the first, the blessing of God comes in the sunshine of an inner spirit world, continually ripening them up for a sphere, wherein they will be invisible to the Esau class, and live upon food, that to it, would be as the manna to the Egyptian appetites of the Israelites.

To the latter class, the blessing of God comes in the sunshine of Earth, and in the dews and fatness thereof.

It is a question between stomach and conscience, as to which class each person shall belong.

"All the labor of man, is for his mouth," and we are made up of the kind of food we put into it. If we eat earthly food, we are earthly men and women. If we eat Angels' food—manna—we become Angelic—spiritual men and women. If stomach—appetite—have the control, and pleasure be sought, in physiological unrighteousness; money—the representation of labor—is prized as the means of indulgence. Money may be accumulated and held, from a mere insane love of it, without any use to be accomplished by its possession. That is acquisitiveness run mad—sheer covetousness.

In such persons, common sense is almost extinct, and every earthly and heavenly comfort is sacrificed for the purpose of economizing expenses. Whereas, money is nothing worth, except for the good that can be derived from its possession, either to the owner thereof, or to some other person.

As a nation, it will be generally recognized, that stomach predominates, at this present time, over conscience; and the love of money over the love of the use it represents.

Appetite and looks—lust of the eye and perverted taste—are the controlling influence that determine the kind of medicine and quality of food that men provide, and women cook, and also how they shall cook it. The same rule and principle, or the want of them, govern, first, the men, and next, the women, in relation to dress. Health and comfort, morality and religion, the good of the present generation and the welfare of the future, are subordinated to appetite and looks, to that degree, that he, or she, who stops to enquire of conscience, why do I eat and drink and do, this or that—what the object—the use—the comfort—in this article of food, drink, apparel or medicine, I contemplate buying and preparing for myself and others, is as much outside the social circle, as are the insane. And indeed, they are by appetite-created mentality, accounted as "Samaritans"—as "having a devil," or as being beside themselves—forming ing a class, who are forever turning "the world that now is," upside down. They desecrate the Temples, destroy the gods and change the Ordinances of the Degree, that has accomplished its mission—become old and is ready to perish, and be supplanted by its successors, as a new wave of progress.

The same lines of argument—the same turmoil of passion, that the existence of chattel slavery, in America, gave rise to, terminating in a destructive, uncivil war, come into operation in all contentions and struggles between stomach and conscience, that have occurred, and will hereafter occur, in any new degree of progress, in Nations, in Societies, or even individuals.

Three classes are created. 1st. The Prophetic class, who receive the inspiration of the coming Degree. These are the Radicals, who proclaim liberty to the captive—whether it be the captive, man and woman, who are bought and sold, like animals; or souls, captive to some appetite—some lust of the flesh, or mind, that has had its day.

2d. The second class are the Moderates, who have been progressed by the Radicals, and repelled by the Conservatives. With this class Wisdom was born. And when it becomes extinct, Wisdom will die with it. They have, like the middle of a stick, a horror of the two ends—of all extremes.

3d. The opposite extreme, or Conservative class, whose stomachs are the Gods they worship, whose intellects are enslaved by their appetites, and who reason only to make the worse appear the better part—to prove that what they want, and will have, is agreeable to their conscience, which is subordinated to, and enslaved by their stomach.

It has not been revealed to these Moderates, that if the two ends were cut off there would still be a middle. The stick might be made shorter and shorter, until it represented the simious tribes, but the same order would still exist—there would be the two ends, and a middle, held together by the two ends.

Flesh meat is, almost exclusively, the food of the wild Indian, in his primitive state. It is wild animals, which require a large area of country, with sparse population. To change their diet is to change their whole social system. If they come to feed upon domestic animals, there must be fixed habitations, and a system of agriculture, like the Creek Indians have adopted, and adapted themselves unto.

If again they would change their diet, and discontinue the use of domestic animal food, that would involve the introduction of Horticulture, like the people of Vineland. Thus would they approximate the diet of the Israelites in the wilderness.

Had Moses lived, would he ever have taken the Children of Israel into the land of Canaan?

Had Jesus lived, would he ever have formed an organization?

In Canaan, they went back, not unto Egyptian diet, with its flesh pots, but to a mixed diet of flesh, vegetables and fruits. But the most holy class among them—the Nazarenes—ate no flesh, drank no wine, and lived lives of celibacy. These were what the whole body of the people had begun to travel toward, and would attain unto, when the Messiah came to change their diet and learn them to eat the most sacred of all food—unleavened bread, made of unbolted flour—the Lord's last supper. These things were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world have begun to come. When the Seventh Trumpet begins to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished.

A young man, or woman, who begins life with conservatism, is as an Israelite who began life by desiring to go back into Egypt to get his education. They will not leave the world any better than they found it. Neither will such help to progress any society into which they may enter.

The food question is the soul question. A change of dietetics, is a change of the social system, for better, or for worse. Hitherto, all the changes, made by Americans, as a people, have been from bad to worse. To-day, the young are commencing life with a dietary that old people ought to be ashamed to die upon. The stomachs, of the young Americans, have absorbed and digested their physiological consciences. Superfine flour, and poisoned candies, are the two extremes, and there is not much wisdom in the middle. It is exceedingly small, at the waist.

There is but one reason why the Females are so small at the middle; and that is, they wish the whole world to know, they are as unfit, as they are determined, never to be Mothers.

Jesus went to extremes in his life conduct, to that degree that he was practically unpracticable, in the day he lived in. He formed no Church Organization.

David did not build the Temple. Solomon, his successor, used the material David had accumulated to build it with.

Peter and the Apostles organized the Jewish Pentecostal Church. Jesus ministered unto them the Christ Spirit, by which it was accomplished.

Jesus labored in the wilderness of abstract ideas, occult forces and subtle spiritual principles. These were the material that became incarnated in the external organization of the Primitive Church, that lasted three hundred years, and was then "scattered"—spread—through the whole Roman Empire, where it worked like heaven, until a new organization was effected, after twelve hundred and sixty years of wilderness travel.

We are now in the wilderness of a second Degree. The first Degree has done its work, and has been used as heaven, to heaven Christendom. "The sound of its testimony has gone into all the world."

We must see to it, that we do not settle down, and become like the "magnetic ships, on the ocean," in an unchangeable condition.

The Lord's House — the Temple of the Second Degree — will yet be built by the Solomons and Peters — Saints — unto whom the Spirit is calling — come out of her — Babyleu — my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins of monopoly and sensuality — of stomach against conscience — and that ye receive not of her plagues.

AYER, June 10th, 1874.

DEARLY BELOVED ELDER FREDERICK,

You have probably seen the report of our meetings in Lynn, published in The Banner for June 6th. I also sent a Lynn Record to Bro. Daniel Fraser, and propose to send you, as soon as the papers ordered arrive, a better report in the Lynn Transcript.

The meetings were interesting, truly so. And one friend writes me since: "Personally, I shall never forget the visit of the Shakers to Lynn. It was a new era in my life. The time you spent here — from Saturday night to Monday morning — was of great interest and enjoyment to me. I have long wondered if a person could not be religious and devotional, without believing in the terrible dogmas which have been my stumbling-blocks from youth up, and it seems to me that in that particular, the Shakers realize my ideal."

A female medium, writing to Sister Catherine, expresses similar sentiments, and goes on to tell what she saw in our last meeting there:

"Three doves, with the olive branch, soaring around you — which seemed to indicate that you had brought peace — also a shield of silver light which seemed to surround your whole body, like steam, while you were talking, and a sweet spirit-face, that with eyes of beaming rest, seemed to say 'Well done!' How I would like to see the face of Mother Ann. How much I have thought of her, since hearing you tell of her."

"There was over Elder William's head, while speaking, a silver light that took the form of a sheaf of wheat, and at his feet a flowing stream of what seemed like the morning dew."

"On the right arm of Elder Vance, a drooped flag, bearing this inscription: 'The end is Victory,' behind him stood a spirit of ancient times, with a surplice and three bells, the tone of which I could not hear but could feel. During the singing, there was every thing beautiful to be seen, and while you were singing 'God is infinitely able,' etc., I saw a shower of stars falling, and as they fell they became fastened in the form of a chain, by links, till at the end they were made to inclose you all. I could say much more but shall weary you. Will only add, I saw a golden key in the hand of Elder John Whiteley, and a large white mantle was thrown on Brother Horace Taber."

"All this has some meaning, and in part unknown to me."

"I wish I could go and see you all, and learn to be strong in mind. It may never be my pleasure to do so, but I shall ever have a kind loving heart for the Shakers."

Two men have been already "to spy out the land," and others are coming.

The harvest work truly is great, and the laborers few. But we will not only sing, but believe, that "God is infinitely able to sustain the weak and feeble." Won't we? Time is crowding me to a close; but I want to tell how much we think of and speak of (in loving remembrance) the visit we recently enjoyed with the lovely inmates of the North House. Heaven bless them all, and add to their number of valiant soldiers, who will not flinch in the day of danger and conflict. For truly "The end is victory."

Special love from our Order, and believe me ever

Yours very truly,

Elder John Whiteley, Shirley, Mass.

THEOLOGICAL TREASURY.

SALVATION.

—o—

HEAVENS — happiness, unalloyed, never-ending, is the ultimate of all human aspiration. To be at rest in Jesus, is the hoped for sum total of tenets, inculcated by any and all persuasions. The word Salvation acts upon the mind, as does the word door, when the door opens, admitting us to palatial scenes. Salvation, too commonly conveys, to the general mind, the erroneous idea, that the punishment for sin, is, in some way, to be avoided; while the continuance of sinful practices may be indefinitely prolonged.

To obtain salvation, as we receive rain and sunshine — gratuitously — is the expectation of millions.

Contrast the numbers who want to be saved from the consequences of their sins, with those who want to be saved from all sinful indulgences. Contrast the multitudes who are willing to bear the cross and share the glory of Angelhood, sometime in the future, with the few who are making, for themselves, Angel characters now, by bearing the Cross, as did Jesus, against all sinful practices — and what do we find? "Straight is the gate."

Going back on the record, they that find Life, are few.

We reverently hope for a better record of the future.

It is reasonable to suppose, that the oft-expressed desire "to be saved from my sins," would more generally express the truth, if worded, "to be saved IN my sins;" and probably, there is no other instance in all Bible reading, where these two prepositions, express the possible and impossible more truly. If saved at all, it will be away, apart from our sins; but never in them, nor while loving to practice sin.

While the millions express their anxiety for salvation, but few wish their fleshly lusts and worldly ambitions disturbed; and if salvation means annihilation to the pride of life, and to the general catalogue of lusts, then, the number desiring salvation is reduced to a decimal. Christ came to save people from their sins, by the gospel of self-denial — taste not, touch not, handle not. But the doctrine of salvation by faith alone, "is the ignis fatuus of theology, that never yet has been realized — it is imaginary. It promises a heaven without a cross; and immediate change from a life of fleshly lusts into one of angel purity — a road so easy into eternal felicity, that not one idol needs be burned, nor one base habit nor indulgence changed, no matter how earthly, sensual or devilish! Oh, beautiful theory, how many myriads hast thou thrilled with enchanting lays — oh, beautiful spider's web, how many human flies hast thou ensnared to their utter deception! What the world needs most, is salvation from sin, to-day — self-denial; total abstinence from human lusts. All the theologies extant, have been unable to give proof of salvation, equaling the internal evidences of a humble, true-hearted, travelling soul. And there is hope for the world, that mankind are outgrowing the bondage of popular pulpit dogmas. Strive as may the established theologies of our day, to seal the lips and blind the eyes of living souls, the truth of the present necessity of practical salvation, is working a grand convincing commotion in the hearts of the people. Christians do not sin — they are saved from the necessity of sinning; and the idea that we are all sinners and must remain so, is the second greatest lie of the devil, the first being "Thou shalt not surely die!" We feel a supreme pity for those whitened sepulchres, who preach and pray, year in and out, of their being miserable sinners. Let them take up the cross, of him whom they profess to love; and so, living will be an every day antagonism to sinful life, and an increasing salvation from the very thoughts of sin.

Jesus, born with a sinful nature, just like the rest of humanity, did, by laboring, struggling and wrestling with the adversary of all good, progress to a point beyond the power of temptation, and was saved from day to day. He stands to-day an evidence that we too may enjoy the same blissful fruition. Through the same struggles for salvation, must we all pass, or miss the prize. Our pattern — Jesus — became the way, the truth and the life unto all Christians. And when we walk that way, learn that truth and live that life, we shall experience the saving power of his gospel, and not only know that we are saved, but know of the means by which our salvation is accomplished; and be able to impart the same power to others. It was an ingenious device, of Luther, to have the "just saved by faith alone;" and this is the desideratum of lazy, sin-loving hypocrites, who want to enter heaven without earning their right there; who want Paradise brought to them, without their own exertions. But "faith, without works is dead," and will work "death unto death," not salvation. Let cunning speculators, in theology, continue to blindly lead the blind; twist the truths of scripture with anti-conscientious legerdemain; to pamper the appetites of travelers on the broad road; let them speak as is pleasing and encouraging to carnal understandings, and receive therefor, the applause of the multitude; and then, we make them welcome to their rewards, when God distributes justice.

NURSERIES, NEAR WINOOSKI, VT.,

July 6th, 1874.

ELDER F. W. EVANS, EDITOR OF SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.

RESPECTED BROTHER: — After some twenty-five years have rolled away, since I had the pleasure of seeing you personally, with other esteemed Brothers and Sisters, at Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., who have ever held a place in my pleasant thoughts, I direct you this line.

Long ago I wrote to you and Bro. Bushnell, then living, and regret I did not receive your answer. The books, you presented me, have been read by intellectual persons. They were last carried to Burlington and left with radical and progressive men and women. They, being spiritualists, like myself, liked them.

As a traveling preacher I visited you. I was blessed and enlightened. I have out-traveled the popular religions of the day. I am a Free-Lover, and believe in the proper and scientific rights of generating the human species, in accordance with the Laws of Life, as sacred, pure and virtuous, because natural and in harmony with the reproductive forces of nature.

But progressive liberals are advocates also of continency, and, I believe, are truly of the most fastidious of the human race. For my part, I feel akin, to a large extent, with your people, who seem to walk so near to God and his Angels.

The ideas of Samuel Hurlbut, of S. Union, Ky., are before me, as expressed in your paper of May. I feel assured I can say Yea, with a heart full of earnestness, to his invitation to 100,000 Shakers wanted—to all he so beautifully says, from No. 1 to the end of No. 8.

The community life leads to higher attainments. Truly these should lead to happiness. Now, if radical "Free Lovers" could be accepted, to entertain their sentiments among you, as a people, I doubt not, you would have many accessions to your numbers.

I am thinking of offering my lands, at least in part, for Community. Radicals, as we are, we cannot affiliate with the selfishness, the impurity, the craft, the dishonesty, the untruthfulness—the total falsity of the world. We want a harmonious home, based on the social sciences, wherein we may have a Temple of Freedom, and live simple, or plain, virtuous, intellectual and progressive lives.

Why can you not, as Brothers and Sisters, open the door of your community? Extend the hand of welcome, and bid us come in, to the number of a few hundred, it may be—a Family or Families by ourselves, living out our progressive ideas, in entire harmony with yours, cultivating for each other, mutual and lasting respect; as sacred, without discordance or invasion of human rights—insured from intrusion. Such liberal, tolerant, yielding, to each and all, the sovereign right to elect, or choose, a pure, holy, celibate life; or a virtuous life, based on the principles of social science, with the scientific propagation of the human species, as advocated by the most advanced radicals, in "Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly."

Could you all accord with this wise arrangement—as I believe it is, and hope you can—I should feel to know the Temple of Harmony could be erected on the Earth.

I have ventured my thoughts—cultivating for you and for all you love and cherish, the highest sentiments of respect.

My family join me in wishing the Angel world may be all around you.

I am ever and faithfully yours,
Orrin Shipman.

July 14, 1874.

ORRIN SHIPMAN, Esteemed Friend:

Your important letter, of the 6th instant, is in my possession. The tone and spirit of it are good.

People may disagree in doctrinal matters, yet be one in spirit; or, they may be one in abstract ideas, and be diverse in spirit.

"Ye know not what spirit ye are of," was the gentle rebuke of Jesus to his Disciples, who had forsaken all others, to follow him.

You refer to a visit at Mt. Lebanon, some twenty-five years ago, and to the favorable impression made upon your mind, by individuals, and by our system. Among so many visitors and incidents, I do not recall that visit.

After stating that you are Free Lovers, of the Woodhull & Claflin school, you express a wish to fraternize with us, to the number of a few hundred, at least so far as our outward order—the temporal—goes.

I infer, from the fearless, yet friendly tenor of your communication, that you are free-lovers from principle—a love of truth—and not for other supposed additional indulgence attending the practice of your ideas. That, in fact, begging the question that Shakers are right, and free-lovers wrong, per se, it is, with you, more a matter of misunderstanding, than of love for unrighteousness—of confusion of ideas, arising from the admixture of truthful principles that appertain to two distinct orders—two discrete degrees. This causes both your agreement and disagreement with the Shakers. In a word, the Shakers, with their asceticism, have more charity for, and do better understand free-lovers, than do orthodox sectarians, whose actual lives approximate much nearer to free-love sensualists, than they would care to have the world know or think.

Is it not an indisputable fact, that the popular idea of marriage, is that of a license, granted, by the respective parents, to the Bride and Bridegroom, for them to live in fornication, without public reproach or private condemnation? The Church and State authorities sanction this license—make it legal, and churchal—and the neighbors silently acquiesce. Fruitfulness in this union in sensuality, is evidence of nature's vitality. The law of nature—copulation for offspring only, being wholly ignored.

Shakers regard this as the "agreement with hell, and covenant with death." It is now being annulled by both classes of free-lovers—one class substituting general promiscuity, thus making bad worse. The other class talk of scientific propagation. The shakers discover no practical difference. Both are alike obnoxious to censure, from those in the New Earth and the New Heavens.

Two manners of people exist—two discrete degrees of life and progress—a Propagating order and a Resurrection order.

To the hosts of embryonic beings, existing in the world that lies between conception, and birth, the varying scenes of time and sense experienced by the army of children who have been born, live, move and have their being in the outer world, are incomprehensible. When, by evolution, these latter have become generative men and women, the scenes of life, in the Resurrection order are, to them, equally incomprehensible. Of it Jesus spake, when He said, "I have meat to eat, that ye know not of," in "that world, and the resurrection from the dead."

As a type of resurrected souls, the first—Jesus—was continually teaching others, what He knew they could not then understand. But, in the last day when they would be begotten again, into the kingdom of heaven, and be born again, into the kingdom of God, all things that He had said unto them would come to their remembrance.

If I have made my premises plain, so he, who reads, may run, the conclusions will be easily apprehended. Your complaint is, that you cannot affiliate with the selfishness, the craft, the dishonesty, the untruthfulness—the total falsity of the world, as it is. Judging the tree by its fruit—the system by its effects, you condemn it. In that, your class of Free-Lovers and the Shakers agree.

You want a harmonious home, based upon science—social science—where you can live simple, plain, intellectual, progressive, virtuous lives. That is just what the individuals, who have built up Shaker societies, wanted, and what they have found, or, rather, achieved. It has been done by forsaking all appertaining to the propagative order—natural relationships, arising from birth, and culminating in marriages; together with selfish property rights and duties, culminating in monopoly of life elements, which generate class distinctions and devastating wars.

Woman can never be free until liberated from physical maternity. Hence, as she feels the influences, coming from the Resurrection order—"the Law, going forth from Zion," of the equality of the sexes, possible in the spiritual order only, she fights maternity—she frets and chafes under its burdens and its restricting duties. Then she kills and destroys what the legal lustful free-lover has not destroyed and killed by his brute powers and unbrutal passions.

You ask why we cannot open our doors and take you in, as simple free-lovers, who desire scientific propagation, while those, among you, who may prefer, like the Shakers, to live pure, holy, celibate lives, have liberty so to do.

An important question, which I desire to answer logically, not intending the least disrespect to the questioner.

Suppose a pack of wolves, who live upon mutton, should thus address a flock of sheep: "God and Nature made us wolves and sheep and endowed us with all our faculties, powers, passions and appetites—both communities—the pack and the flock—recognize one common Creator, who is good. Why can we not fraternize and live in love and peace together? True, we are roving and unhappy, but, it is because we have not, like you, a home, a fold and kind shepherd, who protects and provides. We do not wish to do any thing wrong, or unnatural—any thing we ought not to do. Let us be good and fraternize together. We mean no more harm in eating mutton, than you do in cropping the grass and the flowers of the field. Lay aside your exclusiveness—be liberal—noble. Let us all live in one fold—each party carrying out a line, according to our inherent rights, observing the organic laws of our beings. This will be to the honor of our common Creator, and the mutual happiness of each other."

Can the leopard change his spots, or the wolf his tastes? Will they eat grass, like the ox and lamb? Or would the pack of wolves refrain, when hungry, from devouring the silly sheep, who had opened the door of their fold and admitted them in? Judge ye, of your own selves, what is reasonable.

Can two walk together, except they be agreed? And if the Israelites were so taught the law of separation, that they were not willing to sow divers kinds of seed together, nor, by generation to mix the blood of different species of animals, nor their own, by intermarrying with Gentiles, nor even to wear linsey-wolsy garments, how much more should the children of this world, who "marry and are given in marriage, be separated from the children of the Resurrection Order, who, like Jesus, live pure, holy, celibate lives?

Are you not like fish, who are dissatisfied with the water, and yet would surely die upon the land? If those waters have become muddy—land and water mingled—is it not because the law of separation has been violated, and the waters have not obeyed the command: "Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further?" This creates amphibious creatures, in the earth. And the Revelator saw unclean spirits, like frogs—amphibious—come out of the mouth of the false prophet, and out of the mouth of the beast and of his image." Out of church and state—flesh and spirit—organizations.

Babylon means mixture. It is the continued attempt to mingle generation and regeneration together. Such is Christendom.

And now, that a Second Christian Church has been in existence for nearly one hundred years, you propose for it to lapse back into Quakerism, from whence it arose.

Upon due consideration, do you think the extinction of our order would be a blessing?

A Shaker is one who holds that true marriage has an order of its own—that a New Earth will arise, fulfilling the ideal of the most enlightened, scientific rationalists, like yourselves. In it all earthly good will be gathered, Poverty, War, Prostitution, legal and illegal, and disease will be supplanted by Plenty, Peace, Chastity, Health. The equality of the sexes will be established and secured, and coöperation—not community—become universal.

The New Heaven, or Spiritual Order—the Church—will be distinct and entirely separate from the civil government of the Natural Order—the New Earth—and will derive its authority, through Divine Revelation, from the Christ, or Resurrection Heavens. "There will be no more sea," or Church and State governments.

Trusting that the kindly tone and spirit of your letter are preserved in this communication, I submit it to the crucible of your rationalistic, spiritualistic, intuitional and revelational powers. May the very spirit of truth possess us increasingly, to the glory of God, and the good of humanity.

F. W. Evans.

DRUGS.

Most happy have I just been made, by reading, in the last issue of this monthly, the strong testimony of such eminent physicians as Johnson and Magendie, against the false science of medicine. Having no basis on facts, it can never become a science whereby the cause of diseases can be removed.

Alopath and Homopath imply other and new diseases, by means of which the absurd effort of curing the old one is put forth.

As well say, two wrongs make one right—that evil spirits may be cast out by Beelzebub.

Strictly speaking, disease is the merciful effort, nature puts forth, to remove an enemy from the body. It is a friend, not a foe, to be drugged, or doctored.

Snuff is an enemy. Sneezing is a disease. Instead of restraining, or fighting such efforts, we should befriend them.

Professor Magendie says: "Nature does a great deal." Yea, in the truest sense, all.

We may, and ought to, undo what we have done amiss. If the sick be cold, warm. If too warm, cool—cleanse, inside and out, from all filthiness of flesh—acting, in all respects, with, not against, the wise efforts of nature.

Dr. Franklin, in his celebrated almanac, had, among others, this wise saying—God cures—the physician collects the fee.

A fine poet expresses the same sentiment thus:

"Nature resists the injuries done her,
Drugs and doctors get the honor."

Thousands, who have not yet, the moral stamina to adopt the great Shaker reform—apply the ax to the root of evil—lust and avarice—will gladly join them in applying it to bad diet, and even more destructive drugging.

TWO EDGED SWORD.

—o—

JUDGMENT shall begin at the house of God. And if its inhabitants scarcely be saved, where shall the sinner and ungodly appear, who are without God and hope of salvation, in the world?

So far as any, who are numbered with the people of God, are slaves to perverted appetites—physical sins—either willfully, or through ignorance, will they be under the curse—bondage to sickness and diseases.

Staying ourselves upon the Lord, as his peculiar people, the time has fully come—the trumpet of the second degree of Gospel travel begins to sound, calling us away from all bondage and slavery, to any of the lusts of the flesh and mind.

As a body, we must, by devotedness and perseverance, stand, like a rock in the ocean, against the flood of stimulating beverages, whether in the form of drinks or medical tinctures, as dragon's blood, No. 6, or of cordials, that prepare for the use of opium and other poisonous narcotics. These are not incentives to duty, nor do they prepare souls for the true service of God.

Is it not a singular hallucination of the mind, that leads professing christians to seek pleasure in unrighteousness—in the use of things, destructive of perfect health?

When Jesus said, "Except a man forsake all that he hath," did it not include the haughty arising from his adulterated nature—abnormal appetites in food and drink, and drugs and doses? Nature, as God created it, would preserve every faculty, desire and feeling, of body and mind, in perfect unison with the spirit of God—the Law of use. The result would be order, decorum, in all things, temporal and spiritual, in the new creation.

Why should there be physical infirmity as the product of physiological sin, any more than there should be condemnation of soul—remorse of conscience—as the effect of spiritual transgressions?

Nature and God are in harmony, as are science and religion. When there is a testimony against this, or that, as being natural, it is perverted nature; or it is that something, properly pertaining to one order, is intruded into another, and more spiritual order.

Let God be true, and truly acknowledged, if it prove every man and woman to be, by some ungodly habit, as a limb out of its joint and socket. God is no respecter of persons, and that which is hygienically wrong will create disease in the saint, as in the sinner—in the Shaker, as in the Presbyterian. As are the penalties for physical and physiological sins, in the one, so are they in the other. Where much is given, much is required.

Of all the people in Christendom, you have I known; therefore will I punish you for your bodily iniquities, even as I would have done for your soul errors.

Now, as there begins to be some plainness of speech, in the Shaker and Shakeress, in relation to our own society sins, let us set the world an example of humility, by accepting the reproof of a friend, as better than the kiss of an enemy—until the sins of Zion shall be sought for, by friend and foe, and shall not be found—till the iniquities of foul air, bad cooking, improper food, uncleansed sewers, stoppered-up drains, dirty water, mixed drinks, and the eating of physic, instead of food, shall be looked for—and there shall be none.

Clark Hayden, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

"Set a mark upon all, who sigh and cry, because of the abominations that are done in Jerusalem," was the voice of the Christ Spirit, to the Prophet.

Reformers see, intellectually, the errors of the present, and the truths of the future.

Prophets see, spiritually, the sins of the saints of the existing church, which the increase of God, will remove.

Reformers belong to the earthly order—Prophets, to the spiritual order. In each, there are two classes. One breeds divisions, makes innovations, incites insurrections and creates revolutions. They attempt to correct existing errors, in the interest of their own selfhood, using war as a means. It is the Devil reproving sin—and the Devil opposing, and oppressing the Reformer, and killing the Prophet—one Spirit.

When that class of Reformers and Prophets conquer, they are defeated.

The other class are in union with what is. When they speak the word—the coming truth—it cuts both ways—cuts the Reformer, and the righteous, who need to be reformed—the Prophet, and the sinning saints, who will confess and forsake, in the light of the New Degree.

OBEDIENCE.

—o—

"For I am a man under authority having soldiers under me, and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he cometh, and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." Matt. viii, 9.

"Obedience is the first duty of a soldier" are the opening words of the British Articles of War, a copy of which is put in the hands of every private soldier. War chieftains have ever been alive to the paramount importance of maintaining discipline amongst their followers. Without this nothing but defeat and dishonor could attend the movements of the best appointed army. To secure obedience the severest penalties are attached to the crime of insubordination, and mutiny is mercilessly stamped out. Earl St. Vincent was the most rigid of disciplinarians and, it is said, he infused the spirit of prompt obedience throughout the entire British navy, and thus raised its destructive efficiency to a standard unparalleled amongst other maritime powers.

It is, indeed, the truest truism, that the subjection of one to another is necessary to success in any and every undertaking requiring the association of individuals. This fact is recognized the world over, and to secure order and submission to authority, pains and penalties are called into requisition, experience teaching only too surely that, in the present hellish constitution of society, this is the only way of attaining the end in view. Withdraw the influence of fear, and anarchy would result; for pride, envy, malice and all the evil passions of human nature would conspire to make people rebel against even the best of governments.

But in a millennial state of society, all will possess that strength of character and devotion to principle, which will enable them to govern themselves, and submit themselves to be governed.

Already there exist individuals on this earth—but alas how few in number—who are thus devoted to principle, and consecrated to Truth! Under the mild rule of the Gospel an appeal is made to the higher nature of human beings, and love induces that obedience which only fear commands in the world.

This is a very simple and a very sure test of Gospel travail. Do love and devotion to principle procure that obedience from me that fear of punishment would in the world? Just in proportion as they fail to do so, do I fall short of regeneration.

Hewson Brown, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

THE Religious Philosophical Journal of Chicago is winning golden opinions among moralists and the better class of spiritualists, because taking strong ground against the free-lust practices of many professed spiritualists. This is a "judgment day" in the ranks of spiritualism.

SHAKERESS.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

WARS.

WHY should we marvel that the spirit and element of war have out-lived the centuries of the past and are so rife to-day in all nations whether professedly civilized and Christianized or otherwise, when that spirit has been fostered, encouraged and glorified, by every succeeding generation, since the day that Cain slew his brother?

And those who have accepted the Bible, as a whole, for the inspired word of God—that it is the Alpha and Omega of the Divine will to men—have taken shelter under the wings of the God of the Jews, when they have marked the pages of history with the blood of martyred heretics. And why should they be deemed culpable when the Hebrew God did justify and encourage war? It would appear, from historic records, that many times he was General-in-chief of the armies of Israel, and used spiritualistic powers to crush and slay tens of thousands of men and helpless women and children. Should not mortals be commended for striving to be Godlike?

When we come down to the Christian era, we ask, How could the Jews, who were conscientiously tenacious of the Law, and were bound to and by the traditions of their fathers—their kings and seers—be condemned for persecuting Jesus and his disciples who taught the Gospel? They believed in Moses, and knew that God spake through him, and gave the code of laws and commandments which had sustained and guided their nation through centuries. Of Jesus, they said, “as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.”

Moses taught, “an eye for an eye—tooth for tooth.” Jesus said, “resist not evil.” The Law said, “Love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy.” Jesus said not so. Love your enemy—render good for evil. Instead of burning for burning—return blessing for cursing. This Gospel changed conditions radically.

Let us hear a few of the declarations of the Lord God of the Jews. (We must confess that the moral sensibilities are shocked, and a cold chill creeps over us when we read the following): “If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand takes hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and reward them that hate me. I will send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents.”

Again. “The Lord will come with fire and chariots, like a whirlwind to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. It is the day of the Lord’s vengeance. Give them sorrow of heart—thy curse;—persecute and destroy them in thy anger.”

“Thus saith the Lord God: Woe to the bloody city! Heapon wood—kindle the fire—consume the flesh—spice it well, and let the bones be burnt.”

Was there any thing perpetrated during the “dark ages” more cruel and intolerant in persecuting the so-called “Heretics” than the foregoing? Burning at the stake, the sword and gibbet—the rack and dungeon—and even surrendering human beings to wild beasts to be torn in pieces, could all find justification in the Jewish scriptures. Then how shall we find a solution of the matter. Shall we conclude that the old scriptures are annulled—no longer binding upon the subjects of the New Covenant—which teaches love in place of hate—mercy in lieu of vengeance? Then we ask, Were those laws good and valid, in olden time? If so, by whom were they given? If, by the God of the Universe, why subject to change?

In this reasoning age, a Court of inquiry is called and an investigating Committee has already undertaken to find whether, after making all due allowance for mistranslations and interpolations, it be necessary to accept all the seeming absurdities and contradictions of the Scripture Records. Or if it be possible to harmonize the Scriptures with reason and common sense, as well as with the religious sentiments of the age in which we live.

It is evident from all of Nature’s works (which are but an outward expression of the interior spiritual forces of the unseen world) that it was not the design of the creative Powers to perfect the earth, or its inhabitants, by sudden organic changes and convulsive throes; but by gradual growth from one degree to another, as from infancy to mature manhood.

It is but reasonable to conclude that tutelar divinities from time to time have been adapted to the condition of the people, and that as they progressed and were prepared for it, higher intelligences could find access to them. The tutelage depeuded upon the preparation of those over whom they were sent to preside. It is also very evident, that at times, the prophets of those days were visited and inspired by spirits of a high order, even from the inner heavens; and they were caused to shadow forth in beautiful pictures, the glories of the coming ages, when their warring God should cease to rule—and their “spears should be converted into pruning hooks, and their swords into plow-shares.”

War is incompatible with true Christian principles, and never emanated from that God who is Wisdom and Love. It matters not whether religious frenzy, political strife, ambition, revenge, or jealousy be the moving cause, it is demoniac, and causes the fires of lust to burn in the souls and bodies of those who engage in it.

Let every truth-lover unite in prayerful investigation, and seek for more light—more truth—and let new springs of life open, that we may drink therefrom and be renewed. Let old things, ideas, thoughts and feelings,—be analyzed and shaken, if need be, all that is good and true will remain. The windows of the soul should be open to let in the sunlight of Divine revelation and the inspirational breezes which come from the heavens; and when the angels sound the trumpet for an increase, let all who profess to be rising with Christ in the new life, on the resurrection plane, be ready to advance forward. We must remember that to the increase, in the subjects of Christ’s kingdom, there will be no end.

ACTION.

LIFE and action are manifest in all the vast creation of God’s universe. Whether visible, or invisible to the external perception, change is constantly wrought by development, or dimmation: even in the sterile rock, or the mosses that grow thereon—action is apparent.

Look at yon mountain, we may say its aspect to us is the same that it was years ago; but geologists would undoubtedly tell us of marvellous changes and transformations, that had been wrought by Nature’s ceaseless action, both when we wake and when we sleep. Astronomers tell us of changes in the stellar regions. “They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters,” could tell of the foaming changing waves of the restless ocean, and how those waters teem with life and action. The seasons come and go in regular succession, bringing seed-time and harvest—summer and winter, while forests deepen with the growth of years.

The mineral and vegetable kingdoms, and the lower order of animals produce their kind, in harmony with Nature’s laws; all acting in unison with the First Great Cause; but, where do we find man, who was formed to be the noblest—the crowning work of God’s creation? May we count him as the connecting link, a controlling force in the great chain that spans the universe, to unite that which is below him with the Giver and Fructifier of all life?

It is true, action marks his course. In Art, Science and Literature, he commands; but he often sways the sceptre of power unjustly, over those below him in rank and fortune, and thus misdirects, and abuses the talent that is given him for good and noble purposes. If man, as lord of the creation, had kept in rectitude—subject to law and order—and through dependence, had maintained an unbroken union and communion with his Maker, he might have made this earth a terrestrial paradise; and his connection with all of God’s creation would have been harmonious and true.

But through selfishness, pride and arrogance, he has wandered far from the position that he was designed to occupy; and captured, in a net of his own weaving, he has become entangled therein; and is unable to extricate himself. He has become a slave to the lower instincts of his nature. Thus, while in captivity to the law of sin, he exclaims, “O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?” The finer feelings of the soul, are blunted and crushed by the deception of the serpentine nature. Even as a bird becomes a prey in the grasp of its alluring enemy, so does the human heart become a prey to wild, unsubdued, animal propensities. Many suffer the tempter to lead them to sip from the cup of sensuality, till they create depraved appetites, with unabated cravings, which they have not power to resist. Such fall lower and lower, until they are really forced as it were, to drink to the dregs, the cup which the Revelator said, “would be poured out in indignation without mixture.” Moral and spiritual death ensues—the soul is held with rigid grasp—the mental faculties are weakened, and the physical body goes down to a premature grave. Do we not see evident marks of death and decay in deformed men and women, with pale emaciated visages stalking broadcast through the land, at the present time? The image of the heavenly is effaced, and God is not found in their thoughts, nor ways.

But, when we look upon the grand picture that Nature spreads out before our vision, ever increasing in order and beauty, typical of the world beyond, we find a sweet and gentle monitor. Whether she speaks in the thunder’s crash—the vivid lightning's glow—the ocean's roar, or in the rippling stream—we find her the same wise teacher. If at times she stands as a stern reprover, it is for the purpose of creating healthy action. Order is the product of obedience—disobedience results in disorder and confusion.

Query: Is there no way of returning to the statutes and laws of God and Nature? no way-marks left to guide the feet of the wandering, to the Father's house? Truly, if the prodigal sons and daughters, who have traversed the wilderness of sin, really become tired of feeding on husks, and will turn, and by true repentance, which is forsaking, retrace their steps, they will find the highway of holiness, that is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in; and that there is a refuge for the weary and oppressed, from the rude storm of a sin-blighted world—an ark of safety—a home of joy—a home for body and soul, where all material and spiritual needs are well supplied.

The invitation is extended to such, to "Repent and be converted that their sins may be blotted out;" and to prepare for "the times of refreshing, that shall come from the presence of the Lord." Justification must be attained by returning to orderly conditions. Through positive innocence, which comes by trial, souls may be brought into harmonial relations with God and Nature, and join in one universal song of praise and good-will.

Anna White, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

HOPE.

We shall meet beyond the river,
Where the harps Eolian chime,
There to clasp our hands together,
On the other side of time.
Towering mounts may here divide us,
Storms may threaten for a time;
Storms nor mounts, can there divide us,
When we reach that happy clime.

In the truth, naught can alarm us;
Foes without and foes within,
Ne'er can gain the power to harm us,
If our hearts are free from sin.
Not to live for joy and beauty,
Are we called while here in time;
But to walk the path of duty,
Till we reach the summer clime.

Look beyond! there's light before us,
Like a shining mantle there;
And God's love is with and o'er us;
We are folded in his care.
Let a holy purpose guide us—
While we stem the stream of time;
And from earth's illusions hide us,
Till we reach that sun bright clime.

Faith, the gift that God has given,
Is to us a beacon star;
That will lead our souls to Heaven,
From earth's elements afar.
When we reach the pearly portal,
Songs of joy shall to us come;
And dear friends, long since immortal,
Gladly bid us welcome home.

Maria Wheeler, Union Village, O.

INVOCATION.

OUR Heavenly Parents, we bow our hearts in humble acknowledgment of the manifold blessings we have received individually and collectively! And we ask a continuance of divine favors; the greatest of which is power to live truly—to be just to our own souls, and to all mankind. More especially do we render thanks that we live in a day and time when the Mother in Deity is revealed, as a co-worker with the Father. We have felt the power of love that emanates from her pure spirit. Now, souls are begotten and brought forth in the New Creation, bearing the image of the Heavenly. With the spiritual vision open, and with quickened understanding they are able to comprehend divine things; and by putting an end to sinful works, the mystery, which gathers round and clings to false theologies, is finished.

Our God, we not only ask a continuance of the light and power, that have been so freely and mercifully dispensed to us, but we ask an increase of the same, to enable us to live still nearer to the truth, that we may honor and glorify our Heavenly Parents, by doing their will on earth as it is done in the spheres of light, by those who have risen with Christ in the true resurrection, and stand upon a sea of glass, singing songs of joyful praises that they have gotten the perfect victory.

By Divine assistance, we will renew our vows to endure the chastenings, which increasing light and truth may bring upon us, and place our all upon the altar of self-abnegation counting not the carnal life dear; but nerve ourselves to pass through the furnace, and not flinch, until we are refined from all that is earthly, and reflect the image that is heavenly. Thus, the Zion of God on earth will be a beacon light upon the hill of practical truth, that cannot be hid; but will give light to those who are in darkness, who have sought happiness in the broad road of sinful indulgence, and have never tasted the superior joys of a life consecrated to true principles.

We ask a blessing upon all the nations of the earth. Visit the rulers of every land, and teach them justice; how to render good for evil and blessing for cursing, that wars may cease to the ends of the earth; show them that it is far better for mortals, from the king to the peasant, to humble themselves in mercy than to be humbled in judgment. And especially, O Lord, do we ask, that a merciful visitation of conviction for wrong doing and repentance toward Thee, may rest upon our own nation. O, may the Spirit of Truth find a dwelling place in this land, that has hitherto been blessed above all others.

If, in thy wisdom, O Lord, thou hast chosen America to be the home of the oppressed of other nations,—where freedom of conscience can be enjoyed—grant that it may also lead in the van of moral action, and religious truth.

Eleanor Potter, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

SELF-CONQUEST.

HISTORY declares that those nations who have lived the most luxuriously and voluptuously, after a few successive generations, have degenerated into mental and physical effeminacy, and lost their power to efficiently sway the national sceptre, or for self-government; for what is true of nations, may be applied with equal force to individuals, of whom families, communities and nations are formed.

Every act of unrestrained self-indulgence, lowers the moral tone,—debilitates the vital nervous forces—detracts from mentality—darkens spiritual perceptions, and merges the individual into abnormal conditions of slavish servitude to the low propensity—life. The powers and functions of our being, are for use, not abuse; and the action of the will, should be subservient to the higher moral law, which directs to lofty aims, and genuine purposes, in the exercise of all the faculties; that happiness, not misery, may follow our deeds.

The ten days of pleasure, spent on one of the loveliest isles of the ocean, by Seged, the Prince of Ethiopia, where the beauty and simplicity of nature could not fail to mock his regal grandeur, leaves a moral to the pleasure seeking world, that is worthy of consideration. All that wealth could procure—genius invent, and art produce—the charms of beauty—the gaiety of fashion—the liquid strains of music, mingled with the voice of mirth—the tipling of the social glass, and fullness of feasting, interspersed with the flattery of courtiers, and the pompous array of kingly power and dictation, failed to give satisfaction. At the close of each day's varied scenes, there remained some poignant sting to pierce his heart, and wound his conscience. He proved beyond a doubt that "a man of pleasure is a man of pain." The lowliest of his subjects were happier, in their humble situation, than was Seged in the midst of lavish indulgences. "Vanity of vanities and vexation of spirit," is the sum of human life, when happiness through the gratification of the senses is made the only object of pursuit.

"Deny thyself"—taught the sweet souled—self-conquered Nazarene. It was just this beautiful spirit of self-denial, that thwarted the tempter—crushed the hydra-headed monster—lust in every form—subdued gross appetites, leveled vain ambition, stifled avarice, and carried him up into the sublime realities of spiritual life. In his expanded soul-love for humanity, he said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." He would not lower his standard to come to them; but whither he went, they might go. Through the same self-denial and self-sacrifice, they might ascend into the sphere of divine life and goodness, in which it was his delight to dwell.

"The joys of conquest, are the joys of man." The wise of the earth have proved this beyond doubt. Sages, philosophers, and truth-loving souls, in all ages, who have turned with disgust from the follies and evils of a worldly life, and have carried out their exalted ideal of a glorious, perfected life, have given evidence of the superior joys arising therefrom; even though error was mingled with their religious asceticism. Many carried the idea to the ultra point of belief, that the body was an enemy to the soul. Yet the principle involved, of subjecting the inferior to the superior part of their being, was right; for they who bestow all their care and concern upon the outward, and seek physical enjoyment, regardless of the unfolding of their higher natures and spiritual powers, are living for a low purpose.

Self-conquest, is the price of lasting happiness,—the soul's seal of lasting bliss. True heroism is requisite to accomplish this great work. Not the brute force of base passion, by carnal weapons, but the firm immovable resolve of enthroned Reason and immortal Virtue.

"Self-discipline is the soul of the law," said a Buddhist. And we add, It is the very soul of right living. The youth, who has moral courage when ripening into manhood or womanhood, in the flush and vigor of life, to strike out in the narrow path of self-culture and strict discipline in right educational principles, is on the royal road to unfading glory; and will achieve greater success than the sons of ambition, who seek conquest through ignoble strife to win the perishable laurels of earthly fame. "He who governs and conquers his own spirit, is mightier than he who taketh a city;" being conscious that they are perfecting a soul work that will create him, or her, in the image of Divinity, that shall command the respect of man, and win the plaudits of angels.

If "there was joy in heaven over one sinner that repented," will there not be greater rejoicing over one, who, through self-denial, crucifies the nature whence sin proceeds; and nobly rises above those elements? Beautiful were those words of wisdom and counsel, spoken long ago: "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

Evil will surely follow those who willfully violate the laws of their being; for their deeds will cause them shame, and unless obliterated by confession and repentance, their sun of life will set in darkness; while gladness cheers and sweetens the cup of life, as the self-conqueror moves on the homeward journey. Like the "sweet influences of the Pleiades" the light of their memory shall be.

Martha J. Anderson, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

BEAUTIFUL EXAMPLE.

"WHEN ye are reviled, revile not again," was the teaching of the Divinely Anointed Jesus. How nobly he exemplified the spirit of forgiveness in his own life and character! When his persecutors afflicted him and filled his soul with anguish (as far as they had the power), and made his pathway thorny and difficult to travel, he did not retaliate nor seek to harm them, neither did he feel bitterness of spirit toward his enemies.

When he knew that the crucifix awaited him, and the hour drew nigh when his body would thereon be suspended, and his disciples whom he had loved, blessed and comforted, had, through fear of ruthless foes, denied or forsaken him, how beautiful were his soul-breathings, when he said, referring to his persecutors, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do!" Was not that a manifestation of love toward his enemies that was not of the world? They mocked him—smote and spit upon him—and crowned him with thorns; but all this did not move him to anger. With faith unwavering to the last he meekly bowed in resignation, and in sweet, deep-toned accents, said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit!"

Would that all who profess the Christian name, follow his example; and strive to be like the pattern—like the first born Christian in regard to the principle of forgiveness. He took hold of Justice with one hand, and of Mercy with the other, and prayed, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." As we forgive men who trespass against us, so will our Heavenly Father and Mother forgive us, when we trespass upon the laws of God.

If people would repent, what is called "the Lord's prayer," understandingly, and make it effectual by living it, what a change would be wrought in society! Without a practical application, it is worthless.

The S, and S, is a small organ, but large enough to convey messages of truth. And we earnestly desire that it may be a fearless exponent of error, all that is false, and at the same time bear marks of true love, charity and Christian benevolence.

May it be like a snow white dove,
Winging its way from sea to sea,
Bearing the blessed balm of love,
Breathing good will and charity.

Martha A. Burger, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

MOTHERHOOD.

Who is a mother? She, who strongly holds

A little group of ties of kindred blood;
Whose dearest treasures are the hearts she folds,
Whose one ambition is their joy, their good.
Her deep, deep love, knows not the ebbing wave
That wrecks the heart on life's dark treacherous tides;

She takes the path that leadeth to the grave,
If on it duty, to her loved, abides.

Her self-forgetfulness is still the same,

Affection prompts her ever helpful hand;
From childhood's folly unto manhood's aim
She, patient, suffers for that little band.

Yet she is only like the brooding bird
That spreads her breast against the coming storm,

That trembles not, when thunders loud are heard,
But, self-reliant, keeps her fledglings warm.

From fierce gorilla, down to sightless mole,

The female loves and cherishes her charge,
Then cannot woman, with immortal soul,

That narrow scope of motherhood enlarge?
If she have children, they should bind her heart

To sympathize with every child on earth;
To make all mothers' care of her's a part,

And claim her hand to sow the seeds of worth.

But if no little ones around her cling,

Then is she free to toil where need is great,
To gather orphans' wealth her sheltering wing,

And be an angel in the way of fate.

Yea, she whose mind may tread a path of stars,

Whose aspirations heavenly circuits take,
Shall pass, with seraphs, through all bolts and bars,

'Till fettered captives learn their chains to break,
And wrongs, that now cry loudly unto God,

Will sink in silence, and dissolve in air,
When the weak victims that oppression trod,

Shall rise to freedom, and develop there.

No more will they the crystal goblet fill

With crimson serpents to infest the brain;
No more will they the unborn infant kill,

Nor blight its life with sin's corroding stain.
And draining luxury (death's haughty aid),

That slays with famine and with overflow,
With false religion shall be lowly laid,

Where cold oblivion's misty waters flow.

When, mortals feel that God created them,

In that grand "Image," male and female too,
Maternal love shall, like a diadem,

Enwrap the soul and give it impulse new.

Cecilia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

FALSE AND TRUE.

As I lift the curtain of retirement, which screens my mind from the turbulent sea of life, as it generally exists, what do I behold? A striving, self-serving, world-loving throng. Consequent to the legalized sin, land monopoly, one underlying cause of human distress, and of the unjust bearing of other man-made laws, all classes of society are made sufferers.

Those whose circumstances permit, amass great wealth, which their own toil neither creates nor sustains; and they revel in luxuries deleterious to both body and soul; which cause an idle, artificial life, wherein contentment finds no abode. And, while they seek renown and honor in the eyes of the aristocracy, they are envied by those whose very nerve and sinew provide their support, and whose unremitting but unrecompensed toil secures, to themselves, scarcely the necessities of life; while they are debarred from that degree of mental, social and moral culture, requisite to carry them above the low society and debasing influences engendered by poverty. Thus is labor robbed of its dignity, and it becomes an irksome yoke to those upon whom it falls so heavily.

As life is stamped on every feature of the universe, those who do not find employment in simple, useful industries, will resort to illegitimate means. Hence we see those whose abnormal physical appetites, seek gratification in gluttony and other low forms of animal life, with corresponding mental excitements; for which ball-rooms, theaters, and other places of vain amusements amply provide.

Another class, gorge the intellect without reference to use, and without practical application. With such, spirituality is supplanted, leaving little room for the divine inflowings needful to render life acceptable to individuals, or a blessing to humanity.

With deep lament we behold the masses worship at Fashion's unhallowed shrine. Many, whose young hearts blossom hopefully in spring-time, which is a prophecy of good fruit in maturer years, are induced to sell all else (save a carnal life) to ape those who monopolize wealth, and degrade honest labor while they seek to exalt idleness, extravagance, and their associate evils, and make them respectable.

Rising above this vast multitude, we thankfully recognize those of sterling integrity, through whom the voice of truth is nobly uttered, relative to the various needed reforms of the day. We ask blessing upon every one whose life is dedicated to humanity's weal, and look with compassion upon sad, weary hearts, whose inner thirstings can never be satisfied with perishing joys; and who seek love in a broader purer sphere, than earthly relationships can afford; and we invite them, with us, to turn from the sorrowful picture.

The curtain falls—the scene changes—and what the vision? A peaceful, holy seclusion—sweet rest in the truth—a home for the soul. We see a band, in whom the fires of Pentecostal love have been kindled, prompting to a common brother and sisterhood—a united inheritance—an impartial distribution of the blessings of life. One clean spot on earth, teeming with beauty, and smiling with abundant harvest; made fruitful to those by whom labor is exalted and divested of its painful yoke, and brightened by the angel touch of consecration.

This is true life, in which all the faculties of being may be brought into the service of God, and still be richly fraught with enjoyment and a healthy condition of physical, social, intellectual and spiritual senses, be enjoyed. Eternal principles are lived by those who have pledged themselves to sell all for the "priceless pearl"; and a relationship is thus formed which robs death of its sting, and the grave of its victory. And by united efforts a second temple is reared whose doors are open to all true worshippers of the living God.

BERRIES AMONG WEEDS.

AMONG the most pleasant of our summer employments, is that of gathering strawberries. Whether we go into the gardens to secure the rich crops raised by our good brethren, or ramble through the fields and meadows in quest of the sweet wild fruit, it matters little: for interest and pleasure are combined with our labor.

It was my fortune, one warm day last summer, to discover an old strawberry bed that had been abandoned to weeds, which had grown very rank. I was impressed to make a thorough investigation of the down-trodden patch, and was rewarded with an ample supply of bright red berries; and I also learned a profitable lesson.

I was led to reflect that the human mind is like a garden, wherein weeds and fruit grow together; and that, many times, it is difficult to see aught else but weeds; and how apt we are to turn away, and think it is useless to look for any good thing from such sources. I was instructed that it is far better to exercise patience, and to search diligently for good plants and fruit, and to use our best exertions to destroy the noxious weeds, and preserve the good vines or plants.

We are all placed in the garden of Eden, to dress and to keep it. The germs of a higher life are committed to us to develop; and, if we are diligent and faithful, we shall make our paradise more beautiful, instead of losing it; and shall draw thither good angels to dwell with us, and instruct us in those things which pertain to eternal life.

Inspired by such impressions, I resolved anew never to slacken my hand in cultivating the good soil of the heart, and in striving to uproot every plant which our Heavenly Father and Mother have not planted; and to carefully guard the good plants, and water them with charity and love, which will be like sweet refreshing dews. Then an abundant harvest will prove the integrity of my life, and be my reward, and my garden will not, through neglect, be like the strawberry bed, bearing many weeds, and a proportionate small quantity of good fruit.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS AT SPIRITUAL MEETINGS, DOCTOR SAMUEL MAXWELL, SPEAKER AND MEDIUM.

A. Christ was a spirit, entirely independent of Jesus; was a spirit a thousand millions of years old—in existence long before this planet. He took charge of his medium, Jesus, the man, and manifested His power to the world through him.

Q. Have you ever met that spirit, Christ?

A. I have never met Christ personally, because He is one of the grand old spirits, who has range of all the Spiritual worlds in space. His mission is of such a character, that He does but rarely come Himself to earth at all, or the rudimentary spiritual world, but works through agents or mediums, in these rudimentary Spirit-lands to carry out His work. His special work upon this planet is employing in the Spiritual world a vast combination of agencies to-day, to bring about this spiritualizing of our lives; to inject into the external world, so much of the experiences, the beauty and glory of that other interior life, as can find lodgment and appropriation in the lives of men upon this earth.

Q. Do the followers of Jesus usually meet Him personally?

A. Jesus, that beautiful soul has passed on from the first Spirit-world. They do not ever meet Him, because all persons, when they escape from the material body, must first come to this nearest Spiritual belt, or of one which surrounds the planet, but can only rise through each one, as they are prepared by growth.

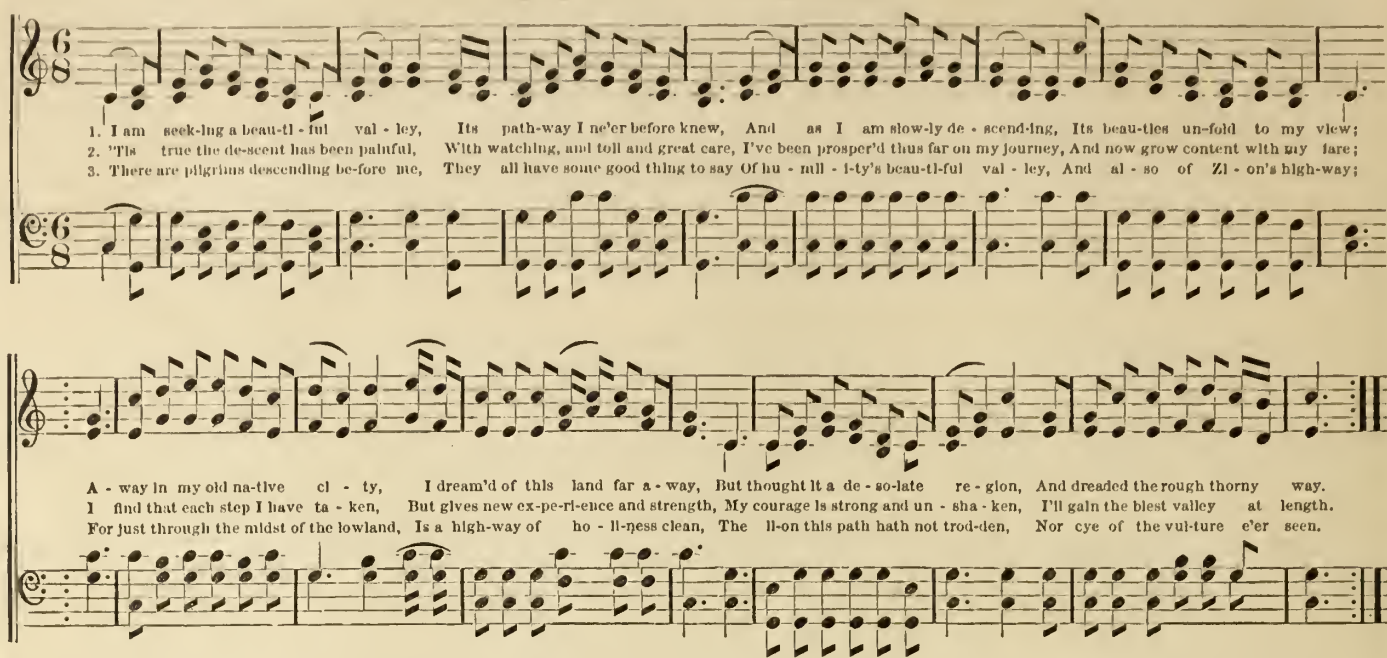

Q. You frequently allude to our "eternal Father," will you explain who this is?

A. There is, my friend, a great want of expression—the Father and Mother, two principles united in oneness. The divine life is both Father and Mother, balanced precisely throughout infinite space. Every cubic inch of this Father and Mother life, full of its wisdom, full of its love, of its power, and with a completeness of consciousness that transcends the most perfect consciousness that ever has existed in the human soul. This is the "All-Father," as well as the "All-Mother." To this as it is manifested to our souls in their inmost depths, we all turn with divinest reverence, for this pure, this infinite love, the spiritual wisdom, is the fountain from which comes all life, all consciousness, all being. This to us is the truth.

R. P. Journal.

We present to the readers of our Monthly some lines that were written by a novitiate sister of the Shaker fraternity at Mt. Lebanon, who soon after was reaped from the earth-life, and gathered to immortal spheres. They have been set to music since her decease.

BEAUTIFUL VALLEY.

1. I am seek-ing a beau-ti-ful val-ley, Its path-way I ne'er before knew, And as I am slow-ly de-scend-ing, Its beau-ties un-fold to my view;
 2. 'Tis true the de-scent has been painful, With watch-ing, and toil and great care, I've been prosper'd thus far on my journey, And now grow content with my fare;
 3. There are pil-grims descend-ing be-fore me, They all have some good thing to say Of hu-mil-i-ty's beau-ti-ful val-ley, And al-so of Zi-on's high-way;

A-way in my old na-tive cl-ty, I dream'd of this land far a-way, But thought it a de-so-late re-gion, And dreaded the rough thorny way.
 I find that each step I have ta-ken, But gives new ex-pe-ri-ence and strength, My courage is strong and un-sha-ken, I'll gain the best valley at length.
 For just through the midst of the lowland, Is a high-way of ho-li-ness clean, The il-lon this path hath not trod-den, Nor eye of the vul-ture e'er seen.

TEMPERANCE.

The things of old must pass away,
 That long o'er man has held the sway,
 And trampled on his dearest rights,
 And closed his eyes and dimm'd his lights.
 Of such is wine, so long renown'd,
 That laid the patriarch on the ground;
 The Lord of Lords that seals their fate,
 The King of kings that rules in state.
 Such is the glory of the cup,
 The high, the low, the rich will sup;
 And from the days of Noah down,
 The laws could only on it frown.
 All helpless now before its sway,
 Yet hope inspires a better day,
 For God hath said the strong must fall,
 Before the weak, who conquer all.
 No crowned heads nor scepter'd host
 Will in that day of courage boast;
 But truth shall guide the actors well,
 And prayer and praise in accents swell.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

THE writer has lived with the Shakers, sixty-eight years—lived with those who believed under the ministrations of Mother Ann, who was the same, in spirit, as Jesus, in his appearing. They gathered into Apostolic order—Community of interest. They carried out the Christ principle to the very letter. They who had wives, lived as they that had none. They who possessed houses and lands, as though they possessed not—for the fashion of the world had passed away. They were a noble people, strong in body and in mind.

It was a great blessing to me, that my lot was cast with them, when I was young, away from the evils that are in the world, to learn to wear the Christian yoke, till it became easy and the burden light—to obtain the promised rest, to my soul—in this present time.

Elder Simon Maybee, Hancock, Mass.

HENRY WARD BEECHER probably gives utterance to more radical ideas than any other orthodox clergyman in the country. In a recent sermon he said: "The gates of Hell have opened into this world through ecclesiastical judicatories, and the greatest cruelties have been practiced by Christian sects, and the world has been presented with a hideous, bloody-mouthed God, that makes men only to drown them. The Church dominion in the world has been simply monstrous; there have been no excesses more abominable than those committed under Church discipline. The Church has been under the dominion of the Devils." Alluding to his position among the Congregationalists, Mr. Beecher said it was often asked, "Why, as he maintained such liberal views, he did not separate from them?" "I stay here," said he, "because there are men that say Congregationalist ministers shall not stand in the pulpit and say certain things, and I say that they shall!"

Theological controversy is "the Gates of Hell." They can be opened only by a spirit of infallibility, that holds belief, of more vital consequence to salvation, than good righteous works. That thinks to do God good service by afflicting human beings, as Calvin did Servetus, because he did not believe that Jesus was the eternal son of God.

1. Sexual promiscuity—corresponds to savagism; or the gross, selfish and sensual in human nature.
2. Marriage, for the propagation and education of the race. This institution lies at the foundation of society and civilization in the natural order.
3. Celibacy: alias life in the mental and moral brain-region rather than the cerebellum. Plato, Jesus, Appollonius, Michael Angelo, Sir Isaac Newton, Miss Bremer, Florence Nightingale, John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet, and a whole galaxy of the great and good, lived and live celibate lives. All live thus in the Spirit World of immortality.

J. M. Peebles.

A SERMON TO GAMBLERS.

THE Rev. Mr. Hammond, revivalist, has been preaching a special sermon to the sporting men of St. Louis. He published an invitation to gamblers and fast men, and in response the church was crowded to its utmost. When no more could get in, about three hundred Christians kindly left in order to make room for the sinners. Probably a like congregation had never before been in a church. In the main, it was orderly, the only serious disturbance being caused by a drunken woman. Mr. Hammond began with an onslaught on tobacco, quoting to great applause this verse:

Tobacco is a filthy weed;
 It was the devil sowed the seed;
 It drains the pocket, scents the clothes,
 And makes a chimney of the nose.

Among other things, Mr. Hammond told them the following story of David Mattoon, a Rochester gambler: "He started one night for the theater, and got along beside a low brick church where an Evangelist was preaching. He saw the light, and an invisible hand drew him in. At the close of the meeting Mattoon, the professional sporting man, walked forward. Then and there he knelt down and prayed, 'God be merciful to me, a sinner.' He rose from his knees a saved man. He went home. He had $3,000 worth of gambling implements. He burnt them all up. With a mother and sister to support, he said, 'What shall I do?' His hands were delicate and soft as a lady's. Everybody knew he was a gambler. After many fruitless efforts to obtain work—for people were all afraid of him—he hired himself to a grocer at $20 a month. His old friends, and one in particular, tempted him. He stood firm. He said, 'I will never touch a card again.' It was after this that he entered the service of the grocer. He neither drank, smoked, nor chewed. No Christian ought to do either. He became mayor of Oswego and was elected a member of the New York Legislature."

FOR LIFE WE RUN.

Behold the straight and narrow way
 To life eternal leads;
 To win we run, improve our day,
 Nor to temptations yield.
 All base desires we banish hence,
 True freedom to secure,
 The word of God is our defense,
 By which we life insure.
 The tempter, thus we overcome,
 The world within subdue,
 This victory first our Saviour won,
 His inward foes he slew;
 Yea his disciples do the same,
 Still learn his yoke to wear,
 Endure the cross, despise the shame,
 Hence his salvation share.

THE LEBANON SHAKERS.

THE Troy Press, in writing up a Shaker history, says, in 1779, the people in the vicinity of New Lebanon became greatly interested in the conversation of a Shaker who chanced in that direction. Many were ready to believe his doctrines. Calvin Harlow was appointed by the New Lebanon folks to see the people at Niskayuna, and to bring an account of them. When he returned he confessed himself unqualified to give a proper report, and Joseph Meacham and Amasa Hammond (both Baptist ministers) and Aaron Kibbe made another excursion with him to the Shaker settlement. The four believed that what they saw and heard was the truth of God. A settlement was formed at New Lebanon, and in a short time the converts there were more numerous than the original Believers at Niskayuna.

JESUITS.

THE Catholic Church is built upon Peter, and Peter built upon Jesus. Therefore that church brought forth an order of Jesuits—men, who imitated Jesus, instead of becoming Christians, as did the man Jesus, by being baptized with the Christ Spirit.

"Seven Thunders uttered their voices."

GLORY to God in the highest—Peace on Earth. In place of war, Good will to all mankind, especially the Household of Faith, who have kept the Gospel and obeyed its first Testimony.

SEVEN THUNDERS uttered their voices—Seven Testimonies.

First Testimony—Against Generation—perverted and per se. This was the beginning of a New Heaven—new Religious System.

Second Testimony—Against perverted physiology—habits of food, dress and occupation, which tend to create and stimulate fleshly lusts, or that ultimate in generation.

Is it advisable, for the children of the RESURRECTION, to leave the use of animal food, to the children of the world, who marry and are given in marriage?

Would all, who eat flesh meat, be willing to be butchers? Change of Life involves change of diet, as with the Egyptian Israelites.

Third Testimony—Against selfish agriculture—Robbing the Land—taking from it, and not returning to it, the elements of food. The Land should enjoy its Sabbaths of rest—should be cultivated and managed, not in the Heathenish, but in a Godly manner.

The accumulations of ages, of fertilizing economy, on the part of nature, should not be wasted, nor squandered, for temporary ends and objects, without regard to the Laws of compensation which exist between the soil and humanity, and between present and coming generations.

Fourth Testimony—Against perverted commerce—creating class distinctions—a general desire to live without work—making labor dishonorable—Land greediness—a desire to own more land than can be taken good care of, ending in speculation.

By these means, the inhabitants of a nation are withdrawn from the land and heaped up in villages, towns and cities. The productive agencies of the country exist in the form of young men and women, whose food is all raised for them, by a few over-worked agriculturists. Their clothing, made by operatives and machinery, in large factories, where disease-creating conditions are ever present. These landless, homeless classes, in different nations, under the same system, are often involved in strife and strikes with the capitalists, or in national wars of mutual destruction.

Fifth Testimony—Against perverted, debauched Literature—the mind-food of millions—sustaining all the seven plagues of Babylon—Generative lusts, by obscene Literature—Physiological lusts, by advertisements, which cause the sale of adulterated and disease-creating food, and then of an endless amount of death-creating medicines, administered by legal and illegal quacks, who live and thrive upon the sins of the population, no better than themselves. It being like Doctor, like dupes.

No National wars could be long maintained without war literature and war Instrumental music.

Sixth Testimony—Against the prostitution of Spiritualism—Spiritualism, the mother of Science, has been largely prostituted to selfish ends and purposes. "In her was found the blood of Saints and Martyrs—of all that was shed upon earth." The holy wars and crusades, and the murder of Spiritual Media, as witches, is common to man, and has abounded in all the Kingdoms of our Christian Babylon, not excepting America. Millions of men and women, shabbily got up by perverted generation—badly educated, by perverted physiology, agriculture and commerce, who have passed to the lower Spirit World, return to Great Babylon—unclean spirits—making its Church Organizations their cages and domiciles.

Seventh Testimony—Against the prostitution of Religion—Religion, instead of Love, to God and Humanity—to God in Humanity, is so perverted, or inverted, as to become the synonym of Hate. Those, possessing it in the largest measure, being distinguished, as murderers, above all others, either as national warriors and manufacturers of war implements, so that the Heathens are constantly learning the arts of war from the Christian nations—as witness China and Japan—or they are pre-eminent as inquisitors—religious persecutors. Whole Peoples have, by them, been exterminated from the earth, and doomed to an eternity of unbearable torment.

RELIGION, in its normal condition, is a Dove of Love and goodness. It immediately flits away from the heart that admits the demon of hate. To contend about religion, is to lose the thing contended for.

THE Mikado is making almost as good a thing out of his reformation as Henry the Eighth did of his. One of the discarded gods of Japan is advertised for sale in a Japanese paper in the following terms: "For sale, at Kama-Kura, a very fine idol with six arms. It is fifteen feet high, and was cast in bronze, at Sheffield." Sheffield now shares with Birmingham the doubtful honor of supplying, with impartial generosity, missionaries and bibles to the more inquiring among the heathen, and idols to those who prefer to walk in the old ways.

REALITY OF MATERIALIZATION IN PHILADELPHIA.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I am sorry to know that certain Spiritualists, who have not attended a single one of the sittings for materialization by the Holmeses, in June and July last, assume to decide, in advance of personal observation, that these manifestations are the result of imposture.

I attended forty of the sittings then held. No one who saw "Katie King" walk about, and heard her speak, and touched her, ever doubted, for a moment, that she was a living, thinking being. Either, then, she was what she professed to be—a spirit from another world—or else she was a confederate, secretly introduced by the Holmeses for purposes of deception.

But if human beings cannot pass and repass at pleasure through the substance of a brick wall or of a stout walnut partition, then, under the conditions we obtained, entrance to or exit from the cabinet except by the door into the parlor where we sat, was a physical impossibility.

It follows that, if human senses are good for anything as evidence, the "Katie King" whom I and four or five hundred others saw and heard last summer was a spirit not of this world.

Of all this, and especially of the precise conditions under which these materializations were obtained, the public will be better able to judge by reference to an article, to appear in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly, which I am preparing with the strictest care, containing a record of what passed during these sittings.

I stake whatever of reputation I may have acquired, after eighteen years' study of Spiritualism, as a dispassionate observer, upon the genuine character of these phenomena.

ROBERT DALE OWEN.

IDOL WORSHIP.

IF any presume that the day of idolatry is past, we would hasten to relieve them of the hallucination, and raise a warning cry against the false gods of the day in which we live. At no time, in all past human history, has idolatry been more prevalent than now—never has the imperative proclamation, "Thou shalt have no gods but me," been more needed, nor more opportune. And when we think of the gross blindness of the people in by-gone days, these remarks become all the stronger. We are too apt to look with extreme pity or disgust, upon those we have chosen to call heathen, because they paid much adoration to curiously carved blocks of wood or stone, forgetting meanwhile that these are the most harmless practices of all idolatry. The homage paid to flesh and blood, to gold, to institutions of various kinds, and to "idols dwelling in the heart," far surpasses, in extent and in depravity, any former age since the history of the world began. To enumerate for denunciation, all the idols that are holding carnival in unregenerate hearts, would fill volumes; and we purpose no such undertaking. But against the whole army of figures, animate and inanimate, that are occupying the place of Christ in the heart, we would bear testimony, while we endeavor to point out some few prominent gods, that are worse, and more worshiped than any fixture of wood or brass ever erected by any heathen. That selfishness is the great idol and sin of the world, there can be but small success at denial. That nearly all things are made to bend to the worship of self, needs but little evidence to render general proof. Inclination may lead us to set apart the Bible as an object of adoration. The same may be said of the Sabbath. While we know that without the spirit of truth, the letter or materiality killeth; and that "the Sabbath was made for man" and not man to worship the Sabbath. Thus selfish inclinations would cause us to live to uphold any and all institutions that would further the demands of self. Instead of making institutions the means of self-control, abasement and consequent elevation, we too commonly seek to make them the objects that shall ultimate in selfish redundancy. Making money, position, fashion, dress, luxury, or any dominant desire we may have, is an idol before which we are tempted to bow perpetually, consecrating thereto the first fruits of our thoughts and affections. With us, as Believers, there is as much danger of idolatry as in any class of people known. We may pride ourselves upon the peculiar purity of our lives, and at the same time be idolatizing institutions of mammon in some of his protean forms. Living apart from the world may become a matter of such lazy selfishness that we make it a matter of studious gratification. We are liable to make the garments we wear, objects of worship, and instead of their being representations of principles that are true, they take the precedence of the principles themselves. Principle is the main thing. Let institutions, young and old, subserve the purposes of godly principle; and not principle humiliated to sustain any institution. Self-abnegation, in some particular point or points, may be very good; but this can never answer the purpose of an entire submission to principle. To eat or drink that we may expend our strength in the gratification of other lusts, is a common species of idolatry. The lusts for good (?) living will sometime appear to us as bad as any other lusts. The seating of some human favorite in our hearts to rule or bias our conduct, where only principle should sit, is still another common idolatrous shrine. The common god of the age is gold; and this god worships the goddess of fleshly lusts. And look where we may, the world over, we find but few exceptions from the general rule that the worship of women, land, and kindred monopolies, have been the idol-causes of all the wars and inflictions that have ever cursed poor humanity. Let the object of our heart's worship be God alone, and to love our neighbor as ourselves will be consequent fruits.

G. A. Loomas, Waterbury, N. Y.

THE importance of ventilating bedrooms is a fact in which every one is vitally interested, and which few properly appreciate. If two men are to occupy a bedroom during the night, let them step upon the weighing scales as they retire, and then again in the morning, and they will find that their actual weight is at least a pound less in the morning. Frequently there will be a loss of one or two pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be more than one pound; that is, during the night there is a loss of a pound of matter, which has gone off from their bodies, from the lungs partly, and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped material is carbonic acid and decayed animal matter or poisonous exhalations.

SECOND THUNDER.

BELOVED ELDER J. B. VANCE, Alfred, Me.

The Lyinn "Record," containing an account of your successful meetings there, is received. I have just finished re-reading your able address — wise in spirit, luminous and logical in matter.

To see the rising class — the young men — coming up to the help of the Lord, is a great comfort to my spirit.

"Who shall go forth in this fight? The young men of the princes of the provinces."

"Who shall order the battle?" Henceforth these must fight the battles of the Lord — Truth against Error — the New against the Old: the second thunder sounding to raise the dead in Nature, and to awaken those who are sleeping in the dust of the earth, in the present Gospel degree. Dust was to be the serpent's meat, even in the Holy Mountain.

In my day I have striven zealously to do my work. I have fought the good fight, and kept the living faith of a Gospel-increase alive in my own soul, and in the souls of many others. I glory in the cross I have borne against physical lusts, other than those of generation. I am joyful in this day because I have "suffered in the flesh," having ceased to eat flesh thirty-five years ago.

The battle has been a heavy one, for the pioneers, but victory lights upon our banner. The morning dawns; the end draws near, when the waters of truth, like the Mill river flood, will burst the barriers that have so long held them in check. Pretty soon the old theological dam will give way all at once. It cannot much longer withstand the wear and tear of waves succeeding each other, keeping up a continuous, everlasting pressure of new ideas, right from the inner heavens.

The primary fundamental principles of the Old Theology, laid down by the Council of Nice, reformed by Luther, Calvin, Servetus, and their successors, Knox, Edwards, Bushnell, Beecher, Cheever, Tyng; and reaffirmed and reissued by the Evangelical Alliance — these, with Scott, Clark, Miller and Grant, and all the rest of them, are done for — the dam will give way!

My work has been to help start the lower tier of theological stones and timbers in the old dilapidated structure. In the New York Tabernacle, a long time ago, I declared that the God of Israel was a medium of powers still above him; that, even under Scripture ruling, "He called them gods, unto whom the word of God, from higher powers — the Christ-Heavens — came."

It was strong meat for many; and when I affirmed that Jesus was not the Christ, any more than Ann was the Christ; that as she was a woman, and a Gentile one at that, so was Jesus a man, a Jew, who as truly confessed his sins as did Ann Lee, or as any one of us has ever done, everybody felt that that was just as the thing ought to be. But would not the old dam of the first cycle go, if these positions were admitted and suffered to become Orthodox?

Have we not all, in the world, been educated in the old theology of a God above law, a mythical Jesus, or Christ, and of the holy Protestant Scriptures? Did we not practically believe and hold them as the word of God? Was not the Protestant translation the true one? Were not the apostles — to say nothing of Jesus — unbounded in knowledge, perfect in doctrine? The fall of man from the holy, immaculate state in which God created him, a full grown angelic being, by virtue of his existence, without any travail of soul — our great loss by Adam's great sin, these must not be questioned!

As antichrist began to work in the Primitive Church, has he not continued to work in this Church, in all physical and physiological matters; for was not sickness, amongst us, a matter over which we had no control? Was it not a wise dispensation of the all-wise Creator, entirely beyond human supervision?

I take these positions: First, the Mosaic law is fundamental to the Gospel; they belong together — complement each other. Second, there is a sharp distinction between Jewish and Gentile Christianity, which must be removed. Third, all parties and processes, connected with the generation of Jesus, are unchristian, and do not belong to the resurrection order. Fourth, no man or woman was ever born a Christian. Fifth, generation, whether of Gods, Christs, Holy Ghosts, Angels, or Men and Women, is demonstration, strong as proof from holy writ, that the parties concerned, from beginning to end, were in some one of the earths — the most outward and external proceeding from the creative fountain of Deity, the lowest of all normal spheres. The hells are abnormal. Jesus travailed into Christianity. Like all Jews, he believed in a physical resurrection, and headed a general movement in the spirit-world, to actualize it. He failed, but not without achieving a partial success, by raising Lazarus, returning to his own body, and also raising the bodies of many other of the saints who had died in the faith of a physical resurrection, and whom nothing but the fact of reëntering their former bodies, and then dying over again, could convince and confound. They all belonged to the same race of our modern antichristians, of whom the Second Adventists are the most logical type.

As a Jew, Jesus believed in war; he practiced it in the temple. When arrested, his company possessed, if indeed they had not sold garments to provide swords. He expected spiritual assistance, and as a good Jew, properly so. He headed a general insurrection against the powers that were, in the belief that he would be sustained by supernatural phenomena, as were the Jews, against the inhabitants of the land of Canaan. At his birth, he was so noticed. Why not in becoming "King of the Jews?"

The apostles all believed in the physical resurrection, "Dunlavy" did not perceive that fact.

Spiritualism is a science, not a religion. Hitherto, we, as Shakers, have been but a Gentile Pentecostal Church, comparatively ignorant of the physical truths of the Jewish order, which the Jewish Pentecostal Church fully understood and indorsed eighteen hundred years ago.

The marriage of the Lamb has not yet occurred, except so far as Ann Lee and her successors in office, power and trust, have been connected, by magnetic and spiritual association, with Jesus and the Jews of the Pentecostal Church, in the spiritual world.

This Gentile Mother Church will hear the seven thunders, before she will receive the whole counsel of God. Then will come the day that will be as the light of seven days.

It is a novel idea, that good old Believers, who thought themselves perfected Christians, far better than any Jews, will yet have to learn truth of them; that a perfect union between the old saints of former dispensations and the new saints of this order, must be effected, each party giving and receiving truths, one from the other, and becoming joined like a ring.

These and similar truths are now pressing upon Believers from the spirit-world. We must fall at the feet of Jesus, like Paul before Gamaliel, and accept him, not as a Catholic, a Protestant, nor a Greek Christian, but as a Jewish Christian.

The old "dam" must give way, then the "flood" of truth will carry off a lot of rubbish. Old things will pass away. When the "dam" breaks, the waters will do the rest. Judgment begins at the house of God; and it is a great work to convert into real Shakers, many Believers who have passed out of the body. How could it be otherwise?

When in the world, I was joined to a company of materialists—radicals—unto whom the first principles of the new earth were being revealed. We loved our fellow-man with a love that many Christians might do well to emulate. But God put it into our hearts to hate the Old Mill Dam—all the old theologies of Christendom, of Babylonian confusion. With the subtle waters of natural truth we worked away at the "old dam," like beavers, until we removed the lowest tier of foundation stones and timbers, held together by rotten cement, under shoddy contracts.

First, we claimed the right to think, to reason; the right of conscience. Second, that belief was the result of evidence, not of authority. Third, that woman was the equal of man, except in physical strength, possessing the same right; that it was her province to regulate reproduction in all respects, just as females of all other animals regulate it. In government, in property, and in all duties of citizenship, there should be no invidious distinction nor disparaging preferences. If war was improper for woman, that was proof that it was also improper for man—was wrong per se. Fourth, that the land belonged, by inalienable right, to the race, not to individuals; and that land monopoly preceded all the wars, and wars created chattel slavery, wages, slavery and poverty—diseases coming in from secondary causes.

We were as truly inspired, though we knew it not, to reassert and bring forth these primary truths of a new earthly order, as were Ann Lee and her compeers, to reassert and bring forth the first principles of a New Heavenly Order. And that new spiritual order will never exist in its glory, until it recognizes, in full, the truths pertaining to a millennium on the earth, even as they are recognized by the first Pentecostal church in the spirit-world: A true, godly, scientific agriculture, conjoined with a perfect physiology, that will remove the causes of all diseases in the new earth and from the new heavens—a dietary as pure as was the manna, and as natural.

Because these truths are a two-edged sword, cutting both ways upon physical and theological errors, in the natural and spiritual orders, is he who iterates and reiterates them therefore an enemy?

Is not truth our dearest friend,

Guide and guardian evermore?

Will it not our plans subtend,

Reaching the immortal shore?

—Fraternally yours, F. W. EVANS.

BIBLE SPIRITUALISM.

—O—

BY D. WINDER.

TRANSFIGURATION AND MATERIALIZATION.

—O—

TEXT:—"Jesus took Peter, James and John, and went up into a high mountain to pray; and as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered, and His raiment was white and glittering; and behold there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias; who appeared in glory, and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem.—They (Peter, James and John) saw His glory, and the two men that stood with Him."—Luke 9: 28-32.

—O—

THE history of the physical sciences,—their discovery, progress and development,—is being repeated in the new spiritual philosophy. A little more than two centuries ago, Galileo was imprisoned for uttering the discovery that our globe revolved on its axis. Previous to that time, and long after, eclipses of the sun and moon, the appearance of comets, and the lurid glare of aurora borealis, were regarded as supernatural phenomena, foreboding some dire calamity to the children of earth.

We have an example of transfiguration in the case of Stephen, the first martyr to the cause of Jesus Christ. When he was brought before the Jewish Sanhedrim, and false and grievous charges brought against him, we are told by the historian, Luke, that "all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." He was not only transfigured, but his spiritual vision was opened, and he cried out, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God."—(Acts 6: 15, and 7: 55.)

Advance has been made in all the physical sciences, as well as in astronomy. The mysteries of the material world are rapidly unraveling, elevating the human race to a physical plane far beyond either the comprehension or credence of even our grandfathers. A corresponding advance is being made in the mental, moral and spiritual sciences. Not only the crude ideas of the ancients in reference to natural phenomena, but the old theological dogmas and creeds are being rapidly exploded, giving place to a more rational and consistent system of moral ethics. The present is evidently a grand epoch in the history of our world; especially in its moral, religious, and spiritual phases. And it is a significant fact, that the most startling religious and spiritual events of the present times, are almost exact duplicates of those which characterized the period when Jesus of Nazareth sojourned on earth. The history of the Nazarene and his followers is being repeated, although this fact is fully recognized by comparatively few at the present time, owing to the perversion and misapprehension of the events of both periods. In the imagination of the masses, the events of the Nazarene period are exaggerated, while the events of the present are disparaged and underrated. Unbelievers in modern spiritual phenomena delude themselves, in assuming that if they could see such prodigies as are ascribed to Jesus and his disciples, they would be convinced; but the fact that thousands who witnessed the so-called miracles of Jesus, rejected all his pretensions, fully demonstrates this delusion. Influenced by pride and selfishness, when they could not deny the phenomena, they imputed them to satanic power and influence, or deceptive magical arts. It is just so now.

It seems to me that even the most advanced Spiritualists are not aware of the grand stage of progress already reached in this glorious development of heavenly experience and truth. As the materialization of disembodied spirits, so as to render them visible, tangible and audible to ordinary mortals, is now a demonstrated fact, by the most rigid scientific tests, I am persuaded the way will soon be opened for the free intercourse of kindred spirits, in and out of the flesh. We shall then realize the words of Paul: "Ye are come to an innumerable company of angels, and to the spirits of just men made perfect."

In our text, we have an example of two phases of spiritual phenomena, transfiguration and materialization; the latter in the cases of Moses and Elias, who had long been inhabitants of the Spirit-world; the former in the case of Jesus of Nazareth, still in the flesh. This phase,—transfiguration—I regard as the highest to be obtained by earth's children in the flesh; while materialization, with all its consequent results, is the highest phase of development on the part of disembodied spirits, in their relation to our mundane sphere.

Jesus was then in his material body, and Moses and Elias in their spiritual body. The transfiguration of his body, and the materialization of theirs, had, no doubt, the effect to produce a uniformity in their appearance.

While on this subject, I wish to draw the attention of advanced Christian Spiritualists to the peculiar physico-spiritual status of Jesus, during the forty days that intervened between his resurrection and ascension. The solution of this apparent mystery remains as one of the future achievements of Spiritual Philosophy. If we understood all now, we should have no more to learn; progress in spiritual knowledge would be at an end. The further we advance in spiritual science, the more we understand of the historic records of the New Testament; and the more firm and abiding our faith becomes in the truth of these records. Old theologies have proved a total failure in explaining and harmonizing these records. With them, the words "miracle" and "mystery" are satisfactory answers to all inquiries they cannot answer. With us, our answer is, "ignorance of spiritual laws."

In the first place, it is certain the records testify that the physical body of Jesus was dead and buried, and that his soul, or spirit, went to hades, the ordinary place of departed spirits, called the intermediate state. It is also certain that his physical body was raised from the dead, and re-occupied by his soul or spirit, until his ascension to heaven. These facts are distinctly stated by the four Evangelists, and recognized as true by the Apostles in all their speeches and writings. Peter, in his famous discourse on the day of Pentecost, says: "His soul was not left in Hell (hades); neither did his flesh see corruption." Theologians attach to the word "Hell" the idea of a lake of fire and brimstone. The detailed account of the scene at the sepulchre of Jesus; the testimony of angels who met the disciples there, and invited them to "see the place where the Lord lay;" the meeting of Jesus in person by the disciples, as they were hastening to inform their brethren; His hailing them; their holding Him by the feet, etc., all show that His physical body was reanimated. Hence He was called the "first fruits of them that slept." He was the first who was raised from the dead to die no more. He appeared to His disciples on various occasions after His resurrection; and on one occasion, when they were alarmed at His sudden and unexpected appearance, and supposed they "saw a spirit," He invited them to handle Him, saying: "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see Me have." He also asked them if they had any meat (victuals), and He ate before them, to convince them that He was not a spirit, but the veritable Jesus of Nazareth, in the same body He occupied before His crucifixion. Between His resurrection and ascension, He had the power to appear and disappear at pleasure: to enter into the rooms where the disciples were assembled, with the doors bolted and locked for fear of the Jews. He met the disciples on the road, and "their eyes were held that they should not know Him," until He pleased to make Himself known. This phase of Physio-Spiritual Philosophy, though remarkable and extraordinary in Jesus, was not peculiar to Him. In the eighteenth chapter of the acts of the Apostles, we have an account of Philip, the deacon, whom, so soon as he came out of the water, after baptizing the Eunuch, the "spirit caught away, and the Eunuch saw him no more." This phase of Bible Spiritualism remains yet to be developed in our new, or modern spiritual philosophy. As the angels are revealing the chemical process by which spiritual bodies are materialized, when we reach the phase of transfiguration, no doubt they will explain this also.

Is it unreasonable to conclude that the twelve men, whom Jesus educated as his scholars, understood what his views about the resurrection of his body were, and that, as he believed so did they believe?—ED.

SHAKER CONVENTION.

In Steinway Hall, New York, Nov. 22, 1874. Delegation of sixteen Shakers.

PROGRAMME.

WILL Shakerism depopulate the world?—Primary ideas of God—The God of the Jews not the Deity—Jesus not the Christ—Spiritualism a science, not a religion—It originated among the Shakers eleven years previous to the Rochester Rappings—The Angel of Spiritualism—Rev. chapter 18—Swedenborg cotemporary with Ann Lee—Father Evans' recent visit to the Eddys—Spirits can materialize and are materialized.

True religion based on physiology, and secures salvation of both soul and body—supplying all spiritual and temporal wants.

Two Great Fundamental Orders—the earthly Order, based on correct Generation, with co-operation, and the Heavenly Order, based on Christian Celibacy and Community—A new Heaven and a new Earth.

In the Millennium, the civil government will hold the land as common property, and all labor will be performed by co-operation—a final solution of the capital and labor question—The Equality of Woman recognized—All Government offices held by intellectual celibates.

The Spiritual Government or Order based on Divine Revelation, through Spiritualism, resulting in Christian Celibacy and Community.

History—from the Jewish Pentecostal to the Gentile Pentecostal Church, founded by Ann Lee.

"The Reign of the Beast"—"The Woman that fled into the wilderness," and the "Two Witnesses," were all in the 1260 years, ending in 1793, when the Shaker Order was established.

The "Beast that came up out of the sea," was Catholicism—"The Beast that came up out of the Earth, with ten horns," Protestantism—"The Ten Horns" were Skepticism, Infidelity, Scientism, Rationalism, etc.

Gentile Christianity is based on Generation and private property—its product is blood, war, prostitution and all phases of crime, through the union of Church and State which should be separate.

The "Doctrine of Devils"—"Seven Seals"—"Seven Trumpets"—"Seven Vials"—"Seven Plagues"—Perverted generation, Physiology, Agriculture, Commerce, Literature, Spiritualism, and inverted Religion.

Christ's Second Appearing took place in Ann

Lee—In 1793 the foundation of the new earth was laid in the American government, which is yet to be developed into a Millennial Order.

Danger of putting the Jewish War God into the American Constitution—Catholicism in Europe culminating in Infallibility—Protestantism in America has culminated in the Brecher-Tilton lawsuits.

A new Creation—Church and State are to be separate—The People will live in one of the two Orders—Generative Co-operation, or Celibate Communism—In both Orders will be Health of Body—All Disease, Pain and Death will be removed from the people, who will enjoy life in health and happiness.

G. F. Train writes, "The Shaker Convention was a grand success, and is still shaking Babylon through the press."

The Graphic gave a pictorial view of the Convention, quite good.

ELDER EVANS AND THE EXECUTIVE MANSION.

What a text! Would you be understood there is any relation between Elder Evans and the Executive Mansion?

I would be understood, may it please ye, no such thing.

What would I be understood? I would be understood, that in pursuance of Elder Evans' prophecy of the increase of God—the New Earth—the New Generative Order, wherein shall dwell Righteousness,—the next occupant of the White House may be a celibate. Why, bless your dear souls, don't you see, the Empire State, true to her motto, has already taken the initiative?

Sensible people comprehend that Official Station involves much drudgery. Fools don't see it. Sensible people comprehend that Paternity and Maternity involve much drudgery. Fools don't see that. In the New Earth aforesaid, the Righteousness aforesaid will vouchsafe to the performers of the drudgery last aforesaid, immunity from the drudgery first aforesaid.

Those who prostitute Official Station to low ambition, or pelf, and those who prostitute the Reproductive powers to gratification purposes, are fit subjects for Physiological Reformers. Amen.

O. Prentiss.

SYMPATHY.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger." How little we appreciate the amount of good to be derived from kind words. The tides of men's lives are turned by kind words, fitly spoken. A cheery "Merry Christmas," or a "Happy New Year," will draw one from a gloomy contemplation of self, and fill the heart with charity and love for all mankind. Many, upon the verge of a foolish, wicked action, are, by a pleasant word, or kindly recognition, drawn away, and made to look upon their trials and crosses in a light modified by the sympathy so expressed; and with renewed zeal gird their armor of good resolves the closer, and spring forward in the battle they are waging against their own terrible pride and passions. So let us not only sympathize with one another, but express our sympathy; and in so doing enlarge our charity for the short comings, and our appreciation of the struggles of others in the way of right. Then let us cultivate our powers of sympathizing; let us grow womanly in this respect, and learn to use tact and delicacy in our sympathies. Let us cultivate our sensibilities, so that we may intuitively understand the conditions of others, and be quick to sympathize and help. Let no lives be lost through the lack of cheering words. E.

SHAKERS.

From Elder Frederick W. Evans, etc.:

We learned that the Shakers, who are the followers of "Mother Ann" (Lee), are believers in the fulfillment of her prophecy, which was "the gathering of persons to the gospel of Christ's second appearing, of which she was the messenger." For this they hope, labor and watch. They also believe in "community of goods," and instead of attending solely to one's spiritual necessities, they care for and supply the temporal wants. The Shaker societies have never extended beyond the bounds of the United States, which is accounted for by them from the fact that their religion cannot exist and flourish except under such governments as secure freedom of speech and of the press, liberty of conscience and perfect separation between Church and State.

About twenty-five years ago the use of swine as food was discontinued, and they use no alcoholic preparations except under medical advisement. Their objects in dress are modesty, health, and comfort, and unless these virtues can be promoted they never change their fashion. The other virtues which they claim are sexual purity, temperance in food, and all other things; neatness, industry, peace, charity to the poor, and a prudent, saving economy in all temporal things. Each sex works in its own appropriate sphere of action, there being a proper subordination, deference and respect of the female to the male in his order, and of the male to the female in her order, so that in any of these communities the zealous advocates of "woman's rights" may here find a practical realization of their ideal.

We were not of course permitted to observe their peculiar form of private worship (there was no public meeting), but every one knows that they serve God by singing and dancing, as they are "moved by the spirit." They quote the customs of the Jews, who made their Sabbaths joyous festivals, and rejoiced before the Lord with music and dancing as a justification of their mode of worship.

We will not longer tire your readers with our visit to the Shakers except to say that order and neatness everywhere prevail, not only in their numerous buildings but also on their farms and in the streets. So far as we have consulted with residents in the vicinity there is but one opinion regarding the dealings of the Shakers, and that is that they are upright and honorable in all their transactions between man and man.—"Our Local S."

CHINESE BANKRUPTCY.

THEY settle all money disputes among themselves, never appealing to the courts. They have a novel bankruptcy practice. On the last day of the year, the Chinaman who is unable to meet his obligations, pays the largest percentage he can, declaring his inability to do more. On New Year's morning his creditors forgive him, embrace him, and declare him "free of the books." Afterward, if able, he cancels the debt from pride, not obligation. In their cooking neither butter nor milk are used.

Albert D. Richardson.

WE don't believe there is a calm thinking man in Wyoming who does not feel that woman's presence at the ballot-box has worked for us, in the matter of elections alone, the greatest reform of the age. Our elections used to be a general public row and riot, which would put to shame a Donnybrook fair. Now they are as quiet, orderly and peaceable as any other assemblage, no matter how heated and excited may be the campaign.—Laramie Sentinel.

RELIGION is the exclusive property of none. All religions are true in essence and aim; all are sadly mixed with error and distorted by superstition. That religion will have a purer and higher interpretation is one of the certainties of the future. To this the labors of all good men converge and no doubt it comes as rapidly as it should.

RENOVATED WOMAN.

—O—

FRIENDS: We appear before you as representatives of an Order of people, who have been misapprehended; and their mission has generally been misinterpreted. It is not our work, nor purpose, to reprehend others for not believing, and seeing eye to eye with us, so much as to reprove wrong in ourselves; and to practically raise the standard of moral virtue and spiritual truth, so high, that others may thereby be led to glorify God, in word, in deed, and in truth.

Names, sects, parties and isms, are of little account. Every sect holds some imperishable truth that belongs to God, its Fountain and Source. Truth will live. It is strong, and will ultimately displace error. As far as Shakerism embodies Truth, it is potent to shake what is false and untrue. But Shakerism, and its adherents, will be tested by truth's unerring standard; and whatever is erroneous in their theory, or practice, will be outgrown and left behind. The wheels of progression are moving and naught but truth will stand, "when God in the glory of His majesty ariseth to shake terribly the earth." The work of shaking is not a new thing. He shook the heavens and earth in the Jewish dispensation; (their civil and religious institutions.) And yet once more He has promised to shake all things that can be shaken. Shaking and removing error, and establishing truth, will not be accomplished by sudden revolutions and great upheavals in society, so much as by degrees, and in ways that will meet the reason and conscience of intelligent immortal beings.

The times in which we live are propitious, fraught with actual and portentous events. Slavery, in its grossest form, has been abolished. At what cost of physical life, material wealth, and moral virtue, the captive's chains were broken, will be seen and felt when the present generation shall sleep with their fathers. Such wounds are not soon healed.

Now, Woman is beginning to hear the trumpet's voice, which is sounding loud and clear, calling her to come forth from the tomb wherein her best powers and capabilities have been buried and lain dormant so long. The time is fulfilled, and an Angel of the Lord has rolled away the great stone from the door of the sepulcher, and is calling upon woman to leave her grave clothes behind—to be resuscitated—to assert her liberty, and to arise in the dignity of womanhood, under the influence of regenerate life and love, and henceforth breathe the air of freedom. She has a work to do—a sphere to fill—a standard to raise, and the demand for labor is great. If woman would work successfully, she must keep within her own sphere. The distinctive lines between the masculine and feminine are clearly defined.

Love, refined from sensuality, is woman's stronghold! There is great power in true love! As far as woman is guided and influenced by that power, she represents the Motherhood in Deity. Man, by his stern logical powers, his strength and wisdom, represents the Fatherhood in Deity.

The sea and land have their prescribed limits. So with man and woman. Each should have full freedom to act in their own spheres, according to the behests of conscience—moving in harmony—being mutual aids, the one to the other; for without concert of action, little good can be attained.

As in the natural family circle it is difficult for man to fill the office of father and mother both, so is it quite as difficult for a male priesthood to minister and perform the duties and requisitions of both male and female. Male Saviors need the co-operation of Female Saviors in the work of regeneration.

The duality of Deity is a grand truth, long kept within the veil; for the reason, that humanity had not progressed unto it. As the veil is removed, and that truth is revealed, the mystery of godliness will pass away. Who will not joyfully trim up their lamps, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom and Bride—a perfect Parentage—to feel a Father's strength, and a Mother's love and care? O, the tenderness of a heavenly Mother's love! How barren the churches are without it! Many weary and sin-sick children have pined and sorrowed for a spiritual Mother's love, and knew not how, nor where, to find it!

Now, the maternal spirit, from the highest heavens, is descending through "many mansions," or spheres, using various instrumentalities, to vivify, warm and bless the race. Many hearts are made glad; and a shout is heard—Welcome! thrice welcome, every dove messenger, sent by our heavenly Mother, to the earth sphere. This beautiful spirit is quickening the hearts of many daughters, and opening their eyes to the necessity of energetic action. Already they are putting forth strong efforts in the temperance cause—taking a noble and honorable part, and from our hearts we say "God bless and prosper them." In the promotion of Peace principles, they are also working energetically, and, we hope, successfully. If Peace prevail, War must cease. All can see that two opposites—love and hate—cannot rule in the human heart at the same time.

We watch with profound interest every endeavor—whether by visible or invisible agencies—to reform and elevate the race to which we belong.

The sexual question which is now agitating the public mind, and causing society to reel and totter to its very center, is of vital importance. The fountain of physical life is corrupt—exceedingly foul and diseased! Can it be purified and made healthy? If so, by what means? The marriage relation is perverted, and now chiefly used, as a cloak for licentiousness—legalized adultery. Where, and what the remedy? Will it be found in casting off all restraint? These questions remain to be answered. But this truth we can fully comprehend, i. e. Man and woman, unaided by power from on high, cannot roll back the flood of sensuality, which threatens to deluge the whole land. ~Who can look upon the rising generation, and contemplate the destiny of unborn millions (unless a radical change in society be effected), without having their feelings stirred, and uttering deep cries of, "Lord help and save."

We need a better, purer administration in civil government. The vanguards of the nation should be constituted of the best minds. As public opinion is one of the great kings, to whom the American people bow and do homage, the creators of public opinion should be men and women of sterling integrity and principle; who will raise a standard of morality and justice, in the councils of the nation. And they who, through love of self and vain ambition, are governed by political intrigue should be counted unworthy to bear rule. The religious progress of a nation greatly depends upon the status of the civil government of that nation; for the civil power is the basis upon which the religious must rest.

How much the growth of virtue and true religion is retarded, by FASHION, the goddess that rules and binds the female portion of the population of to-day; unto whom they bow the knee, and give their time and strength. It is a great idol in the land, that needs to be broken, just as much as the brazen images, and gods of wood and stone, that Christian America sends her missionaries into foreign (so-called) heathen lands, to demolish. There are some noble exceptions, who feel the need of true reform; they have resolved to spend less time at the toilet, and give their strength and influence to stay the fearful increase of crime, and help (if permitted) to form just laws in defense of equal rights, for all law-abiding citizens, whether male or female.

A stone of truth has been "taken from the mountain without hands," or visible agency, and is rapidly growing at the present time, i. e., Freedom for woman—her right to be and to act within the pale of God's laws, without constraint from man. That stone will continue to grow and increase, no mortal power can stay its course! Let woman arise and stand upon her feet, and shake herself from the dust of centuries that has gathered over her by the usages of society and false education, and come forth with new life, and engage in the conflict of truth against error, and work for humanity. Let her efforts be directed to uplift her erring, fallen sisters. Fervent prayer, dictated by pure love, will cause the heavens to bend! Angels will catch the sound of deep, heart-felt intercessions, and will joyfully lend their aid. When woman stretches forth her hand unto God, and earnestly pleads the cause of the poor and needy, will He not hear and answer? Woman, in the hands of a higher power, is destined to become an efficient worker in the cause of human progress. Let her be true and just—strong in virtue—repelling every wrong. Then will the creators and upholders of the armies and navies feel the loving, peaceful influence of woman, that will cause the war spirit to hide its hideous head.

By the purity of her life, and a testimonial sword proceeding from her mouth, sensuality will be rebuked, intemperance will flee the land; and the white-winged dove of peace will find a resting place on this beautiful earth! May God, through his working Angels, speed the day!

SELF-DENIAL.

SELF-DENIAL is a subject upon which much has been said and written, and yet it is not exhausted. It is one of the grand old themes upon which we love to dwell; it opens a broad, expansive field of thought and exercise of mind, and affords means for self-improvement.

Jesus said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." Perhaps we have not a more perfect example of self-denial than is found in the life of Jesus of Nazareth. His was the full cross against all sin. He resisted every evil temptation and inclination. His whole life, as far as we have knowledge, was devoted to the cause of truth to promulgate pure, undiluted religion, uncontaminated by false creeds and theories. His mission was to establish a faith that would raise mankind from a state of self-servitude, in which he found them, into a higher condition of spiritual freedom.

To accomplish that object, history informs us, he sacrificed all selfish considerations, and went about doing good, teaching purity of life — of which his own was a practical illustration. By a life of self-denial, he was lifted up into the resurrection state, and drew others unto him; and he became a Savior — Redeemer — unto them. He was one of the greatest Philanthropists the world has ever known; and his name will be remembered and exalted through all generations.

While attentively reading the historical accounts of the life of Jesus — how he endured the scoffs and jeers of his ignoble persecutors — the question naturally arises, Why did he endure all this opposition? Why his unremitting devotion to principle — enduring the cross — despising all shame that his cruel oppressors sought to heap upon him? The answer is: "Because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity;" and was a chosen Instrument to perform a work for humanity, and to be their great Exemplar. His mission was to prepare the way of holiness, that others might, with safety, walk therein. And he became as a lamp to the feet, and a light to the path of all who choose to follow him in the work of regeneration; aided by ministrations from on high, he raised a standard upon which was inscribed Purity, Fidelity, and Self-sacrifice! There were beauty and excellence in his whole character. Every virtue found an abiding place in him. Benevolence, firmness, and strength of purpose to sacrifice selfish pursuits, were manifest throughout his life. He did not allow his powers to lie dormant and await some great revolution to arouse them to action, but by persevering energy he "overcame the world," and encouraged his followers to do as he had done. He said: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." What world was it that he overcame? He did not use carnal weapons to conquer nations; far from it. He was a man of peace; and, if it were in his power to achieve military renown, his life was devoted to a higher purpose.

Jesus was a man of like passions with his disciples, and overcame those in himself by the cross; and he encouraged his disciples by bidding them be of good cheer; for if it were possible for him to conquer the world in himself, it would also be possible for them. The same power is given in our own time; if we will do the works, we shall experience the same results. And it is a binding requirement upon every one, who "names the name of Christ, to depart from iniquity," as he did, and to put on his life and character, and follow in his footsteps, and strive to promote peace and good-will among men.

That blessed day is approaching, prophesied of old, when "righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Dawn upon us, O glorious day of peace! May the work of self-denial diffuse itself throughout the length and breadth of our land, and the Sun of Righteousness shed abroad its searching rays, penetrating the deepest recesses of the human mind, banishing, forever, the dark clouds of idolatry and superstition.

REMARKS AT STEINWAY HALL.

—O—
BY ANNA WHITE.

It is a satisfaction to me to meet with the audience before us, and to have an opportunity to communicate a few thoughts, and to give expression to some of the deep feelings of my heart.

I come before you in the humble garb of a Shaker. Yet I am not an alien. New York city is the place of my nativity — the home of my early childhood. Fortune favored me with a few years' residence in the State of New Jersey, where I roamed in those beautiful green meadows in sight of the majestic ocean, and I never tired of watching the flowing and ebbing of the tide, or listening to its surging waves. I was a child of nature, and believed in the saying that "God made the country, man made the city."

When I again returned to the city I could not feel at home. My father, mother, brothers and sisters were here, all of whom I tenderly loved, and many would have judged that I was in possession of all that would tend to make life happy and joyous. But to me it was not home. My heart was pained when I saw the inequality and injustice that existed — the wealthy rolling in affluence and splendor, the poor clothed in rags, and suffering from cold and hunger, I often said, "Where, O where, is God's justice!"

City life seemed so artificial. It did not meet the demands of my nature, nor satisfy the cravings of my immortal spirit. I turned from it all to seek a city which hath foundations where love and equality reign, the fruit of which is peace.

From a knowledge I had obtained, through reliable sources, I believed the Shakers were in possession of that which my spirit yearned to find. Accordingly in the year 1849, I visited the Society at Mt. Lebanon. The child-like simplicity of their manners, and the purity of their lives, won me to them, and after due deliberation I concluded that the home of the Shakers should be my home, "their people my people, and their God my God." With them I have toiled with my hands, and with them I have engaged in the worship of the living God, and to me those seasons have been as joyous as heaven, and as solemn as eternity — the sweetest hours of my life.

After twenty-five years' experience, almost to a day, I return to the city of my birth to testify that God dealt kindly and tenderly with me, when he sent some good angel to lead me to my beautiful consecrated home. I have never ceased to give thanks, and, henceforth, all the powers of my being shall be dedicated to His service in sustaining the cause of truth and righteousness upon the earth.

A man diseased in body can have little joy of his wealth, be it ever so much. A golden crown cannot cure the headache nor a velvet slipper give ease to the gout, nor a purple robe fray away a burning fever. A sick man is alike sick, wheresoever you lay him — on a bed of gold or on a pad of straw; with a silk quilt or a sorry rag on him. So no more can riches, gold and silver, land and living, had a man much more than ever any man had, minister unto him much joy; yea, or any true or sound joy at all, where the mind is distract and discontent.

PETITION.

—O—

O Lord, my God, I love thee
With all my heart and soul
Do in thy loving mercy,
My mind and thoughts control.
Thy power alone can raise me,
Above the shades of death;
Therefore, O God, I'll praise thee,
So long as I have breath!

May I, to Thee, come nigher —
My Light, my Life and Stay;
With truths, my soul inspire,
O hear me when I pray!
And may thy blessing, Father,
Descend like heavenly dew;
Thy promises remember —
Thy Covenants renew.

Lydia Lewis, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

LIGHT.

—O—

ONE of the Apostles in his version of the word glory — made three divisions — "glory of the sun, glory of the moon, and glory of the stars." So when speaking of Light, it may also be classed under three heads, viz.: artificial, natural and spiritual. Artificial light is obtained through a variety of means — gas, petroleum, whale oil, wax candles, down to the rush taper.

In the natural, visible heavens, luminous bodies, called suns and fixed stars, revolve around the center of gravity; they do not reflect the light of other planets, but are themselves primary sources of light. Secondary planets, like the moon, have their place, their glory, as well as the Primary, varying in magnitude and degree; but the nearer the Secondary is to the Primary, the greater the amount of light received.

Light is the agent through which objects become visible to our senses, and it is indispensable to the growth and development of all material substances; without it there can be no perfection. Plants that are kept in dark cellars are pale and sickly in appearance, while those of the same kind, when exposed to the vivifying rays of sunlight, present a deeper, richer hue.

Natural things are symbols of spiritual things; the spiritual being superior, for the reason that the natural is designed to meet the temporary wants and physical needs of humanity, while in a terrestrial state of existence. The spiritual is created for, and adapted to, the soul-needs, and reaches to the life beyond. As the solar rays are essential to animal and vegetable life in the outer world, or rudimentary sphere, so also are rays of divine light, which emanate from the Central Sun of all worlds, indispensable to the soul's growth in the ever unfolding truths pertaining to the life that is eternal.

There are bodies terrestrial, and bodies celestial, and there is a glory and light pertaining to each. On the natural or generative plane of life, those who are the most just and moral, most strict in the observance of Nature's laws, are stars, or lights to those who are lower in the scale of morality than themselves. Those who, by reason of gross sins, are in darkness, are like plants in a cold dark cellar, morally and spiritually diseased; and they need the power of truth to lift the curtains that the light may shine upon their souls, and convict them of wrong-doing, and cause them to forsake it. And they need to be acted upon, and to receive the influence of the more progressed in their own Order.

Those who have risen to the higher Angelic Order — into the "resurrection" — above marriage, are bright spiritual lights that act upon those who stand the highest, and are the most progressed in the Natural Order. And they who are the most spiritually progressed, approach the nearest to the redeemed in the spirit world, and receive the most directly from the Central Source of all Light, and are thus enabled to shed effulgent brightness through spheres below them. Such become living, hallowed temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit — receptacles of Light and Glory.

INDUSTRY.

—o—

"Let us toil, for all that lives, Sacrifice of labor gives."

To be alive in the work assigned us in life's busy sphere of action, is to be fulfilling the design of our existence on the earth. High powers and capacities enfolded within, need but the developing process (education) to bring them forth to uses best calculated to benefit ourselves and others.

Why idly dream of pleasure, or languish in indolence? Why seek rest in sloth and ease, instead of uniting with living moving forces which are actively engaged to progress and hasten the growth of all in Nature's realm? Toiling myriads therein, mock the trial. "Go to the ant thou sluggard, learn of her ways and be wise." Untiring industry marks the life of the tiny creatures, as they build, and gather, and store away their food for future use, on the real communistic plan, as do the bees. It is proverbial that the busy bee through all the sunny hours toils unceasingly sipping honey drops from fields of fairest bloom; yet God replenishes their cups with sweetness; and their toil is not in vain. Nor are the curious little workers selfish; they fill many a cell beyond their own need, and man with all his intellect, not half so "wise in his day and generation," feasts on the fruits of their industry, without realizing the worth of hard earned labor, spent in its accumulation, which he would be quite unwilling to give for others.

Thus it is with all the sweets and blessings of life and home; they come not by chance. Heaven has not ordained that they should drop down upon us to curse, instead of bless, our existence. These are the well-earned fruits of industry, gathered and secured to us through cheerful sacrifice in duty, and a lofty purpose of doing good.

It is in the beautiful well ordered system of Christianity, that we behold, outwrought, those glorious principles which create the common brotherhood of man, and sustain mutual, fraternal industry, in its highest and best forms. The Gospel never repealed the rulings, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread;" but in justice—righteousness and equality—gives to labor new dignity, and transforms it from menial slavish servitude, to pleasant, active occupation.

Herein lies the Christian's warfare against selfishness, with heart wrapt in coat of mail—shrinking closely within its narrow sphere, in constant terror of being drawn too far from its contracted limits, into the broadening field of true philanthropy, where it will be robbed of that ease-loving spirit, which fixes bounds for the soul's expansion, and dwarfs the powers of mind and body. It is this low sordid selfishness that makes the world just what it is,— "a school of wrong"—where a greedy, grasping love of gain to waste in prodigality, and sensual indulgence, and where self-destructive pleasure is the ruling motive.

In our beautiful love-built Zion home, I behold, with exceeding joy, the actualization of the highest and purest ideal of life, which many have longed and waited to see, but were not able to attain unto. Here is, indeed, a spiritual communion of self-sacrificing souls, devoted unreservedly to each other's good, influenced by chaste soul love, they form a heaven upon earth.

"Always busy," I once remarked to an aged sister, who was plying her needle with the quiet but queenly air of one whom indolence had never dwarfed nor selfishness demeaned. "I never spent many moments idly in my life," was her pleasant response. Her long life, like that of many others, had been given in a noble service. Such fulfill the apostolic injunction "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." It is this real fervency of spirit, enlisted in a good cause, that gives zest to labor, sunders the soul from selfishness, and lights it with a glow of expansive life, akin to the benign influence of sunlight.

O may the young, who are sharing the blessing of consecrated toil, make firm their resolve to live for lofty aims and benevolent purposes, to strike their roots deep in the soil of usefulness—spread wide their branches of industry, and let their clustering leaves be the growth of well filled moments; then like grand old Oaks, their shade will, in time, be a grateful retreat for the toil worn and weary, and the blessing that faileth not shall be the reward of well doing.

DUTY OF CHILDREN TO SUPERIORS.

—o—

THE editorial upon "Government of Children," in December No. of SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, is calculated to awaken thought concerning the duty of youth and children toward their parents, guardians and seniors.

When I read, "Tis the duty of parents and guardians to study the germinal traits of character in children, and make due allowance for peculiarity of disposition, circumstances of birth, and how they can best secure their confidence," it came home to me; and I felt that I had cause to render thanks for the kind consideration extended to me in my more youthful days. True, I had passed the period of early childhood before I found those who really understood my nature, and could comprehend my needs. Constitutionally I was impulsive—strong-spirited—and independent; but the voice of reason, mixed with love and tenderness, led me to self-conquest. I have yet many years to pass before I reach the meridian of life, and I still feel the need of wise counselors to aid me; that all my physical, mental and spiritual powers may unfold, expand and grow, and be a blessing to myself and others.

I have learned one important lesson, i. e.: Those who, through love and kindness, restrained me when I was running too far, and too fast, and guided my wayward feet in the path of wisdom which leads to peace, were my truest and best friends. And I do not cease to give thanks to God for such Angel guides, as they have been to me. I am confident that youth and children who are the most submissive, obedient and teachable, receive the greatest benefit from the instruction of parents and those who watch over them for good.

Children and youth bear the same relation to advancing life that time bears to eternity. If children are dutiful, there is a modesty and pliability attending that period of life. It is their normal condition; and they are adorned with innocence and simplicity which makes them beautiful. They who possess those adornings, if attentive and industrious in learning, and practicing the lessons taught them, will increase in knowledge and goodness, instead of having those virtues turned to arrogance and self-conceit, which bar the way to cultivation and moral growth.

Habits formed in early life are the most enduring. Impressions made in childhood are slow to fade. The mind is then free from the cares and burdens which riper years impose—is ready for ideas—the memory is clear and retentive, suited to gather and retain the first seed sown, whether good or bad. Therefore, children and youth should have the opportunity afforded them to obtain true and just conceptions of life. The right use of instruction and knowledge, is to free the mind from ignorance and prejudice, whether inherited or acquired.

Life might be a paradise of beauty, if the seeds of disobedience had no soil wherein to germinate and grow. May we not hope the time will come when that woe will be removed? This state of things can be attained unto only by individual exertion and self-sacrifice. Obedience to conviction of right and duty in all things, will dispel the darkness and sorrow caused by disobedience. The result of adhering to principle would be to elevate individuals; then, to exalt nations.

Those who regard the laws of their being, and are true to their convictions, are the stronghold of the earth, and assist the public conscience in rising to a higher plane of action; and those who begin in early life to perform good deeds, may stand in the innocence and beauty of life through time, never feeling the blight of sensuality.

I rejoice to know that there is an Order of people where principle is first, and pleasure derived from the senses is subordinate. From their standpoint of observation, they discern the wrongs and evils of society—and mourn their fearful ravages; while they toil and battle to destroy the dragon power that is devouring the youth of the land.

What then shall be the duty of the rising generation toward those who are giving their lives for the good of humanity, if not humble, submissive love and obedience? Outside of the Shaker Order, there have been parents who instilled right principles into the minds of their children, and reared them to be national guides—lights—in their day. To Washington, Lady Jane Grey, Margaret Propper, Abraham Lincoln, and many others, is honor due. They were stars in the terrestrial heavens. Believers in Christ's Second Appearing are called to be stars in the Celestial heavens, to teach the higher truths and the law of love. Under the power of that love the impulsive child is made penitent; the irreligious to feel reverence for sacred things. All this I have seen; and I am thankful that, within my Zion home, children are governed in justice and love, and are taught to be pure and truthful. The same impression cannot be made upon all minds. If some turn to the weak and vain things of the world, to seek indulgence in carnal pleasure, after having been taught the higher life, they never forget the lessons which have been given them; and inasmuch as they sin against light, they have to feel the stings of a guilty conscience. While those who study well and are true to conviction, will be as the flowers of heaven that bloom with beauty in the spirit-land.

MISSIONARY.

—o—

Go forth little "Shaker," your mission fulfill:
Proclaim the glad tidings of peace and good will,
Lift up thy bright banner, and on it inscribe,
"Love is our motto, and truth is our guide."

Encourage the fainting, and strengthen the weak;
If man would be happy, God's law he must keep;
For sorrow must follow departure from this,
And, just in proportion, diminish his bliss.

Go say to our Brothers and Sisters abroad,
Though erring, fear not; for our Parents are good;
They send to earth, Saviors, in mortals to dwell,
That souls may shun evil, and learn to do well.

And thus, by progression, mankind will ascend
In spirit with Father and Mother to blend;
As true sons and daughters, complete the great chain

Encircling humanity's Ocean and Plain.

Eunice Cantrell, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

A SUGGESTION.

—o—

MINISTERS often hold conventions, to which delegates are sent from various churches, located in different parts of the country. Would it not be a good thing for ministers' wives and some earnest, pure-minded women, to hold conventions also, and take counsel together, and construct some rules of propriety to be observed by the spiritual leaders of the people, and exert a saving influence, over the Clergy, in this way? By timely effort in this direction, they might do much to save the reputation of their husbands, ward off shame, confusion and disgrace from the churches; and be help-meets, in a spiritual point of view, as well as in the domestic relations of life.

Where could man look for an impartial advocate and supporter of his character, if not in the partner of his life, if she be a true woman? In his ministerial duties, she might shield him from temptation, in many ways, and also be a Mother, in a degree, in the Church over which her husband presides; to whom burdened, suffering females might find access, and unbosom their griefs and sorrows and find some relief. If they would become ensamples to their sisters in the Church, in dress and manners, and strive to silence the tongue of slander—discourage envy and jealousy, I believe God would bless their efforts.

THE COMING YEAR.

Joyous.

1. Hail! hail the glad New Year! Its coming joy our hearts will cheer; The errors of the past we leave, And truth's advancing light receive.

By whose dif-fus-ion we may see, The Lamb and Lion yet agree, This happy coming year, This happy coming year.

2.

Though labors new await our hands,
We will not bind in iron hands
The talent God to us hath given
To make our home on earth a heav'n.
But sow anew the precious grain,
And scatter broadcast o'er the plain,
This joyous coming year,
This joyous coming year,

3.

The seeds of goodness, love and peace,
Of kindness with its rich increase,
These in our hearts' best soil shall live,
Till blossoms sweet their perfume give,
While ripen'd grain in sheaves well bound,
Shall in our garner-room be found,
This joyous happy year,
This joyous happy year.

WELCOME.

—o—

TO OUR MISSIONARIES.

Welcome as the sight of haven to the starving sailor crew,
Welcome as the sparkling waters to the desert traveler's view,
Welcome as the fresh'ning showers to the parched and thirsty earth,
Welcome as the truth of heaven to the soul that feels its worth,
Welcome as love's healing balm is to the bruised and wounded breast,
The return of Zion's mission to their Gospel kindred blest.
Yea, we greet you, well beloved! Ye have nobly fought the fight,
Victors' laurels wreath the brows of those who conquer wrong with right,
Hate with love, and selfishness supplant with feelings good and kind,
Who exhale a peaceful sphere of love and purity of mind.
Ye have cast upon the waters—but ye have not lost the seed;
It shall germinate in souls that saviors on Mt. Zion need;
They shall flock to Zion's borders, sick of sin and selfish strife,
They shall find a promised land and eat the precious bread of life.
Freely have ye sown the seed, and hounteous harvest shall ye reap;
Ransom'd souls shall yet rejoicing heartfelt blessings on you heap.
Not of the redeeming power of slaughter'd martyr's sacred blood,
Shed for ev'ry erring mortal drown'd in sin's o'erwhelming flood,
Was the hurthen of your message to the mixed and motley throng.
Nay, a more exalted theme—a testimony stern and strong,
'Gainst a selfish life of sin, against hypocrisy and sham
That gives carnality free scope while trusting in a slaughtered Lamb.
(Lamb or man, it matters not, the principle's the same; who seek Salvation through the grace of God and faith in Calvary are weak.)
Help thyself and God will help thee was the burthen of your song;

Self-reliance, active effort is the maxim of the strong.

Ye have taught the law of kindness, not to fellow-man alone,

But to ev'ry living creature that can cruelty be-moan;

Ye have inculcated justice, mercy, charity and love;

Ye have blest all honest effort pain and suffering to remove.

And the angels bless your labors; we most heartily unite:—

We who here at home, in peace, remember'd those who fought the fight,

Braved the storm, the toil and turmoil, found in Bah'lon's husy mart,

Spreading Gospel tidings:—lovingly we clasp you to our heart.

Welcome, father, mother, sister, brother, Gospel kindred dear,

Welcome, Zion missionaries, kindly welcome here!
Hewson Brown, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

FORETHOUGHT.

—o—

NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

I'll write it on the snowy page
That now before me lies;
I'll blend it with the roaming themes
That to my vision rise.

I'll call it when emotions swell,
To check their flowing tide;
I'll wear it as a gift of God,
To humble all my pride.

I'll bring it as a helping hand,
Wherever need is found;
I'll sow it as a precious seed
Upon the holy ground.

I'll prize it as parental love,
To keep regret afar;
To bless the harvest of the year,
And be its ruling star.

I'll wrap my spirit in its light,
That darkness may not come,
I'll hold it as a motto bright,
Within my sacred home.

EDITORS.

—o—

EDITORS cannot always help themselves. They are at the mercy of the agents they employ. But the engagement of such agents ought surely to form one of the sacraments of life. A man who undertakes to report what he sees, or hears, ought to make truthfulness his religion, and to be ready to cut off his right hand rather than let it write down falsehood. The lies and slanders which go up and down the land, blighting fair fames, impeding holy causes, and doing the devil's work of perpetuating evil, will take decades of years to undo. And on the authors of those misrepresentations will lie the heaviest guilt—the guilt of perverting good to evil, of wantonly turning the best instrument of truth to the base service of falsehood, and of betraying the confidence reposed in them, and thus weakening trust between man and man all the world over.—Charles Vosey.

ACCORDING to Bayard Taylor, the women of ancient Egypt enjoyed many of the rights for which the strong-minded sisterhood contend to-day. The wife's name was often placed before that of the husband, and the sons often bore the names of the mothers, instead of those of the fathers. Indeed, the man possessed no important right which was not equally shared with the woman.

SONNET.

—o—

Is future life a shadowy dream
A myth that puzzles still the brain?
Or closely folded as a ream
Of unwritten leaves, without a stain?
Closed volume, to material sense,
That governs with Imperial rod,
And brings the meagre recompense
A final home beneath the sod?
* * * The soul recoils; a secret spark
Flames with the light of endless day;
No longer veiled in dungeon dark,
Or screened by perishable clay,
It rises up on Hope's bright wing,
Of immortality to sing.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR TRIBUNE:

Will you publish a paper in response to two remarkable editorials, "Katie King," of the Tribune, and "How to investigate Spiritualism," in the Scientific American, of even date? The Shaker Order has "business relations with the outlying world, with which your Railroads, Steamboats and Telegraphs do not connect."—Will you give the Shakers a voice? Spiritualism and Geology are Sciences—Not Religions. The Shakers have studied Spiritualism, for a century, and put it to the practical uses of life. We have been patiently waiting for your over-wise people, to become scientific enough to hear and investigate its facts—to prove all things, Spiritualism included. We came to New York, to help you, and the press received us liberally—gave good notice of our Steinway Hall Meetings, of Nov. 22. But the Reporters, with the exception of the Tribune and Republic, utterly failed to tell the truth, or to refrain from gross misrepresentation. If the Editors and the Eddys are no more honestly dealt by, through the Reporters, than are the Shakers, Editors may learn that they know nothing yet, as they ought to know it, about either Spiritualism, or Shakerism.

I will send a corrected, printed proof slip of the article. Please reply.

F. W. Evans.

"Yes." We will not undertake to publish all manner of crazy reports from credulous people who fancy that they have seen Ghosts. But we recognize Elder Evans as a man of ability, and shall be glad to give him any reasonable hearing.

Ed. Tribune.

THE TRIBUNE AND SHAKERS.

THE Tribune was established, originally, in the interests of the common people, like the Roman Tribune—a magistrate chosen by the people, to protect the people from oppression by patricians or nobles—to defend their liberties against any infraction by Senate and Consuls.

Is not our modern Tribune a little too patriotic in its tendencies on the subject of spiritualism? No sooner are its patrons, and even its founder landed on immortal shores of the spirit world, than all interest in their welfare is at an end. I have sometimes thought, perhaps hastily, that the Tribune was an organ to defend the people of the United States, who are in the body, against all attempts of the people of the United States, and any other States, who are out of the body, from establishing a scientific communication and friendly intercourse through which they might seek to destroy that which destroys—war, poverty, sexual incontinence, solid and fluid intemperance, together with the abnormal desires of mind and body, that engender diseases, which are excuses for medication and drug doctoring.

When the Fox girls were first in New York as mediums, I had a tilt with my friend Horace, in which he accused me of "having an axe to grind"—Spiritualism favored Shakerism. I replied, "Henceforth, Spiritualism is an Institution of America." Am I not justified by subsequent facts?

KATIE KING.

"We have received, recently, divers letters of inquiry, principally from the inland and agricultural portions of the country, referring to what the anxious writers are courteous enough to call the "recent spiritual manifestations." We must refer all such seekers after truth to those of our cotemporaries who have established connection with out-lying ghostly quarters: The Tribune only undertakes to deliver news from tracts accessible to railway trains, telegraphs, or at least, not to put too coarse a point on it, balloons."

As an order of people, we, the Shakers, do have established connections "with the out-lying ghostly world"—business connections too. Among this people, Spiritualism, which is showing so much power—see Rev. 18—originated. From here, Spiritualism went forth to humanity outside of this order.

Do you ask what good it has done? It claims to have released the thirty millions of Serfs, of the Russian Empire. If true, is not that glory enough? A friend from Albany, who went with the Palestine company, of seventy Americans, was present at a dinner given by the Emperor and Empress, at which the Empress, speaking of Home—the American Medium—states that it was by direction of Spirits, through Home, that the Emperor issued the Ukase, freeing the Serfs, and to this the Emperor assented.

That Slavery in America was destroyed by Spirit agency, I have never doubted. "John Brown's soul went marching on," as really as did the army, and he went not alone. Stanton was a confirmed Spiritualist, and his statements, to us, that Lincoln was equally so, were most explicit.

Will the TRIBUNE, as the friend of the common people, of the two conjoined worlds, let these important facts go forth to humanity?

In the editorial "Katie King," there is a "break in the wall." The satire is designed to make a clean separation between the real and the fictitious—the honest and dishonest. It is keen enough for the purpose; but do you not close the door, to the inner world, a little too tight? Why not leave the gates, at least, ajar? When you put it on this wise: "This materialization must be either spirits, assuming visible shape, or a skillful trick of clever knaves—there is no half way ground," I like it. That is just the truth of the case. Just stick to that point, and we will get out of the fog. We can solve this problem, as we would solve any other scientific problem.

I was the first person, so far as I know, who defined spiritualism as a science, not a religion; placing it with agriculture, astronomy, geology and chemistry, to be dealt with accordingly.

By spiritualism, I would be understood the acknowledged existence of the spirit world—Human Immortality—the possibility of intercommunication between those in and those out of the body, and nothing more. The morality or immorality of the mediums—the occurring facts, whether important or puerile—the truth or falsity of communications, have no more bearing upon simple spiritualism, than similar things have upon electricity and electricians, or upon farming. Science is an orderly arrangement of facts. Give us the facts. The use or no use, the sense or no sense, we will attend to hereafter.

In an editorial of even date in the Scientific American, are the following tremendous utterances. They may correspond with your "Innocent Earthquake:"

"HOW TO INVESTIGATE SPIRITUALISM.

"There has been lately an extraordinary revival of spiritualism, and it again challenges the general attention. Nearly all the newspapers, and some of the most respected of the literary magazines, without reservation or protest, lend their columns to its advocates.

"This revival of spiritualism is probably due to the new phase which the spiritual manifestations have taken on: Materialization, in place of raps, tips, trumpet blowing, tying, levitations, ponderations, etc., performed by or through the medium, we now have the spirits appearing in propria persona, with bodies apparently of flesh and blood, and nicely dressed in such clothes as they wore when they dwelt in the mortal coil.

"Now these things seem to justify us in recurring to the subject of spiritualism, and in improving the opportunity to point out some things which Science has to do with it. And to make the matter short, we will limit our remarks to the alleged physical phenomena, the movements or changes of matter. We leave out of view, of course, the religious aspects of spiritualism; and for its bearings on psychology and physiology, we refer to what Faraday, Carpenter, Tyndall and others have written.

"In the first place, then, we can find no words wherewith adequately to express our sense of the magnitude of its importance to Science if it be true. Such words as profound, vast, stupendous, would need to be strengthened a thousand fold to be fitted for such a use. If true, it will become the one grand event of the world's history; it will give an imperishable lustre of glory to the nineteenth century. Its discoverer will have no rival in renown, and his or her name will be written high above any other. For spiritualism involves a stultification of what are considered the most certain and fundamental conclusions of Science. It denies the conservation of matter and force; it demands a reconstruction of our chemistry and physics, and even our mathematics. It professes to create matter and force apparently out of nothing, and to annihilate them when created. If the pretensions of spiritualism have a rational foundation, no more important work has been offered to men of Science than their verification. A realization of the dreams of the elixir vite, the philosopher's stone, and the perpetual motion, is of less importance to mankind than the verification of spiritualism."

Having, for the last forty years, studied this science of Spiritualism—by it I was converted to Shakerism—with our own mediums, who have no motive, either of poverty or vanity, to practice fraud, I visited the Eddys, who knew not of my coming, determined to know of the facts there existing—I went, as to one of Tyndall's experimental lectures. After an unprejudiced examination, I pronounce the materialization that I witnessed, of some fifteen spirits, of men and women, to be as true and real—as genuine—as are any facts in agriculture or chemistry that I have ever witnessed. I fully realize the responsibility I assume by this statement. I do it as a duty to my fellows, who may not have the opportunities, I have had, in forming a union with disembodied men and women.

"Two theories only, are tenable, regarding most of the Spirit manifestations. They are real and true and honest, or they are a culpable fraud." So says the Scientific American. That is the pin to hang all doubts upon, until removed therefrom by facts—evidence. But when, to this, he adds, "the media, in these cases, are either the most worship-worthy of mortals," I demur entirely. We, too, fell into that trap. The facts may be real and the materializations true, and yet the mediums be as great cheats and liars, as were some of the Reporters—not the Tribune's—who professed to give, the public, the facts of our Steinway Hall Meetings, on the 22d November, and as somebody must be, in the great scandal suits.

Even when media are entirely truthful, it no more constitutes them worship-worthy, than is a pipe, that conveys precious or vile fluid—than is an electric machine. Again says the Editor, "Concerning raps and materializations, there is a question of fraud or no fraud, and this is a question of such fundamental character, that the answer to it is conclusive of the whole matter." Then come the tests, to settle the important question—A gun is suggested, to shoot the apparition. This, the Editor is afraid of, and warns the investigator that an action, for murder, would lie, should the fraudulent medium be killed.

Of the fifteen male and female figures of different sizes, ages and proportions, that I saw, any one of them might have been subjected to that test. But I too, would give a caution. While any kind of a test, that a sincere enquirer might honestly require, as evidence, or to detect fraud, would pass harmlessly; should the tester be a fraud, the missile might rebound and kill the sender.

Then we have the "Lasso" suggested, "a dark lantern, some ink"—then "a strong grasp upon the materialization." Any thing, friends, if you bear 'in mind, that haply contending with something real, you may kick against pricks.

If "the peace of society is disturbed, and something must be done for quiet, or many good friends will go to Bedlam," I trust that all those Editors, who gave such liberal advance notice of our Shaker Meetings, will happily escape.

F. W. EVANS.

ALFRED, Me., Sept. 22, 1874.

BELOVED ELDER FREDERICK:

BUT for circumstances beyond my control, I would sooner have responded to your friendly greeting.

Your fatherly commendation of our efforts in Lynn, cheered me not a little. The encouraging truths, in your letter, strengthen me anew for further effort. The Comforter, Jesus promised, was the Spirit of Truth. While it acts as comforter, to those ready to receive it, it will cause all to mourn, who rely upon other power for safety, or protection. How many high wrought schemes have come to naught through its power! How many Idols have fallen from their high position, like Dagon before the Ark! From Aaron's Calf to the Pet Idol of to-day, men have been ready to worship their own creations of hand, or brain. Philistines are not sole mourners for the destruction of their Gods.

May we be so self-disciplined, that we can say, and speak advisedly—LET TRUTH PREVAIL, tho' every man be a liar—or mistaken in some things.

While able to see some things, to-day, hid from our view yesterday, let the thought of to-morrow's light enable us to receive the knowledge of to-day with humility.

Evidence, rapidly accumulates, of work, going on in the minds of men and women, causing the scales to fall from their eyes. They are no longer willing, even at the bidding of a hireling Priesthood, to bow the knee to a God, who could predestine the majority of his creatures to endless misery, and demand the ignominious death of his only begotten SON, to appease his wrath against the remainder.

That so many are unwilling to see through the eyes of others, or put on the spectacles of past opinions—that some, at least, have the moral courage to use the reason God has given them—fills my soul with rejoicing. I feel with you, that the beginning of the end has come—the old dam of superstition must give way before the accumulating waters of TRUTH.

Among the many Instruments God has employed to inaugurate this great work, I recognize those Radical Materialists, to whom you refer, and of whom you were one. They were inspired by a class of Spirits, who—however blind to many truths, since opened to you—saw with clearness, the false foundation on which the Dam was builded, and the deformity of the Idols, worshipped by the world yeleped CHRISTIAN. You and your companions were ready instruments in the hands of those spirits. They so filled you with the tear down idea, that it remains with you to-day, in its pristine vigor—tempered, no doubt, with the wisdom of greater knowledge and broader experience.

While influenced by this Spirit, to strip, from this mythical Jesus, the robes with which Priests have clothed their Idol; is it not possible, you would, sometimes, take away what, of right, belongs to the real Jesus?

Heartily agreeing with you in your first, second, third and fourth positions—when I read in your fifth, that Jesus, like all good Jews, believed in physical resurrection, and headed a general movement in the spirit world, to effect it—that he believed in war, expecting spirit assistance to overthrow the powers that were, and make him King—I am constrained to say—Not yet do I so read history.

That the Apostles, for a time at least, did believe in a physical resurrection, I agree with you. Their so believing has been a stumbling-block in the way of educating the masses, that the Christ Resurrection is spiritual. Events of to-day, to some extent, obviate the difficulty.

From the Apostolic record, I fail to discover that Jesus so believed. His raising Lazarus is no more to the point than Elijah's or Elisha's doing a similar thing. When he said to Martha, I am the resurrection and the life—he that believeth in me, tho' he were dead, yet shall he live—he referred to quite a different death from that of Lazarus, or the Ruler's daughter.

That Jesus came back into his old body, and other Saints did so too, the Apostles, no doubt, believed at the time. We can excuse people, of even a hundred years ago, for thinking it the only sensible construction of the story.

But now we have evidence in our very midst, both in England and America, that Spirits can, under certain conditions, clothe themselves with material form, which can be seen, talked with and handled, as really as was Jesus, or any of the old saints. Is it not more in keeping with the Spirit of the age to conclude, that no Spirit can come back into its body, after animal life had entirely left it—that Lazarus, as well as others, was in that condition which might have ultimated in death, but was no more really dead, at the time, than many others, in these days of hasty funerals?

As to Jesus and the swords, let Materialists read Mathew's report of the sermon on the Mount, and then tell, under what conditions, a man, believing those divine principles, could take, or believe in the swords.

That his zeal for God's house, may, for the moment, have led him away from these divine truths, when he drove out the money changers, I will not attempt to deny. But, that he ordered the purchase of swords with the idea of thereby saving his life, or becoming King, is not, to my mind, consistent with the record. That he may have been so tempted, during his forty days in the wilderness, is quite probable. That he resisted, thus setting us an example which the Apostle plainly declares.

At the time swords were spoken of, he evidently expected death, and could not, consistently, have anticipated deliverance by men, or Angels. His rebuke of the disciple who, with the sword essayed to protect him, was consistent with his teachings at all times, and plausibly explains his wishing them to have a sword, at the time, that he might give his dying testimony against it. So, too, when disciples would that he make use of the higher form of war, by calling down fire from Heaven, to consume his enemies, even as did Elias—he rebuked them as emphatically, as could even Elder Frederick, that they knew not what manner of spirit they were of.

Thus, Beloved Elder Frederick, I dissent from your conclusions, not because I believe Jesus was a God, and therefore could not err, but because I believe him to be a Godly man, entitled to the full benefit of his recorded words and acts.

Differing from your conclusions, while patronizing your freedom of opinion, is prima facie evidence that I believe every one should form his and her own opinion, according to his and her own best judgment.

Be assured, Beloved Elder, I love and revere your earnest, fearless spirit, in opposing all error, wherever found. May I imitate your example, by accepting the increasing light each day brings.

In Gospel Love, I am your Brother,

John B. Vance.

A NEW STANDPOINT.

—o—

AMONG the emigrants from this world to the next—of such as have figured largely in the affairs of men—I fail to find the first individual, who, if a mere wish would obtain it, would not have a sponge drawn over his past record.

Underlying his patriotism, he finds, on retrospection, a large substratum of Ego, hiding, for the time being, from his own eyes only, the absurdity of his “fantastic tricks before high heaven,” the absurdity of inferring, from his accidental, temporary elevation, that he was born to command ad infinitum.

He now sees that some, who were unknown to fame, are largely his superiors. He sees there is a Power that over-rides in the affairs of man. He sees that, from the material lying around loose, such instruments are selected as will best subserve the present purpose. When that purpose is accomplished, or the tool becomes dull, that tool is dropped and another is picked up.

In the instrumentalities selected, no new springs to action are created. The springs already there are put in motion.

The reward is measured, not so much by the end accomplished, as by the motive of the instrument.

TRIBUNE EDITORIAL.

—o—

THE Tribune is courteous and generous. It can also afford to be scrupulously just. Let us understand each other, and answer to a proposition, definitely, when we have stated it accurately.

The Tribune says, “We are compelled to say, that neither Owen nor Evans has said a word in arrest of the general judgment upon the mummery practiced at Philadelphia and at the home of the Eddys, in Vermont. Both of them seem to think the word of a Spirit is as good as that of any one else, if not better. Elder Evans expressly says, that the personal honesty or dishonesty of the medium has nothing to do with the faith to be given to his utterances.”

This is a serious mistake. The point at issue, is the fact of mediumship of the man or woman, and the materialization of the Spirit—not the “word,” or utterance, or character of either of them. Do the Spirits exist? Does the mediumship of the man or woman exist? And is the materialization fact—or fraud? This is what I do say. It will bear repeating—for very important interests are involved in the scientific solution of this problem. Upon it I have staked my reputation, as a practical man—a lover of my kind, whether they be in their first or second physical body.

“By Spiritualism I would be understood, the acknowledged existence of the Spirit world—Human Immortality—the possibility of inter-communication between those in the body, and those out of the body, and nothing more. The morality or immorality of the mediums—the occurring facts, whether important or puerile—the truth or falsehood of communications, have no more bearing upon simple Spiritualism as thus defined, than similar things have upon any other science—upon Chemistry or Farming. Science is an orderly arrangement of facts. Give us the facts. The use, or no use—the sense, or no sense, we will attend to hereafter.”

And is it not “in arrest of the general judgment of mummery” of materialization, when I state, point blank, after an unprejudiced examination, I pronounce the materialization, THAT I WITNESSED, of some fifteen Spirits of men and women, to be as true and real—as genuine—as are any facts in Agriculture or Chemistry, that I have ever witnessed? I fully realize the responsibility I assume, by this statement. I stand by that to the public, both of my own Order, and of the outside world.

Are we not all disposed to strain at gnats, and swallow camels? How the theologians, to whom the Bible is the word of God materialized, can disbelieve in the principle of Spiritual manifestation, is, to me, a logical enigma. When food, for a million of people—more or less—was, for forty years materialized—when Nadab and Abin, and seventy Elders, saw the God of Israel materialized—and did eat and drink. Ex. 24: 9. And when Jesus and his disciples materialized bread and fish, for thousands of men and women, to eat—just as I saw Honto materialize cloth in plain sight of twenty-five people—and finally when Jesus was transfigured, and Moses and Elias were materialized, so that James and John proposed to build tents for them to live in—I marvel, either at the gullibility, or the incredulity of Christians.

After the soul of Jesus was out of his body, he either returned and reanimated it, for forty days: or he materialized a body that talked—saying, “A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.” Why then should not the same Law be operative among so progressive a people as the readers of the NEW YORK TRIBUNE?

THE true social desideratum at last is, not that women, equally with men, assume the exercise of authority; but that men, equally with women forego the exercise of authority. The genuine perfection of humanity instead of being the enforced obedience of one-half to the other half, is the spontaneous obedience of both halves to the law of God.—Mill.

THERE never was a great man unless through divine inspiration.—Cicero.

WINOUSKI, VT., Oct. 25, 1874.

Respected Friend and Brother, F. W. Evans:

I was truly gratified by your 10th October favor. You are so good as to send us the quotations from the Revised Statutes of New York, and I appreciate. I am constrained to say, your letter is a diamond—I shall ever so regard it—full of superb ideas. You are, in the fullest sense, liberal and tolerant. I would rejoice to see so noble and worthy a letter printed; it would be a source of joy to many a weary and progressive heart, to comprehend its beauty.

YOUR SHAKER AND SHAKERESS of November is at hand. Mrs. Shipman, a most excellent woman of great energy and enterprise, my son DeLion, my daughter Portia and I—all of us—count it a feast of fat things. For myself, I feel akin to you—I seem to gravitate to you, and to the celestial light I see all around you and yours. I am assured we are spiritually drawn together. I want to find men and women with great hearts; I want to attain to the highest good, no matter at what sacrifice; I want a revolution from the wrecks all around us, and would hail with delight the coming of the Reconstructing Angel of Truth. By the blessing of the angel world, may we be won to you, you to us.

“Legal Marriage” is enforced maternity—sexual slavery. Free Lust is a covenant with Hell!—an agreement with Death.

Free Love, by the aid of Science, Culture and Refinement, leads to Purity, to Self-denial, Self-abnegation. And this is a Law of Right.

Spirit life tells us, you, as a people, are nearer to us than any of our race. So, for the good of humanity, let us form an alliance. Is it not the biggest thing to lead blessed men and women up to a higher plane of life? Let me hold a place in your heart.

Ever yours,

Owen Shipman.

EVENING.—Several of our members, previous to receiving your good letter, anxious to go over to Valcour, being impatient to organize, went on to Plattsburg, and effected an organization. I will try to send you printed copy soon, with circular No. 2. Accept the assurance of my heart, overflowing with gratitude for your generous and brotherly offer of books; please do not send just now. Will rejoice to avail ourselves of your goodness in time to come.

We have several noble brothers and sisters, more spiritually progressive than others—for some lack these attainments. They, with me, desire to live on the self-denying, intellectual plane; so we have joy in loving our celibate brothers and sisters, and we are not aliens, nor antagonists to you. We want order, science, harmony and energy, with economy; also, your efficiency to revolutionize chaotic elements. The rock on which we are most likely to split, is Treachery and Anarchy. Now, if we wreck, I invite the noblest and best of you to come to our rescue.

Owen Shipman.

HINTS TO WRITERS.

—o—

“Most writers not accustomed to the press imagine that a newspaper article, like an oration, should have an exordium, an argument, and conclusion. Not at all. The argument is all that is wanted. That is state your case, say your say, and stop. Do not take time and space to get into the subject, and more to get out of it; but come to it instantly, and stop when you are done.

“Be short. The time is short, the world is very fast now, and readers of newspapers do not want long articles. Pack your thoughts into short words, short sentences and short essays. If you never do a great thing never do a long thing.

“Come to the point. If you have no point, lay down the pen and do something else, rather than write. It is not every one who can write for edification, and you may not be one who can.

“Write the article two or three times over carefully, making it shorter each time. Write on one side only of the paper. Write legibly. Keep a copy of what you send to the press. Editors do not return manuscripts. We cannot undertake to, and we so state every week, but are every week asked to. It is impossible to make the reasons plain to writers; but it is out of the question.

“Be very modest in your estimate of your own productions, and do not fret if others esteem them even less than you do.”—N. Y. Observer.

GOSPEL TRAVAIL.

MANY practical experiences of others have I read and heard related with evident advantage and benefit to myself. Some were encouragements to perseverance in righteousness, and some were solemn warnings to "avoid the very appearance of evil." Now, after a long term of years in the holy discipline of virtue, I quite frequently retrospect the ground over which I have gone, and try to discover the principles, practices and habits, which have proved elements of success in reaching the goal for which I started. In hours of serene meditation in the solemn afternoon of life, one grand principle comes to my memory, which was early in active operation in my mind, and from which I have scarcely swerved a single time in half a century, i. e., never to allow any discount on an honest fulfillment of obligations imposed by conscience, whether suggested by my own mind or furnished by the rules of piety, order and Christian decorum, adopted by Believers as means of safety, protection, and salutary discipline in righteousness. I have known persons to fall away from a very fruitful travail in virtue and piety, in so gradual a manner, that the several steps in the process were scarcely distinguishable by others, and, apparently, not at all by themselves. The little foxes were eating away at the tendrils of the vines and insidiously severing them more and more from the great and noble tree round which they had so long clung for shelter and support.

I have dreaded an indefinite, lukewarm condition of conscience more than any dangers to which a Christian pilgrim is exposed. I will illustrate a little. About thirty years ago, it was required of us young converts to avoid placing our feet upon the rounds of the chairs when sitting therein, and thereby save the paint on them. Some older and better men than myself would ignore and trample upon this little regulation, yet I never dared to do so. And why? Not because I thought there was any great degree of moral turpitude in the act itself, but because I felt that a departure from any rule I had once adopted would inevitably be a starting-point of incipient backsliding, and where it would end who could divine? I was taught to pick up pins, and strings, and bits of iron, and save them; and to this very day I dare not relax my zeal, even in this small matter, for fear my conscience might be demoralized, and my living impressions of practical righteousness in matters of weightier concern might begin to wane. So of keeping the Sabbath. I saw to my surprise some who would not scruple to depart from the holy service and sacred usages of the Sabbath as established by Believers. I never could afford to do it, not even so much as to walk or ride out for mere recreation, although I felt no hesitation in milking the cows, or caring for the horses, or performing any other necessary duty. I could see plainly that a little relaxing here would soon fritter away my earnest feelings and spiritual inspirations; I should lose the blessings of the day and institution, appropriated to religious meditation. In all matters pertaining to life, the pabulum of my mental and spiritual being consisted of that which the best and highest and most earnest efforts on my part could procure from the sweetest, purest sources at my command. I could not afford to lower the standard of sincerity in my conscience. Will any one say it is superstition not to walk over a pin, a string, or bit of iron, without picking it up and saving it? Not at all. It gives strength and tone to the moral nature more than a bitter discussion of theology a hundred years long. Hear this pretty story: Mother Lucy once visited a family of Believers who had just harvested their bean crop. She noticed that they had not taken them carefully from the vines but had left too many to waste, and she directed a brother to pick them over again. The brother went as directed and saved quite a quantity. But this was not all, nor the best. While he was gathering the beans, he was entirely overpowered by the goodness of God and the presence of angels, and cried for very joy the whole time. That day would remain a green spot in his memory forever. From this we may learn that what, to an undisciplined worldly spirit, is trifling or superstitious, may be the essence of high and holy inspiration.

I have written this, not for the benefit of Believers of long experience. Such have already patiently traveled quite through this low ground.

"To reign with the bridegroom and bride."

But unto the inexperienced in Zion, this is inscribed in all kindness and humility, and my kind regards and affectionate love-greeting go with it.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

—O—

Beloved Youth in Zion:

The first day of the year should be regarded, by you, as a marked day in the history of your lives; for it is the starting point of a new era in life's journey. The new date of the year, like the number on the milestone, will remind you that a defined portion of your earthly journey is finished, and that you are entering upon a new and untried portion. In wishing you a Happy New Year, I would impress on your minds the important truth, that in the stern battle for eternal Life, if you would win, you must work. You must commence the year with self-denial and self-discipline, if you would end it with spiritual prosperity. Be not afraid to form new resolutions, at the beginning of each year, such as will restrain from vicious habits and tendencies; now is the time to discard evil practices, and commence the cultivation of good ones. Be careful that the thousand poisonous weeds of vice do not choke the lovely expanding blossoms of virtue. Open a new account with conscience, and heed its timely admonitions, that you may not have, at the year's end, a heavy debt and nought but remorse to pay it. You are not living wisely, nor well, unless you make each coming year better than the past one—better for yourself and for others. A good life keeps the conscience clear, and a clear conscience makes its possessor happy. The youth who lives a good life—and why should any live a bad one?—strictly obeys God's requirements, as they are made known through His appointed leaders. Truth is the glory of youth, and is essential to their happiness in this world and also in the next; therefore make truth your motto, for "Truth alone will stand." "Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? He that speaketh truth in his heart." Youthful readers of the S. and S.: besetting sins of every name and nature should be at once uprooted and destroyed, never to grow again. If all who read this will make the effort, earnestly and hopefully, they will be able to say—This is indeed a Happy New Year.

Daniel Orelutt, Enfield, Ct.

CALAIS, VERMONT, June 7, 1874.

DEAR SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

I have, at last, found a paper which teaches Christ-religion. I have had the privilege of reading several numbers of your paper, of late, and am pleased with them. I am almost a Shaker. My Heavenly Father has given me light of what is to be in the future:

THE FUTURE.

There is a time, not far ahead, when all intemperance is dead, when holy angels will descend, and every knee to God will bend. His righteous judgment be confessed. And all true Christians will be blessed—The Lion, by the Wolf caressed, and with them, will the Lamb be blessed. And little children lead the throng, With Hallelujah their best song—Peace—sweet peace, to man be given, With never a war, in Earth, nor Heaven—A cleaned up Earth, unmarred by vice—With one new Church all sweet and nice—By Love to God, in man inspired. No man-made laws will be required—Behind old creeds, there'll be no hiding—No need, when all are law abiding—When, in God's image, all complete, is man—including Helper meet—Then all the Stars may skip and play, and spread the tidings far away.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., Dec. 19, 1874.

FRIEDRICH EVANS:

Yours, of the 12th, came to hand. You say you are willing I should come and prove myself by your Order. I am aware I could not unite myself to your Order, with any degree of satisfaction, to myself or others, without an experience, essentially different from the outside world.

I see the beauty and desirableness of the community system, wherein none act on selfish principles. All laboring for, and loving their neighbor as themselves. This, to my perception, is the Incarnation of Heaven upon Earth. I was delighted with my visit among you. It made an impression upon my mind, never to be effaced. How pleasant to recognize the Elders among you, as Fathers, with their long, varied and valuable experience. The younger men, as Brothers or Sons. The elder women, as Mothers—the younger as Sisters—a relation purely spiritual, noble, pure, holy and exalted—where the constant endeavor is to do the will of God, as is done by angels in Heaven—where intemperance, in eating, as well as in drinking, is carefully avoided. Where disease—the effect of law's infraction—is banished. Where sin, in its multiform manifestations, desolating humanity, in the outer world, is studiously left behind. Where the so called benefactors of the world, including lawyers, doctors and clergy, have a privilege to earn their bread by honest industry. Well may your worthy correspondent, A. B. B., regard your Institution as a "Beacon Light, hung up in these western heavens, to teach mankind what sublime achievements humanity can attain, for a religious principle."

The fact, that your Institution has, for so many years, stood the strain of the surging, tumultuous waves, of an adulterous generation, is, to my mind, conclusive proof that the Institution is founded on the Rock—that It has a great mission to perform—and that God, in his own good time, will show how powerful are these silent influences, for the liberation of the anxious throng, who are now praying to be delivered from the thrall of the debris of a shipwrecked generation, with groanings unutterable.

I am looking for light and direction. I have been pointed to Mount Lebanon, by an influence, which I am sure is from above.

But I have been in doubt whether the friends could bear with my infirmities. I have, as I told you, been troubled with periodical turns of what doctors call neuralgia in the head, which, I am satisfied comes from a disordered stomach, the result of improper food, improperly cooked. I would like to live on grain and vegetables. I expect you could prescribe a system of hygiene, which, if carefully carried out, might, in time, relieve me of the difficulty. People, in general, you are aware, live on pork, beef, hot buckwheat cakes, cooked in grease, pickles, mince pies, tea, coffee, rich cakes, fine flour and the like, bolted down without mastication. Then follow patent medicines—doctors, with blue pills, quinine, mercury, etc.—then the undertaker.

Have you any employment in which I could make myself useful? I would come as a learner, divested of disagreeableness, bigotry, over self-esteem—all bad qualities which would shut me out from that kingdom, which is righteousness and peace, joy, in angelic purity. I desire an eye single to the glory of God, that I may dwell in the light of eternal day—to know and do the will of God, in all things, at any and all costs. Please write me soon.

Yours Truly,

Gilbert Hubbell.

The general average of mankind are not only moderate in intellect but also moderate in inclinations; they have no tastes nor wishes strong enough to incline them to do any thing unusual, and they consequently do not understand those who have, and class all such with the wild and intemperate whom they persecuted, and then worshipped.

Food or drink should never be taken into the mouth either hot or cold, but near the temperature of the blood.

MANY MANSIONS.

If a photographic view of a village, or of a commodious building, should be taken at the same time from different standpoints, would not every view thus taken be dissimilar? Would it be just, or wise, to assert that all the others, except the one taken from our standpoint, were false and unreal? All would agree that such village or building did actually exist. Then, would it not better accord with reason, and show more of the love of truth, to seek to know of what material the building is composed — whether its foundations are laid deep and strong, and if it be really capable of sheltering and protecting those who seek refuge from storms and tempests that may arise without? While thus testing its strength, and seeking to find out whether any of its parts can be shaken by the increasing winds of truth, that there may be a timely removal of the error, we would say, as did the apostle, "let brotherly and sisterly love continue, and let patience have her perfect work."

Theology is viewed differently by persons occupying diverse positions, rendering discussion and investigation necessary and profitable, if conducted with a view to elicit truth instead of producing controversy.

Religion is the vital element of the soul — its life. Theology is the outward form, to embody and clothe the real spiritual part. When the body is moved by the vitalizing principle within, then all will be harmonious. Science and religion will thus act in concert and a desire to get at the true — will be the ruling motive, while all differences of opinions, honestly expressed, will be treated with kindness and respect. Neither bigotry, conservatism, nor pride of opinion, should ever block the wheels of progress, nor draw the curtains of superstition over the windows of the soul, to shut out the increasing light of truth.

"In my Father's house are many mansions," said Jesus. When were those mansions built, and for what purpose? Were they all constructed at one time? If the soul's destiny is fully determined at the expiration of mortal existence, and all go direct to heaven or hell, why so many mansions? Shall we presuppose an aristocracy there — a Plymouth and Trinity Church for the high, and other churches for the colored people and the lowly, bearing distinctive marks of caste? Or, shall we understand that those mansions to which Jesus referred, were built in different ages and cycles, and were shaped according to the degrees of knowledge and progress of the people at the time? Their conceptions of God, the primordial cause of all causes, may have been vague and limited; yet they used the best material that they could command, and the mansions which they built were adapted to the conditions of the people, and were accepted, as forming a part of the Father's house.

There have been many builders all down through the ages, who have worked according to the pattern given to them. Moses was shown a pattern in Mount Sinai, and was instructed to build a tabernacle that would serve the needs of the people at that time. However symbolical it may have been of the tabernacle to which the finger of prophecy pointed, that would eventually be built in such perfect consonance with truth, and so strongly fortified therewith, that "not one stake would ever be removed, neither any of the cords thereof be broken," it was evidently not the one design for all succeeding builders. Solomon and Ezra were commanded to build; they had their patterns; those were also included as belonging to the Father's house.

Jesus laid the foundation of a new structure, and left his followers to build upon it. It was not his mission to destroy the law; neither to condemn the doers of the law; but to show a more perfect way, reveal a higher law. He called those who were prepared to leave the old covenant of types and shadows, which had served a good purpose and done its work, to enter into a new covenant, which was more spiritual. The unprogressed Jews persecuted those who accepted the new covenant, and, like unconverted Saul, "verily thought they were doing God service." The spirit of controversy, and bitter railing, have never been productive of good fruits, in any age of the world's history.

Tens of thousands have honestly entertained opinions at one time, that they have as honestly changed for other opinions, at another time. From a variety of standpoints and degrees of altitude, we catch different views; but "Charity suffereth long, and is kind. Charity envieth not."

Had there never been any aggressive movers — iconoclasts in the world — where would have been the progress of the race? We are naturally all idolaters, have our gods to worship, either of wood and stone, the low forms of animal life; or through tradition and blind zeal we make gods of human beings and worship them. Whatever or whoever they may be, they are sacred to us; and if any one takes the axe of truth to break those idols in pieces, it is hard to convince us that they have been sent of God to do it. No living, inspirational soul, will be heard to say that we have already attained unto the highest degree of truth that is for the race. The keys of revelation, through some human agency, will yet unlock doors that have hitherto been closed. New sacrifices will be required, and new glories will open to our spiritual vision.

Whoever are called to this work, should look well before they strike, lest "they hurt the oil and the wine," and mar the seal which God has placed in the foreheads of his servants.

INFLUENCE OF KINDNESS.

I HAVE been led to observe how, in a thousand instances, little services and kind words rendered in time of need, which indeed should never be withheld, drew from observers expressions of praise, and they always leave a bright mark on the characters of those upon whom they fall. As we pass the rounds of daily life, in all its various employments, how characteristically do the motive powers of each one portray themselves, whether meritorious or otherwise; and we, whom providence, or destiny has placed together, how important it is that we scan the motives which lead to actions. Thus it is that we really learn to know ourselves, and the bearing with which we impress others toward us. We see those whose talents and philanthropic nature raise them above the common level of mankind. Such are destined to become glorious workers in the vineyard of Christ; and their works of love and benevolence find no broader field for efficient exercise than in our own localities. And we observe that the benevolent, those who are always kind and pleasant, cheerful and hopeful, radiate light; they are as bright stars shining with effulgence wherever they go, causing clouds to disappear, as mists are overpowered by the bright rays of the sun. But always to keep and command this beautiful harmonious condition of mind, requires vigilance and self-sacrifice in many ways, which only add greater lustre and help to form a beautiful character. There are many who have the germs of noble men and women at their birth; but who for the lack of self discipline, a little exercise on those points, never really attain to that place in the scale of being that they otherwise would.

There are many opportunities wherein we may show a kind heart, by speaking pleasant words, which drop as dew on thirsty plants. Had we the power to see the soothing effects they produced on sorrowful hearts, perhaps already bruised and sore, almost beyond endurance, we would make it a constant study to select careful and prudent language, that we may not, in any unguarded moment, let pass from our lips words which would drop as lead in the already depressed spirit of our brother or our sister.

Are there any who have not in some period of their lives felt themselves so bereft of true friendship — the affections that sweeten life's bitter woes — and also the crush of disappointed hopes, that have so far blasted the past and darkened the future, that courage had almost failed? Then how sweet is sympathy, a kind word or a favor, if even coming from a child; a heart, thus humiliated, is able to appreciate kindness; and we should never forget that all need kind words and sympathy, when under trial, no matter from what cause; we are all the better for having rendered, and for having received them. Our greatest enjoyments are in our own beloved homes. Our nearest associates are those with whom we mingle daily — the inmates of our own household. And living so nearly connected as we do, we have need to bring into requisition those little civilities which tend so much to refinement, and produce harmonious condition.

CONTRIBUTION.

DEAR ELDERESS ANTOINETTE: Our little "Monthly," the "Shaker and Shakeress," is very dear to me. I always welcome it. Its pages are well filled; and I take useful lessons and derive much comfort and happiness therefrom. I would gladly contribute something to its columns, were I able to do so, and thus indicate practically my faith in, and love for, Community life and principle. When I feel my inability to present anything new, that would interest and instruct the readers, contributors and supporters of the clean little sheet, I am reminded of a certain person of olden time who cast two mites into the Lord's treasury, and was commended for so doing. It was not the amount given, but the motive which prompted the act, that attested the donor's sincerity — that elicited approval.

I am not unmindful of the labors of those who strive to make the paper so good and useful; and it would be a mark of selfishness, if I should remain silent and not give expression to feelings of gratitude for favors thus received. The beautiful sentiments so clearly expressed by the young sisters with whom I have often fraternized, and for whom I entertain a deep love, fill my spirit with joy. My sincerest desires are for their prosperity and growth in spiritual life and light. They give evidence that they are living for a higher purpose than merely self-pleasing, and earth's alluring charms, or to dwell in idleness, and slothfully spend their time, destitute of soul aspirations, and lofty aims.

Seneca, a philosopher, said, "We complain of the shortness of time, and yet have more than we know what to do with. Our lives are spent either in doing nothing at all, or doing nothing to the purpose — nothing which we ought to do -- complaining that our days are few, and acting as if they would never end."

Among the ancient Indians, there was a tribe called "Gymnosophists." They had great aversion to sloth and indolence. It is said of them, that when the table was spread for their repast, the assembled youths were asked by their chiefs how they had spent their time since the rising of the sun. Whether they had been engaged in some useful employment. If upon investigation it was found they had been idle -- done nothing to deserve a dinner -- they were rejected, while the others who had been industrious, enjoyed the fruits of their own labors. They seemed to entertain the same opinion that the Apostle Paul did, when he gave commandment, "That if any would not work, neither should they eat." It should not be our purpose to eat the bread of idleness, either in a temporal or spiritual point of view.

They who feel the worth of immortal souls, will not cease to struggle in spirit, and pray earnestly to God that the convicting power of truth may be felt throughout the length and breadth of our land, that will cause souls to feel the necessity of living virtuous and godly lives. It has been said truly, "virtue is the foundation of all honor, and the source of all beauty, order and happiness." It enhances the value of all the natural endowments of the human mind, and to it every faculty should be subservient. The more eminent a person becomes, the more prominent will appear their deformities, if virtue be not the controlling influence and guiding star of their lives.

Virtue will give dignity to character, and will ornament the soul, when we shall have put off the mortal. Beauty and wit may fade and die. Many things which we learn that are applicable to the earth-life, will pass from memory with their disuse. But virtue, innocence and love, will remain the soul's guardians and companions forever. Superior beings, in all worlds, are bound by virtue's strong cords, and one law governs the whole of God's universe. Those who are wise will search diligently to find the pearl of great price, and when found, will not hesitate to "sell all to obtain it." As the poet says:

"Go, thou in life's fair morning, go in the bloom of youth,
And buy for thine adorning, the 'precious pearl of truth.
Secure this heavenly treasure, and bind it on thy heart,
And let no worldly pleasure, e'er cause it to depart.

"Go while the day star shineth, go, while the heart is light;
Go, ere thy strength declineth, while every sense is bright,
Sell all thou hast and buy it, 'tis worth all earthly things;
Rubies, and gold, and diamonds, sceptres and crowns of kings.

"Go, ere the cloud of sorrow steal o'er the bloom of youth,
Defer not till to-morrow, go now and buy the truth;
Go seek thy Great Creator, learn early to be wise,
Go, place upon his altar, a morning sacrifice."

Phebe Van Houten, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

FOR THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

Elizabeth Doobeny's farewell to the Community, after a Sabbath day's enjoyment, of their worship and repose at Mt. Lebanon.

BROTHERHOOD.

Brother I know thee not in name,
But feel thy future home is mine!
Our loving father is the same--
And my heart is knit to thine.

SISTERHOOD.

Sister, I know that in thine eyes,
And in thy accents soft and sweet
A Saviour reigns without disguise,
Where all the Christian virtues meet.

ADIEU.

The moment, though a fleeting one,
In which I've felt thy sympathy,
Shall, while these eyes behold the sun,
Rest graven on my memory.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Or all the "many inventions mankind have sought out," none seem so little fraught with good to him, spiritually, as those which offer him immunity from the effects of sin. Why? Because, the one thought now is to avoid the penalty, not considering that the cause is the wrong to be avoided, and that the penalty is nothing more nor less than the consequence which must follow certain causes.

Cause and effect are inseparable, and must succeed each other, as certainly as the ebbing and flowing of tide, or the oscillations of the pendulum. "The soul that sinneth (against the laws of its being) shall die," was fulfilled, though the mortal body might not then have perished. Its spiritual perceptions and life were so paralyzed that the true and higher life was sacrificed for the time, and has thus continued, until one came with power enough over the body to fulfill the law of obedience, put it in subjection to the spirit, and show how it could be done.

The Adamic Parents waited not until the time when they could generate rightly. The result was a murderer, instead of a being on as high a plane as themselves. Though becoming as gods, through the creative function, they sunk from the innocent and guileless, till now, the fig-leaf covering has become the most engrossing thought, instead of the cause that produced its necessity. The primeval innocence is gone, and nothing can restore it but the avoidance of what has so long destroyed it, and filled earth with wantonness. Let us draw a figure as did the Master, to illustrate from common life. In your house you have an ice closet which was constructed to run its waste water into a vessel beneath it. But lately it leaks and the pan does not receive it, and your floor is wet and you are annoyed.

"That can be remedied says one, have a platform made as large as can be put under, with a border around it, and run the water from that." Well, you try it and it keeps most of the water from the floor. But suppose you could look into the refrigerator and see the floor beneath that zinc, soaked and decaying, the charcoal saturated with water, and the under floor almost ready to drop out. Would you think your refrigerator was saved? Would you not say, What a fool I was to doctor effects instead of searching for the cause? All I needed was something to reach the cause. A little skill and solder, and sense, seasonably and suitably served, would have sufficed.

But in this tabernacle of the body, we ignore the laws of its construction, and into its fine delicate membranes we crowd any thing we happen to, without regard to its needs or capabilities, and then feel surprised if it cannot keep doing, and the machinery all run smoothly while the vital forces are wearing out, prematurely, in an outlay which is at the same time defrauding the mind and soul of their life and inspiration.

Or perhaps, we dress so tightly that the thin delicate texture of the lung cells cannot resist the pressure, and they consequently are not inflated and thus lose their life element and become diseased locally. Then, by not performing their functional work the white blood or chyle, fails to become charged with the oxygen it should receive through the lungs to change it into the healthy vitalizing fluid, and the individual becomes pale and wasted, or burnt up with the fever nature intensifies to assert once more her healthy poise of function.

We will speak of another fruitful cause of mischief, for whatever interferes with health of body, has its reflex on the spirit and causes unhappiness and waste. We perhaps bring the delicate valves of the skin almost in contact with the chill or frosty earth, and thus close up the gates nature has provided for the ejection of a large amount of exhausted and impure matter, and then call it disease, when nature opens one of her more apparent relief gates to preserve the life.

We have made life so full of inventions, so artificial and complicated with fashion, parade and sham, that there is one continual strain on body and nerve. Although any quantity of labor-saving machines have been tried, yet the ornaments and complications increase in greater ratio and there is no time left for rest of spirit, or for introspection. Many a tired and harassed house keeper must look longingly forward to the rest of the grave.

So far removed are mankind, from simplicity that the greatest boon now is, a resort to the wilderness, the mountains, or the ocean; where man's inventive genius has not yet robbed them of the simple grandeur and charm of nature's works. There they find healing and invigoration.

Though all animal, and plant life seeks the light and sunshine, except in its highest meridian, still humanity, with similar internal organs and mechanism, shut themselves up in dark and dingy rooms, and bar out each ray of sunshine that would force itself in, lest carpets be faded, or flies flourish, for even they cannot live in the dark, except in a dormant condition. We exclude life and health conditions, and wonder that we ache, and groan, and die palsied, wonder that life is deteriorating; wonder that the daughters are not equal to the mothers.

Verily the Fathers builded better than they knew, when they thoroughly cleared the land of trees when preparing a location. And the utility of blinds must certainly be questioned, if the glorious Autumnal Sun or blessed warmth of his Winter shining must be excluded,

"He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good," and none are so far removed from the Father's loving providence, that this is not their right.

Truly said the wise Teacher. "The light is sweet and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun." "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." Why spoken of so exultingly, if light is not blessing, and darkness and anguish almost synonymous curses?

Or, why the promise? "Moreover the light of the moon, shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun, seven fold, in the day when my people are healed of their wounds and bruises." Or, why say of those who oppress the helpless that "their sun shall go down at noon, and the earth be darkened in a clear day"?

As light, and the opening of the interiors, are in correspondence spiritually, so are sunlight and health in the natural.

But one more figure. There stands a house. It is not old and is nicely painted, but there is some defect, or sickness on one of its sides. "Oh, well," you say, "it is made of poor material." But are you sure that is the trouble? Away upon the roof there is a hole where there should be a shingle. Not near the defect, it is true, but in range with it, and much of the leakage has obeyed the laws of hydrostatics and quietly glided down on the rafters, and has found an outlet through the finish which once made the building a thing of beauty. And that is only an effect which it is proper and right to expect of such a cause. Can you blame nature, or aught but your own neglect, if the building should crumble? You would have too good an understanding of cause and effect to say that the builder, or his work was the cause of the mischief. You can only say the aperture in the roof should have been attended to.

But of the wonderful house which the spirit occupies, the entrances are guarded by sentinels, who are free agents, enlightened by reason and instruction, and though they say, Withhold! and try to stop the door, inclination and carnal security say, "Leave it open! If a leak start I can mend it. There is pain killer, just the thing." Or if the mechanism gets over-worked and under-fed with the bracing air, or sunlight, use a little liniment, or start it up with a dose of something which is so repulsive that it is in labor till it expels it. And that you call cure. How long can the mortal tenement endure such treatment? Strange that a Harp of thousand strings should keep in tune so long.

But we started with the sickness of sin; and now ask, if the same principles, of common sense we would apply to other things, are not in order here? Shall we keep on sinning, because Christ died for sinners? or because sin can be confessed? Does that stop the sin and its consequences which are, physical and spiritual deterioration, any more than the platform saved the refrigerator?

"Mankind were created upright," manly and nobly as lords of lesser creations; but, "they have sought out many inventions,"—depraved and perverted habits, have named, and classified the effects, and called them inherited evils and disease; whereas, if we viewed them as consequences of our own, perhaps, ignorant transgression, and sought their antidote in avoidance of producing causes, would we not be more consistent?

Can we wonder that Jesus said, "Except a man deny himself and take up his cross daily he cannot be my disciple"? Not only subdue the passions but the appetites. The leakage which is ruining manhood, is unbridled appetite; and the deceptive invention, that there is a way to avoid its consequences, and thus divorce cause and effect.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Dec. 6, 1874.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED EDITORS: In the multiplicity of life's duties, I have neglected one, that to me, is very important,—the renewal of my subscription for your valuable, ah! priceless little monthly—twenty of which are taken in our great, fashionable and rapidly growing city.

I am fully convinced that you have entered into the great and final work of redemption, designed by our Lord and Saviour for the elevation and salvation of man. Your communities are certainly paradisiacal abodes, for the care-worn and sin-sick soul.

I believe in an overruling power—a rewarder of all souls, according to their works; and that you will ere long reap an abundant harvest from the precious seeds of truth you are sowing, through the "SHAKER AND SHAKERESS."

The temperance ladies here read extracts, and sometimes whole documents from your paper. We believe, with yourselves, that gluttony is twin brother to strong drink; and we highly approve your sentiments on the subject. May the Lord in wisdom direct both you and us in the great work of reform.

Inclosed please find one dollar for two copies of S. and S., and much oblige a true friend and sister in the work of reform. I see a great spiritual revelation just at the door.

Yours for Progression,
Sarah A. Nagle.

EATING BETWEEN MEALS.

HALF of all ordinary diseases, says Dr. Hall, in his Journal of Health, would be banished from civilized life, and dyspepsia become almost unknown, if every body would eat but thrice a day at regular times, and not an atom between meals. The interval being not less than five hours, that being the time required to digest a full meal, and pass it out of the stomach. If a person eats between meals, the process of digestion of the food already in the stomach is arrested, until the last which has been eaten is brought into the condition of the former meal; just as, if water is boiling and ice is put in, the whole ceases to boil until the ice is melted and brought to a boiling point, and then the whole boils together. But it is a law of nature that all food begins to decay after exposure to heat and moisture for a certain time. If a meal is eaten and in two hours another, the whole remains undigested for seven hours, before which time the rotting process commences, and the man has his stomach full of carbon—the very idea of which is horribly disgusting.

KEEPING MEALS WAITING.—Little things often interfere with our comfort very much, and one small annoyance is for men to delay coming to dinner when called. Sometimes they have an hour or more of work which they will do before quitting, and then they go to the house to find the dinner cold, and the cook discouraged. Nothing is more disheartening to a tired woman than a table full of dirty dishes ornamenting the table an hour and a half later in the day than usual. Punctuality is a virtue, that men should learn, if they are in the habit of being uncertain about coming to their meals. Any woman worthy the name of house-keeper will be regular with her meals, if it lies within her power to have them so.

MOTHERLAND.

Daughters of the nation listen!
Liberty to you appeals!
Tearful eyes around you glisten,
While she supplicating kneels.
To their homes your fathers brought her
Through the flood and fire of war;
Through the thunderstorm and slaughter
Rolled her fair triumphal car.

And they said, "All men are equal,
With inalienable rights;"
Little dreaming of the sequel,
That has filled the land with blights.
For a while their sons defended
That great heritage with power;
Sought the good that was intended,
For the country's lasting glory.

But the demon, slavery, flourished;
Half approved and half ignored;
At her founts his life was nourished,
Till he grew to be her lord.
Boldly took not heavy duty
On such articles as tea;
Ills, not taxes, but rich booty;
Even pearls of liberty.
Then a lofty manhood rumbled,
Like a soulless mass of clay;
For its spirit had been humbled,
And its honor swept away.

Drop'd the flag, the stars were broken
As by clouds of inky hue!
And the stripes disclosed in token,
Blood and tears that bondage drew.
When, at length, its folds were lifted,
By the soldier's dying breath,
Was the nation's harvest sifted,
From the bitter seeds of death?
Do not intrigue, sloth and plunder
Still destroy her ripening grain,
While the world is struck with wonder
At her turmoil, loss and pain?
Is there yet no hope for nations?
Must all constitutions fail,
And the heart's uplifted patience,
Sink and let despair prevail?

Safe between two warring oceans,
God had kept a land to show,
When the Church and State commotions,
Blackened earth with crushing woe.
When the bells that priests created
Lit the inquisition's flame,
And the flesh was satiated
In the Holy Spirit's name.

From Republican Genoa
To the tortured Spanish land,
Came a man, impress'd like Noah,
With the rescue God had plan'd.
Europe had no aid to furnish;
Tyrants heard no pleading tone;
They had thrones and arms to hurnish,
Schemes for prowess, all their own.

But a woman heard the story
Of a land beyond the sea;
And bright visions of its glory,
Gifted were her eyes to see.
She the jewel treasure offer'd,
That adorned her as a queen;
And the gems thus freely proffer'd
Bridged the waves to shores unseen,
Where shall be a declaration,
That will make all women free!
Where our eyes shall see a nation,
That is fit for liberty!

Where the rights, divine and human,
Shall forever be secure,
In the land first bought by women,
And by her made good and pure.
For a government parental
Soon will bring true order forth:
Place what'er is accidental,
Build "new heaven and new earth."
Heavy is the task before us;
But it takes no winding course,
Cloudless light is shining o'er us,
In this day of vital force.

Cecelia Devyr, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

Blest is the sacred tie that binds
In sweet communion kindred minds,
Whose hopes, and hearts, and aims are one,
To live for truth and that alone.
Thus sharing union, comfort, care,
With Christian zeal unite in prayer,
That perfect love and peace may reign,
Throughout the whole of Zion's plain.

We all must of this love partake
To comprehend how Christ can make
Our earthly home a type of heaven,
Where death is banished, life is given.
Here we behold the Gospel light
Which shineth from the mountain's height,
Where truth and justice hear the sway,
And every sin is cast away.

Maria Witham, Enfield, Conn.

THINK before you speak what you shall speak,
Why you should speak, about whom you are to speak,
what will come from what you may speak,
what may be the benefit from what you may speak, and lastly, who may be listening to what you may speak. Turn your speech seven ways, and there will never come any harm from what you have spoken.

"THE religion of a nation ought to be the embodiment of its highest intelligence in the most solemn moments of that intelligence." But that is not the fact to-day in any country.

SPIRITUAL ASPIRATION.

Our Zion home is lovely, secluded, and secure,
And precious our relations, so peaceful, and so pure;
Not all earth's fading pleasures, or wealth it has to give,
Shall lure me from these treasures, for these alone I live.

More fervently I'll labor to make the gospel mine,
That all its ties more firmly around my heart may twine;

Be mine the true affections, which from the earth are riven,
Which cling to Saints and Angels, to Christ and God, in heaven.

Be mine the Christian crosses, the sorrow and the love,
The daily prayers and watchings, that lift the soul above,
And lead the spirit onward, to seek the higher life,

Away from earth's corruption, confusion, care and strife.

Be mine to hold communion with mortals robed in white,

To rise with them in triumph to realms of endless light;

Where Jesus and hiest Mother, receive their faithful hand

Of souls, who braved all trial to gain the summer land.

With searching beams unclouded, roll on thou perfect day,

When shade, and storm, and tempest, shall all have passed away.

Flow on thou crystal river, thy broad and swelling tide

Will hear the weary pilgrim, to life's immortal side.

With heart attuned to gladness, I hear the chants above,

And feel the Angels wafting their sweet redeeming love;

And well I know my Saviors, will pilot me safe o'er,
To rest in peaceful triumph, and glory evermore.

MANIFESTATIONS IN NEW YORK CITY, DR. SLADE.

Dear Banner: Gotham is being stirred to its very centre by Spiritualism. The following is taken from the Daily Graphic:

"The interest in so-called 'Spiritual manifestations' which has been developed by the course of the Daily Graphic in regard to the matter is rapidly growing. The Herald, following, as it is wont to do, the example of the Daily Graphic, recently sent a reporter to Chittenden, whom the Eddys, however, declined to admit to their seances. The Sun has lately been publishing a large quantity of letters on the subject; and at Elder Evans' Shaker Convention last night, the greater part of the conversation was on the subject of Spiritualism. The matter is in a fair way to be thoroughly investigated at last, and we are sincerely sorry that, so far as the Chittenden manifestations are concerned, the Herald has been deprived of an opportunity to test their genuineness."

Elder Evans also gave the allopathic doctors grape and canister, and ventilated class-legislating, quack doctor, no diploma, ecclesiastical medical inquisitorial bill, and the Albany Legislature for having passed the star chamber act. He held his immense audience at Steinway Hall spell-bound for nearly two hours. God and good spirits bless Elder Evans for his brave words, say I. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Principles and not men, universality, not individuality. This is not Dr. Dake's nor mediums' funeral, it is the people's. And if such innovations upon civil liberty are not frowned down by the people, we will sooner or later have cause to regret our indifference and "masterly inactivity."—Banner.

THE WAY TO AVOID CALUMNY.—"If any one speaks ill of thee," said Epictetus, "consider whether he hath truth on his side; and if so reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee." When Anaximander was told that the very boys laughed at his singing, "Ay," said he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him, said: "It is no matter; I will live so that none shall believe them." Hearing, at another time, that an intimate friend of his had spoken detractingly of him, he said: "I am sure he would not do it if he had not some reason for it." This is the surest, as well as the noblest way of drawing the sting out of a reproach, and the true method of preparing a man for that great and only relief against the pains of calumny—a good conscience.

"Those principles which lift the soul,
From nature's plane to heaven's height,
Consume the dross, but leave the gold,
A shining metal, pure and bright."

E. Smith.

VOICE OF PEACE.

2.
O, sad'ning sight of death and blight,
Of misery, want and woe,
The waste of manhood's noble life,
Whence cultured wealth should flow;
The homes and lands which mourn the hands,
That bore the deadly steel,
Whose skill was turned to matchless strife,
Instead of human weal.

3.
For throbbing hearts have felt the darts,
And borne the curse of war,
And nations perished in the scourge,
Beneath the battle star.
God speed the time, when peace divine
On earth shall bear the sway,
When Love shall twine her laurel wreath
To crown the perfect day.

4.
The bards of old in song foretold
A time when wars should cease,
When earth would bloom a paradise,
Beneath the reign of peace.
That golden age on hist'ry's page
Shall gleam in truthful lines,
For even now its dawn appears,
Through bright prophetic signs.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

December 25, 1874.

ELDER FREDERICK — Beloved Father in Christ — Permit me, on this, my first Christmas with you, to acknowledge, while I gratefully remember your many acts and words of kindness to me, during my residence with you. The labors of your pen have been to me like water to the traveler on the barren desert — like refreshing showers from heaven to the parched earth. And now, on this recurring festival, let me congratulate you on the peace and happiness enjoyed by your flock. May you long be spared to minister to an ever-increasing family — to witness many returns of this joyous and happy season. Such is the prayer of

Yours truly in the Gospel,

DEAR EDITOR AND EDITRESS:

I have been much edified in reading your editorials, the year past, likewise many of the articles in both departments. They were rare specimens of literary merit, sound, logical, argumentative, scriptural, full of pith, pathos and the fire of God's Truth. That is what the world and many among Believers, need, and must have.

Jesus "made himself of no repute" — not by immoral conduct, but by bearing witness to the Truth. He put forth Ideas, far in advance of the age. They were rejected by many, especially the Jewish orthodoxy. To them He was an "Infidel."

That the Good Samaritan, whom Jesus approved, was an Infidel, we have no doubt. He showed his faith by his works. To this class of Infidels in the world, who make no profession of Christianity — who gain Heaven by being honest in their dealings with their fellow men — our little paper meets with acceptance.

Blessed are such Infidels! I am willing to stake my all with this class, be they in what part of the world — in what world they may. It was this class of Infidels, in its highest types, that framed our United States Constitution — who, in their wisdom, and far-seeing Statesmanship, took the necessary precaution forever to exclude the possibility of introducing the Jewish War-God, or any other God or Christ, or Bible into that Sacred Instrument.

Again, we say, Blessed are such Infidels! We unite with all such, for the preservation of the Constitution of these United States — as it was — as it is — as it shall be. It was made for man — for all men and all women — of all nations, kindred, tongues and peoples, under the Heavens — for all Religions — subject to no ecclesiastical tinkering. So we say HANDS OFF.

KATIE KING EXPOSED.

It is said that a young woman personated Katie, when the real Katie was not forthcoming.

The TRUTH SEEKER thus discourses:

"It was found she had made her entrance and exit into and from the cabinet by means of a panel or secret drawer in the partition, and with her artful representations, she had succeeded in 'deceiving the very elect.' The philosopher and close observer, R. D. Owen, had faithfully attended upon Katy's seances, and has he not detailed the whole 'wonderful affair' in the Atlantic Monthly, and characterized the same as the most remarkable representations of spirit power? Now, however, since the fraud is exposed, the good man is compelled to acknowledge himself deceived by dishonest mediums.

A lesson is to be learned from all this. If Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have been frauds, it does not prove that all others are. Chaff does not disprove the existence of wheat, and all the lies in the world do not falsify one truth. But so long as money is to be made in the roll of mediums, it is not strange, perhaps, that dishonesty is resorted to. The public must be chary, and not believe too readily all representations made. 'Try the spirits, that ye be not deceived.'

Words of wisdom, like apples of gold in basins of silver.

THE BITER BIT.

George F. Train thus writes me:

MILLER'S BATH HOTEL, 41 W. 26 st.,
NEW YORK, Dec. 29.

Dear Elder Evans:

Shakerism continues to shake Christianity, and Spiritualism continues to demoralize Christians. After breaking up Gordon, the Hugh Boy at Apollo Hall, medium Wassen at Tammany, after exposing Katie King at Philadelphia, after fighting the Spiritualists at their meetings and through the press for years, Dr. Miller, who went to Chittenden to capture the Eddys, has himself been captured! The biter has been bit at last; he has gone over, bait, line, hook and sinker! His last postal card reads:

"Prepare to meet thy God, for he is up here among the mountains."

SURRENDERED.

Thus runs a postal card from Dr. Miller:

CHITTENDEN, Dec. 28, 1874.

Dear Elder Evans:

Your article on Spiritualism in Tribune, Dec. 26, is just at hand. You are all sound on the genuineness of some of these manifestations; I have been through it — have been with the Eddys ten days. They are as true as steel; the truth about them has not half been told. I differ with you on the subject that Spiritualism is not a Religion, but a Science. I think it is the Science of Religion. The Eddys have captured me, soul, body, and spirit; old things have passed away, and all things have become new.

Yours,
Eli Miller.

"Steady!" is the word, in the English military service, in times of trial — in the crisis of a battle — when defeat and victory balance each other. So say we — Steady, friends, steady! keep cool and collected, if you expect to ride the whirlwind of Spiritualism and direct the storm of Materialization to ends useful to humanity. Ed. of S. & S.

GIFT OF TONGUES.

"I SAW an Angel flying in the midst of Heaven—the religious world in man—having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell upon the earth—to every nation, kindred, tongue and people." The preaching was to fear God and worship him—not to worship the beast and his image. Here is the patience of the saints who keep the commandments of God and the testimony of Jesus, which is the spirit of prophecy.

There appeared a white cloud with a woman sitting upon it, like unto Jesus. That cloud was composed of persons, "clothed in fine linen, clean and white"—with characters, like the woman. She thrust, into the earth, a sharp sickle, to reap it—the testimony of Jesus against generation.

The sign of the first Gospel degree, was the Gift of Tongues—Mother Ann spake in seventy-two different languages, thus showing that she was in rapport with the representatives of the nations, who needed the Gospel in the spirit world, and that to all of them the Gospel would be preached, and a crop gathered therefrom, of such souls as were ripe unto the harvest.

Throughout the sounding of this first testimony the gift of tongues invariably rested upon those whom the Spirit raised up as leaders to preach and minister the Gospel, from Mother Ann, to Samuel Johnson and Richard Bushnell, who were greatly gifted in tongues.

GIFT OF HEALING.

THIS Gift will be the sign of the second Gospel testimony, as the Gift of Tongues was of the first.

When the Spirit begins to raise up the leaders of the new faith, they will be endowed with the Gift of Healing, in a pre-eminent manner. This will be both as a sign and as a ministration of intrinsic good. A sign that the Gospel has increased—progressed from faith to faith, and that health of body is, hereafter, to be conjoined to health of soul. And as powerful and heart-searching testimony will be borne against the tributary lusts of the mind and the flesh, as the first witnesses bore against the consummation—fleshly lusts and generation.

In her day, Mother taught that all should build their faith upon the Gift of God—Revelation—and not upon her personally, much less upon the persons of her successors. This is the Rock of the Order—the Foundation of the Gospel—and from it cometh the Gospel increase.

Paul found some, who asked, "How are the dead raised, and with what bodies do they come forth?" A rational, scientific inquiry, which he essayed to answer, according to the light of that day, to him vouchsafed. His argument was, that there was a natural body and a spiritual body.

If we call the soul the spiritual body—perfect in all its parts—clothed upon with the natural body, we have a basis for the materialization of Moses and Elias. The Apostles saw them, as we saw the Spirits at the Eddys—except that we witnessed the materialization of many Spirits, who appeared as perfect human beings, as were any of the company present.

The reanimation of dead bodies, and the materialization of disembodied spirits, led the Apostles to believe for a time, in the physical resurrection.

Faith and Physiology have grown together, in each of the dispensations, toward a time, when none shall say, I am sick—"and neither shall there be any more pain," indicating that the natural body is out of order—Divine Order.

After the temptations of Jesus, "he went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people, that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those that were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee and from Decapolis and from Jerusalem and from Judea and from beyond Jordan." Matt. 4: 23-25.

This was the good he did. It was practical.

"After the baptism which John preached, God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." Acts 10: 37, 38.

He contended against the actual existing evils of society, by which his people—the Jews—were afflicted.

"Ought not this woman, whom Satan hath bound, lo! these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day?" Luke 13: 11-16.

His mission was to destroy the works of the devil—diseases—the result of Mosaic sins.

"When a strong man armed keepeth his palace his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armor wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoil." Luke 11: 21, 22.

Even the Gentiles were allowed to gather the crumbs that unbelieving Jews had carelessly thrown away. Jesus and Disciples went all through the cities of Judea. If there be no gift of healing, not under law, we see how much we have got to learn. May we not say with the poet, the proper study of mankind is man?

The same power of organization, or clothing, that could reanimate the whole body of a dead person, or that can clothe the whole soul with a natural body, as in materialization, could restore any one part of the physical body, that was apparently missing, or repair one that was deranged or disorganized. For we must constantly bear in mind that the spiritual body is whole—perfect.

How often, persons, who have had a limb amputated, assert that they feel it to be there as real as ever. Hence faith, in the patient, to take on materialization, is almost, if not quite, a necessity. And that faith—the vitalizing element in the gift of healing—should rest in God, as the source of all good.

[From the Oneida Circular.]

THE GREAT HEALTH REVIVAL.

"WHEN he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits to cast them out and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of diseases." Matt. 10: 1.

His command to them was:

"Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." Matt. 10: 8.

This was evidently a commission to do all that he himself had done. Mark says:

"He called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits." Mark 6: 7.

Afterward Mark says:

"They went out and preached that men should repent. And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." Mark 6: 12, 13.

Luke says:

"Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases; and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick. Luke 9: 1, 2. "And," (he adds), "they departed and went through the towns preaching the gospel and healing everywhere." v. 6.

At a later period Jesus organized a second mission of seventy disciples, and sent them into the field with the same power and the same instructions. It is probable that this movement was made when the demand for healers, excited by the previous labors of Jesus and the twelve, had reached a pitch of fervor that went beyond all possible supply: for Luke says:

"After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few." Luke 10: 1-9, as though the great crisis of the revival had come, and he had but a meagre force of seventy men to send into it. His instructions to these missionaries were, as before, "to heal the sick in every city." And, "they returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name."

We have now before us the outlines and superficial elements of the Great Health Revival, from which we are to form a conception of its dimensions. The time of the whole movement was about three years. That Jesus worked steadily at his business of healing, up to the very last day of his career, is evident from the message he sent to Herod just before his final arrest:

"Go tell that fox, Behold I cast out devils and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." Luke 13: 32.

The Great Health Revival was enacted in all the important cities and villages of Galilee, Samaria and Judea, and extending to the regions beyond Jordan on the east, and even to Tyre and Sidon on the north. Among the towns, expressly mentioned, are Jerusalem, Capernaum, Jericho, Cana, Bethany, Bethsaida, Sychar, Nazareth, Nain, Cesarea, Philippi, Dalmanutha and Decapolis. The excitement caused by his cures extended far beyond the scene of his personal labors. It is said, for instance, that "his fame went throughout Syria;" and again, that great multitudes sought him out, when he was preaching and healing at a certain place, and "followed him from Galilee and Judea, and Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan, and they about Tyre and Sidon." Thus we cannot estimate the extent of the region covered by the Great Health Revival as less than the whole of what is now called Palestine, including Idumea on the south—a total area of more than 11,000 square miles. It is about 200 miles long and 60 broad. It had a population of 6,000,000, which is nearly double the present population of the State of New York.

How often the evangelists repeat that he healed "all manner of sickness," "all sick people taken with divers diseases and torments," every sickness in all villages and cities," "the lame, the blind, the dumb, the maimed." The diseases specially named in the lists of his cures, are leprosy, palsy, fever, dropsy, blindness, deafness, demoniacal possession, lunacy, chronic issue of blood, withered hand, and death itself. Knowing, as we do, the infinite miseries of disease, and the enormous amount of human desire that is everywhere groaning for just such medical help, we must imagine, as well as we can, the height and depth and length and breadth of the life-commotion in Palestine, which we call the Great Health Revival.

LIVING TRUTH.

It is one of the peculiarities of literature, to continue in use certain phrases, full of ambiguities and indecision.

Living truth is not intended as the opposite of dead truth, for there can be no such idea existing. What then is the best definition of Living Truth? If a definition of truth is the absence of all that is erroneous, we, taking as the standard of judgment, the highest, brightest light in our souls, will find that life is truth; and that truthful life is not an ambiguity.

Truth can have no better illustration than the continual relinquishment of our errors. The relinquishment of wrong, however, does not necessitate a positive advance in the right.

Take the Spiritualists, for instance, some of the errors that have been popularly idolized in Babylon, are rejected with alacrity by them and none are more unhesitating in their denunciation. The furniture that decorated the past temples of worship, is less than useless in the present degrees of light. The Spiritualists have not accepted some advanced truths, with nearly the eagerness, that they have forsaken the man-made theologies. Our God is a most reasonable being. We feel that ere he calls souls to come up from the greatest of Babylons—churchal theologies—there is already prepared a home for their reception, replete with substantial truth. And ere the good Father and Mother ask them to forsake the old arks of unwholesome doctrine, they have prepared new mansions there, and new food for spiritual progress. Any thing that is living grows into something better; and living the truth, necessitates something more than the cessation of doing erroneously. That Jesus, under Christly instruction, was "the possiblity of the race, made real:" the embodiment of truth in his personal character—let us not doubt, until we can find a better—"I find in him no fault,"—said Pilate, faultless the exemplification of truth. If the life of Jesus is the best mode of truth now known, have we not the key to unlock the secret,—what is living truth? Our ships must each have rudders. Let Christ be the light of our passage o'er the sea of life, and in seasons of darkness and storms. We have forsaken, may be, forever, the old theologies of error. But have we got out from Babylon, or do we rest dabbling with muddy waters between two shores, the old and the new; little thinking that the waves on either side are held providentially open for our safe transit into Canaan? And now, the waves are closing; and myriads, who have heard the call: "Come out from her my people!" are going down with the Goddess of lusts, occupying their heavens, and with the carrion of Egyptian flesh-pots sticking fast in their teeth. Such have denied and do deny truth in their lives. Truth has a living expression; and we are more than once dead, if we do not give that expression, a growing illustration in our lives. Christ is that expression, and whoso lives as did the spiritual Jesus, and the converted Ann, will be a living demonstration of the truth—"a living sacrifice" unto every unspiritual thought, word and deed. It is a fact to be gloried in, that such multitudes have left the old arks of Babylonish theologies; yet it is a fact to be mourned, that such have made so little difference in their lives as to be any thing rather than a living representative of truth—any thing but a standing rebuke to the multitudes of former associations. Sufficient light has been shed upon us, to lift our characters to the heights whence Jesus was lifted up. Shall this light become our darkness, by neglect and disobedience? Let the things and loves of the old creation be of the past. Let us be determined on a further resurrection. Let purity, peace, brotherly love, equality with "unspottedness from the world" be a reality unceasing within us, then shall we, too, be "without fault," and enjoy that unperishable reward—the happy consciousness of doing right, by living the truth. To see the right and to do it, to know the truth and to live it; to discover the wrong and rebuke it, to hear duty's voice and obey it, to meet the world and shame it, to feel the cross and love it, to rise above passion and rule it, and to love Christ's life as to die to self daily—these call for martyrs in the cause of Truth, equal to any that grace the history of the past. And yet what will humanity not do for the truth? Will they not preach, pray, write and fight for it? Will they not die for it? More, will they not do any thing and every thing for it, before they will live for it? Let us have a change. Let us commence by living the truth, and then LIVING TRUTH ineradicably affixed to our banners, will comprehend every thing else.

G. A. Loomis, Shakers, N. Y.

The following article has been sent to the London Times:

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN SHAKERS.

I HAVE been abundantly supplied with English papers and extracts from English papers, giving the history of the ejection of the "Bible Christians"—called "Shakers," by the English press. I have received not less than twenty different accounts. This shows both the unusual nature of the event, and the deep and general interest taken in it, by all classes of people in England. In America, the exchanges of the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS contain detailed accounts of the sad event, with much editorial comment. This break-up, by the sheriff, of the community Home, of the "Bible Christians," at New Forest, near Lymington, Surrey, is the present sensation. It would be but a feeble expression of our feelings to say that we, the Shakers of America, sympathize with those sincere, desolated enthusiasts, who were, by due course of law, thus ruthlessly, to the number of one hundred and fourteen, men, women and children, turned out into the highway, in a cold, stormy night—into their goods and chattels piled up by the road side. In justice to the present generation of English people, we are happy to say, that throughout the whole history of those people—logical from a certain stand-point—no appearance of religious persecution has been visible. Great forbearance, by the magistrates, who have often been called upon in relation to the "Walworth Jumpers," as they were also called, has been uniformly manifest. In this we see that real progress has been made in religious toleration. England has learned to be patient and long suffering with religious fanatics. This is well.

So far as fanaticism goes, these "Bible Christians" have not been much worse than were the Shakers, when the Shakers were as young. The Shakers, with Quaker proclivities, were so impracticable, shouting, shaking, and dancing on the Sabbath day—at that time a very dreadful thing—sometimes interrupting the services of the hiring Priests, in their own steeple-houses, that finally they had to leave the country entirely. And in America, Ann Lee and her Elders passed a tithe of their time in its various prisons.

If these people have, in them, as they claim, the basis of a new order of things, that will fulfill the prophecies and meet the wants of our race, God is in it. Man cannot overthrow it.

We do not question their faith, zeal, earnestness of purpose and devotional endurance, manifested throughout their two, or three years' history. These are virtues we love. But, in theological theories—theology—either the Jumpers, or Shakers are wide of the mark, on some essential points.

Cannot the facts be come at? The Girley woman, who is the mother of these people, holds, with the Protestants, Catholics and Greeks, that Jesus was the very Christ—that his dead body was raised from the tomb—that such rising was the true and final resurrection—that his body was spiritualized—that after this pattern, all human bodies, however long dead, are to be resurrected. She claims to be resurrected, in like manner, with this slight variation, as expressed by Paul—"We shall not all die, but we shall all be changed." She is "changed." Her followers are also being "changed," without going through the process of physical death. Such is the ground of their faith, that nothing can harm them, physically. "See," they said, "that after being exposed to the rain and cold, all night, wet through and through, none are injured — none taken cold even!"

To them, the second appearing of Christ is the second appearing of Jesus — personally. And is not this Orthodox?

The Second Adventists held to, and looked for his personal appearing. Were they less fanatical than these more modern Second Adventists? Some Millerites prepared robes in which to ascend and meet the Lord in the air, at his advent, when the great Trumpet of the Angel Gabriel should sound.

We believe Christ is a spirit sphere, with things and persons in it — interior to all other things and persons — that Jesus was born and educated a Jew — saw the travail of his soul towards that sphere, and into it was finally baptised, through John, the end of the Law and the last of the Prophets, coming down from Melchisedek — the Heathen — who baptised Abraham, the ancestor of Jesus, and father of the whole Jewish people, into a seed — faith — of Spirituality.

That Germ of Spirituality expanded and grew, coming down through the Prophets, to John, and culminated in Christianity. In Jesus, that Christianity was as an Acorn to the Oak — a little Leaven to the whole mass — a mustard seed to the plant — a grain of sand to the seashore — a little stone to the Mountain that is yet to fill the whole earth, as the waters cover the hills, valleys and rocks of the sea-basin.

The two Peoples agree in the fact of a Second Coming of Christ, and differ as to who and what Christ is — and in the time and manner of his second coming. Both hold celibacy as a necessary condition of Resurrected Souls. But while Shakers respect the injunction — "Not to touch a woman" — Girleyites seem to consider, that being now resurrected, they can throw off restraint. They do not hesitate to practice great sexual familiarity in public meetings.

Respecting the ownership of land, in large quantities, and the monopoly of life elements — holding that community of goods is a Christian virtue, the Shakers and Bible Christians are at one again, showing there are important elements of union.

While one party take the Scriptures as the infallible Word of God, and the physical resurrection as the final resurrection of glorification, the other party, reasoning from facts and principles, regard the Scripture records as illustrative of the then present faith of the writers and actors, to be interpreted by those facts and principles, regardless of persons and old theories. Both agree that the dead are raised, and may re-animate their physical bodies, if not too much decomposed for their reparation, under the laws of materialization. But the Shakers assume that such re-animation is but a first resurrection, to prepare the human mind for the second — the first is abnormal — temporary. The second is normal, and may become universal, to the human race. As there is no permanent physical resurrection, so neither will there be a personal re-appearing of Jesus, as the Christ. If Jesus and the Apostles, who saw and knew only in part, and prophesied as through a glass, darkly, did so understand, up to the time that they passed into the spirit world, and as nearly all the so-called Christian world have understood, and yet understood — such understanding no more establishes the fact, than it establishes the fact, that his Kingdom was to be of this world, when the facts were, His Kingdom was to be set up and established in the world of Spirits, on the basis of the Mosaic Law, and to be composed of the twelve Tribes of Israel, upon which the twelve Apostles would sit, as upon twelve thrones. That was the Man-child — a male church — a continuation of the Jewish Pentecostal Christian Church, caught up to God, away from the persecuting power — Dragon-Rome and the Gentile Christian Church on earth. That Gentile Christian Church included generation, private property, war, and Church and State governments. It has had its reign, 1200 years. It is now being broken. The fragments, of its Monarchical Kingdoms, lie around loose — broken, by Republican Principles, as concentrated in the Infidel Governments of the United States. These are breaking, in pieces, all other Kingdoms and Governments, because Christ, having made his second appearance — spiritually — has begun to organize a Gentile Pentecostal Church, on the earth, under the protection of a New Earth Civil Government, which secures liberty of conscience, as a Right.

The Marriage of the Lamb and Bride will be effected through Spiritualism. It will be a union between the Jewish Pentecostal Church, in the Heavens, and the Gentile Pentecostal Church on Earth. After the marriage of the two churches is perfected, their united testimony will be against all evil that afflicts humanity — physical and spiritual. They will sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the Song of the Lamb — "In thy light we behold light."

Could the English Shakers, some of whom have visited us, see things in this light, good homes await the whole ejected company. And what appeared to be their total ruin, may thus be turned to their temporal and eternal gain.

EDITORS OF SHAKER AND SHAKERESS:

The writer, as you are aware, is an outsider. He, nevertheless, takes an abiding interest in the great work of love and wisdom you appear to be prosecuting with steadily increasing vigor. I have read every line of your last issue with interest and admiration — I hope, with present and future intellectual and spiritual profit.

I congratulate you on the remarkably high standard of literary merit your publication has attained, treating subjects of the highest practicable moment to the great human family of to-day. The last number, especially, is rich in important matter. Your articles on the vital subject now demanding and arresting the attention of the civilized world, yet to play so important a part in its higher evolutions, are masterly in a high degree — vigorous, but in the Christ Spirit — evincing a cool, but determined championship for the truth. When soldiers of this campaign, their leaders paralyzed, demoralized, desert the ground already won, you step forth alone, renewing the attack vigorously and persistently. Then there are the excellent, the meritorious articles of your outside correspondents, evidently the productions of men of noble hearts and bright intellects, earnest co-workers with God in his evolving work for the elevation of the race. The article entitled "Gospel Travail" is beautiful in its simplicity and practical bearing on our every-day life. It is a subject of vast import, not to your people only, but to all people. It demonstrates the necessity of looking well to thought, as the source of feeling, word and action.

The article entitled "A Happy New Year," teems with sound, practicable ideas, creditable alike to the head and heart of the writer. They are specially intended for the young of your Order. They are of vital importance to young and old of all Orders.

The Editress gives a clear, well thought-out essay, as are all her articles, evincing a philosophic mind and catholic, Christ-like spirit, a guarantee of the capabilities of the sex, for the special work the redemption of the world requires of them. The subject is of vast importance to the public at the present time.

Of the "Influence of Kindness," "Contribution," and other articles, as of the Poetry and Music, much might be said to their credit.

I hope your interesting little periodical will go on. Its influence is beginning to be felt. It promises to become an acknowledged leader in the labor of Wisdom and Love for Human Elevation.

You stand on vantage ground, high as are the heavens above the earth — not inspired by the mighty dollar, but by the mightier Wisdom and Love — the Sublime Centre of all vitality.

Yours, with admiration and love,

Robert Stephens.

DEAR FATHER EVANS:—Your note is at hand. I will try and prepare a short statement of my visit to Eddys for the SHAKER and SHAKERESS.

They have made a thorough convert of me. There are startling changes to take place soon now. The fundamental principles of the Shakers, it seems to me, will become more or less prominent in the new order of things.

We must have a new religion, based on Physiology. Old things will pass away, and all things become new. A new Heaven and a new Earth are to be developed. There is a most gigantic power being manifest through these Eddys, and if it can be controlled for good, it will be a great thing. I have arranged with Horatio to have a record kept of all their manifestations every day. I think it will be a matter of great interest to the whole human family.

Dr. Beard is all wrong in his scientific exposition of these manifestations, and has shown himself a great —, in my estimation in the positions he has taken.

With kind wishes to all the friends there.

I am truly yours,

E. P. Miller.

SHAKER VILLAGE, SHIRLEY,
Mass., December 14, 1874.

KIND AND RESPECTED BROTHER, JOHN GREAVES:—Yours, of Nov. 30, came duly to hand. The information about the manifestations in Vermont is highly appreciated by the Brethren and Sisters. Accept thanks for the rich store of Love, from yourself and others. To stir one another up to a realization, that we are in a work — a dispensation — where the prevailing sentiment is Love, is doing good service. The seal of love is self-sacrifice. We, thereby, increase our own happiness and the happiness of others. The order of our Gospel is the product of, and is sustained by, self-sacrifice. I thank you for the sacrifice you have made, and for the continued kindness you have manifested. They who give their all, and maintain a uniform kindly bearing, are, to-day, glorious.

Happy to hear of the young Brethren and Sisters — of the Aged, and also of those who bear the burden of to-day. They are my relations. With them, I am happy in blessing and being blessed.

Your visit, to the Eddys, was seasonable. I feel assured it will be of much importance in the future. I hope an account of the manifestations, witnessed by Elder Frederick and yourself, will be recorded in the Society. The extraordinary manifestations bother scientists. They have neither science enough, nor time enough, to settle one phase of Spiritualism, before another presents itself. Spiritualism will humble the pride of all flesh. To maintain a humble attitude, is to be in union with the work of to-day.

We all thank you for the pains you have taken, to give us such full and satisfactory account of your visit, and of the manifestations. Though outward, they are doing an important work, in reference to a coming day. Modern civilization is beginning to feel the power of Spiritualism. I am on the watch-tower, looking for the next wave from the spirit land. The first, enlightened the understanding. The second, will touch the heart — cause conviction and repentance. The sentiments of to-day and of the past, which have produced a state of things, called civilization, will undergo great changes. Prevailing sentiment being changed, on important fundamental points, they, who do not take hold and embody the increasing light, favorable to moral and physiological integrity, bearing on the good time coming, will be left out in the dark, to die out, as did the flesh-pot loving Hebrews of former times.

May that not be the case with us, either collectively, or individually.

Communicate largely of our love, and accept, for yourself, a full measure. Our most loved Ministry add theirs.

Daniel Fraser.

BAPTISM OF JESUS.

—o—

THERE is but one faith and one baptism that can save us from sin, and that is the faith and baptism of Jesus, into and unto Christ.

Jesus believed and testified that all mankind were deeply lost from God. He believed that all were out of the way, going astray in sin and darkness. Jesus believed in a new birth, and a Spiritual Resurrection; that there was only one way for mankind to be saved, and this was the way he opened and walked in himself. He believed it was necessary to deny self, of all the carnal pleasures of this world, to be saved — believed it necessary to leave father and mother, wife and children, houses and lands, and his own life also, to inherit the kingdom of Heaven. He believed it necessary for him to obey and keep his Father's commands strictly. He also believed it necessary to crucify the old nature with its affections and lusts, also his own will and selfishness. He believed there was not one Christian in all the race of Adam—that all belonged to the world. He believed and testified that the marriage order did not belong to his kingdom—no husband nor wife known there—but fathers and mothers, brethren and sisters, those who practiced the words and character of angels. This was the faith of Jesus. No one can be a Christian without that faith. Every one that possesses this faith and practices it is a true follower of Jesus. The church of Jerusalem had that faith, and did practice it, for some time. But when that church fell away, the faith of Jesus departed from the earth, and when he came the second time he did not find one who kept his faith. Ann Lee received that faith by revelation, and by obedience to it, she became a mother in the new creation—O how beautifully bright and shining are her children. All true Shakers are the offspring of the same parentage of Jesus and Ann—Celestial parents. Blessed and holy are all those who have received that faith of Jesus, and the holy baptism of Father's and Mother's Spirit, because they have power to rise above the earth and walk, as the angels, in Heaven, and to overcome the world in themselves, as our Heavenly Father and Mother have done.

WHAT ARE WE DOING?

—o—

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:

WHAT are we doing? Are we keeping the way of God, in its purity, according to the teaching and example of our Gospel Parents? In our daily vocations, whatever they may be, are we faithful according to our best abilities, being careful and prudent in whatever of temporalities with which we have to do? Are we meek and gentle in our deportment, manifesting a kind and forbearing spirit toward one another, striving always to make as much allowance for the weakness of others as for our own? Having gained a good degree of mastery over our baser appetites and passions, are we alive to the fact that we have but entered the portico of the vast temple of spiritual refinement, but just entered the forest, cleared away the coarse, natural growth, preparatory to cultivating the fields of illimitable improvement? When we see pride, arrogance, envy, superstition, jealousy, anger, hatred, impatience, disrespect, loquacity, indifference to the feelings of others, idleness, or any other of the heads of the hydra, cropping out, are we aware that we are merely looking into a mirror? Are we aware that the more we are under such influences, the less patience and forbearance we have with the shortcomings of others?

In this day of materialization, do we comprehend the vital importance of the fact that God is manifest in humanity? That as we respect the Holy Eternal Parents, in our Elders, Sisters and Brothers, even so may we be respected? And do we further comprehend that love of God in humanity need not be limited by sectarian bars? Are there not sheep that are not of this fold—is there any living thing God has made that is not entitled to sufficient respect, to be treated with kindness?

My dear Gospel Kindred, is not this a good time for me to examine myself—to prove my own self to see that I am not only in the faith some time ago delivered to the saints, but in the increase of God? I think it is.

TELLING EXPERIENCE.

—o—

EDITOR SHAKER AND SHAKERESS: I see your radical paper contains no advertisements, not even "Purely Vegetable Bitters," nor New Sunday School Music Books. Of course it lacks one source upon which other periodicals largely depend. May be you can spare room for this communication. I wish to publish some of my religious experience. I am a beginner. I am desirous to encourage the youth, by pointing to those whose example has been blessed to me. Let me say to you, Obey the plain teachings of Truth, and you can succeed in keeping in the very foot-prints of our Saviors, who go before us.

For several years I have been trying to "follow Jesus"—or thought I was. A crooked path I made, stumbling over temptations I willfully ran against, and prayed to be delivered from—trying to smooth over incongruities, until nearly discouraged as to the possibility of ever reaching my Ideal. I must also confess that I excused myself from much of the "burden" and the yoke—self-denial—by belief in the Divinity of Jesus—that his miraculous conception enabled him to resist sin—a power not vouchsafed to me, a poor sinner.

Then came to my weary, sin-sick soul, the Truth as it is in Christ—practical Christianity—practical Christianity in the United Society of Shakers. I read all the Shaker Books and Papers I could get. New Light shined upon my path. The absorbing question was—Is it true, that the Millennial Church keeps, in its purity, the faith, once delivered to the Saints? I visited this branch of your Society, as an inquirer. Soon, the Ministry, from Mt. Lebanon came. The preaching, daily walk and conversation of Elders, Eldresses, Brothers and Sisters, confirmed me in the faith.

During the first two weeks, I had such constant feeling of peace, and of the Love of God, that I wondered if Heaven had already begun. Is the cross so soon a crown!—the yoke so easy, and the burden so light!—While I lie down in green pastures, beside still waters, let me not forget the giver of all good. By childlike obedience—by close union with my Elders—may I be prepared for temptations, by which my faith must be tried. Then, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.

Never before was my sky so clear. No doubts becloud my pathway. No incongruities to smooth over. No stumbling blocks. A straight, narrow path leads steadily upward. A Light, shining brighter and brighter, unto the perfect day.

BELOVED ELDER FREDERICK AND COMPANIONS IN GOSPEL ORDER:

I am much pleased with your "Seven Testimonies," in the Jan. 75, No. of S. & S. It is all very good.

When the First Testimony was proclaimed, by Mother Ann, against Generation, its vitality depended on its advocates Living it—reducing it to practice, by bearing a cross against works of concupiscence. Had they not done so, their mission would have been of little account to humanity. The power We exercise, for good, at the present time, is in our united effort to carry forward that same testimony.

If we ever take a step, in advance of that testimony, that step will be taken in the same way the first step was taken, in the first Testimony—by reducing it to practice.

It is well to have time to consider the philosophy of the situation, but have we not had all the themes digested, leading to the second step in the drama? Who wants to be convinced now, that a poor, weakly, diseased man, or woman is a poor medium for God, or Angels, to work through? Nearly every one believes improper aliment is the cause of very much of the physical evils we are laboring under. Yet there are as many excuses, for continuing to do as our fathers have done, as were found among the Ohio New Lights, when John Meachum, Issachar Bates and Benjamin S. Young told the people they would have to quit sleeping with their wives. Oh! what a lamentation ascended from Turtle Creek Valley, when, Testimony of the first Thunder was proclaimed. The flesh was held in as high estimation by Preachers Stone, Thompson and their condutors, as are Superfine Flour, Tobacco, Tea, Coffee, Flesh Meat and cognate unphysiological diets and indulgences, by many, among Believers, in this day. And as it took the force of Truth, to separate those from their Idols—so will it take the force of uncompromising truth, to separate—to emancipate souls, from the Idols of this day—to let in the light of the second Testimony, against unphysiological living.

You say our Fathers and Mothers confined their work to one testimony—the Testimony against the work of concupiscence. That was wise. Now, what if we should confine our efforts to the duties of the second Testimony, and let the rest go, until we feel that we have made sure, solid ground to stand on. And in order to do this, let us establish a working Power, in every Society, of such as are willing to live out the principles of their Testimony, unitedly.

What chance would there be, for a young man, or woman, to bear the cross, surrounded with the temptations found in the higher walks of city life? Hence the call, "come out from among them, that ye be not partakers of their sins."

Such were the conditions of success, in the First Testimony. Shall we not follow the same rule, in every advance movement?

Let the few, who are ready to take this step, and keep this Testimony, "Come out," and form a Family, and live the Testimony of the Second Thunder. Let this be called the First Order.

I could see some sense, in such an arrangement as that—but can see no sense in the present arrangement of 1st Order, 2d Order 2d Family, or Gathering Order.

Let me congratulate you on getting up a good Paper, for January, 75.

Our hearts are overflowing—gushing out—with Love, for Elder Frederick and his dear good People. Do receive.

FIRE.

—o—

SINCE our form was made up, there has occurred, in the centre, or Church Family, at Mt. Lebanon—on February 6—the greatest and most destructive fire ever experienced by Believers. Eight buildings—dwelling-house, Sisters' shop and wood-house combined, ice-house, storehouse, barn, cart-house, cider mill, gas-house and shed, entirely consumed. Two other buildings, with their contents, damaged. Total loss estimated at $100,000.

Pittsfield, eight miles distant, was telegraphed and sent fire brigade, with engine and 1,000 feet hose, which came through in fifty-five minutes, and did good service in extinguishing the fire.

The neighbors turned out in mass. The Tildens came in force, bringing a good supply of fire extinguishers, with parties to use them.

To all, we tender our grateful acknowledgments, for aid and sympathy.

Young George Tilden was efficient in saving the infirmary. To H. A. Tilden, Marvin Sackett and H. Whiting, we are indebted for valuable suggestions in saving other buildings, especially the Meeting House.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

Elders Daniel Boler and Daniel Crossman, both injured. Andrew Barrett, collar bone broken. Eldress Harriet Goodwin was barely saved by being taken, by ladder, from an upper window. No insurance—internal or external—the loss presses heavy upon the whole Order. Prompt payment of debts due to Shakers, would much relieve.

THE WORD OF GOD.

—o—

WHAT is the word of God? How spoken, heard, or understood? Is it the Bible, as a whole, or any part of it? The apostle John said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." According to that definition, the outward universe of matter is His Word, an out-growth from the Universal Mind, which existed anterior to all bibles—the soul of all things; and although imperceptible to the outward senses, is the moving cause of all existence within the spheres of God's creation.

The Word of God has been heard and felt in every land and clime, and by all nations, ever since the foundations of the earth or heavens were laid. He has spoken, and continues to speak, through the rocks, plants and flowers; through the sapling and the full-grown tree, with its wide-extended branches, and roots deeply imbedded in the soil. God's Word is indestructible. The laws of gravitation, of expansion and cohesion never change. They are facts—laws which pertain to the universe—a portion of God's outspoken Word, to the visible, from the unseen worlds. In all their evolutions they are upheld by his power, and caused to move in harmony; and the relations which they bear, one to the other, are perfect. God does not speak as with human voice, but in acts—works—and through human agencies and invisible intelligences.

While we must acknowledge that God has spoken through Nature—through the earth and its products—through the sun, moon and starry heavens, we can but admire the wisdom with which He has meted out his Word, down through the ages, to meet the developed and undeveloped condition of the people. In the childhood state, He spake in whispers—modulated tones. Yet Truth, abstractly considered, never changes. In all essentials it is the same. Cause and effect stand in corresponding relations the one to the other, in the past, as in the present. Health-producing and health-destroying causes always bring forth the same results, whether in a physical, moral, or spiritual point of view. Every departure from law makes its impress upon the being. Physical disease marks its victim. Sensuality dwarfs the intellect and mars the image of the heavenly, which should be reflected in the countenances of all who are created with the inherent germs of immortal life.

We do not need that some messenger from the high heavens should come to our sphere to point out the debauched, those who have departed from rectitude. John the revelator, spake of the servants of God, who had the Father's name, (character), written in their foreheads; and of those "who had not received the mark of the beast." The life deeds, whether good or evil, are delineated in the countenances and felt in the exhalations that go from them.

What a boundless field of thought, of contemplation and study, is open to the human mind, in searching to understand God's Word, manifest in works—outspoken, and what remains to be spoken, the written, and the yet unwritten, which pertain to future, unborn ages. The past, contrasted with the future, is only as drops of water when compared with the ocean. An eternity lies before us.

Sacred, and what is called profane history, touch at different points upon the origin, life and progress of nations and kingdoms, and of the rise and fall of empires. But how fragmentary it must of necessity be; mere atoms when compared with the indivisible whole. Every thing in the past, as far as we have knowledge, as well as in the present, avows one fixed unvarying principle or law, that is applicable to all nations and peoples.

All true records of events, past or present, concerning natural or spiritual things, should be received and treated with respect and due consideration. Mortals can neither make nor destroy truth. They may lend their aid to strengthen, or to weaken it; but its course is onward, and it is omnipotent! No book, however inspired, or well written, can contain all truth, or fix the boundary lines of its increase.

The bibles, of different nations, all have recorded truth, more or less, as revealed to, and interpreted by, them; but if all the bibles, ever written by Greek, Catholic or Protestant, of every land, should be burned to-day, not one particle of God's Word, which is quick and powerful, would fail or be destroyed. All the truths which those bibles contain, were in existence, in some form, before they were revealed to mortals, and would remain, subject to the law of revelation, in God's own time and manner. God's agencies, through which he speaks and works, are multitudinous.

Countless numbers of purified spirits are sent from the inner spheres to speak the Word of God to those in the earth sphere who are the most spiritually progressed, and the farthest removed from sensuality and selfish loves. These are the "angels who fly in the midst of heaven," preaching the Word in the highest, purest form, that mortals are prepared to receive. They are God's ministers of spiritual truth, sent from the heaven of resurrected souls, who have been baptised with the Christ baptism, which is, "fire and the Holy Spirit." They are over and around the pure in heart who can see and hear God's voice through messengers whom He sends. Nothing can exceed, in excellence and beauty, the utterances of Jesus in his sermon on the mount: "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." They are in communion with angelical beings, they list for the sound of cherubic wings, and hear the voice of God when He speaks.

HEAVEN.

—o—

WHERE is heaven? and when shall we find it? The impression generally given in speaking of heaven, is, that it is something in the future—a place where the departed good assemble, or rather which they inhabit—whose employments are prayer and praise; living very harmoniously together, up somewhere in the New Jerusalem—whose streets are paved with gold; over which they march with the harps of God in their hands. To many, these are sickly sentimentalities—words without meaning—the region of Utopia.

All that reason can depict for the future, should have an eternal now. If purity and goodness are the foundations of a heavenly structure, should they not be laid in every heart? "Ye are the temple of the living God; and whosoever defiles this temple, God will destroy;" or annul, as being unfit for the building. Again, this heavenly city is to be illumined by the light of God. A city is made up of people and houses being in close proximity to each other; they differ in magnitude, according to location and enterprise. By these we only get an idea of the city above.

It is a time when public attention is being largely drawn toward the subject of materialization; and we propose to have the New Jerusalem so materialized, that it will be a tangible existence—a reality—to be enjoyed in the present time. We are told that God is Love; and that heaven is His dwelling-place. If the love of God can enter the hearts of men and women, that they will be drawn together, to carry out this good spirit of love, so that the light which illumines this city or people, may be the light of every heart; and so that every evil and discordant element may be banished, it will be a beautiful, present reality, rather than an anticipated future prospect. Let the experiment be tried; and if it do not succeed, then there is a work to be done, to fit and prepare individuals for a higher life, even a heavenly one.

On the earthly plane, two individuals were to become one flesh; on the spiritual and heavenly plane, these will form one united and harmonious spirit, which will blend all into one body of good, whether there be two, ten, or ten thousand, who shall make up the kingdom of heaven.

Jesus, in giving instructions of heaven, says, "It is within, or among you." Any one who will forsake all earthly goods—all earthly relationships which are selfish—for the one grand object of living godly in this present evil world, will find that heaven has in very deed commenced in one soul: and the more there are possessed of this spirit, the more enlarged heaven will be; and there will be no great change from the heaven of this world, to that in the world to come; it will be in degrees of happiness, not in any change of principles. We read of heaven, and the heaven of heavens; which admit of a large increase of that spiritual light and power, which will cause any soul to take the first step heavenward.

The greatest good will yield the greatest happiness in physical things, as in spiritual things. The epicure, who takes the greatest pleasure in the indulgence of his sordid appetite, often finds the effect pain and misery; delighting in present gratification, at the expense of future happiness; and those who stimulate themselves with poisonous narcotics, and spirituous beverages, must have these increasingly to keep up the excitement; when this ceases, then happiness is at a discount; so their heaven cannot be welling up continually, as in a soul full of self-denial to every thing that does not centre in God; for no one will believe these things are an emanation from Him. Souls must of necessity look far into the future, for substantial happiness.

It occurs to me, that any one bound to habits detrimental to physical health, or spiritual growth, has a very limited idea of that high estate, which we term heaven; and the sooner he or she begins to expunge those things from his or her life-practice, by strictly denying self of them, the higher up on the ladder, reaching from earth to heaven, will he or she find him or her self.

CORRESPONDENCE.

—O—

ELDRESS ANTOINETTE:

MY DEAR SISTER—I have a sweet good morning for you. I am always happy to meet you face to face, and with you feast on heavenly food, and dwell upon themes relating to the Angel life. Those seasons are refreshing. When we cannot thus meet and commune, we are glad of the pen medium to convey our thoughts.

"The pure in heart, see God." Where do they see Him? Do not those who walk in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus, reflect the image of the Heavenly, and become one with him, even as he was one with the Father? If this be so, then we see and feel God in all who live godly lives; and it matters little whether they are in material form, or freed therefrom. In spirit and essence they are one. I love to commune with such spirits—to mingle my thoughts and feelings with theirs—and from them draw strength and inspirational power. It is invigorating to drink of spiritual waters which flow in such channels, and to be immersed in them.

Do we not, at times, see and feel the Christ spirit—in dove form—coming to bless and approve, when we receive the same baptisms that Jesus was baptized with? That spirit leads to humility—loving simplicity—devoid of worldly pride and haughty mien, in thought, word and action. When selfishness and vain ambition are subdued, then is the soul exalted, and made noble. I am thankful to call all such by the endearing name of brother and sister. They are bright lights in the pathway of weary pilgrims, who are journeying to their heavenly home, and who joyfully bear the Christ's cross, for the sake of the reward that it brings.

I want to tell you that now, while I am writing, I feel the spirits, of many of the dear departed Saints, gathering near, and their influence over me is like the breath of the morning—healthful—and inspiring. I am impressed that the present, to them, as to us, is a season of great interest; it being the Centennial anniversary of the arrival of these messengers, to Columbia's shores, who brought the glad tidings of full salvation from sin, by the cross of Christ. Is it not their present mission to infuse new life into the testimony which they then bore, and to give new impetus to the work which they, by the revelation then given, commenced? They planted the seed, and left it to be cultivated by their successors, who would be aided by increasing light of divine revelation.

Jesus told his disciples, that after he had passed from their visible presence, they would be empowered to perform greater works than he had done. The first founders of the Millennial Church, virtually left the same testimony. They said, while looking through prophetic lens, "We see the Church of Christ's Second Appearing, rising in glory and beauty! There is glory beyond glory; and to its growth in goodness and perfection, there will be no end! Its increase, at the commencement, was necessarily slow. The religion, which those Witnesses taught and lived, was unpopular, and unpalatable; for it was like a sharp sword to divide "flesh and spirit;" and the pharisaical priesthood, church-goers, and lovers of sensuality, were alike strong in denunciation and persecution. The little Band had to work their way through privation, toil, suffering of soul and body, which few of the present generation are able to realize; but they were visited and fed by Angels, and were thus sustained. They passed through great tribulation, but continued faithful to the charge committed to their trust, until they had finished the work on earth given them to do.

May the present toilers in the field never grow weary in well doing, nor lose sight of the deep humility and dependence, on a higher power, that our first parents possessed, in the earnestness of spirit which they manifested at all times—morning, noon and eventide. May we also possess and show forth, in practical life, that we have been baptized with the same spirit. Then, we shall be lifted above earthly attractions and walk with them in white, as they were lifted up to walk with Christ and his angels.

I am aware that many, outside of Zion, and some of the young within her courts, are asking, What of the future? "We know not what a day may bring forth;" but we do know that the powers of the invisible worlds are moving; and if we watch and wait and have our lamps trimmed and burning, and are clad in virgin purity, we shall be ready to advance when the Spirit calls us to come up still higher on the plane of angelic life. Self-denial, faith in God, and a dependence upon his power, will bear us onward, and still onward, to rest in truth—in God.

Faternally thine,

Hester A. Adams, Alfred, Me.

LOVE THAT IS TRUE.

—O—

"TRUE love worketh no evil." In meditating on the subject of true love, we find, in its meaning, a growth of the higher life—a depth of pure aspiration, in which the inner feelings of the soul work in harmony with the spirit of eternal good; an element, which is intuitive in every human being, as an attribute of the Divine Creator. As "the tree is known by its fruit," so is true love by its workings in the soul; which secure eternal treasures, not only to individuals, but to the grand whole as one; for its power is Omnipotent.

Do we not learn the lesson of love, from the example of our Savior? His life was a living testimony of this most noble principle. And what were his workings? Why, he toiled assiduously, for the benefit of humanity—for the development of higher principles of enduring worth.

At the expense of personal comfort, through sorrowing of spirit, and trouble of soul, incessantly, he labored for the reclamation of virtue,—for the promulgation of a pure religion, in which the souls of humanity, should work deeds of righteousness. And later, we are informed of many, Christian pioneers, whose life-records, were filled with noble deeds, wrought through the spirit of true love. Such characters claim our highest admiration. Much has been spoken, and written on the subject of love; but where is its meaning known—its power felt? In the hearts of Christian toilers, whose endeavors are concentrated in the ever progressive work of truth. Christ has said: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Here, then, is where we find our relation to the God-spirit. True love is manifested in deeds of charity,—words of kindness—and acts of pure philanthropy.

When we see the effects of love's genial influence, on the sorrowing heart, how happy we feel! Its cheering rays often permeate the darkest recesses of life; and the shadows are bid to flee by its imperative, yet always soothing tones. The grieved and oppressed, are caused to look up through the eyes of joy, and behold the dawn of a brighter day, that is not to be followed by the night of sorrow. Again we perceive its workings, for reclamation. We see it clasp the erring one, in its loving embrace, and mildly chide the evil power, that would tempt the soul from virtue's path, and lead it in the broad road to destruction. And though gentle in its varied manifestations, its influence is strong, and its power mighty; for it often conquers the most stubborn will—moves even the universe by its magic touch! It has achieved victories where its opposite spirit has suffered well-merited defeat. Oh, blessed are the fountains of love! from which the soul can sip, and be filled to overflowing. But dreary, desolate, and sad is life,—void of its true meaning, where this most coveted gem is wanting. Love is the rich soil, where grow the choicest plants of truth, on which the brightest flowers of virtue bloom. And its substance is the same, in the sunshine and storm. And, though the sun cease to shine, and Earth pass away, the principles of true love will endure forever. And when the souls of humanity shall have attained a condition of purity—then shall they know the supremacy of true love, over the false, earthly element, that so often claims this title; but which is only a spurious article at best. True love, is the Christ-spirit, working in, and through the soul, leading it ever onward, even unto perfection.

TIME, IMPROVED, IS WEALTH.

—O—

THE proper improvement of time is a subject upon which much has been said and written; the importance of which cannot be over-estimated; for the weal or woe of our race depends upon it. The necessity of hand labor, also the advantages derived therefrom, both in a physical and moral point of view, calls for earnest thought. The scripture injunction, "They who will not work neither shall they eat," is as just as it is wise.

Could the public be brought to understand and feel, that no person, possessing physical and mental ability, should be considered a good citizen without working at some useful employment, of what incalculable benefit it would be to all classes. Soon would the wilderness bloom like Eden, and barren lands become a terrestrial paradise. It should be borne in mind by all, rich and poor, that honest laborers in the community, are the heart—the sustaining element in our Republic.

Those who are young in years would do well to give attention to the cultivation of the mind, as well as to proper physical labor. Both are essential to the formation of good and true characters. Young people who perform little, or no manual labor, are apt to neglect the mental exertion which is necessary to govern the thoughts; and they are left unrestrained to roam at large, and build air castles, and form plans for after life, which, at more mature age, are found to be impracticable. In imagination they rise on fancy's wings and explore unknown regions — launch out upon creation's broad expanse — thus giving latitude to thoughts which are fullacious, and no one can tell where they will lead. In this way, the mind oftentimes becomes confused, and exhausted; when it should ever be kept vigorous, and receptive to good and true influences. Youth, is a good time to curb the thoughts — to direct them aright and cause them to flow in a proper channel.

They, who are wise enough to pursue this course, while forming their character, will find true enjoyment; and as they develop, will become more and more beautiful in the sight of men and Angels. Passions, indulged in the mind, generally lead to action. Thought, plans the deed, whether good or evil; and crime of almost every grade is the product of idleness. Watts said truly — "Satan finds some mischief still, for idle hands to do."

It is true that some, who have been thus led astray, in their youth have by the aid of friends and great exertions of their own, become good members of society. But, ask them what it cost to retrace their steps and return to the path of rectitude? They will tell you, the cost cannot be counted; and if they had learned the important lesson of governing their thoughts they would never have wandered into the paths of sin and demoralizing habits.

And be it ever remembered, that every evil, withstood, gives additional strength and power of resistance; while every indulgence detracts therefrom. Each step in the downward track, must not only be repented of, but must be retraced. Thus great delay is caused in the soul's ascension to the higher plane of life; and many times courage fails in the attempt — the fruit of wrong-doing; whereas, every evil passion denied, gives impetus to progression; and souls will ascend from one degree to another, till they reach the goal of perfection.

Eunice Bathrick, Ayer, Mass.

REVERIE, OR VISION.

At an early hour of the morning — while the dew was yet upon the tender grass — my spirit seemed to take flight and wing its way over hill and dale. The birds were singing merrily, — the air was filled with sweet melody, — and my mind was replete with heavenly sensations.

At length, I seemed to near a beautiful grove, surrounded by hills; and my angel guide, who had accompanied me, said, "The name of this place is Canaan." I there saw stately forest trees — wild flowers — bubbling rills; and every thing around appeared green and living, and filled with the spirit of praise. I was charmed with the beauties above me, and on every side, and I exclaimed, O beautiful land of Canaan! what glory do I behold in thee! I was lost in admiration.

All was calm. A holy stillness seemed to pervade, as if angels had descended to bless; and in gentle tones they whispered, "This is hallowed ground!" And they spread a covering over the consecrated spot, as if to shield from the scorching rays of the sun, and protect from storms that might arise. As I stood gazing, I heard something that sounded like the tramping of horses' feet, and of chariot wheels — then the footsteps of an army followed — and anon, I beheld beautiful forms, and bright faces, and heard voices. I listened to catch the sound. They were not strange voices to me, I recognized most of them; and learned that some of the goodly shepherds from the Mount, had come down with their flocks, that they might feed in green pastures, and rest at noon-day.

One could hardly refrain from calling to mind the words of the prophet Jeremiah, when he foretold the return of Judah, and Jerusalem from captivity, and God would accomplish the good thing that He had promised.

"The Branch should grow up unto David, and judgment and righteousness be executed in the land." Then, He would bring health and cure to Judah and Jerusalem, and the scattered flocks should be gathered, and again pass under the hand of the prophets. And they should dwell in safety; the voice of joy and gladness would be heard; the voice of the bridegroom and bride; and the voice of them that say — praise the Lord.

Again, as I looked upon the dear ones in human form, I said, "These must be numbered with some of the fairest flowers that ever bloomed on Zion's soil; here too, are many opening buds of promise." Parents and children have here joined hands, and each has a blessing for the other. Early vows of consecration, — to live innocently before God, and all the brethren and sisters — are renewed. All speak peace, courage and strength, the one to the other, and point out the shining way of purity which leads up to the golden gates of the city of God. No uncleanness — nothing that is false — that would create strife and division, and hurt or harm in this holy mountain of God, which rises above all other hills, will be suffered to pass through those gates.

While I was listening to the sweet strains of music, a voice said to me, "Contrast the two planes of life — the natural and the spiritual. By the fruits produced, you may know them. One is light — the other — dark. They who sow to the fleshly lusts of generation, from that source reap corruption and sorrow. While those who lay down their selfish, carnal lives, and sow to the spirit, reap joy — peace — and life everlasting."

It would be vain for me to undertake to narrate all the interesting incidents — pleasant scenes — instructive lessons, and soul communings, which I saw, heard and felt, while I tarried with the lovely company in that goodly land.

When my guide reminded me that the day was far spent, and that other duties required my attention, I reluctantly said, "Farewell." And as I wended my way homeward, I remarked, "Science, theology, and all branches of literature which tend to uplift humanity, have my high esteem and appreciation. But the lessons that I have studied and learned to-day, are dearer to me; for they are so simple, direct and truthful, that they come right home to the soul. They are sweet, like angel music to the ear, — and balsam to the heart. The richest tones of music that I ever heard, were the effusions of hearts and voices, whose lives were in harmony with truth, and one continual song of praise to God.

TESTIMONIAL.

ELDRESS ANTOINETTE:

DEAR SISTER. — I feel moved to give expression to a few feelings which swell up from my heart at this time, relative to our aged brethren and sisters who have been pioneers in the Gospel work in our own day — faithful guides and shining lights in our path-way.

I feel that I owe to them a great debt of gratitude, and would gladly offer a tribute of love and thanks not only to those in my own loved home, but to all of the aged believers in Zion, who have so earnestly done the work of their time, and been noble examples of godliness to the rising generation.

It has been my privilege to spend about forty-four years of my life, where I have had daily intercourse with a large class who might properly be called the Ancients of the present spiritual Israel of God. My testimony regarding them is, I have never seen a carnal action in them — have never heard a carnal speech from them. They have been examples of humility, and patterns of truthfulness to me. They toiled to lay a foundation, in temporal and spiritual things, that a temple might be built — a home prepared — for honest sin-sick souls to gather to, away from Babylonish captivity, and the fierce storms of passion that are raging without. They sacrificed their own personal comfort for the good of others. And shall not those who have reaped the blessings which they sowed, return blessing for blessing, and revere their memory?

They are now leaving the shores of time — passing from our midst one by one; but few of that class now remain with us, and those we hold as a special blessing to the whole household of faith. I have witnessed the departure from the scenes of time of many of those dear fathers and mothers, and their spirits were peaceful, calm and triumphant. The mortal part was feeble, faint and weary; but their spirits were strong and vigorous. Like fledged birds, they were ready to respond to the spirit's call, and wing their way to a new home in the spirit land — there to commence a new travel, and progress to still greater attainments in light, life and love. I never heard any one of them express the idea that they were perfected in truth, and that there was nothing more for them to attain unto. But they have done the work of their day, and we speak peace unto them, and would suffer much, rather than to do or say aught to wound or grieve the feelings of one of those goodly servants of God, and we believe that the angels will say, "Well done!"

The prophet Esdras was inspired to compare the judgment work to a ring: "Like as there is no slackness in the last, even so there is no swiftness to the first."

We are indebted to all the prophets, the saints and seers of the ages; — all have had their mission to perform. The Jews received laws relating to agriculture and physiology, and their attention was chiefly turned to external natural truths pertaining to material things.

In the beginning of this Gospel work, the attention of the first toilers in the field was directed to the soul needs, and to do the battle against inward foes; even the king of all passions, "fleshly lusts which war against the soul." Each was accepted in his or her work.

Now if the time has come or is approaching when their successors in the field feel called upon to combine the physical truths of the Jewish dispensation with the more spiritual work of the Christian era, can we not recognize therein the prophetic ring, as one continuous work of God through succeeding dispensations? no slackness to the last, even as there is no swiftness to the first.

Paul said of God's suffering witnesses and the martyrs of former ages, "that through faith they obtained a good report; but without us could not be made perfect." While they would have need of the more spiritual soul work of the latter day saints, is it not quite possible that we may also learn something of the Jews in relation to agriculture and physiology? If this be so, then we understand how the "judgment work" may justly be compared to a "ring." Hence, when we say that the Jews, as a people, who abstained from sin by compulsory law, need also, by greater love to truth and purity, to learn the Christian principle of crucifying the nature whence sin proceeds; we do not diminish their glory, neither take away their reward. And should we say that Believers may learn of the Jews in many things pertaining to the physical, it would not detract one particle from the beauty and glory of their lives, nor the spiritual renown which they have justly earned.

So we repeat, honor, peace and blessing rest upon the aged worthies in Zion — our pilgrim fathers and mothers.

HOME OF PEACE.

CANAAN, N. Y.

Home, home, home! There's beauty rife on every side, At golden morn and even-tide; Home, sweet home! And music in the tran-qui air, That floats a - round thy bor - ders fair, Home, sweet home! The world has lost its charms for me, For pur - er joy I find in thee, O, home, sweet home! Joy which the world can never know, In thee from sac - red love doth flow, O, home, sweet home! A holy peace un-marred by sin, Is grav - en on thy walls within; And sacred or - ders guard thee round, And safely shield on hallowed ground, Home, sweet home!

How prospers the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS? In this transition state of the world the newspaper has become the missionary — the avenue of knowledge to the unsettled unsatisfied masses. Many will read a daily paper or a monthly journal, that would not hear a sermon or attend a lecture. It was a timely move, the starting of the "Shaker." It has comforted the sad, strengthened the weak, encouraged the disheartened, revealed the heavenly genius of the order, and enlightened multitudes, who as yet choose to walk in the outer "Courts of the Gentiles."

This is a period of progress. It is a very little thing to be a bit of fossil, and not much more to be an oyster. To say that oysters move, or that oysters come out when raked out, is not saying much in their favor; and so for (an individual or) a society to advance only as 'tis pushed or pulled by noble reformatory souls, all aflame with inspiration, is paying it no very high compliment. God, by the voice of immutable law, or by revelation, says progress or die. Inaction is death. "Go on," said the apostle, "unto perfection" — "from that ye may obtain" — "press on toward the mark" — the import of these passages, with the "issuing waters," seen in Ezekiel's vision cannot be mistaken. The true man, it seems to me, must be both conservative and radical, both continuous and progressive. While holding on with a terrible tenacity to the good of the past, he must have an open mind for the reception of every newly demonstrated fact in science, or truth in religion. Revelation is perpetual. God is not asleep, nor are the angels dozing under shade trees in glory. The progressive spirit that pervades a large portion of the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS charms me. I trust that its circulation is rapidly increasing. Can you not enlarge it? The world needs its teachings. I was delighted with your articles in the New York Tribune upon the materialization of spirits. Will you not publish them in the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS? They cannot have a too wide circulation. Since conversing with Prof. Crookes of London and visiting the Ed- dys in Vermont, I have not had a doubt of the fact that materialized spirits again walk the earth, as in the days of the patriarchs and prophets. The signs of the times are ominous. Already the "fig-tree puts forth." The angels are crying "Come up higher." Are our "lamps trimmed and burning?"

A GOOD EDITOR. A JOURNAL has made the discovery that "it is easier to find a dozen good newspaper writers than it is to find one good newspaper editor." This will hardly be regarded in the light of an important discovery by the public at large, for it requires but a very slight knowledge of newspapers to know that their success depends not so much on the ability of the individual writers, as upon the tact and generalship of their con- ductors.

TO OUR GOSPEL KINDRED OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH.

BELOVED FRIENDS. — The Society of New Gloucester, Maine, have had the misfortune to lose, by fire, their extensive cooper-shop, with its machinery for manufacturing shooks, together with a large quantity of staves. Loss, over $3,000.

They have previously, at different times, suffered losses in personal estate by fraudulent agents, in amounts, large to them.

They have rigorous climate, sterile, rocky soil — poor buildings, which they are unable to repair or rebuild. One dwelling-house now occupied, is almost uninhabitable from its dilapidated condition. For the last few years removal from Alfred and West Gloucester has been contemplated, but not consummated. The project is now abandoned, it being determined to remain, repair and rebuild, as they can accomplish. They need help from without.

If believers will unite and contribute of their consecrated property according to ability and gifts of charity, from one dollar to two hundred dollars from each family, to the West Gloucester family, it will be highly appreciated, and the greater blessing of the giver over the receiver will rest upon the whole Order. A beginning of $100 made.

FIRE! FIRE!!

—o—

STILL another fire at the Church Family, Mount Lebanon.

About 11 o'clock, Saturday, February 27, the alarm was given—the Herb House was on fire. It proved to be in the Press room—was supposed to have caught from a lamp, used to seal papers, and left burning. The fire was extinguished in about half an hour, with slight damage.

Two hours later, the alarm sounded again. The same building was found on fire, in three different places, in an upper room. No exertions could save the building. All efforts were directed to keep the barn and shed—but a few rods distant—from taking fire. The shed was connected with the Herb House, by gangway. This was cut away.

Henry A. Tilden, who, before, was so efficient in saving the Meeting House, was soon on the ground, with a large fire engine, on wheels. By the most heroic and determined effort of himself and men, this building was kept from the flames.

Brother Daniel Offord, with another company and small water engine, was equally successful in protecting the big barn. In both cases, the heat was so intense, and the danger so imminent, that the actors had to be covered with carpets and kept wet, to prevent them from taking fire, with the buildings.

To the stillness of the day, the well arranged, orderly operations of the managers and their co-workers, we attribute the preservation of surrounding property. As it is, the loss cannot be less than $50,000.

We feel under the deepest obligations of gratitude, to all our neighbors, who, as was well said, could not have shown more interest, had the property been their own. Especially is this true of H. A. Tilden, his sons and workmen.

Pittsfield was telegraphed, and their fire brigade again crossed the mountain. Had either of the buildings, which so narrowly escaped, caught fire, the Pittsfield company would have been in the nick of time to do service, to the full extent of their capacity. To say we appreciate the Pittsfield sacrifice, on our behalf, in this emergency, would be but a feeble expression of our feelings of relief—knowing that such help was so near at hand—when, without it, so many buildings would have inevitably burned, had the fire taken at either of the three threatened points.

CONSERVATISM.

—o—

CONSERVATISM—the desire and effort to preserve what is established—and Radicalism—progress toward abstract ideas—are considered antipodes. Yet they balance reason on the line of truth. Instead of considering their relationship as brotherly and sisterly, the majority of those who think at all, take sides with one, as opposed to the other; and as a consequence, reason is unbalanced, and loss is the result. To conservatives, radicalism is the evil sprite of humanity; to radicals, there is no worse enemy to the race than conservatives. Properly considered, these are unjust conclusions. There is nothing strange, in the fact, that “New Lights,” in all eras of the religious world, have considered the systems discovered by them, to be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Yet, these same individuals, who are thus, and now most radical, are destined to become, in their turn, the rankest conservatives of the coming era. Evolution laughs and says, “To the better hold fast.” This is ever the song of reason.

The comparative degree of good, is better; and when this is attained, we leave the good of the past, and cling tenaciously to the superlative as soon as it appears. By this, I am persuaded, how we may “leave the first principles, and go on to perfection;” condemning no good of the past, neither rejecting any superior injunction for the future. If we say we have all truth now, how can it be, that “of the increase of the gospel there shall be no end?” By assuming this position, we become bigots, and the good of conservatism is neglected. We should then argue, that any amendment suggested, was an invitation for the visitation of added plagues; while any proposed subtraction, was worthy of the judgment of blotting out one's inheritance in God forever! No one desires these. But is this the position of reason? This idea of sufficiency, carried out, would turn back the wheels of time and progress for two thousand years, and teach a savage life. Under its rod of iron, we would not dare to say what we know to be true. We would not dare to do what we know to be right; because of self-adulated conservatism. Evolution is the keyword of progress—the forerunner of “the good time coming.” Her legitimate children, are additions to genuine revelation.

When we investigate the matter closely, we see that God has so beautifully organized creation, that no two shall be, nor act, nor think, identically, yet none need swerve from the harmonious law, which is all truth. If I think a truth that is new, and each, of many, does the same, we have many truths all new; and though differing in their aspects, each and all belong to the heavenly law of spiritual progress. There are, to-day, no more staunch subjects of radicalism, than the whole body of Believers called Shakers. In their testimony against all fleshly lusts; in their resurrected life, above, even the good and best of generative men and women, they stand as reformers before the world to-day, even as Jesus did before his nation—the Jews. Let us hold fast to this—let “no surrender” to any departures from virgin lives, for a moment, be considered. But is not the best of the land yet before us? Let not our testimony and life against fleshly lusts, begin and conclude our whole mission; for is not the gospel, the power of God unto an increasing salvation, for soul and body, and for the body first? Every Shaker is praiseworthy for rebutting the least “shadow of turning,” by any, from the spirit to the flesh. Such instances there have been among us, and may yet be; and such will be anathema, without our cursing them. But let us not stop here. Believers are now far in advance of their predecessors, in their physiological habits; and are, in that same degree, advanced in spirituality. If we would be more spiritual, let us aim to be more rational and perfect, physically; and think not, that the gospel is to work our salvation in one part of our systems and not in another. Israel stoned her prophets. We may have done, and may still be doing the same thing and conscientiously too, thinking our conservatism godly! While we are contending for first principles, we are rejecting weightier matters of our spiritual law.

Neither is our theology perfect. Let not the jealous guard we put over it, cause us to close the doors to as perfect revelations as have ever been delivered. That the world made a god of Jesus, and for a purpose, is well known by us, as is the object of this elevation. The worship of Jesus as a god savors of self-worship and indulgence; not of an unreserved consecration of self to God. To worship Jesus, for living a life of godliness, and ridicule others, for living the same life, shows a want of sincerity.

The time has been when conservatism would hardly permit us to think that Jesus was ever a Jew; and even now, there is sufficient anti-christianity left, to chasten us, if we presume that Jesus acted like a Jew before he became a Christian! This is irrational conservatism—it does not conserve. Our inclinations would lead us to stereotype our theology, even as is done by the worshipers of Jesus and Mary. We would incline to disbelief in present revelations; to an insufficiency of painstaking, to prove the truthfulness of these revelations before condemning them. Let us reflect. Our mission on Mount Zion is to be “exalted above all the hills that surround;” and yet, by a false conservatism we are losing golden opportunities, and permitting the hills, around us, to excel us in many physiological, and in some spiritual adornments! Children of Mount Zion, let no one take your crown; let none possess our birthright! Why should trouble rise, when men seek truth? It does not rise when truth is sought aright. But error rules, where trouble is, and has, from trouble's earliest birth. With the All-Wise there is no trouble; all trouble springs from ignorance; and ignorance of ourselves brings greatest trouble. It is apparent to all, my dear relation, that by our devotion to the better life of virgin purity—peace, union of interests, and unspottedness from the world, there has been no interruption of improvements since first the cause began. Since our earliest day, we have made some noble departures from the régime of our spiritual ancestry; yet, we have conserved the vital principles. Let us still conserve these, while we make all necessary departures. From that old house, made up of logs, and roof all thatched with straw, we have happily departed. The same, of certain meats and drinks, with large benefits accruing; nor is the end of improvement yet arrived at. Tobacco, once an article of pastime for our united congregations, is under a ban—none so honorable as if they used it not. We have built schools; and we are thoroughly ventilating our dwellings; we encourage esthetics in music, manners and literature; and we publish the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS! To be sure, the stubborn and willful thought they saw the gospel standard lowering through these changes; but the true conservatives kissed the radicals, and exercised a healthy influence in the balances of truth.

Why, then, stumble at testimonies, that are aimed for the eradication, not merely of non-essential idols, but for the real aggressors of salvation? And why, think, by our opposition to such testimonies, that we are the conservators of everlasting principles? I would not animadvert upon any particular habits or customs of my friends; but I do urge a more liberal comprehension of what conservatism should do for us—that we be not deceived, and remain in statu quo to our condemnation and extinction! Let us be more radically conservative; and we will be more true to ourselves, and to God; and there will be a cessation of all ignoble opposition, mis-called conservatism. There will be more of putting on the new man and woman in Christ; and the initiation of radical reforms, from customs which we well know are not only detrimental, but actually sapping the life from the foundations of our Christianity. We would uphold the hands of our prophets—not accepting their prophecies without testing them—but to be open to truth and conviction, though they hew to the line, and take from us the idols of years. May ours be a “Midnight Cry,” and the bearer to all gospel kindred, that “the morning dawns.”

G. A. Lomas, Watervliet, N. Y.

AN eminent Hindoo skeptic once told what he believed to be true in Exeter Hall, London, when he said that the part of India where Christianity had never entered was a precinct happy in domestic relations and every thing that can make heathenism home, while another portion was a blighted, unhappy region, because Christianity and whisky were there.

THERE are few things in this world so utterly contemptible as contempt. It is the vice of vanity, and is a sensation unknown to true greatness.

CONSERVATISM AND PROGRESS.

—O—

CONSERVATISM—the preservation of the good of the past—is the Mother. Progress—the reaching up for increasing good—is the Child of that Mother. As sensible would it be, for the Mother to manacle the Child, to prevent its learning to walk, as for those who received the latest—the greatest manifestation of Divine Light and Life, to endeavor to scotch the wheels of the car of progress—and as sensible, as for the child to call its mamma naughty names, for holding it by the waistband, to prevent its tumbling down and bumping its little nose, as for such as get hold of a new idea, to speak naughtily of every idea, not hammered out on their anvil.

Alas for poor, unprogressed humanity! In all ages of the past, they, to whom Heaven has vouchsafed its latest favors, seem inclined to drive a stake and say: “Wo to the infidel, who has the presumption to say, This is not the center of the Universe.” And they, who have the presumption to make the sublime discovery that there is no top to the ladder of progress, are much disposed to underrate or repudiate the equally important, for the day, sublime discoveries of their predecessors.

Will it always be so? We trow not. What the ground of our hope?

Looking through the long, prophetic glass, we behold, in the vastly remote future, a time, when Religion will begin at the right end—when humanity will make the important discovery, that what enters in at the mouth defiles the man, not much less than that which cometh out.

If the Soul be the Tabernacle of the Living God, and the Body be the earthly house of this Tabernacle, why should not that which goeth in at the mouth of the earthly house, with the assent of the Tabernacle, produce its effect on the Tabernacle?

If what enters the mouth be unphysiological—deleterious, or stimulating to the animal appetites and passions, beyond the soul's highest perception of right—there will be no necessity for God to perform the rudgery of destroying the defiler of that Temple.

Less than a hundred years ago, souls might preserve their form erect, before high heaven, by bearing the cross against the flesh, which then meant abstaining from the abuse, and use of the powers of generation—the first principle of the doctrine of Christ—the first round in the ladder of progress—the Resurrection.

Now, an increase is called for—an advance movement. The call is, Come up higher. Whether you eat, drink, act, think or feel, let all be to the honor and glory of God and the good of humanity. Be pure—in all things be pure. If you would be pure in heart, be pure all through and through. Let there not be a dark spot about you.

WINOOSKI, VERMONT, Jan. 25, '75.

EDITORS AND EDITRESSES OF SHAKER AND SHAKERESS—Esteemed Brothers and Sisters:

I come to you for counsel and efficient action. I am at liberty to negotiate with an efficient party. I want to see a community, as I have told you, based on the Christ-spirit, under the banner of peace and harmonious science, having, for its corner-stone, practical goodness, with love to God and love to man.

For this I look to you. Will you come to our rescue? Will you take hold and build or help build a community to advance to a higher plane of life, on the following basis?—

1st. We will go with you, in self-denial, confessing and forsaking sins, with honesty and purity of effort.

2d. For official station, celibates, with ability, shall have preference, by the law of right.

3d. Scientific reproduction, of our species, commensurate with wisdom, divested of the baser passions, under guidance of purity, culture and refinement, by such as are esteemed worthy, for this life-demand.

4th. Celibates to take rank as senior order. I beseech you to not let this hope of humanity perish from the earth.

Truly, yours,

Orrin Shipman.

MT. LEBANON, Feb. 1, '75.

ORRIN SHIPMAN—Esteemed Friend:

Your letter, of January 25, is before me. In a former letter, July 14, I believe I answered the queries contained in your last. Should you again cast your eye over that, I think you will perceive what my present answer must be. As I understand the subject, our difference is not of opinion merely, but radical. The Christ-spirit, as manifested in Jesus, exhibited Shakerism. Jesus and company constituted a community, which was, to pentecostal organization, like the tabernacle of the wilderness to the first temple built by Solomon. In that temple, Jews alone resided. In the court of that temple, Gentiles could bring their offerings, and worship the God of the temple, through his own priesthood, the Jews. Thus was it with the Gentile Christians, the seven churches of Asia and their descendants, the marrying, fighting, private property-holding religionists of the whole world, whether called Christians, Mahometans, or heathens; principles being universal as are characters formed by principles. The seven women, who desired to eat their own kind of food, wear their own kind of clothes and do as they had been accustomed to do, but be called by a certain name, were the religionists—children of this world—who marry and give in marriage.

This Gentile order, joined to the monastic, or temple order, who lived Shaker lives of celibacy, constituted the first Christian church that is now occupying the ground in Christendom, practicing generation, while holding celibacy to be the higher life—the purer Christianity—practicing war, while recognizing “return good for evil,” as a Christian requirement. Buying and selling, for personal acquisitiveness, the rule, community the law.

We claim that Christ, having re-appeared in humanity—this time in a woman—established a Christian church, in practice, as well as profession—a Shaker community. Not a tabernacle that is movable, because in persons not yet organized; nor yet a temple with a court to it; but a second temple, more perfect than the first; a house of prayer for all nations, tongues and peoples, where the spiritual-minded can be gathered together, in the true Christ order, in the kingdom of Heaven that is not of this world, nor does it allow such as serve the tabernacle, or the temple with a court to it, to have part or lot in the matter.

This leaves the children of this world to form civil governments, entirely unmixed with theology, or any form of religious profession, as religion is commonly understood. These two orders are being evolved out of existing elements. Henceforth there will be no peace in the Shaker order, except so far as it shakes itself from worldly elements and practices; and there will be no peace in the civil governments, except so far as they deal justly, love, mercy and obey the laws of property, propagation and physiology, as contained in the original abstract law of God, in nature pertaining to the life that now is, not interfering with the faith and duties of the resurrection order—the true church—temple of humanity—Shakerdom.

SECOND THUNDER No. 2.

—O—

DEAR ELDER JOHN:

Your reply of September 20th, to my article, is conceived in a spirit which I think is well-nigh perfect. That Believers “love one another,” is an imperative command; that they all see the same things, in the same light, at the same time, without regard to age, condition or travel, is undesirable, unattainable, impossible. The path of the right-doer is to become brighter and brighter, unto the perfect day. Being perfect in spirit will bring us, individually, to perfection in truth. As we should have no physical habits, in meats nor drinks, in gait nor dress, that we would not change for better, so neither should we have any theory, sentiment, nor doctrine, which we hold as not subject to criticism, analysis, test. We can have no personal interest in error. Having this confidence in truth, we shall be as unconcerned in the fires of the most sacredly religious zeal, while it is inveighing against and investigating any of our theological theorems, as we would be were they purely mathematical problems. Figures will not lie nor flatter; and the logical result is the best result, though the old heavens fall as the result.

Two extreme classes existed in Babylon—Christendom:—1st. The Orthodox, who held Jesus to be God, and God to be a Trinity, of the masculine gender, upon which ideas the divine right of kings rested, as a basis and pattern of all church and state governments; the physical resurrection; a second coming of the person of Jesus; and salvation, or more properly, acceptance with God, by believing certain or uncertain dogmas, without evidence or logical reason for so believing. The merit of so believing was in inverse ratio with the credibility or rationality of the thing to be believed. 2d. The Materialist, who begins life by accepting facts, sustained by evidence, utterly regardless of consequences to any system of ideas in existence.

The founders of our order, in its first degree, were largely from the Orthodox classes in Babylon.

It is my opinion that the founders of the second degree will be largely from the Tyn-dall school—the scientific, rationalistic, or materialistic classes, who constitute a horu, or power, which turns logical telescopes upon the kingdom of Antichrist—the Greek, Catholic and Protestant world, “For God hath put it into their hearts to do his will.” They are, therefore, as much the servants of God to-day, as were Fathers William, James and Joseph, in their day.

I am pleased, not a little, that you, as representative of Orthodox views, see so clearly the work of God in this new aspect; “Surely the Materialists were inspired to see the false foundation upon which the Dam was built.”

You ask, “Is it not possible, while stripping from the mythical Jesus the robes wherewith the Priests have clothed him, to take away what, of right, belongs to the real Jesus?”

Not if we do no more than to reduce him to a level with his very best exponent, his glory, his other half—Mother Ann Lee.

If the Father of Jesus was greater than Jesus, and his successors exceed him in good works, doing greater works than he performed, wherein is the robbery in true Believers being equal with Jesus, or in being “perfect, even as God is perfect?” Jesus could not go beyond that, except by precedence. When Jesus was tempted of the devil, forty days, in the wilderness, it was like John’s vision. It was not the real history of facts, as they have been transpiring from that day to this, 1874 years, but as the plan of a campaign not yet accomplished. It was as the forty years’ vision of Israel in the wilderness, as compared with their historic record in Canaan. We must look to the actual succession of events, in the life and travel of Jesus, for the real temptations—the workings of Jesus’ worldly nature, in its struggles and contentions with the Christ-spirit. I am free to affirm that he came up, step by step, through every element and principle of the generative, fighting Jews, and that in each battle fought with that old serpent, that old dragon, the devil, while Jesus bruised the head, himself was wounded in the heel.

Under the influence of religious zeal, for the honor of God and the glory of his temple, inspired by Jewish spirits, who acted upon his Jewish proclivities, he fought the Temple profaners with unchristian weapons. When he rode into Jerusalem upon an ass, receiving the ovations of the people, it was held as a religious insurrection against the civil government of Rome. That caused his violent death, as “King of the Jews,” by the Roman government.

Successfully he cleared the temple of Jewish transgressors, and the Romans did not interfere. But when he arrayed the whole Jewish population of Jerusalem against the Romans, expecting to conquer by spiritual aid, he failed. Having taken the spiritualistic sword, with a view of ruling over all nations subject to Rome, he perished with the physical sword. He was not perfected in Christianity until after his ascension. “Jesus was not yet perfected,” or risen in the Christ Resurrection. He was tempted to become a judge, or divider, just as we are; he was tempted to marry, and did actually attend a wedding, which no true Believer would now do.

As Jesus was first—trod the wine-press alone—had each principle of Christianity to define and locate, is it not glory enough that he succeeded as well as he did. From a sincere, zealous, God-fearing Jew, with the substratum of a natural man, he became, by travel—learning by his own mistakes—a Christian, the last we hear of him.

From a sincere, zealous, God-fearing Gentile Anti-Christian, from the Orthodox extreme of Babylon, Mother Ann became, before she died, a pretty good Christian, a Shaker, to be perfected, like Jesus, in the eternal world.

In how few points we differ, and in how many we agree. In admitting that the Apostles did believe the physical resurrection, and in the physical resurrection of Jesus, just as I do, one point of agreement is gained. In admitting that Elijah and Jesus had brought back the departed soul into the body, is not the principle I advance recognized? It makes the return of Jesus possible and natural. “The spirit of truth searcheth all things: yea, even the deep things of God.”

All who returned to the body, like Lazarus and Jesus, died again. This physical resurrection was a sign to the natural people who witnessed it. These signs shall follow them that believe. “They shall heal the sick, raise the dead.” But the healed will again be sick, and the resurrected will die once more. The evidence is the same, that physical bodies have really passed through matter, as it is that spirits have been materialized.

BERLIN, N. J., February 15, 1875.

DEAR ELDER FREDERICK AND ALL THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH THAT ARE WITH YOU:

I feel drawn to pen you a few lines in love and sympathy. Would to Heaven I had a surplus of the almighty dollar, that I might send you material aid, in this your sore affliction. But you must accept the will for the deed. I am poor, as ever, not from idleness, nor extravagance, but on account of the drouth and the low price of fruit.

Gold and silver, I have not. Such as I have—sympathy and kind wishes—I give, in good measure, heaped up, shaken down and running over.

I have spoken of the almighty dollar, for that is the greatest almighty, most people worship, to-day. They have many lesser almighties—selfishness, fleshly lusts, artificial appetites and so forth.

In the midst of my poverty, I have much to be thankful for, with the Little Great SHAKER AND SHAKERESS to read. My little farm and cottage were under mortgage. Friend Joseph S. Tillinghast, of New Bedford, sent me $100. I lifted the mortgage, and now breathe easier.

In the cities, are thousands, and hundreds of thousands, out of employ, and on the borders of starvation.

In one of your letters to me you said, “Woe to him that standeth alone.” I do not know that I understand your meaning, but I have a meaning of my own. By standing alone, and proclaiming the truth, against the Churches, I have had their curses. I could not join them, because I could not be a hypocrite. I could not join the Shakers, whom, for forty years, I have loved, more than any other people, because I belonged to the world—my work was with the world—outside of Shakerdom—one, alone in the mountains, blasting rocks and felling tall cedars, for the House of God, that the Shakers will yet build, provided the material be not too rotten.

That noble man—Elder Richard Bushnell—in his last letter to me, called H. W. Beecher a Babel-builder. That was before the great Beecher scandal was heard of; but truer words were never written. What a Babel, Beecher, Plymouth Church and Brooklyn court are building! Jesus and Mother Ann have no hand in that Babel.

When the Katie King manifestation commenced in Philadelphia, I was sure it was an imposition. I am as certain that the Eddys are impostors. But here, I am wearying your patience and wasting your precious time.

Love, to you all,

J. Hacker.

MT. LEBANON, February 18, 1875.

DEAR FRIEND JEREMIAH:

Your kind, sympathizing letter, of the 15th inst., is received. I thank you for the love and blessing. Your gift is none the less real because you cannot make an outward expression of it in the form of the almighty dollar. Neither is mine any the more real because I express it in the form of a $5 check. Please receive it as a token of love and remembrance of your North Family friends—Daniel Offord, Eldress Antoinette Doolittle and Sister Anna White, who have deep affection for you.

I have ever considered you a Prophet, to this generation and nation—more especially to the people of Portland and Maine.

With many discomforts and trials, you are still mindful of the good that remains, and encourage us to be like-minded. That is right.

Am glad to learn your mortgage has been lifted. Friend Joseph will be none the poorer for what he does for you.

Any time that you are liable to suffer for food or clothing, write me freely, and we will do you a little good, if we cannot do all you so richly deserve.

You are mistaken about the materialization business. There is a principle involved in it. That principle is as old as time. There have been periods when materializations were frequent—will be so again. Spiritualism is an agency, for use, in the Divine economy. There is meaning to it. Be patient, and fret not thyself because of evil doers, who seek to get a living by it. Have they not done the same by the Gospel?

While so many preach for hire, why should not mediums divine for money?

Your friend,

F. W. Evans.

HUMAN SACRIFICES!

MR. EDITOR—The ancient Israelites in 1,000 years sacrificed to their war-God fifty millions of human beings!

The creed of Christians in 1,600 years sacrificed to their trinity God one billion three hundred millions of human beings! Or, twelve millions more than the present population of the globe.

For shedding human blood the Christians beat the Jews, the Pagans, the Mahometans, the Mormons, the world!

The Israelites ceased to slaughter when swallowed up by Pagan Rome! The Christians stayed their bloody hands when they lost the power of the State!

The orthodox churches in the North are making desperate efforts to amend the United States Constitution so as to include fundamental dogmas of their creeds—an incipient and covert attempt to unite Church and State!

These churches cost the people of the United States two hundred millions of dollars per annum! These corporations hold real and personal property, exempt from taxation by the State or General Government, three hundred millions of dollars!

Is it right to take money out of the pockets of the millions of heretics and non-professors to support priests, parsons, and powerful ecclesiastical monopolies?

They tell us that salvation is free! Free? It takes a California gold mine every year to pay expenses!

Let us organize an anti-Orthodox Church Grange!

ELDER EVANS—Dear sir:

Inclosed, find sixty cents, the subscription price of your excellent monthly, “THE SHAKER AND SHAKERESS.” I have taken it the past year, and can hardly get along without it.

Its voice against sin, in its many forms, has no uncertain sound. Its representations of the Gentile Christian church, are in almost perfect harmony with my theory of Christianity.

Whether I shall ever come any nearer to your order than a general acceptance of your theory, I am unable to say, at present.

In many respects, we are the creatures of circumstances. As far as in me lies, with my surroundings, I am denying all ungodliness and worldly lusts. I am crucified with Christ.

Perhaps you think no one ought to say so much and, at the same time, consent to remain in Babylon. Are these not times when we must choose between two evils? At least, ought we not to wait for the time remedy?

The Christ-spirit has certainly been leading me onward. I have been in Egypt—have come forth and wandered in the wilderness. Have been content to go down into Babylon, not knowing any better way. But I see the new Jerusalem. Its light cheers my soul. Still I am traveling. I hear the voice, "Fear not, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." Would be pleased to hear from you.

Yours, truly,
J. L. Peck.

THE BALANCE-WHEEL OF SHAKERISM.

AS MACHINERY cannot run with safety without a regulator, in like manner religion of whatever class, kind, or character, cannot retain a uniform progress without some governing power. Well may "the children of this world" (the natural order) wonder that the Shakers are enabled to investigate the realities and nature of the "manifestations" now being produced under the name of "Spiritualism," without being "led astray" by their ease-attracting doctrines. And they have good reasons to wonder, for daily they perceive the more considerate and liberal minds, among their adherents, leaving the fear of God which the fear of hell prompts, and cleaving to the love of God, as advocated by this philosophy or science of spirit-life. Our warning, to all souls, not established on any particular basis, is, look at the balance-wheel which governs the Shaker's faith—examine its stability—see if the rock purity is not firm enough to sustain the Christian church. Those fire-tried souls have passed through the refining furnace—soul travail—which removes every dross. Inviolable purity is the basis of true Christianity. Upon this basis Jesus established the Pentecostal Church. Hence, all organizations, not on this foundation, whether bearing the name Christian, or not, are "founded upon the sand"—the perishable and ever-changing elements of the mundane sphere—subject to "fallings off" identical with the Jewish nation and religion, as illustrated by their biblical records. After the fall of the first Adam we see that mankind were governed by warlike gods (or controlling spirits), and that a miserable state of things existed, until holy angels, from the Christ, or inner heavens, found One fit to receive their ministrations, and resurrected Him into that "pure and undefiled" state, peculiar to their sphere, thus making Him a new creature in Christ, and a Saviour of lost and deluded souls—not like the first, or natural Adam, the increase being, this time, to "multiply and replenish" Heaven, instead of the earth, with souls "refined and purified by the blood of the lamb"—the life-blood element of virgin purity—by which souls are washed "whiter than snow." Jesus aspired to the conditions which find favor with God and the holy angels. Single-handed (physically), for a season, he fought the prince of the power of darkness—Lust. Afterward, he gathered unto himself, with the aid of his spirit attendants, a few companions, lovers of pure and high-aspiring lives, like himself. With the Christ-principle of Celibacy, for their balance-wheel, nothing earthly changed their sentiments, or retarded their spiritual progress. What sin-sick soul can reject that governing power which "saves" from the destructive elements of a "fast running world?" A Thomas Paine may expound upon the sectarian's Bible and gods, showing the absurdity of their claiming, for them, Divine origin. A Katie King may be exposed, Spiritualism considered a delusion and Christianity a farce. It will not affect, in the least, the eternal balance wheel of purity.

The machinery of a mill might, if it had reasoning powers, believe its motive power had a balance-wheel; yet, if it did not choose to become subject to its regulating power, by being geared to it, of what use would a mere belief in its existence be?

The Philadelphia exposé illustrates how great and intellectual minds may be "run away with," however good or honest the motives. Simply believing in the Christ principle, and pure spirits, will not save one soul from the destructive elements of impurity. Nay, if souls desire to become free from deluding spirits, let them "gear on" to this great balance-wheel of eternal safety, for they cannot in this, or other worlds, find or substitute any other power to save them from the "wiles of the adversary."

If purity appear to be a dangerous element, "gear on" cautiously at first, and try for a season, loving the good that is in your neighbor, like that you perceive in your own self. Regard all mankind as belonging to the human species. By this experiment, it lies within the power of all, rich and poor, "without money and without price," to examine the regulator which keeps Shakers within the bounds of their own belief, and prove the "Infallibility" of the Balance-wheel of Shakerism.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

THE love of God, like their universe is boundless. The most depraved being as well as the brightest seraph that dazzles around their throne are alike the subjects of their warm paternal and maternal embrace.

The greatest exhibitions of God's love, of which we have any knowledge, can give but a very faint idea of its exceeding riches and power.

We may feel it, like repeated shocks of electricity, passing through our physical frames, shaking out a selfish, carnal nature, thereby laying a broad and solid foundation for a new life, a new creation.

God waits to fill and purify our hearts with his love.

Men, and angels, are led to behold, and admire.

The highest order of angels will ever desire to look into the deep and hidden mysteries of the love of God.

Their universal testimony will be to all eternity. "This love is better felt than told." The love of God should be the mainspring of all Christian effort.

Our happiness and our usefulness here, and hereafter, will be in proportion to the amount of true Gospel-love which we possess and maintain.

The love of God is wonderful in its origin, mighty in its effects, mysterious, and incomprehensible in all its tendencies.

By its power this world must be conquered, and its kingdoms become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ.

Gilbert Hubbell, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.

UNION.

"BEHOLD how good and how pleasant it is, for Brethren (and Sisters) to dwell together in unity." Psalms, 133d, 1st.

"A man, wishing to show his children the necessity of union among themselves, prepared a bundle of sticks with a strong cord. Commencing with the youngest, he requested him to break them; he could not. The next was called, and so on up to the oldest; all failed; upon which the father cut the cord and they were easily broken, one by one."

Union is the cord that binds, consolidates and nourishes the various members of the body of Christ, "for we are all members one of another." If this cord be broken, the army of the cross will be divided, scattered and destroyed, by the wicked one. Disunion is the rock on which many barks have been wrecked; but obedience to those principles which promote the "union of the spirit in the bond of peace," is a safe guide to the port of eternal rest. Union is not only good and pleasant, but essential to success in spiritual prosperity. The followers of Christ have a great work to do, and union is strength in spiritual warfare, as well as in military tactics. "United, we stand; divided, we fall." It is a part of the plans of military officers to divide the forces of the enemy, both in the council and in the field. It is also the plan of Satan, the adversary of souls, to divide and destroy professing Christians. He has his officers out upon the watch, such as Lust, Pride, Selfishness, Love of Worldly Pleasure, and many other petty officers; and O! how many weak-minded soldiers they are capturing. I apprehend the reason why so many faint-hearted soldiers are taken prisoners is, because they have failed to gird on the whole armor and obey all the orders of Christ, the good Commander.

The true cross-bearer's life is compared to a soldier's, and they are called to war a good warfare, "fight the good fight of faith," and it is their privilege to rejoice in victory, every day. They have a good Captain, who was victorious in every battle, and He provides His soldiers with the beautiful armor of righteousness. (Eph., 6, 11; 13.) They who put on this armor will overcome in every encounter, and "he that overcometh shall inherit all things."

Daniel Orcutt, Enfield, Ct.

A TRAVELER in Sweden contributes to one of the newspapers an account of the very economical mode of house-warming adopted in that country. The kakelug, or Swedish stove, is a great oven of masonry covered with porcelain plates, having usually five flues, through which the gases of combustion must pass up and down, a distance of thirty to sixty feet, before escaping into the air. The general principle of their operation is to provide enough material to absorb all the heat from the fire; to conduct the gases through these long flues till their temperature has fallen to a point that no longer gives off heat. The quantity of the material in the kakelug is so great that the temperature of any part is such that the hand cannot be held upon the outside. Two hours after a fire is made, and after the wood fuel has burned up, and the flue been closed, the kakelug begins to get warm on the outside, the light porcelain plates give off their moderate warmth to the atmosphere in the room, and ten hours later there will be much difference in the temperature of the stove or of the room. A kakelug instead of being an unsightly obstruction, is an ornamental piece of furniture. A door opens into it in front, where, in a kind of closet with iron shelves, food can be kept warm or warmed. Baking can be done in the furnace for hours after the fire has been burned out.

A WRITER in the "London Magazine" says that men like Tyndall and Huxley, Spencer and Darwin, with the terrible weapons of their materialism do but break down an old and much battered idol which has long been the cause of dreadful doubts, even to its devotees, and has set religion and science at bitter variance. But in breaking down the idol they are doing us the greatest service. They are letting in the light; they are leaving us face to face with a conception of God before hidden from us by our idol, but which presents him to us not only in a form which science will allow, before which, indeed, science and religion become one, but in a form which is immeasurably grander, more beautiful, and every way worthier of God than that which has been broken down. Let us clearly recognize that when Tyndall claims for matter that it is sufficient for every thing, he is not thinking of matter as that dead, brute thing which the mass of men suppose it. To him as to Herbert Spencer, matter is but the manifestation of a Great Entity in itself unknown and unknowable. It is but the garment of what Tyndall calls the great cosmical life—the great life of the cosmos—the universe. What is this Great Entity, what is this Great Cosmical Life but the Eternal God Himself, of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things, who "besets us behind and before" and "in whom we live and move and have our being?"

THE Sons of Rechab were blessed of God, because they carried out certain principles, enjoined by their father. The blessing was not upon the thing done or not done, but upon the integrity of intention and the fixity of purpose—invaluable elements in the work of redemption from wrong habits and evil purposes.

AMONG THE EDITORS.—As a scholar among school-masters, or a child with adults, so I learn from the Editors whom I visit. Editors of leading papers occupy responsible positions, requiring nerve and wisdom, a discriminating liberality toward the representatives of the people, as a whole, not omitting any integral element, party or sect. The real editor rises above his individuality into the realm of causation, where he educates and guides the public conscience.

SHAKERESS.

A. HOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

WHAT IS MAN?

IN view of the atomic structure of human beings when compared with the vastness of God's Universe, David of old said, "What is man, that Thou art mindful of him?" Many Davids at the present time are asking, Who, and what is man? Whence came he—whither is he tending—what his final destiny, and what relation does he sustain to Nature's wondrous realms of mind and matter? How far is he dependent upon circumstances approximate or remote, in fixing his choice and forming his character? Of his own volition, is he free to choose between good and evil: and what degree of responsibility, merit, or demerit, justly belongs to him?

The rudimental, or earth life, is a disciplinary school; and the most wakeful students of Nature and her laws, who have chosen her as their chief mentor, have many times become lost, as it were, in traversing the almost illimitable fields of scientific research, so varied and intricate to finite comprehension. No human mind however expansive is adequate to grasp the whole. People differ in their organisms; and each, if their faculties were unimpaired by false uses, would occupy his or her proper place in the scale of being, and form a link in the great chain of human progress.

Man and woman, the microcosm of the Universal mind that spake all things into existence, would, by individual and combined effort, search out the essential parts, and scientifically connect the inner world of causation with the world of matter, and perceive that all created things bear proper relations to their Creator, and form one indivisible whole. That Nature cannot act independently of the creative power which upholds and balances each part to the minutest atom. Else, all would be hurled into chaos. Every true theory must have a basic foundation—a starting point.

In the progress of the world's history there have been different epochs. Each new cycle has evolved, from the old, at an exact period of time, so that the date could be fixed, and yet, there was no break in the chain of events. As the old year dies—goes out—and the new commences—steps in to fill its place—so has it been with the successive cycles.

But people reason differently concerning those eventful periods. Some urge, that this world, at the beginning, was in a crude, chaotic condition; and that it has taken ages of growth and change to progress and mature it thus far. Man has not been an exception to the general rule. All have progressed together. He was not created all at once in the perfection of beauty and uprightness; but resembled other animals, to whom he was closely allied—strong in physique—but weak in intellect. And, although in his immature infant state he possessed a negative innocence, it, like many other things, had to be subjected to trial before it could be trusted. They who reason from that stand-point, begin at the lowest round in the ladder of progression, and trace the lines upward, and claim for men and women, at the present time, superiority of intellect and knowledge, over what were possessed by those who were placed in fair Eden.

Others take a different view, and begin with man as a perfect being, who, instead of his being the product of Nature through growth and development, from the lower to the higher, was an independent creation—fashioned directly by God, Himself—and of course was very perfect and beautiful as he came from God's hands—resembling Angels, but a little lower. By disobedience man was marred and lost his rectitude.

Leaving all such theories, let us look at stern facts and realities, as we find them existing to-day. It is said that "a stream cannot rise above its source." In our own country and cities we see thousands of individuals who bear the distinctive marks of their progenitors, in form, feature and habit. Education, in a wrong direction, fortune, and circumstances, over which they had no control, have, in a large degree, made them what they are.

The question arises, "How far will they be held responsible for acts performed while thus conditioned? What the penalty—and how administered? Does God inflict punishment upon any human being? Or, being themselves debtors to violated law, which reacts upon the transgressor, does He leave them to balance accounts in that way?"

When the ignorant sin against their own souls and bodies, they cannot escape the effects. Fire will burn, whether intentionally or accidentally applied—the effect, physically, is the same. Poverty often induces crime. Again, thirst for intoxicating drink, and desire for sensual indulgence, are often impressed upon infants while in a germinal state; they are really made drunkards and harlots, before they see the light of day. Who in justice should bear the responsibility? We might have to go back upon ancestral history many generations to answer that question correctly.

The sinned against, in such cases, cannot avoid suffering; but inflictions thus imposed are far more tolerable to bear, than the keen remorse which those must feel, who have had superior advantages, by birth, and education, in a physical and moral point of view, also of rising in the scale of angelic life, by having their spiritual understanding opened and quickened to perceive the beautiful, the true and good. If such abuse their privilege and fall from their rectitude, how will they be acquitted by their own reason and conscience, which is, in reality, the soul's tribunal? Paul said, "If such fall away, it is impossible to renew them again to repentance." We would not use so strong language as Paul did; but rather say it is difficult for such to find repentance unto life; and if they feel sorrow and repentance they cannot occupy the same degree as before.

We can have some faint conception how the laws of progress, and change of events, may blot out from the soul's memory, sins of ignorance, and sorrows caused by the wrongs of others; and how joy may even be enhanced, by contrasting the good attained, with the sad picture of the past; but we fail to comprehend how a star of magnitude, that has once filled a place and shone in the horizon of the spiritual heavens, and fallen therefrom, can ever regain its position.

They do not need fire to descend from heaven upon them, or that God should use direct agencies of any kind, to punish them; their own consciences will arraign them to answer the demands of violated law; and show them the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not easily quenched.

SELF-COGNITION.

"KNOWLEDGE occupies its place in the mind; and a force, even to the moving of mountains, is therein, forthwith generated." In the above quotation, let us suppose the noted author, A. J. Davis, referred directly to a knowledge of individual self-hood—the body and the soul and their proper relations, the one to the other—calling one the house, the other the inmate. Correct knowledge of material things, teaches the architect to plan and build his house with reference to the protection, comfort and convenience of the person, who is to inhabit it. He is careful to see that it is well constructed, that it may afford a pleasant retreat from the scorching rays of the summer's sun, and be a safe refuge from the bitter blasts of the winter's storm. He gives particular attention to ventilation, knowing that the house must breathe, if the inmate would live. The individual, who inhabits the dwelling, should possess sterling worth, moral, intellectual, and spiritual, so as to be able to co-operate with every true principle, that the house may be kept in order and not become foul; and at an early period begin to show signs of decay, creating unharmonious relations between it and its occupant—and the once beautiful tenement be deserted and left, either for a habitation of wild beasts, or to crumble and fall—while the tenant becomes a wanderer—disappointed—homeless and despondent. Is not this analogous to the house we live in?

If the body, which is the dwelling of the soul, while in the earth sphere, be well constructed, and constantly guarded by hygienic laws, resisting every thing that would tend to defile, or bring premature decay upon the soul's temple, how strong, healthy and vigorous might man and woman be! Governed by the law of use, there would be a continuous expansion of the internal forces, and the mind, ever actuated by true principles, would be a receptacle, and reservatory of natural and spiritual truth, relating to body and soul. The tabernacle would have a good foundation, and the superstructure would be grand and beautiful—an honor to the builder. Would not angels love to knock at the door of such a temple? and would not the holy spirit delight to dwell therein, and keep alive the fires of Divine inspiration?

Without knowledge, we cannot work successfully, either on the earthly, or heavenly plane of life. Knowledge of cause and effect is essential in all the relations of life. To understand the uses of the elements of subsistence, also how they may be abused—and blessings be turned into curses—is of vital importance.

The earthly man and woman should so understand the procreative laws, that they may generate healthy offspring, containing the life germs of immortal beings. And they who dwell in earthly mansions—human bodies—should study how best to preserve those bodies from blight, disease and premature decay. Therefore, "Know thyself," should be inscribed in letters of gold upon the tablet of the heart, and be engrafted into every fiber of the being.

The present generation have entered largely into the study of self; not, however, with a view of self-discipline and culture, in the true and real; but for the purpose of obtaining more ease, and more indulgence in those things which demoralize soul and body.

The power of discernment — of penetration — is requisite, that we may comprehend the motives which prompt to action. A stern, fixed purpose, to condemn the wrong and false, and to adhere tenaciously to the right and true, is an endowment worthy the most sanguine efforts of rational intelligence. Such a controlling power is capable of "moving mountains" of error from the human soul, and "casting down lofty imaginations of the heart." By the possession of this knowledge and power, have the flood-gates of iniquity been opened to the youth of our land! They have sought out many inventions to please and exalt themselves, and through vain imaginations have drawn pictures which are unreal — built air castles which they never reach. And some there are, who seek to evade truth; they have not the moral courage to meet it, nor honesty of purpose to obey it, even when convinced of its verity. Thus they are often slain by their own hands; or by launching out upon uncertain seas, without fixed principles to guide them, they are driven by the strong winds of passion, until forced upon some lone and desolate island — wrecked — and left to the merciless, wild waves, to be dashed in pieces.

Therefore, to know, judge and control ones self, is the most useful knowledge to possess, and the most important lesson to be learned.

If we do not violate any physical law, thereby producing disease of body, nor transgress spiritual laws, which pertain to the soul's welfare, there will be no inharmony; and we shall progress from one stage to another, in natural and spiritual things. As we ascend the ladder of truth, which reaches from earth to heaven, there will be a continual unfolding of the life germ within, until we attain unto a condition of perpetual joy, where the sun, which lights up the spiritual horizon, will shine eternally, with no dark cloud to obscure its rays. That condition will be Heaven.

Anna White, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

CHARITY.

—o—

CHARITY is the most beautiful attribute of the soul. Not that kind of charity which displays itself in munificent gifts, without distinction or discrimination, or that censures and condemns while it gives. They, who go forth in the spirit of love, seeking to understand conditions, human frailties, and human needs, and are guided by the lamp of reason, are able to comprehend the causes which lead to error and misfortune, and will charitably aid and instruct, instead of condemning.

The faculties, proclivities, and conditions of individuals, on entering this world, are not of their own choosing. They have neither choice of parentage, nationality, nor the age in which they shall live; nor even whether they shall live at all. The influences, by which they are surrounded in early life, are beyond their control, and conditions which they are forced to accept, help to mould their characters in after life. Hence, society, in a great degree, is responsible for individual action. If an individual be wanting in intellectual and moral power to resist crime, and through malice, or selfishness, commit a wrong against friend, neighbor, or stranger, is it possible to remedy that wrong by retaliation? Is it not better to "overcome evil with good?" I think we are safe in saying, that vindictive measures, for the punishment of crime, have totally failed to prevent it. "Like, begets its like." If we would oppose evil successfully, it must be by its opposite — the spirit and power of good. Expel darkness by the introduction of light.

A prison, as a place of punishment for offenders against civil law, where they are shut in from the influence of superior minds — deprived of human sympathy — associated exclusively with evil doers, who have been schooled in vice, appears, to my mind, a disgrace to an enlightened age, and unworthy a Christian people, professing to be governed by "Charity which suffereth long." Would not Christian charity be vindicated and made more apparent by removing the incentives to selfish and dishonest acts — abolishing all forms of monopoly — making nature's gifts equally free to all her children? Would it not be more effectual to convert jails and penitentiaries into reform schools — moral hospitals — where those, who need it, could have sanitary treatment, and all could feel a wholesome restraint, dictated only by wisdom and love?

The human family is inseparably bound together, each class receiving aid and instruction from those above it. Heaven's blessings pass, from sphere to sphere, through the links of the chain of gradation. And they who can extend a helping hand to those who are the farthest below them, and still maintain their own integrity, will be blest and receive strength from spheres correspondingly above them.

Let light shine, and sympathy flow to all; then the sweet spirit of charity will ally us closely to the Angels whose crowning attribute is Love,

"The noblest virtue of the soul —
The brightest star that gilds our skies —
The fairest flower among the whole,
Which blossoms in their paradise."

Emeline Broadway, Union Village, O.

MUSIC.

—o—

THERE is music — harmony — in all of God's creation. Through all of nature's vast realm — the great deep, the dense forest, the wild winds — in the ripened fields of grain and flowers, in the running streamlet and bird-song, there is melody. If man and woman, who were created in honor to be the crowning, concentric work of God's hands, had abode in that honor, they would have been pre-eminent instruments of music, to whom all other forms of music would have converged and been adjuncts.

No instrument of music invented by man can equal the human voice, which God created. The souls of men and women, are living organs, and may drink in inspiration, from the Almighty; and the human voice, by the power of that inspiration, can utter music, full of life, that is saving, healing and exhilarating. That is the music which brings souls into contiguity with the angel-world.

Every gift and faculty, of body and mind, if properly used, tends to harmony. Music, in Nature, is God's gift to humanity; but it is designed to subserve the spiritual. When they are linked together, in harmonious relations, then is God honored, and humanity happy. Hearts, oppressed with sin, have often found relief, by the uplifting song of prayer and praise. When wearied with care and serving, the ever-varying musical sounds in nature's voices, soothe and give rest; and when physically diseased, or mentally depressed, music is a great restorative. We have all felt its power, more or less, and are indebted to the Giver, from whom flow all good gifts to earth's children. Soul music elevates, refines and purifies. Some persons have been heard to say, "they were never affected to tears, but by the power of music." Music often touches the divine feelings in the soul, and causes it to bow in humble contrition before God, the author of its existence; and to awaken slumbering energies, stir up latent powers, call forth better thoughts and feelings, and form the basis of a purer, and more consecrated life.

There is a natural connection between delightful sounds, and beautiful thoughts; but the noblest and richest of God's gifts to mankind, may be, and are, oftentimes, abused. We see the military hero, by the sound of martial music, inspiring his army to go forth to battle, like the infuriated demons, to wound and slay their fellows, who have never injured them. Music, both vocal and instrumental, is often used to play upon the baser passions — to allure to sin — and awaken sensual desires. Hence the vocal, musical organs, like the tongue — the power of speech — are used both to bless God, and to dishonor Him — to cultivate the religious and irreligious nature in man, and woman.

We cannot be justified in rejecting, or neglecting, any gift or faculty, because at times applied to false uses. Every gift and talent may be exercised in honor of the Giver, and to the benefit of humanity, if we so will it. And the best means should be accepted to accomplish that end. To promote harmony, and exalt goodness and truth, should be our chief delight and purpose. The science of music should be studied, and the human voice cultivated, under the direction and inspiration of angelic teachers; and whatever agencies can be applied, whether vocal or instrumental, that will lead from low loves and desires, progress humanity God-ward, and tend to sanctify their spirits — should be accepted.

A deep appreciation, and enjoyment of fine appropriate music, widens our sphere of thought, quickens the emotional feelings, increases inspiration, and imparts heavenly joy. A recent writer on the subject of music says: "We have reached a state of chaos in which music, as an embodiment of religious feeling, threatens to be entirely lost." This ought not so to be. Science and Religion should be as nearly connected, as a healthy soul and body.

It is our privilege to grow and increase in all that is good and true, and to be intelligent subjects of infinite grace. Let every heart be open to receive good from any source, and closed to all discordant sounds. Then harmony and true love will be ours, to enjoy in time, and we shall be fitted to join in those melodious strains of praise divine, which roll through the heavenly arches in the life beyond.

FOOD.

—o—

Written for the SHAKERESS by a sister eighty-four years of age. Been a member of the Society sixty-five years.

DEARLY BELOVED: I prize the privilege of addressing a few lines expressive of my feelings. The SHAKER AND SHAKERESS is a medium through which food is conveyed to the lambs of Christ's flock who are daily striving against evil in themselves. They need spiritual food; and I know you are inspired by the Christ-spirit to prepare such food as is needed to encourage, strengthen, and bear souls through all trials and temptations, which every one must meet while journeying, from the wilderness of sin, to the heavenly land. The work of the Gospel is designed to purify and prepare souls for higher enjoyments than nature can give — even the treasures of immortal life.

The many strong, clear testimonies of truth, coming from progressed minds, and those of long experience, shed a benign influence, and give new vigor and life. O, may it encourage others who are yet bound in darkness — the servants of sinful passions — to come forth, "lay hold on eternal life;" and to rise above all carnal, selfish enjoyments, which are transient and worthless! That work can only be effected by an honest confession of all sin, and daily self-denial of every thing that would corrupt and attach the feelings to inferior objects. Those who have been the subjects of the Gospel of Christ and Mother, and have yielded obedience to its injunctions, can testify of its power and efficacy.

From my heart, I thank God that I was called in early life, to leave the paths of sin and sorrow, and take the cross of self-denial which leads to purity of life, and gives an approved conscience. Again, I say, "I love the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS. I receive strength and encouragement from every number. May it live long — travel far and wide — and do much good to honest inquirers! I ask God to bless your labors. My treasure — my life — my all is in the work. And that good ministering angels may guide us all in safety to mansions of peace, is the prayer of your sister in the Church of Christ." And I ask for myself

O blessed overruling Power;
My every thought and act control!
And in each dark and trying hour,
Be thou an anchor to my soul!
Let me feel thy sweet embrace—
Hold me with thy mighty hand—
Fill my soul with heavenly grace—
Lead me to the promised land,
Where the righteous dwell together,
Bound by cords of love divine;
Strife and discord never enter
Those pure mansions so sublime.

DEATH OF THE PHARISEE.

PASTOR, and deacons, and members were there,
The church tower was just in sight.
And the pharisee gave them his last proud prayer
From lips that were deadly white.
He spoke of the good that the blood had done
That was spilt upon Calvary's tree,
Of the godly race which his feet had run—
Of his deeds of charity,
And he thanked the Lord again and again,
With a pious befitting look,
That he was not like unto other men,
But was led by the Holy Book.
And pastor, and members, and deacons groaned,
To God let the praise be given!
The Crucified also for us atoned,
And we shall be with him in heaven.

But the pharisee saw through the veil of death
An angel of truth draw near,
And he wildly struggled and gasped for breath,
For his soul was struck with fear.
And the angel said with a startling voice,
Do you think that your shams will win?
Can your spirit in light of life rejoice,
When yours is a burden of sin?
But they tenderly bolstered the pharisee up
To give him the holy bread,
And they brought him with care the communion
And then stood amazed at his dread. [cup.]

O, why do you bring me the wine? he said,
For drunkards my eyes can see,
That unto its treacherous tide have fled
From a woe that was wrought by me.
They were the hopeful, trustful men,
Who thought my profession true,
But just by the turn of my crafty pen
Black ruin their fortunes knew.
O, take from my sight the children's food
That I stole from the widow's hand,
Their father had call'd me his kinsman good,
And left me his helpless band.
Now I must meet with that humbled face,
Distorted by want and crime,
Their misery their deep hidden anguish trace,
As I pass from the shores of time.

And look! do you see in your crowded street
The outcasts that wander there?
Do you know their young hearts, once pure and
Were wreathed with parental care? [sweet,
But I gathered them into my lustful arms,
By wiles that a fiend might hate,
And I robbed them of more than youthful charms,
But repentance has come too late.
And the angel said with uplifted hand,
Let all be warned who hear,
For that is the guilt that gives the brand
Which will hardly disappear.

Then the pharisee raised his dying head,
And said in a bitter tone,
To those who were shrinking around his bed,
Can any one cast a stone?
We are alike in our worldly pride—
Alike in the angel's eye—
Alike in the sins which I strove to hide,
And alike we all must die.
Then give to the flames my pompous will,
And know you are dispossessed,
For gain that was gotten by means so ill,
Belongs to the sore oppressed.

And the parson, and deacons, and members said,
With many a knowing shrug,
Our brother is fevered—out of his head—
Physician, where is thy drug?
Or, where thy balsam of acid and gall
That was a last drink of old?
But, ere he could answer their urgent call,
The pharisee's heart was cold.
And they gave the pharisee burial grand,
As griefless as ever was given,
And published his righteousness over the land,
Yet knew he was far from heaven.

Cecilia Devy, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

EVEN the white mantle of religion is too frequently dragged through the bloody pool of war. Spain waged war with England in the seventeenth century because the latter founded colonies in America. The former, in behalf of the Pope of Rome, claimed that all heathen countries belonged to him as the Viceroy of God upon earth. The thirty years' war, 1618-1648, between Germany and France, was a contest between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism. The Greek and Latin monks of Jerusalem disputed about who should keep the key of the Holy Sepulchre, whereupon Russia suspended diplomatic relations with Turkey and war subsequently ensued. Hence Edward Everett remarked with a smile that Russia and Turkey went to war, spent millions of treasure and destroyed thousands of lives to decide who should keep the key to the tomb of the Prince of Peace.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

THIRTY years ago, while under a religious awakening, my mind was stirred to consider the subject of Christ's second appearing, and to investigate the manner of his coming. I was convinced that the prophetic periods, concerning that event, were fulfilled, and I accepted the views of Miller for a time, and looked for the literal fulfillment of the scriptures in regard to it.

At length, I learned, through a paper then published by the Shakers, called "The Day Star," that the second appearing of the Christ-spirit would be spiritual; and would be spiritually discerned by those who were looking in faith for his coming; that instead of a personal being, appearing in the literal clouds, in all the pomp and splendor of an earthly prince, He would appear in a cloud of witnessing saints. And, as the apostolic band was led by an "Elder Brother, the first-born among brethren," who were left to establish the first Christian church, after his ascension, so the cloud of witnesses that received the returning Christ, that was promised, would be led and guided by an Elder Sister, the first-born among many sisters. Thus the duality Deity—Father—Mother—God, would be represented on earth, and it would be the commencement of a kingdom of righteousness and peace that, like the "little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, would gradually grow until it should fill the whole earth."

I found that a watching, praying band, who had looked in faith for the fulfillment of prophecy, had received according to their faith, were already in the fruition of the prophetic promises, and were living in a united body, carrying out the principles of the first pentecostal Church, bearing the insignia, Virgin Purity, Non-resistance and Community of Goods.

My understanding was opened to the excellency of the work, my conscience approved, and I resolved to become a member of that body. I dissolved my connection with the church to which I had belonged, and forsook my natural kindred, for a superior heavenly relationship founded in truth and in justice.

Thus, for conscience sake, I forsook all, that I might rightfully inherit the kingdom of God. I have not been disappointed. My anticipations have been realized. I found a new key to unlock bible records, and never had the scriptures appeared half so precious, clear and inspirational to me before. The Psalms of David filled me with a spirit of praise! My mind was particularly directed to the 21st chapter of Revelations. I realized, in a measure, what it was "to eat of the hidden manna, and to receive the white stone with a new name (character) written therein, which no one can know save those who receive it." I felt that I had found a people, who, by the purity of their lives, represented the number who were "to stand upon Mt. Zion with palms of victory in their hands;" and by consecrating all to God, made it possible to live as do the angels, while here on earth, in human form.

And while yet young in years, I gave my heart, my life to God. And I have experienced the fulfillment of that beautiful promise by the prophet Jeremiah, "Their souls shall be as a watered garden, and they shall not sorrow any more at all;" the cause of sorrow being removed. Thus perfectly agreeing with the revelator John, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death (spiritual death being produced by sin), neither sorrow nor crying."

To be placed in a condition to practically live according to Christ's teachings, to be surrounded by brothers and sisters who are striving in all things to fulfill the Saviour's injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even the same unto them," is the greatest immunity mortals can possess. Self-discipline and self-improvement are pre-eminently our work. Thirty years of my life have been given to self-culture and reformation. I find it a noble work, and the most effectual way of helping to reform others, and I do not grow weary in well doing.

CROSSING LIFE'S TIDE.

The loved, and the dear ones, are passing from me,
One by one they are crossing life's tide;
They're borne from my vision like ships on the sea,
To the shore on eternity's side.

The spring time of childhood, and bright years of youth,

Were blest by their kindness and care;
Their spotless example, of virtue and truth,
Gave strength every conflict to bear.

O precious the memories, twining my heart,
Like tendrils of summer's fair vine!
A new thrill of life to my soul they impart,
For sweet recollections are mine.

The faces that beamed with the sunshine of love—
The hands that with mine were employed—
The feet that were wont in my pathway to move,
And hearts that life's pleasures enjoyed.

Though now in the immortal regions beyond,
And tolling in new fields above,
Yet sacred and precious I hold the pure bond,
That links me to kindred, in love.

For heavenly communion, my spirit oft yearns,
I'll draw from an angelic sphere;
I know there's a land whence the traveler returns,
To gladden our pilgrimage here.

Then come, O ye dear ones, who love as of yore,
Add strength to the faith that we hold;
Bring gifts that are new from the evergreen shore
And treasures that will not grow old.

Emily Offord, Canaan, N. Y.

SOLICITATION.

The joys of earth I would not seek,
That transient pleasures give;
I ask a spirit low and meek,
That in the truth would live.
I crave not worldly honor, fame,
Or glittering golden store;
But I would win the Christian name,
The cross our Saviour bore.

Nor do I ask to be adorned
With laurels, won by strife;
But only seek to be enrold'd,
Within the book of life.
I ask, that pure angelic love
May find in me a place,
The spirit of the heavenly dove,
The power of quick'ning grace.

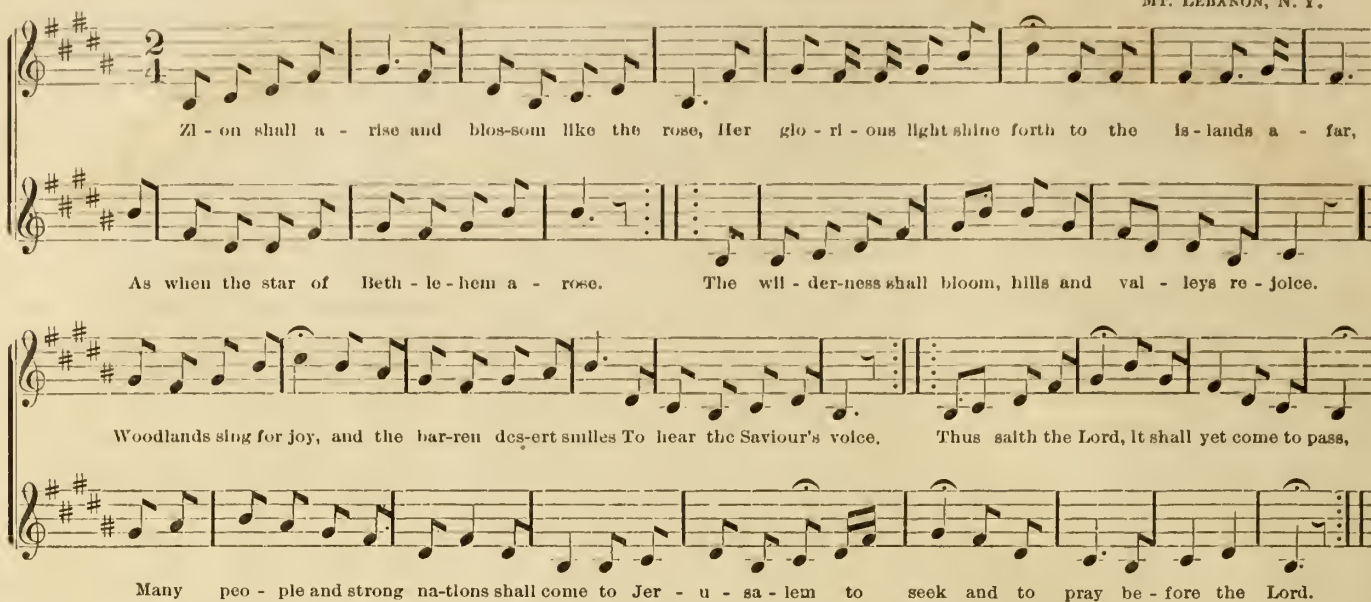

That I may be a vessel pure,
Fit for the Master's use;
The burning fire of truth endure,
Its radiance diffuse.
And ever seek to bear aloft,
The banner of sweet peace;
That hung'ring souls may gather oft,
To share its rich increase.

Rhoda R. Hollister, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

A MOTHER OF CRIMINALS. Some of the most curious and remarkable criminal statistics ever obtained have just been given to the public by Dr. Harris of New York. His attention was called, some time since, to a county on the upper Hudson which showed a remarkable proportion of crime and poverty to the whole population—480 of its 40,000 inhabitants being in the almshouse—and, upon looking into the records a little, he found certain names continually appearing. Becoming interested in the subject, he concluded to search the genealogies of these families, and after a thorough investigation he discovered that from a young girl named "Margaret"—who was left adrift, nobody remembers how, in a village of the county, 70 years ago, and in the absence of an almshouse, was left to grow up as best she could—have descended two hundred criminals. As an illustration of this remarkable record, in one single generation of her unhappy line there were twenty children; of these, three died in infancy, and seventeen survived to maturity. Of the seventeen, nine served in the State prisons for high crimes an aggregate term of fifty years, while the others were frequent inmates of jails and penitentiaries and almshouses. The whole number of this girl's descendants, through six generations, is nine hundred, and besides the two hundred who are on record as criminals, a large number have been idiots, imbeciles, drunkards, lunatics, prostitutes and paupers. A stronger argument for careful treatment of pauper children than these figures could hardly be found.

MORNING DAWN.

MT. LEBANON, N. Y.

Zi-on shall a-rise and blos-som like the rose, Her glo-ri-ous light shine forth to the is-lands a-far,
As when the star of Beth-le-hem a-rose. The wil-der-ness shall bloom, hills and val-leys re-joice.
Woodlands sing for joy, and the bar-ren des-ert smiles To hear the Saviour's voice. Thus saith the Lord, it shall yet come to pass,
Many peo-ple and strong na-tions shall come to Jer-u-sa-lem to seek and to pray be-fore the Lord.

Chorus to be sung at the end of each repeat.

Hail! all hail, the com-ing day! Hail! all hail, the com-ing day.

RENOUNCING THE WORLD.

For three score years I've lived and toiled,
Where selfishness has reigned supreme;
Where sordid hands have grasped and soiled
All that was worthy of esteem.

Like soldiers in their horrid strife
To main and slaughter all their foes,
So men have struggled through this life,
To gain its lucre crimes and woes.

To heal the wounds of such a curse,
Many have read, thought, preached and prayed,
While still the world's been growing worse,
Its downward course by nothing staid.

After much study, now, the case
To me seems like the Gospel way,
Too plain for one of weakest race—
Who loves the truth—to go astray.

Can any live for self and others?
Serve mammon, and his God as true?
Exalt himself, lift up his brothers?
Keep all he has—give to the poor?

By aiming low, can we rise high?
Pursuing wrong, can we end right?
Perceive the truth with double eye?
Truly preach peace, and really fight?

Such monstrous wrongs make fools and knaves,
Crowding the road to endless strife,
While simple views make moral BRAVES,
Who lead the narrow way to life.

As Bunyan writes, destruction lowers
O'er all this silly reckless world;
Why not then flee to the sweet bowers
Where Christ is gathering all his fold?

Gladly I go to that sweet place,
To that household of purest love,
Renouncing all the world to embrace,
And live and reign with Christ above.

SUNNY SIDE.

Look on the sunny-side—dense clouds may gather,
And silently overspread life's fairest sky;
Look on the sunny-side—next to your sorrow,
And soon the dark shadows of gloom will pass by.

Look on the sunny-side, weary, worn sisters,
Ye who are treading the world's thorny maze;
You tread not alone, if your faith reaches heaven,
You toil not alone,—God will brighten your days.
Look on the sunny-side, true struggling brothers,
Ye, who are battling with hardships of life;
Fight on, your weapons heaven will prosper;
And vict'ry determine your zeal in the strife.

Look on the sunny-side, ye who are hopeless,
And constantly mourn over life's many ills;
Keep up good courage, for glorious sun-light
Is gilding the tops of faith's beautiful hills!
Look on the sunny-side, O ye who are drooping,
Like flowers that perish for want of good care!
Come, gather new strength—Truth's morning is breaking,
Lift up your frall heads, and breathe in its sweet air.

Look on the sunny-side, ye who are burdened,
Cast off your cares, for this life is so brief,
It must not be wasted, nor robbed of enjoyment,
Nor given to toil without rest or relief.
Look on the sunny-side ye who are youthful,
Gather the light that will ever abide;
The way to be hopeful and healthful and happy
Is to keep right before you—the bright sunny-side.

SPIRITUAL CABINET.

CAPTIOUS investigators of Spiritual phenomena have made great outcries about the "dark circles," and serious objections to the "medium's cabinet," I think unwisely so. Jesus touched the law, when he said, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, shut the door, and thy Father, who seeth in secret, better than in outward light, shall respond to thee openly—externally."

The Soul—the real man or woman—has but one set of senscs. If these are acting through the bodily organs, upon things of external nature, they are turned away from the objective realities of the inner Spirit world. Stillness—Quaker retirement—waiting upon God—is as necessary to those who would become Spiritual-minded, as that a person wishing to go east, should turn his or her face from the west.

In the early stages and phases of spiritual development, this retirement is indispensable. As communications become established, faith increased, and the power of mediumship multiplied, the currents from the inner world more readily overbalance the earth currents of thought, motive and self-interest.

Some self-possessed persons can, like Horace Greeley, carry on conversation, and write editorials, at the same time. That is not the rule. Secrecy has its proper function, as in giving alms, in Spirit communion, and in many of the most important functions of animal economy.

The heart is a somewhat important organ, but the less sunlight shines upon it, the better for the rest of the members.

Among the Jews, the Ark was a hiding place for sacred things. It was kept in the Holy of Holy places "There will I meet with thee and there will I commune with thee, from between the cherubim,"—was the arrangement of the Jewish God—and that was the most private—secret—sacred place, in the whole nation. It was where the outward and inward worlds touched each other.

There may be condescension by materialization, but the Law remains—that a Cabinet is congenial to the feelings, and useful, as a meeting house, both to Mediums and Spirits.

A Shaker Society is a Spiritual Cabinet, to the outside world. We go out, and retire back again, to renew our strength. There are Thomases who need external manifestations to convince and satisfy them. They believe from that kind of evidence. They need it.

Another class believe, from a higher and more spiritual kind of evidence. More blessed are such. They are on a higher plane—further progressed.

MATERIALIZATION.

Is there any Law, under which Spirits can so clothe themselves, with earth elements, as to be tangible to the senses of mortal men and women?

This is one of the great issues of the last half of the 19th Century—to be tried by the jury of intelligent minds.

As a scientific fact, is it not wonderful that so much time and patience should be expended, in deciding whether a certain speaker to an audience of 25 or 30 persons be an inhabitant of this world—or only a visitant from the other?

Hear—1st—the following testimony of R. D. Owen. 2d—the Late Exposé. 3d—Dr. Orcutt's report, after a two weeks' investigation. And finally, take note of the oft-repeated Prophecy that "Large assemblies will yet be addressed by materialized speakers, from the Spirit world."

ROBERT DALE OWEN and Henry T. Child thought they had a "fee simple" on spiritualism and the Katie King "business," but it has slipped through their fingers. That there has been humbugging is doubtlessly true, but it turns out favorable to the mediums, the Holmes; for Owen and Childs have been humbugged to believe that they had been humbugged. Let them and the public get their lessons out of it and be ready to move on to the next "beat in the bar."—Kingdom of Heaven.

SPIRITUALISM.

The following extract gives a good idea of the progress made in the séances Mr. Owen attended:

I have seen "Katie" issue from the cabinet more than a hundred times in full form; passing in her graceful way around the circle and addressing a kind word or two or a "God bless you!" to the friends she knew. She has suffered me to cut from her head a lock of hair; and she has herself cut for me and in my presence a piece of her dress, and also of her veil, the former being apparently fine bishop's lawn, and the latter abut of lace, either of the finest quality of Honiton, or else of point de Venise, I am not certain which. She has allowed me to touch her hand, her face, her person, and to kiss her on the forehead; she then taking my face in both her hands, and giving me a similar kiss in return. She has handed me from the cabinet aperture a nosegay of red and white roses, wet as with heavy dew, and I found among them a little note, asking my acceptance of them. During a private sitting I gave her a mother-of-pearl cross with a piece of white silk cord attached, together with a small note folded up in which I had written: "I offer you this, dear Annie, because, though it be simple, it is white and pure and beautiful as you are." She took both, did not open the note, suspended the cross from her neck, kissed it, and retreated to the cabinet, closing the door. In a minute or two she returned, with the cross in one hand and the folded note in the other, bent over me and said, in her low, earnest voice and with her charming smile: "White and pure and beautiful like me—is it?" How did she read that note? The cabinet with its door closed, and its apertures covered with black curtains, is, as I have often verified, quite dark. Ever after, when she appeared she wore that cross on her breast, reminding one of the well-known lines in Pope's "Rape of the Lock." I observed that at times when she issued from the cabinet this cross shone as with a phosphorescent luster. She had also given to her, by visitors, a ring, a bracelet, and a locket, which she frequently wore. The most usual gifts, however, were nosegays, and these seemed to give her especial pleasure; she frequently, after smelling them, remarked to me how charmingly fragrant they were. On one occasion I handed to her a hair chain which had been presented to me by a friend since deceased. This she took with her and returned next day with a message from her who had given it to me.

I was in the habit after each sitting of carefully examining the cabinet; but neither cross, nor ring, nor bracelet, nor locket, nor chain was ever to be found; minute search, with a light, did not even reveal a rose-leaf.

With such or similar phenomena you are doubtless familiar; but I have seen "Katie," on seven or eight different occasions, suspended in full form about two feet from the ground for ten or fifteen seconds. It was within the cabinet, but in full view; and she moved her arms and feet gently, as a swimmer upright in the water might do. I have seen her on five several evenings disappear and reappear before my eyes, and not more than eight or nine feet distant. On one occasion, when I had given her a calla lily, she gradually vanished, holding it in her hand, and fading out from the head down, and the lily remained visible after the hand which held it was gone, the flower, however, finally disappearing also. When she reappeared the lily came back also, at first as a bright spot only, which gradually expanded into the flower. Then "Katie" stepped out from the cabinet, waving to us with all her wonted grace her adieu ere she finally retired for the evening. Thus I have seen a material object as well as a spirit vanish and reappear.

One principal objection which the scientific men have made to the examination of spiritualistic phenomena is, that most of the communications received from the spirit-world have been weak, foolish "twaddle," utterly unworthy of the persons from whom they purported to come. This objection is very fairly met by a communication from "Katie" through Dr. Child, reported by Mr. Owen in these words:

SPIRIT ADDRESS.

MY DEAR FRIENDS—I should be sorry if you inferred that the way in which I sometimes appear and speak to you and to other friends when I am materialized is a true exponent of my present condition, and that the rude and trifling manner then exhibited is a real reflection of my interior state. It is important you should know that spirits either in or out of the form, as you call it, are to a very great extent subject to the influences of the material elements with which they are clothed; and if I could have you spend a little time with me in an appreciative manner, in my interior home in spirit-land, you would not know me as the same Katie that calls you "stupid" and uses expressions which are often quite repulsive to my inner consciousness. The laws of spiritual manifestation are absolute, and whenever a spirit approaches a medium it must be more or less materialized, first, in order to come into the atmosphere of the earth, and then into that of the medium; and if it presents itself in form, it is obliged, under a law, to appear as nearly as may be as it was when it passed from the earth. Then a child of earth, though grown to maturity in spirit-life, returns as a child. Deformed persons present their deformities with precision. Spirits retain not only the recollection of the earthly conditions and appearances, but also the power of assuming them in spirit-life whenever it is desirable. You will see the importance of this power of maintaining or recurring to the primitive conditions of spirit-life, at least for a time, and until all those to whom a recognition is necessary shall have passed into that state; for this power is retained so as to be easily exercised until after all who are living on the earth at the time a spirit enters this world have also passed on, so that the new born spirit cannot fail to recognize its friends and relations. I am requested to say to you that all spirits, when they return to earth, whether they communicate or not, are absolutely subject to this law. They must assume the conditions they had when they left the earthly form, although they may bring to earth many thoughts and ideas, which they have acquired in the interior life; but even these are somewhat modified by being presented through the necessary conditions which surround them at the time: for instance, scholars from the spirit-land, speaking through mediums who are ignorant of language and the rules of grammar, may be compelled to use the incorrect expressions of the medium. It is a truth that "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets;" and every spiritual communication that has ever been given has been more or less modified by the channel through which it has passed, as well as by the essentially materialistic conditions which spirits may have been compelled to assume when they came into the earth's atmosphere and into rapport with mediums.

A notable feature of all spirit-manifestations thus far has been the low character of the spirits engaged. Leaving behind the old methods of theological proof by argument, I believe that sooner or later, God, himself, will manifest his existence in some such way as these spirits do, and so make us sure of it. He can do it, and he certainly will; there is no reason why he should not.

There is something impressive in the recent developments of spiritualism, progressing as they do in the midst of the tremendous struggle between infidelity and old Bible theology. Just now when Positivism exalts itself and prepares to condemn all religions which are not susceptible of proof, new facts appear and furnish the proof required. If Dr. Holland had understood the meaning of the spiritualistic phenomena of the present day he would have "spoken with better cheer" when he wrote the following lines:

"The old orthodox view of the Bible as a plenarily inspired book, from the first word of Genesis to the last of St. John's Revelations, is already forsaken by more minds than can be counted; and, by necessity, with the relinquishment of this view goes by the board a great mass of theology entirely dependent upon it for existence. The current popular theology cannot possibly be saved without the current and popular view of the Bible. They stand or fall together. * * *

"The facts are, however, that the revolution is going on independent of the theologians and the religious teachers, and if they are doing any thing about it they are fighting it. The result will probably, and most naturally, be a reign of infidelity, out of which, after weary, wretched years, we shall slowly emerge with our Christianity purged of its extraneous doctrines, and with a new class of religious teachers, who will look back upon the present position as one of gross blindness and fatal fatuity on the part of their predecessors." * *

The materializing spirits belong to the generative order. The same class ministered to Swedenborg, the Angel of Spiritualism.

That the reaction against the false "exposure" has fairly set in, see a lengthy article on Spiritualism, in Tribune of March 27, by Francis G. Fairfield.

THE Rev. Mr. Wells, secretary of the Ohio State Y. M. C. A., made the statement on the evening of the 11th inst., to an audience of several hundred people, that "the time is coming when Christians will love God so intensely that they will put to death even their own children who may be found holding and teaching heretical opinions." Has the doctrine of the "Vicarious Atonement" begun to bear such fruit as this, in these latter days of "hoasted civilization?" L. M. H. S.

LETTER FROM COL. OLCOTT.

—O—

To the Editor of the Times:

ALLEN HOUSE, Feb. 10, 1875.

SIR—You are quite correct in saying that "the Katie King problem is not solved yet." But certain things are solved to any reasonable man's satisfaction, viz.:

1. The mediumship of both Nelson Holmes and his wife.
2. The perjury of the woman, Eliza White, whose sworn statement under the pseudonym of "Katie King," has gone the rounds of the papers.
3. The actual appearance, to myself and others, of a male spirit recognized as John King, and of a female spirit claiming to be and recognized as Katie King.
4. The exhibition of marvels of "direct writing," the apparent dissolution and transportation of signet rings and documents.
5. The occurrence of all the Holmes' phenomena of their public circles in my own apartments, under the most satisfying test conditions.
6. The ability of the supposed spirits to understand the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Latin, Greek, Turkish, Georgian and Russian languages.
7. The writing of communications to myself by both John and Katie King, in the identical autographs of their notes of last summer to Mr. Owen and other persons.

I cannot begin to tell you the things I saw during the course of my fortnight's investigation, for the narrative occupies over fifty pages of my forthcoming book; but I will leave it to you and the public to decide, after seeing my report, whether this sensational case does not, in a very marked manner, serve as a warning to those who jump at conclusions before hearing both sides of any question.

Perhaps the most disgusting feature of the affair is that there is ground for a grave suspicion that the poor creature whose perjuries have been so widely circulated, was moved by the promise of a large sum by persons connected with the Young Men's Christian Association to do what she did, ostensibly in the interest of truth and good morals. If this should be found true, a sudden revulsion may be expected from the present state of public opinion.

EDDY SEANCE.

The following is the best representation I have met with of this New Phase in Spiritualism. It may be relied upon as a correct statement.

The Orthodox papers are kicking against the pricks in their false exposés of real facts.

MATERIALIZATION AN ESTABLISHED FACT—WONDERFUL PHENOMENA AT THE HOME OF THE EDDY MEDIUMS.

We give below an account from a Vermont correspondent, wherein are detailed occurrences which, speaking after the manner of men, "border on the marvelous." The narrative is most unqualifiedly indorsed by the witnesses present at the séance, and is by them offered to the public as evidence of the astounding power now developed at "Spirit Vale:"

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The materialization of spirits at the home of the Eddy Mediums still continues to increase in power, and for the last three weeks the manifestations have made such wonderful progress that I feel it should be known to the world, so that those seeking for light may know what spirits can do. The séance held by William Eddy, medium for materialization in the light, on the evening of February 10th, was one of the most wonderful that I have ever witnessed. The power shown by Honto, the Indian squaw, seems beyond belief. I will try and give you a brief description of a part of what transpired during the evening.

After William Eddy had been in the cabinet a short time, Honto made her appearance at the cabinet door, bounded out on the platform, dancing for a moment. She then advanced toward Mrs. Cleveland, who sat at the end of the platform, some twelve feet from the cabinet door, and took her hand, shaking it in a friendly manner; together they descended the steps leading from the platform to the floor of the circle room. Advancing close to the company composing the circle, she danced for an instant, then started for the end of the circle room (accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland), passing the lamp and stove on her way to the door—the light reflected from the stove and lamp having no apparent effect upon her. Honto was now forty feet from the cabinet; she opened the door at the end of the circle room, looking out into the hall; she then returned to the circle, and, in passing the stove, drew a materialized shawl apparently from the side of the stove, threw it over her shoulders and wore it during the evening.

Honto was now having a good time with some of the company; she put her arm around Horatio Eddy's neck and kissed him repeatedly; leaving him she went to the other end of the circle, took the violin from Joseph Rugg, who was at that time playing upon the instrument, and kissed him upon the cheek. Honto, with violin in hand, plucked upon the strings a moment, and then laying it down she again started for the end of the circle room. Reaching the door she opened it and passed out into the hall, down the stairs to the sitting-room below (about seventy feet from cabinet), where two of the Eddy family were sitting—Mrs. D. M. Eddy Brown and Miss Alice Eddy. Honto stood in the doorway of the room, facing the light of two ordinary coal-oil lamps, burning brightly at the time. She invited the ladies to come up to the circle room, as she was going to have a good time, speaking in an audible voice to them. They accepted her invitation, and accompanied her to the circle room, where they witnessed what further transpired. Honto now mingled freely with the company; sitting down beside Mr. Waterman she put her arm around his neck and kissed him several times; she visited all in the circle, kissing some, caressing others, till all present had either felt or touched her. She then started for the cabinet, springing over the railing in front of it (about five feet high) at a bound. Stopping in the doorway of the cabinet for an instant, and waving her hand and bowing good-night to all, she disappeared, and was seen no more during the séance. From the time Honto first came out of the cabinet till she left us was some twenty minutes.

The next spirit that appeared I recognized as my grandmother. She spoke in an audible voice. Next came an old lady, recognized by her daughter who was present, as Mrs. Carpenter. Next came Mrs. Eaton, one of the spirits frequently controlling the mediums. Next came Mrs. Eddy, the mother of the Eddy mediums; she stood out upon the platform, speaking in a full, distinct voice, telling her children to stand firm for truth, to live good, pure lives, and that the joys which awaited them in the other life would compensate them for all they suffered here. She spoke much more than was beautiful and instructive, making all present feel stronger to battle for truth. The next spirit I recognized as my mother. Next came a sister of Mr. Waterman, whom he recognized; followed by a lady recognized by Mr. Watson as his sister. The next spirit I recognized as John Nevins, a brother-in-law, who stood out plainly and distinctly. Next came an old gentleman, recognized by Mr. Watson as his father, John Watson. He was succeeded by William Brown, one of the medium's guides, who spoke in an audible voice, so that all present could hear; he said not one jot or one tittle of the law should pass away till all was fulfilled; I think it related to what has been promised by the spirits.

The spirits who appeared during the séance were clothed in various costumes, some being beautiful, others plain—the Indians showing more taste for display, and their dresses being magnificent. I have given only a part of what transpired. I have written facts which are attested to by those who witnessed the manifestations of which I write, they requesting me to subscribe their names to this statement.

Most truly,

EDWARD BROWN.

Beloved Elder FREDERICK:

Your card and document came yesterday. I kindly thank you for your good wishes. I desire you may be blessed in body, soul and spirit; and that the tribulation, resting on a Gathering Family, may bear good fruit in many souls.

Your visit to Vermont was in season to meet R. D. Owen, and to form another strong link in connection with those, outside, who are being prepared for an advance movement. The Spiritual forces seem to be waiting the proper moment to strike conviction—to touch the heart and awaken the conscience. Wise are the Virgins, who have laid in a store for their lamps—who are baptized with the light of the coming degree—who have honestly confessed and put away all violations of Mosaic, as well as of Divine Law. They may rejoice and be exceedingly glad. Happy the Virgins who have thrown away tobacco, drugs, superfine flour, saleratus, and the murdering of animals for food. Men and women, living the Divine Life, need none of those things, nor do they desire them. Leave them to such as seek low enjoyments—whose aspirations reach not above the animal plane.

Yourselves, Elders, Burden-Bearers, Brethren and Sisters, accept our Love, and pray for us.

Daniel Fraser, Shirley, Mass., Jan. 5, '75.

DR. CROWELL SAYS:

"The phenomena of Spiritualism will win belief from persons to whom they appeal. The time is near at hand when they will receive their fair share of attention. More important it seems to me to be to direct attention to the source and nature of the intelligence which wields this new power: to show wherein it corresponds to that which always has been the chosen vehicle of Divine Revelation: to mark its claims to a hearing on grounds purely religious: and to show, as may easily be done, that it is of God, not of the devil: in strictest accord with previous Revelation as preserved in the Bible, not in antagonism to the Divine utterances in ages past. Man has been crying out long in hope for something which shall satisfy his spiritual cravings. He has outgrown the old faith, and seeks a creed more rational and more comprehensible. If his spiritual nature, as in too many cases, has been starved well nigh to death, he has been dimly conscious all through his blank materialism of a something within that is not satisfied. If the spirit has mercifully been preserved through its trials, its voice is heard in lament over spiritual destitution, and earnest cries for more light. How many in the last two decades have said wearily to themselves, 'This theology is dry, dry as dust. I cannot assimilate it. It does not nourish me. If something better do not come somehow, then religion will soon be dead; and faith will loose its hold upon men.'"

ANTIPODES.

—O—

STATE SCHOOL, ASCOT, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, }
December 30, 1874. }

Dear Friend and Brother EVANS:

At last the Spirit World has opened to me, and a regular visitation occurs, at my house, once in every twenty-four hours. Six different spirits have held communication with us, one of whom says he will abide with me as a regular visitant until the time of my going home. Last week, I had the felicity of receiving a message from Ann Lee, through the Spirit Katy King, who writes through my little daughter Grace. Need I tell you, dear friend, how highly I prize the inestimable privilege accorded me of being put in direct communication with the hosts of Heaven?

I trow not, for your own recorded experience, in your Autobiography, has long ago informed me how precious, how soul-charming and life-giving such experience was to yourself. I can now say with Simeon of old, "Now let thy servant die in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." Or with Paul, "For me to die is gain," and "to live is Christ." But in reality, there is no more death. It is swallowed up in LIFE, and life is ETERNAL. The Spirits tell me I shall never see America, in my body life, but that is no disappointment to me now, for, being all of one Faith and of one household, we shall, eventually, live together. Let me here greet, fraternally, all the Brethren and Sisters in your happy Mountain Home. I am often with you, in the desire and faith of soul—the foreshadows of the reality, near at hand.

Outwardly speaking, I am, at present, alone. This is the season allotted to holidays, and I am in the very middle of a three weeks' vacation, six days of which I have been in the house by myself. My nearest neighbor lives half a mile away.

The Spirits, who told me I should never visit you, in the body, speak differently of George. He will be accorded that physical, as well as intellectual and psychical gratification. My three children—by present wife—Peter 21; George, 19; and Grace, 10 years of age, have all elected to live a virgin life—to keep the body pure and devote it to its highest uses. During the six days I have been living outside of human society, I have realized, somewhat better, the most eventful periods of Moses, Jesus, Mahomet and others, in their times of seclusion from mankind. Solitude is no protection from sin and temptation. The severest temptation awaited Jesus in the wilderness. And I find, in my brief experience, that the greatest safety, and the greatest freedom from temptation lie in actual service—in real work—in doing the will of the Father. A garden, allowed to lie idle, will produce weeds—but one in constant cultivation will yield fruit, to the comfort and profit of the cultivator. Pure and cheerful society—what a blessing to those who have it! And what a deprivation to those who have it not! We read that after the temptation in the wilderness "Angels came and ministered to him." This was not only a reasonable relief, but a beautiful compensation. Judging from the Law of compensation—the equality of things—I incline to the opinion, that fewer direct Angel visitations would be experienced by persons enjoying the blessing of good and suitable society, than by those deprived of it—even for a season. We might never have had the Book of Revelations, had John been in bodily companionship with the visible Church, all his life.

Who knows, that in the yet undeveloped but near future, there will not be craniograms, homograms and mentigrams—just as there are now telegrams and cablegrams? There is little left to surprise us now, in the way of new discoveries, though there is yet for us, an untouched, untasted infinitude, to be received with thankfulness and joy. Every discovery made, a little wider opens the veil—a little more appreciation of our relation to God, and sub-relation to things about us and to each other as dwellers in higher spheres. We are ascending to God in a double ratio. We are being relieved of the dross that weighs down, and increasing in Angel strength that wings aloft. Earth recedes and Heaven draws near.

Before closing this rambling letter, I beg to be kindly remembered to Bro. Peebles. I intend, as soon as my family come home, to go and spend a few days in Melbourne, among the friends and associates of friend Peebles, while in Australia.

I seek also to be had in brotherly remembrance by the associated family of Believers at Mount Lebanon.

I am, Dear Br., thine truly in eternal relationship.

John Finlay.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON DIET.

(For the American Shaker and Shakeress.)

“To the pure, all things are pure.”

NONE are more fond of quoting this saying than gluttons and gross, indiscriminate feeders.

Another favorite subject of reference, by the same class of persons, is the Vision of Peter—Acts 11—wherein he saw all manner of beasts, fowls and creeping things, all of which he was commanded to eat.

Construe this vision literally, into an injunction to use, as daily food, all the articles therein mentioned, and there is nothing alive, so repugnant to our senses, that it may not be eaten, by ourselves, and placed before our friends as a delicacy. Except the vision be so construed as to warrant serving up the most obnoxious reptiles and vermin, as food, on our tables, it means nothing as regards the regulation of diet—and without seeking for the true and deeper meaning concealed beneath the symbolic creatures of the vision, we will, for the present, lay it aside as having no bearing upon the subject of diet.

Of the first quotation, it is worthy of observation that the saying is applicable to one class only—the Pure.

The impure—nay, even the half and between sort are excluded. To the Pure, alcohol and aquafortis are alike innocuous, because the pure will put each to its proper use. The foolish, or impure might be tempted to put one or other into the mouth. It is as if we should say, fire-proof materials are in no danger from fire—but it is abundantly evident that all combustible substances must be excluded from the category of things not in danger from fire.

The Pure, in body, mind and soul, will seek to clothe themselves with purity, and to promote the purity of the world, by eating and drinking only what tends to purity, and by keeping every thing in its proper place. A pig in a sty may be tolerated, but a pig in a parlor would be abominable. Some there are, and the writer of this article is one of them, who think that a pig in a human stomach is a greater abomination still; and when the pig is no longer considered fit matter for the human stomach, even the pig in the sty had better be put away too, and the pig allowed, as of old, to consociate with the wolf and the bear, away from the haunts of men. Some would even go further, and exclude animal food of every kind from the stomach. Who will judge what is fittest? Is the drunkard, the daily besotted drunkard, the fittest person to judge of purity and health in our beverages? If he be not so, then let me ask who shall judge of what is best and most appropriate for human food? The gourmand—the glutton, the obese-faced, drum-punched humanity, whose lack-lustre eyes, after a full cramming, show as much intelligence and little more than could be observed in a couple of boiled gooseberries stuck in a pudding! Is this moving hoghead of hard one of “the Pure to whom all things are Pure”? Shall we appeal to the ordinary experience of humanity, its fair average? Let it be so, and surely no one claiming to rank among the average will object to the scrutiny of the eye and the nose as to what articles of food are fittest and best for human beings to eat.

First, then, animal food as the base or lowest element, beginning with the cannibal—his diet is human flesh—and this we all know, when in a state of decomposition, is the most offensive substance with which we can possibly come in contact through the senses. Let any one that doubts this try the air of a dissecting room, or open a grave, that is three or four weeks filled, and he will be convinced. Here then we find human flesh, the most repulsive considered as food in a state of decomposition—and be it observed all food is decomposed before it leaves the body, which is built up with the products of this decomposition. Second rate in the scale ascending, is the flesh of animals, which in a state of decomposition, is not quite so hateful to us as is human flesh.

Third rate ascending, is the flesh of fowls and fishes, judged by the same process; and fourth rate higher in the scale of purity, is animalized substances including milk, butter, cheese and eggs. These are all offensive in a state of decomposition, but not so bad as any of the preceding three classes of food. Fifth in the ascending scale, are the roots of plants, such as potatoes, turnips, carrots, etc. Sixth in order, are green and succulent vegetables, as greens, cabbage, spinach, etc. Seventh in order, are the various kinds of grain, which in a decomposed state are certainly not agreeable, but tolerable by comparison with the others. Higher we come to pulse, such as peas, beans, lentiles etc. Higher still we come to berries—and highest, best and purest of human food, we come to fruit, and so little is that obnoxious to us that the most fastidious and refined in taste may cut off the decayed half of a peach, and eat the other half of the same fruit; who among you would do the same with a pig or even a sheep? It may here be objected that there is not fruit enough in the world for all—and that even if there were, still it would not agree with all. To these and a host of other objections the writer of this would only say, with the means placed at your disposal, study every day to live according to your best and purest instincts. Do the best and BE the best you possibly can every day; and you will shortly find that both your means and ability to do better will increase. Do not be discouraged with failures—try again; and never by any means let the impure or the foolish laugh you out of your purpose to become Pure, for when you are once Pure in heart, you shall See God.

John Finlay, Victoria, Australia

—O—

MT. LEBANON, March 12, 1875.

JOHN FINLAY—MY DEAR FRIEND:

Your Letter, and Article, for the SHAKER AND SHAKERESS, were received on the 9th inst. I was much pleased to hear from you once more, and to learn of your welfare and fortunes. I shall publish most of your Letter, and the Article. Glad the connection with the Spirit World, is formed, with Medium in your own house and family. That you grow in understanding and increase in faith is evident. I would love to meet you, in the body.

If that may not be—or if it may be, I rejoice in the hope of meeting you in the land of souls. And also that you see the telegram, from you to me, among the possibles. And why not? The Law, under which it can occur, exists—under the Magnetic Law, time and space are ignored.

Your views, upon Diet, are in accord with our experience. Your mind is in a profitable labor.

It is pleasant to think that your children have consecrated themselves to chastity—the foundational virtue.

“In this thou art marvelous before the most high, in thy continence which thou hast had from thy youth up”—were the words of a Spirit to a Sire of old. It is just as true to-day.

Abuse of the Stomach leads to abuse of the generative powers and functions—and that corrupts the earth at its foundations. “The foundations of the earth are out of course”—was a true saying. Then came wars and fighting, from the lusts of flesh and spirit. What a work is that, of redemption!—redemption from all the evils that fleshly man is heir to! And what a fearful fact, that Immortals are, without their own agency, or consent, born into existence, saddled by their progenitors, with hereditary vile propensities, wicked passions and pernicious habits! How shall that wrong be righted? A momentous question! Will it be answered—the problem solved? Is not the Life and Immortality, of which the Scriptures speak, here referred to? Think of it. The Gospel is a Gift of God to Humanity. It is designed to square accounts between man and God. A day of judgment—the orthodox say—to punish the wicked. Very well, while justice allows the All-Wise—All-Good—Almighty to take vengeance upon the wicked violaters of his Law, will not outraged humanity cry unto that same God for Amnesty—a condoning of all past offenses—on the same ground of justice, right and goodness? “Come and let us reason together, saith the Lord.” And come and let us reason together responds humanity.

HEALING.

—O—

Dear Elder FREDERICK:

It is a duty, which I feel incumbent upon me, to give an humble statement of the travail of my soul within a few weeks past.

About two years ago, two Shaker Fathers, from the Spirit land, came and showed me these walks and buildings, and this beautiful home with its delightful associations. I was induced, almost immediately, to visit Mount Lebanon. My visit gave me entire satisfaction. I returned to my home. My body was absent, but my spirit was continually with you. Being, all my life, a confirmed invalid, I felt it would be unjust to try to thrust myself upon your Order. My Angel Fathers came again, and gave me a kind and loving invitation to renew my visit. I wrote you in December. You said: “We are willing you should come and try yourself by our Order. We cannot tell how much you need a new creation, both soul and body, until we see you.” I came, as you know, and threw myself at your feet, assuring you how grateful I would be if you could be the medium of affording me any aid, spiritually, or physically. Your faith, and the faith of the family, took hold upon me. I seemed to rise from discouragement and despair. I followed your rules with regard to all hygienic laws. The idea was strong, in my mind, that it would take a long time to eradicate a disease which had, so many years, been fastening itself upon my system, and had so successfully baffled all earthly power.

Thursday, the 4th of March, my Angel Fathers made me another visit. They said: "Child, step in, while the waters are troubled." I asked what they meant by "stepping in— and the waters being troubled." They replied: "Water is an emblem of truth, because of its cleansing, healing and purifying effects, and when the mind is wrought upon by spirit ministration, and brought into proper relations and heavenly conditions, and in perfect unison with the heavenly spheres, then the waters are troubled, and the effect of obedience is peace to the soul, and health to the body. "Child, you are now brought into relations and surroundings, mental, physical and spiritual, whereby you may look for a new creation, both of soul and body." It is now nine weeks since I came here. My recovery has been constant and rapid. For thirty years I have not known a well day, nor a night of undisturbed repose. Now I feel well and strong, and sleep in peace, at night, with all the sweetness of an infant. How can I be humble enough, or thankful enough, for all these earthly and heavenly ministrations, which have been the means of delivering me from the earthly Babylon, and introducing me into the Kingdom of Heaven—not ideal—real, tangible and practical. My dear Angel Fathers wished me to give their Angel Love to all Believers, throughout the land, and tell them to have faith in Angel ministrations—that Organizations and Communities are being formed, whereby the elements of society, on earth, are being stirred, in conjunction with the Spirit world—that soon, it would not be thought a strange thing for men to converse with Angels, as familiarly as one man converses with another—that soon, the lame, the blind, the diseased would be flocking to the Pentecostal Church, for deliverance from all the ailments of earth—inquiring what they must do to be saved. Angels, as well as men, will rejoice, when they see eye to eye, and discern between the righteous and the wicked—between him who serveth God, and him who serveth him not. Then the little ripples, appearing here and there, upon the waters of truth, shall be a mighty wave, will sweep away all error and false doctrine—and the Kingdom of the Lord will cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea. In this way, the Millennial Church, on earth, will be caught up to meet the Spirit Spheres, drawing all men unto it, and each individual will become a Savior—many Saviors in Mount Zion, each a drop composing the unfathomable ocean of truth—each a grain, constituting the new Heavens and the new Earth—each a living stone, composing the vast Temple—the beautiful structure, which shall go towering into the highest Heavens, with shoutings of Grace! Grace! unto it.

Mount Lebanon, March 10, 1875. Gilbert Hubbel.

FACING THE MUSIC.

—O—

THERE is a music in truth that attracts the multitudes, while it charms the lovers of righteousness. The homely idiom of "facing the music," is replete with metre; and to the truly honest, is abundant with melodious chords. But, our love of truth too frequently finds illustration, in our delight at seeing others confront the music of truth; while a noticeable discord is apparent, with a careless use of rhythm, rests, diminuendoes, slurs and trills, when we listen to the music of what we are, and what we ought to be. However mellifluous we claim the undulations of truth to be, we are apt to realize, that the more beautiful melody is evolving, when others, instead of ourselves, are facing the undulations. Truth never appears so inharmonic, as when we face the music, which we ourselves have made. We have large faith in humanity; yet we believe it is easier for any nation to acknowledge all truth, than for any individual to practice it; while we know of some individuals, who are so in earnest to harmonize their lives with truth, that they listen to its particular symphonies, with an interest, which, considering how discordant their organisms, is simply wondrous. The melody of Jesus' life was the result of his facing the music of the heavenly law, which led to the denial of selfishness, and a thorough consecration to godliness. So much for preface.

Do we love the music of truth so well, that we are willing to face it, until our theology, thoughts, logic and lives, are in unison with "the song of Moses and the Lamb?"

Let us see what is meet to face this musical arrangement: The song of Moses is illustrative of the work of Moses with his people; and this was, undoubtedly, a system that promised and resulted in such physical perfection, that after many hundreds of years' deterioration, we are forced to admit, with Parton, that the Jews of to-day are the purest and healthiest six millions of people on the face of the earth! When we recall the catalogue of diseases with whose infliction they suffered when they went out of Egypt; and reflect on the fact, that under the guidance of Moses, this entire catalogue was obliterated, we are at once interested to inquire into the system Moses inaugurated, and to pray for a Moses to lead us Gentiles out of our lazar conditions, even though it be through a forty years' labyrinthian pilgrimage, sustained by a manna or saw-dust pudding diet. Let us have health! How those old Jews longed for their former regime, we can imagine; and how the poor doctors must have railed, when they realized that their base of drug supplies was on the other side of the waters, needs not a vivid imagination to comprehend. All history has not presented a character that has called forth more of our sympathy, than this same Moses, who, aiming at the salvation of his peoples' bodies, was, nevertheless, so terribly abused by them because he would not let them continue in sin and die by wholesale! A little experience of ours, has intimated to us their sufferings, and their conquests. Before we concluded singing the praises of pork, we faced the music of nine-tenths more bilious fevers and cancerous afflictions than we have suffered since learning to sing better songs. And yet our Moses and Miriam had a serious time with us on that journey. What we did in derogation of pork, we should do with every unphysiological practice, and every unchristian habit; and though it might consign to the dead sea, a thousand gods and gewgaws, that pleased perverted taste and pride of life; that unnaturally stimulated, narcotized, or falsely embellished our physical beings; yet, if it is not the call of the gospel to us, to face the music of such a good ridance, then I am unhappily deceived. And yet, some one must be willing to suffer abuse, to be underrated, spiritually stoned, or perhaps consigned to oblivion, who will raise the standard of gospel progress, and go ahead! And while some musician sings the songs of physiological reform, which appear discordant and adverse to us, let us sufficiently "agree with our adversary" to ask: While we are trying to overcome the evils of the flesh,—the perverted passions of nature,—are we not feeding and strengthening such evil passions through the alimentary canal, every day of our lives? Hence, from such a cause, what the effect? what success? "Watchmen, what of the night?" Had there been no Moses, to lead Israel from their unphysiological habits, there never would have been a Jesus, to sing the song of perfection of body and health of soul. Judaism and Christianity should go hand in hand to-day, for, so far from their being antipodes, as Paul, in his unchristian genuflections to "foolish Galatians" and "carnal Corinthians," would cause to appear, they are the dual affinities that make the perfect Christian! It is a feature of original Christianity, that appears almost lost to recollection, that before Jesus accepted any as disciples, he would either refer them to "keep the law," or by the powers of health investing him, would cure them. How many millions of miserably sick, whom nature will not own, and until nature does own them, the gospel can only in part accept, if at all, yet making large professions of Christianity; and ourselves among the number! Until that time shall come, when we can sing "I AM NOT SICK," let us ever have an apology ready, for hymning "I AM A CHRISTIAN!" Brethren, this is facing the music in earnest—is it true music? How many will agree with me, that the poor grace with which we face "the song of the Lamb," is the direct consequence of our progenitors' inability and unwillingness to face the music of the Song of Moses? We shall leave for our next paper "Christ and Moses;" but it is only proper to consider how beautiful the relations, between the true followers of Moses, and the same of the Lamb would be to day, had each in the past, and did each now, face the musical instructions of their respective heads! The former, in health, would reproduce healthy bodies containing sound minds. The latter would baptize these, with the advancing light and conduct of the heavenly school. But to-day, a healthy soul cannot be found, because of the want of a befitting tabernacle. What are we to do? "Keep the law;" shun the disastrous consequences of broken physiological law; recreate a new body by the uses of reason, religion and science; and invite a new soul by the regeneration of a foul stomach. Let us face the music of reform, of truth, no matter how much it may be opposed to our tastes, or educations. "Conceived in sin, and born in iniquity," let us not repine, and say there is no use trying. Let us own and face the music; there is nothing gained by hiding behind the bulwark of professional Christianity. Let us own we are not Christians; but very desirous of being such; and though laboring under the very unfavorable conditions of unmosaic organizations, physically and mentally; yet determined to retrieve these misfortunes to the extent of our ability, by obedience to the physiological laws of Moses, and adhesion to the virginal, unselfish characteristics that are ever heard reverberating from the life-song of the Lamb.

MARRIAGE. PROTESTANT CHRISTIANITY.

—O—

"THE Significance of the Tilton-Beecher Trial," from which we excerpt the following, touching the two dominant Institutions of the country—Christianity and Marriage:

These questions will be asked and profoundly considered by the Christian world, and by everybody who has not already settled them adversely to the "only name under heaven" by which it is claimed it is possible to be saved.

We entirely agree with Mr. Tracy, attorney for Beecher, that the validity of the Christian scheme is at stake in the Beecher trial. There is another equally important institution at stake in this trial, and that is the marriage institution, at least from the church standpoint. If such a man as Beecher cannot and does not keep his marriage vows, who can and who does? If the result of two generations of Christian sanctification, salvation and ministerial exaltation, does not prepare a man to live virtuously inside marriage, there must be something wrong in marriage or something wrong in the Christian salvation.

Earlville Transcript.

BILL FOR HANGING AND BOILING A FRIAR.—A person writes as follows to the Kentish Observer: "In the present age of religious tolerance and high price of labor, the following may not be uninteresting. It is extracted from an old magazine, and is an authentic copy of a document of the date: 'Account of the hanging and parboiling of Friar Stone, of Canterbury, in 1539. Paid for half a ton of timber to make a pair of gallows for to hang Friar Stone, 2s. 6d.; to a carpenter for making the same gallows, and the dray, 1s. 4d.; to a laborer that digged the holes, 3d.; other expenses of setting up the same, and carriage of the timber from Stabgate to the dungeon, 1s.; for a hurdle, 6d.; for a load of wood, and for a horse to draw him to the dungeon, 2s. 3d.; paid two men that sat at the kettle and parboiled him, 1s.; to three men that carried his quarters to the gates and set them up, 1s.; for halters to hang him, and Sandwich cord, and for screws, 1s.; for a woman that scoured the kettle, 2d.; to him that did execution, 3s. 8d.; total, 14s. 8d.'"

CHARACTER MAKES THE MAN.—The man of character is always the man of iron nerve; he may be neither a great statesman nor politician; he may be humble in his associations and his aspirations; but with all these exceptions, if he has character, his heart is right, his integrity is unshaken. He looks on truth with a clear vision, acting in accordance with its glorious dictates; he does not fear nor shun the face of his fellow-man, for his heart is white with integrity, and he looks humbly and trustfully up to the source of truth, and his fellow-beings, in a lowlier sense, look up to him because he is trustworthy, and, in short, has character—good and stable character. Character is the corner stone in individual greatness—the Doric and splendid column in the majestic structure of true and dignified man, who is at once a subject and a king.

A. DOOLITTLE, EDITRESS.

THE BAPTIZED JESUS.

ONE point, we take as granted, upon which all Believers in Christ's Second Appearing are in accord; that Jesus was born a Jew; educated and reared a Jew — the highest type of Judaism — morally and spiritually more progressed than any other of his race and was thus prepared to receive the Divine Messenger sent of God to open a new Era, by ministering a new Holy Spirit baptism—a baptism of fire. That this Holy Spirit took up its abode with Jesus, and became his spiritual Guide and Inductor into a new Christian dispensation.

The question arises in the minds of many, whether the Christ-Spirit, that descended upon him, at his baptism, took entire possession of the man Jesus, so much so, that thence forward, every act that he did, and word that he spake, were under the full control and direction of that Spirit.

The Apostles of Jesus, in their different epistles, to the Churches—to whom we give credence as truthful, and measurably inspired men—make some statements that would seem to justify investigation from honest truth seekers. The Apostle James states a self-evident axiom that "God cannot be tempted to evil, neither tempteth he any man;" by which we understand it was the human Jesus—not the divine Christ that was tempted.

In Matthew, we read that after Jesus was baptized, "he was led, of the Spirit, into the wilderness,"—does not say what Spirit—"and was there tempted forty days and nights;" and that he fasted during that time; but the Apostle does not specify what the peculiar temptations were, while in the wilderness; probably he did not know precisely. Then again, "the devil took him up into the holy city, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple," and conversed with him there; and he (Jesus) told him "It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God;" evidently showing that two spirits or influences were at work to gain the vantage-ground; and for that purpose the devil persevered in his efforts, and again "took him into an exceeding high mountain, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory thereof." Luke states that this was done in a moment of time, if so, it must have been done in thought, and not by actual sight. Be that as it may, the writer undertakes, this time, to show something of the nature of the temptations.

That Satan was very anxious—seeing the superiority of the organism of Jesus, and the force of his intellectual powers, and spiritual attainments—to thwart the design of Providence in regard to him, there need be little doubt; for Satan knew, that if he could not engage his services in his cause, Jesus would be a powerful medium to pull down and destroy his kingdom; and thus he offered to make Jesus ruler over all those things which he had showed to him, and tempted him with, if he would worship him.

Jesus, although sorely tried, could not be bought; but said "Get thee hence;" and the devil fled—left him,—and Angels, or the Christ-Spirit returned to him with a renewed baptism, and gave him great spiritual power.

Paul said in his epistle to the Hebrews: "We have not an High Priest that cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities;" but he was tempted in all points as we are. May we inquire by what authority the Apostles of Jesus made those assertions? Did he make those statements to them, or to others? Or did they infer from observation, or write by inspiration concerning it?

If the Apostles had not positive knowledge respecting it, did they not take an unwarrantable position when they asserted that such was the case? Jesus, himself said, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

Truth will lose nothing by candid investigation. We cannot conceive that it would be a mark of infidelity to Christ, or of irreverence to the man Jesus, who received the Christ baptism, if we seek to understand, whether, by that baptism, he was instantaneously lifted up above the traditional education of his Jewish fathers, who believed in war, marriage and the private property system, and practiced the same, or whether he was lifted up by degrees, and gradually emancipated; or in other words, whether he did find a degree of travail after his first baptism, and really learned obedience through suffering. If this be so, then we can approach him very nearly, and find succor; for in this also, he is our example, and can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities.

We see a wide difference between Belief and Temptation. Belief is the result of evidence presented to the conscious reasoning faculties of the soul. Temptation comes through the lower passionate nature in man and in woman.

I do not say that Jesus believed in the physical resurrection, in war, marriage, or the private property system after his baptism. I would not be willing even to acknowledge that I have thus believed, since my first baptism into the faith of the Gospel of Christ's Second Appearing. But, the baptism into the old theology, which I first received in Anti-Christ's Kingdom, often beclouded my vision, and was an impediment in my way, and had to be outgrown. I found that impressions imbibed in early life, that had found a lodgment in the soul, would not give place to new ideas without a conflict—an effort.

So, reasoning from analogy, I am inclined to believe that if Jesus was really tempted in all points, as men and women are tempted, whom he came to save and redeem, and that the Apostles, who listened to his teachings and promulgated his doctrines, were men of like passions with us, and were liable to misconceive and misunderstand—see and understand in part—then we can find a solution, and reconcile the seeming contradictions which we find in the Scriptural records.

Although Jesus was greatly favored by his ancestry in his birth and education under the Essene and Platonic teachers of his time—which enlarged his powers of conception and discrimination, and prepared him to receive the heavenly Dove Spirit—yet we think he was not then fully perfected; but continued to travail and suffer, and learn obedience.

Some of the Gnostics, in the early days of Christianity, taught that Christ was a mere man, born of a virgin, and excelled the prophets in virtue. They said the Apostles thus taught; but those who came after them, made a God of Jesus, who was not a God. Neither did those writers make a distinction between the man Jesus, and the Christ-Spirit that anointed, or baptized him.

From the earliest ages of time, of which we have any record, the great sea of human thought has been in constant agitation concerning God, his attributes and his requirements upon the race. Also, as to the quality, and potency of the Agents employed to execute his will; and how many Gods there are, either created, or self-existent.

All this is well, and perhaps very necessary for the exercise of the reasoning powers in men and women; and to create a healthy action, that will mature, and advance them from childhood conditions, and give force of character and strength of mind. So long as it does not engender strife, and lead to bitter controversy, it is pleasant to exchange thoughts. Through this medium, if truth be our aim, we sometimes drink in new inspirational ideas which give life to the soul.

THE DUALITY OF JESUS.

CONSIDERING the great difficulty under which the life and teachings of Jesus have been transmitted to us—written from oral statements made half a century after they had transpired, and how much that was relevant and essential to a perfect understanding of those teachings may have been forgotten in the life of the witness, or lost to the world through their death, and consequently the equivocal character of our own religious education, it may not be strange, that so many who speak or write upon the subject of "New Testament Spiritualism," fall into the error of confounding the medium Jesus, with the controlling spirit Christ.

If the fact could be fully comprehended and accepted that Jesus and Christ are two distinct personages speaking and acting at different times through the same organism, what an amount of brain labor would be saved in the vain endeavor to reconcile apparent contradictions and obvious paradoxes. To my understanding of the scriptures, Jesus, per se, never claimed to be more than the son of man, and of the seed of David. That he was susceptible to spirit impressions from his childhood, as all great mediums have been, there is little doubt, but he was never Christ until after his baptism by John, when he became clairvoyant and clairaudient, both seeing and hearing the divine spirit that was to possess and control him. During the subsequent forty days, by fasting and prayer, he overcame the evil spirit—which it seems entered him by the same law with the good—was fully developed as a grand healer, with the power to cast out devils or evil spirits, and also became an impressional or trance speaker, for when he appeared among them as a teacher, "they were astonished at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes."

They evidently understood his mediumship, but had no conception of the magnitude of the controlling spirit. They were looking for a fulfillment of the promised Messiah, but did not expect him through so humble a channel as a poor mechanic, who had been reared in their own country. Peter was the first to whom the divine truth was revealed. "When Jesus came into the coast of Caesarea and Philippi, he asked his disciples, whom do men say that I the son of man am?" Please note the significance of the reply: "Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and others that thou art one of the prophets." (They were willing to concede him one of these spirits.) "But whom think ye that I am?" And Simon Peter answered and said unto him, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Jesus perceived that Peter was clairvoyant and enthusiastically exclaimed, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my father which is in Heaven, and I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

He spoke confidently because he saw that his disciples possessed the elements of mediumship of which Peter was the first fruits, and he felt that through them he should be able to build a spiritual church that no evil influence could subvert, "and he charged them that they should tell no man that he was the Christ." Luke says at the time of his baptism, "Jesus began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph," which was doubtless true, since Mary his mother, who should know, called Joseph his father, "Thy father and I have sought thee." So then when he affirms, "I can of myself do nothing," etc., it is Jesus the son of man, but when he prays, "Father glorify thou me with the glory I had with thee before the world," it is Christ the son of the living God. Again when accused of casting out devils, through Beelzebub, the prince of devils, he replies, "Whosoever speaketh a word against the son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him in this world nor in the world to come. Could be more clearly express his duality? Say what you like against the medium, but don't dare to attack the pure spirit that controls him! I have great faith in Bible Spiritualism. The very fact that these phenomena exist to-day, is proof positive to me that they did exist eighteen hundred years ago, and the marvel is, that all Christendom does not perceive the analogy; but Jesus said to his disciples, "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that this blindness has happened unto the Jews in part, that the Gentiles might be brought in." Is it not thus at the present time? May not this blindness have happened unto the churches in part, that Materialists, Skeptics and Infidels might be brought in? I am not impatient concerning the churches, since they dare not cruelly us—still it might be well for them to consider the admonition of Gamaliel, a learned doctor of laws, a Pharisee, which was, "Refrain from these men and let them alone, for if this work be of men it will come to naught, but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found to fight against God."

FAITHFULNESS.

—O—

FAITHFULNESS, in all things which pertain to the life that now is, as well as growth into the divine life, is the Christian's duty. "If, therefore, ye have been unfaithful in the unrighteous manum, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" was a sublime saying of Jesus, our Lord and Pattern.

Our first parents in Shaker history, strictly enjoined the principle of Prudence, upon their followers, as essential to the Christian life. They taught that as we are dependent upon the Giver of all good,—through the natural elements—for the sustenance of life, therefore, it is a sin to waste, even a particle.

They started poor in this world's goods, with neither houses, food, nor clothing, sufficient to make them comfortable. But they were rich in faith and good works. And we, by following their examples of Industry and Prudence, through years of toil, have obtained comfortable homes; but neither wealth, nor luxury connected therewith.

It is a truthful remark, that no one would become rich, by honest industry alone. The various speculations which the children of this world engage in, to gain riches, are not tolerated by the teachings of Jesus, nor by the life examples of the first Founders of our institution. One of the Apostles said, "They that will be rich, fall into a snare; and into many hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." We are also admonished of the near relationship between the spiritual and the temporal; that they are connected as closely as soul and body. A healthy soul cannot exist in a diseased, sickly body; and while the soul is tenanted in a mortal body, it must hold a strong sympathy with it; and while possessed of physical needs, those needs have a demand upon us.

Our temporal possessions, which are gained by industry, and consecrated to the good of all who are striving to upbuild a second Pentecostal Church of Virgin Purity—United Interests—separate from worldly pride, and ambition—greatly enhance our spiritual advancement.

In the early days of Believers, when they were scattered upon the mountains, struggling with many privations, they would, after doing a heavy day's work, often travel many miles through storm and cold, to meet, with kindred spirits, at some convenient place, and there renew their vows, and present their offerings unto the Lord. We, of to-day, experience but little of their sufferings and privations; scarcely any, until the recent catastrophe of our Sister Society, at Mt. Lebanon, which was possessed of a comfortable home; but in a few moments all was swept away by a devastating fire!

We feel a deep sympathy with our afflicted brethren and sisters, who through long years of toil and faithfulness, had built up comfortable homes for themselves and others; so suddenly swept away in the most inclement season of the year! An event, which must awaken heart-felt sorrow in all who are cognizant of the facts. Though suffering be our portion, and gloomy the day that hangs over us, with renewed diligence, let us toil on hopefully—humbly and prayerfully.

Harriet Bullard, Watervliet, N. Y.

"LET US APPLY OUR HEARTS UNTO WISDOM."

—O—

PROMPTED by feelings of grateful response, I dip my pen, and would give utterance to the deep emotions of my heart through this medium, that they may be lovingly conveyed by the same white-winged messenger that has borne so many choice and profitable words to me.

One has lately spoken of the benefit derived from the experience of others; so would I humbly acknowledge full appreciation of the truthful life-examples, and words of wisdom, given by those who have passed the devils winding ways—the snares and pitfalls that lie in the path of the youthful traveler.

Just here I am reminded of the vision of Theodore, the hermit of Teneriffe. Weary and worn he sat down to rest, and soon fell asleep. An angel appeared at his side, and said, "Lift up thine eyes." There arose before him a mountain. "This," said the angel, "is the Hill of Existence." At its base lay the ever blooming, flowery fields of childhood, thronged with the gay and sportive; all of whom were under the direct guardianship of innocence. When she yielded the control of those who had outgrown her charge, Reason and Religion were ready, as sure guides, to lead in the upward advance; but many had, at this period, grown impatient of control, and sought out by and forbidden paths, which led to precipices, caverns, impenetrable thickets, and dangerous ways, and in these ways were seen groups of pigmies (Habits), who carried with them chains, which they imperceptibly twined around those who trespassed on their ground, until they fell victims to their power. Then there was great lamentation on the part of some, who beheld, in the distance, those who had submitted to guidance, and traveled the straight path, happy, untrammelled and free.

Obedience to God's laws impressed upon our being, and a forward advance in the direct line of duty, regardless of the syren's song, or fancy's fitful call in opposite directions, is most assuredly the only means of attaining permanent happiness and continual enjoyment.

Many truthful lessons have been given by sages and seers of the past and present, from which those who seek the pearls of wisdom, rather than the destructive charms of wickedness, will draw morals that shall prove beneficial in educating them aright.

The greatest gifts of soul and mind are a cultivated conscience, and an enlightened reason. Ah! here is a great point of weakness with young people who are not acting upon that "grand principle," so beautifully illustrated in a late number of our little paper. In a lukewarm condition of conscience—the supreme judge of our actions—natural tendencies and feelings gain the ascendancy, and the individual too often claims pity, charity and sympathy, for his or her shortcomings, and willful violations of law, order and right, when, in reality, a sharp reproof is needed to arouse the delinquent from abnormal conditions which have arisen from thoughts and feelings averse to purity and truth.

"Better is the reproof of a friend than the kiss of an enemy." There is an enemy, strong and subtle, that entwines the human soul like a slimy serpent. It is the filthiness of the flesh. It clings to humanity with the caresses of its polluting influence—clouding, with thick darkness, conscious reason—and stifling beneath the velvety cloak of its fallacious arts, God-given conscience! Under its control, souls pander to low loves and desires, till they come to the condition of which Auger speaks. "There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet are not washed from their filthiness." Again, "There is a generation, O, how lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up." O that young people might turn the tide of life in the channel of purity, and learn from the wise and the unwise as they journey along, ever remembering that,

"From purity of thought, all pleasure springs;
And from an humble spirit, all our peace."

Self-denial is the key-note to endless harmonies. It strengthens every chord to the "harp of a thousand strings;" while self-indulgence, with its counteraction, destroys its sweetest music.

We all admire a perfect form, a vigorous intellect, and a pure, genial spirit; these combine to complete the model man or woman. How are they attainable? Under present imperfect organic conditions—the result of disobedience to moral and physical law through successive generations—a perfected being seems beyond possibility. But shall we broaden the chasm that separates the two extremes, or, by self-denial, retace lost ground, and keep the grand ideal ever before us—by being self-disciplinarians? The sooner an individual begins the work the better. The promise of the Spirit is, "They that seek me early shall find me." It is this determinate seeking after truth, in early life, and a practical application of the same in building up character, that results in a strong and beautiful manhood and womanhood.

To require the indulgences of old age, while yet in youth, is to sap the roots of the tree of life, whose early growth should give promise of future usefulness. Who languishes in middle age, and seeks to shirk the burdens and responsibilities they should bear? He or she, who, in early life, sought out self-pleasing ways, and built not on the rock of self-discipline. Now, every breeze that blows seems like a tempest; they cannot breast the billows; but seek some easy place, where they can be shielded by the strong towers of righteousness. Such are not fitted as leaders for the battling hosts who follow after; neither have they strength to give to those whose right it is to ask.

Now ye who journey up the hill of time,
Be firm every step you climb;
Keep the straight path, nor ever turn aside,
While purity and truth your footsteps guide,
Heed the experience of the wise and true,
And blessings to the end shall follow you.

Martha J. Anderson, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

PARASITES.

—O—

WE wonder, sometimes, whether the admirers of the idea, that man is as a tree, while woman is best represented as a clinging vine, have sought for the wisdom as well as beauty of the arrangement. To any who have ever attempted to remove from a valuable and thrifty tree, a vine, which seemed bent on taking full possession, the experience must have been suggestive. Tendrils, which once were soft and pliable, have become like rings of steel, and in every direction, are girdling the limbs with such tenacity, that as the tree grows, they almost cut into its marrow, and thus, by preventing the flow of its life juices, are hastening it on to certain destruction.

Are they not parasites, or too near akin to them? Mutually enfeebling each other, instead of blessing—while if the vine could have been, by favoring circumstances, provided with a suitable trellis, where it could have luxuriated in the sunshine and air—the natural life and stimulus of all God's animal and vegetable creation—rich and luscious fruits might have crowned both their lives.

"Created upright"—by leaving, and thus losing the individuality she should have retained, she has not only failed to develop her own powers, and those of her supporter, but dwarfed her own strength and womanhood, beyond the ability for present uprightness. She must have time to put on the solid growth, which comes of healthy, harmonious conditions, ere she rises to her true glory and usefulness.

E. H. Webster, Ayer, Mass.

TITHE OFFERING.

—O—

I WOULD make a Tithe offering to our little "Monthly" which is again before me. Its pages are well filled with words of wisdom, calculated to give strength, hope and encouragement, to all who are striving to concentrate, in their lives and characters, those principles which will practically benefit them.

selves, and bring the greatest amount of good to the human race.

Through this little messenger, I feel inspiration; and I bless all who are willing to employ their pens to advocate, and show their devotion to the noble cause of Truth; and through self-denial and holy-living, to uphold its standard, and bear aloft its shining lamp, to light the pathway of those who are seeking a way out of the theological errors of the past.

I would welcome all Messengers, who bring, to our understanding, the new truths of the present day, and point us to the living increase of the future, which we honor, and give credence to the true and good, anterior to the present. I realize, that if we would be elevated from earthly conditions, into true spiritual life, it must be accomplished by a growth from the old into the new; to find an abiding with the pure, and an increase in all that is true.

I give thanks, that through the providence of God, I was permitted to hear the Gospel call, and was made a willing subject; that I accepted the invitation to come out from the world—forsake the ties and relationship there formed,—and to consecrate myself, body, soul and spirit, as a true Believer in Christ, and live the angel life. As a reward, I have found spiritual fathers and mothers, and brothers and sisters, that I love with that kind of love, which will endure when earthly loves shall have passed away.

To them, I am indebted for strength when I was weak; for comfort when afflicted. They have guided my footsteps, on the heavenly journey, to me, have broken the bread of life, and given of their spiritual treasures. In humility, I will seek to be worthy of such love, by living the true life. This can only be attained by a watchful, prayerful spirit, guarding the avenues of the heart, closely interrogating the motives which lead to action; and in all the intercourse and relations of life have our influence such as will leave an impress for good, and not evil. In this way, we may return blessing for blessing—love for love—and by obedience, add to our faith every Gospel virtue.

Louisa Green, Canaan, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR ELDESS ANTOINETTE:

It is the commencement of a new era; and I wish to tender to you my heartfelt thanks for your faithful labors, especially, for helping to keep our little missionary craft afloat, and in sailing order to bear its precious freight over the troubled waters of life amid adverse winds and conflicting elements, to each destined port.

I realize that your duties are many, and onerous; and I pray that good Angels may continue to lend their aid, and that those who are still in the form, may be ready and willing to extend a helping hand, in every time of need.

Were I young, and possessed of ability, I would not fail to contribute my share for its support. Now that I have felt the scorching summer suns, and the wintry frosts of more than four score years, it is but little that I can do, except to bless, and pray that the work may prosper and be sustained—that millennial light may shine through our missionary medium—the paper, sent from Mt. Lebanon, as a white winged dove, to bear good tidings. Had I the strength of a host, I would give it freely to the glorious work. I see that light increases rapidly; and I sometimes almost wish to be rejuvenated, that I might take an active part in the labor which the present day demands; for I see beautiful fields fast ripening for the sickle, and there will be need of reapers. May God strengthen the hands of those now in the field, and send more laborers, who will be able and willing to do their whole duty, is the prayer of your aged friend and sister in the Gospel of Christ.

I would not wish any to act the part of Ahimaaz—run without tidings—or before they are sent; but as a lover of truth, I would ask all of Zion's daughters to not give their minds, too much, to matters of less importance, to the neglect of weighty labors, and duties which lie before us. Let us all guard against inaction, and be willing to sacrifice every selfish motive, and work unreservedly, with unity of purpose in the one great cause of religious freedom. Oneness of action is essential to success, in any cause.

While we are emerging from seas of conflicting elements and ideas, which surround us on every side, let us keep in solid phalanx, as much as possible—keep a compact body and always try to preserve the unity of the spirit. Then we shall have great strength, that will enable us to perform the work needful to be done in our day and time.

Progression and Conservation are two tending forces. The former is sometimes exposed to force the wheels, and cause them to roll with too much velocity; while the latter, strives to clog, and hold them back! If an equilibrium can be reached, and harmony preserved, it will be a desirable blessing. A great responsibility rests upon the progressive portion of the community, and weighty moral obligations must also rest upon their opponents. They, who, from selfish motives, would impede the progress of individuals, or society, commit a great wrong.

Then, let us unite in prayer, that Wisdom may guide the helm, and bear our bark over the dark waters of theological conflicts and errors, into the sea of love, and help us to anchor firmly in truth that never can be shaken.

I realize that my stay in time must be short, and I feel grateful to my Gospel friends, for kindly greetings, and for the love which I often receive from them. It shall stimulate and nerve me to more earnest devotion. When I pass on to the other side of the river, I expect to continue the work I have commenced here until perfect victory is attained.

Lovingly—yours,

Eunice Bathrick, Ayer, Mass.

DISPENSATION.

Three Dispensations of Spiritual Order

Were minus the female, therein;

She, who was given to man for a help-meet,

'Twas said, "led from God unto sin."

If woeful transgression was in the beginning,

And blighted, our first parents fell—

Were driven from Eden, because of their sinning—

Then earth, echoes back the death knell.

Sin begot sorrow, envy and malice,

And sin unto murder gave birth;

Cain hated his brother, and vengefully slew him,

And there was confusion on earth.

Yet many were righteous, for that dispensation,

True typical men of their day;

As Noah, and Abraham, Lot, Isaac and Jacob,

And Enoch, with God, walked their way.

Joseph was cruelly sold into Egypt,

But quickly arose to a ruler's estate;

While those who had sold him, with hearts void of pity,

Bought then for their children, a slavery great.

An inhuman law cast a babe on the water;

The son of a Levite was he;

From death he was rescued by king Pharaoh's

daughter,

Thus foiling the royal decree.

Time, and events, brought the Lord's visitation;

Signs and great wonders appear,

Moses, and Aaron took administration,

And woman remained in the rear.

Israel was groaning beneath heavy burdens,

Their God saw them sorely distressed,

Ransomed his people from Egyptian bondage,

And smitten were those who oppressed.

For their deliverance, all Israel shouted,

Glorious the Lord and his ways!

While Miriam went forth with her timbrels, not doubting

The Lord's ear would list to her praise.

Thus joyful in freedom, the women with timbrels

Now danced on the banks of the sea;

Signal their victory; but one is more glorious,

When by it from sin we are free.

Moses, in meekness fulfilled his high calling;

Yet once he offended his God;

Therefore, ne'er entered the fair land of promise

Altho' he beheld it abroad.

Moses departing, left Joshua ruling,

And Israel was blest in that day;

This dynasty ended with spirits ungrateful,

All Israel from God turned away.

Sad, sad the event; they were sold into bondage.

And were by the Gentiles depraved;

When woman arose, and made mighty efforts,

'Till from woeful distress they were saved.

Deborah, — prophetess, — judging in Israel,

A mother to Israel became, —

Sought out a plan — and delivered her children,

A type of the Mother we claim.

Yearly a feast of the Lord was in Shiloh.

And many glad virgins there came;

Joyful in dances, the latter-day virgins,

Dance as the prophets proclaim.

Thus, passed generations, one after another,

With seers both gifted and bold,

The Psalmist — propetic — in sweetest of numbers

Of Bride, and of Bridegroom, foretold.

Thou wast anointed above all thy fellows,

With oil of true gladness and joy;

On thy right, stood the Queen, in bright gold of

Ophir,

And free from the earth's base alloy.

Consider, O Daughter! forget thine own people,

The house of thy father forsake!

And to this injunction the daughter was loyal,

All ties with her kindred to break.

For greatly the King shall desire thy beauty,

He is thy Lord, worship thou him;

Wrought gold, is the robe, of the King's royal

daughter,

And she is all glorious within!

And unto the King — in needle-work raiment —

Are virgin companions brought, too —

And now in the palace of sacred fruition,

All things are presented anew.

Look not to thy fathers, but now to thy children;

For princes on earth they shall be;

Thou shalt be remembered through all generations

And praises be rendered to thee.

The Lord our righteousness, she shall be called,

As prophets were free to declare;

Judah be saved and Jerusalem dwell safely

A ruler of Justice be there.

Thus saith the Lord, I will shake every nation

The desire of all nations be one;

Also a day, which shall burn as an oven,

And then shall arise healing sun.

Sing, sing and rejoice, O Daughter of Zion!

For I, saith the Lord, dwell with thee!

And thou art the Branch, in the holy temple

And in counsel of Peace thou shalt be.

Fear not, O thou mother, embrace thou thy children!

Abide till thy quietness come;

Fear not thou good nurse, by the wells of salvation

My hand shall establish thy home.

Hannah A. Agnew, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

A THOUGHT.

If goodness be beauty, 'tis ours to create;
Through pleasure and duty, in Church, or in State
Good morals—good manners,—good influence control,

Which give to life vigor, and beauty to soul.

One talent, first given, we have no excuse,

For earth or for heaven, if not put to use.

One lone seed, the acorn, brings forth the great Oak;

One word fitly spoken will lighten a yoke.

The germ for a science, the bud for a flower,

Have first small beginnings, and deep hidden power;

Tick, tick, and this ticking, time's length

march shows;

Think, think, and by thinking, the human mind grows.

Life, breath, and all motion have pulsation small;

Drops make up the ocean, and atoms earth's ball;

And as we contemplate body and soul,

We find them but atoms in one perfect whole.

CONSECRATION.

THE varied vocations to which those are called, whose labors and interests support the isolated relationships of the natural order, — even in the most legitimate manner, are merely tithe-offering to the Supreme Being, who is Love and Harmony, in their broadest, deepest meaning. All the obligations of that relationship are ever in conflict with the expansion of soul, which reaches upward to God, and outward to humanity — which would enlarge its sphere to a universal brotherhood, for which all private interests must be renounced.

As the volcanic fire, that silently, yet persistently, continues its dissolving work beneath the crust of earth steadily gathers force, then bursts forth with resistless power, often producing great changes in the surrounding surface — so we perceive, by glances over history's pages, that the power of Religion has been as a vital fire in the human heart; for a time, quietly operating within, changing, disuniting, and melting the carved images of the mind, the iron bands of creed — then, with accumulated force, breaking through the crust that theological and political organizations have formed over the soul — effecting upheavals and revolutions in the world of thought. Thus change succeeding change, wrought through the suffering witnesses for truth, has ushered in the dawn of the Millennium.

The records of the past century acquaint us with the time and events of the organization of a new religious system — based on principles of eternal progress, in which God might have a people dwelling in a superior relationship, — wherein tithe-offering would give place to full consecration of the whole being to His service, for the blessing of humanity, in a life free from all bands that fetter the soul, or cause any compromise with selfish interests.

A prophet, of olden time, alluded to a day that should be as the light of seven days; a beautiful illustration of the consummation of the Gospel work, when the "seven seals" shall have been opened, and the "seven thunders" shall have uttered their voices, through progressive mediums of truth. The first thunder — Virgin Purity and Community of Interest — has rolled through the heavens with mighty power! and they, whose consciences and aspirations were quickened for the higher life, cheerfully obeyed its voice, and found the baptism of Christ-Love, through which they were directed to establish a beautiful Consecrated Home — to lay the foundation of the work of human redemption — by, and through a decisive testimony against a carnal life, that was their mission and their toil.

Those, first called to that work, have been reaped, by the sickle of Time, to their spirit home; but they still live; and, united with other spiritually progressed souls of a corresponding order, there seek to inspire those who inherit the fruition of their labors, and to perpetuate with increase, the truths to which their lives were dedicated.

Only through consecration and sacrifice has truth been attained, and placed on the altar of service, as a blessing to posterity; and thus may we become the recipients and ministers of increasing degrees, that not only draw closer the reins of self-discipline, but give souls corresponding liberty.

Violated law places human beings in bondage to many diseases and abnormal appetites; at present, a condition almost universal. To understand and remove the causes of these, seems highly important, as an underlying and preceding work of future progress. Do we not need aid from the heavens, to accomplish this? — the vivid lightnings to awaken slumbering energies, and the voice of a Second Thunder, in testimony against those transgressions of physiological law, to which multitudes are victims?

We are debtors to our predecessors; and it remains for us, who are in the strength of youth, to reach forward for their ministrations, that we may extend the work which they so nobly began, and make our Consecration a blessing to ourselves, and to others.

Catharine Allen, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

CURBED be the spirit that would dauntless be, in the fierce strife of crushing out the truth — the light of age, the guiding star of youth — the priceless pearl of life and liberty. Dark would be earth, had truth no victory won; still dull monotonous would beat her round, while spirits wrapt in stolid sense profound, would, like the glacier, coldly spurn the sun. Then shine, O glorious truth! forever bright; pursue thy course even to the nether sphere, till Superstition's altars disappear, and error quails, and cowers in trembling fear; till love of right displaces rule of wrong, and in thy triumph earth is filled with light. TREES OF LIFE.

(Rev. 22, 1.)

"He showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb."

This river was Truth—abstract Truth. On either side of the river, a tree of life, bearing fruit; and "the leaves of the tree, on one side, were for the healing of the nations, and there shall be no more curse."

The Natural and Spiritual Orders are here set forth in a vivid and very striking manner. First, the Natural, or Reproductive Order—now under so much curse—is to be healed, and the curse removed.

All truth, thereto pertaining, will be in practical operation, creating a millennial state. Over-population, Famine, War, Prostitution of life powers, Physical disease, Poverty, and mental infirmities shall cease to be. Like Moses, the people shall become servants of God. Faithful in all the household of nature, on the earth plane, they will sing the song of Moses—truth, in all things relating to the body.

They shall see the God of generation, face to face. Man and Woman, being equal in legislation, will observe the true Sexual laws, protected by Statute, in the New Earth. The Land will be held by government, for the benefit of the people.

To live, all must eat, and food can come only from the land. So shall all who eat, labor, and not consume the food of other people. Peace and Plenty will abound—there being no more curse.

On the opposite side of the river of Truth—of Life—will be the Spiritual Tree of Life—the Resurrection Order. In this Order are the pure in heart, who see God—the God of celibacy—Christ Spirits. Jesus saw Him and Her. Their life is cut off from the earth. They neither look, nor think, upon the opposite Sex, to desire them in physical reproduction.

These see Christ, face to face, and His and Her character is written in their foreheads, and throughout their whole physical system. Like Christ Angels, their sexual relation is purely Spiritual. Their Lord and God give them Light, and they shall reign forever—not over the lusts of the flesh and mind only, but over the generative life itself. Pure Truth, from the Heaven of Heavens—the inner Seventh Sphere—the esse of creation—will flow to them continually.

Christ, the Lord God of the holy Prophets, sent his Angel, one of the ancient Prophets, to John, to reveal to him a view of the two Orders, of which, the Prophets and Prophetesses, of all nations, had spoken, under various types and symbols—that Truth would become incarnated upon Earth—the Kingdom of God would come, in which the will of God would be done upon Earth, as in the Christ Heaven.

These two Orders will balance each other. Depopulating agencies will be no longer needful.

Natural increase, in the Earthly Order will be held in check by the rational faculty, which will deter a human pair, from conferring life, unless that life be a blessing.

And the Spiritual Order will balance the reproductive principle, by celibacy. Truth will come, whose right it is to reign. Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of Spiritual Life—Life, eternal, as the Throne of God. Was ever more beautiful vision presented to human soul? A pure river of water of life, flowing down from the Throne of God, through the mouth of all the Prophets and Seers, since the world began, coming into holy souls, who will receive truth, in the love of truth.

UNBORN POETRY.

—O—

There is a river that makes glad the City of our God.

PASSING over the river is not to die, With outstretched limbs in state to lie.
For as a man thinketh so is he, In time or in Eternity.

To die is a change that none forego, The Peasant, the King, the friend and foe, go hastening on in weal and woe, to the land of Ghosts, which none may know.

Know as we know the things of earth, In manhood, youth, and back to birth, Mystery of mysteries From the beginning! Why do we live, love? Why keep on sinning? Where did we come from? Whither go we, Men, Women and Children, Bond and free?

To die is not to pass over the river, for still we live—live on forever.

But there is a river that never's dry, That none may pass over until they die, Die to the life that reproduces, The race of man without abuses.

The end has come, the summer is ended. The harvester, Death, with life is blended. Life—Eternal Life, From the throne of God, The Lamb was the first, the first who trod The banks of that river, The river of God. Ed.

A PROTEST.

—O—

How are we going to sustain morality enough for a foundation to build the principles of Christianity upon?

It is now twenty-four years since I first imbibed the principles of a Shaker life. In that time there have been over one hundred children brought into our Society with the expectations of making members, adopting the faith and principles of a Christian life. And to-day, out of that number I count four males and ten females; the balance have turned again to seek Esau's portion.

The question arises, What is the cause? The response must be, a greater love for sen-suity than for a life of Virgin Purity. And shall the responsibility rest upon the parents for the low state of morals? A question which can easily be answered by one who has had much deal with children. Jesus said by the Fruit the tree is known. And so it is in the work of generation. Parents, who violate the Order of nature, in a total disregard to times and seasons, in their work of generation, must expect the fruit brought forth will be of a disorderly character—dwarfs, deformed, sensual and may be devilish, to the degree that they have allowed their lower passions to rule and govern them, in the work of generation. Corrupted and abused as those functions are, they are still supported and maintained by professors of Christianity, by legal ceremony under the name of divine institution. Where is the evidence that the nature of the act is purified, or the shame taken away by such means? For although the Most Reverend and pious divines may exert all their piety and all their divinity to gospelize it in their sermons—legalize it in their marriage ceremonies—sanctify it by their fervent prayers—they can neither take away the shame of the act nor purify the nature of it.

Not long since I heard a woman state, in public assembly, the following.

Placing herself between a company of Shakers and a company that were not of our faith, she said: "I have been thinking, since I came here, If Jesus Christ should rise up among us and draw the dividing line, which side he would choose for His followers?"

"These friends clad in a plain uniform dress manifest the spirit that actuates them."

"The dress I have on is not one of my own choice. I would choose to dress differently. It was imposed upon me contrary to my feelings. But you know, sisters (addressing those of her own life), the scorn heaped upon any one that dares to be out of fashion is enough to crush a body. This is my first visit. I came yesterday from the City of New York—the Great Babylon, where the ministers are to-day discussing the social question in terms of greatest smoothness and soft words, so as not to offend the delicacy of their hearers. I'll tell you how it is, friends. Many that you see decked in so gay attire are too poor to pay for those dresses, and so they sell their bodies to get what they call Pin money." Then turning to the males, she said: "You men (brothers) make laws against Adultery, and then hire your sisters to break them." This is but a short clause of the words uttered, that seemed like awful truths. And I would that all could have heard them, who are still pleading for carnal gratification on the animal plane.

As we live a celibate life—A life of Virgin Purity—as a matter of necessity we draw, from you, material to sustain our institution. And, dear friends, we want something besides animals to be our successors, to hand down to mankind this heavenly gospel treasure that we hold so dear in our hearts—A life Of Virgin Purity. In love.

SWEDISH LETTER.

—O—

Beloved Elder FREDERICK:

I feel very much indebted to your ability and sacrificing spirit. Pray, accept my humble contribution as a member of a little over two years, drawn on by the spirit of religious communism, that does favor the downfall of aristocratic principles, which comprise all evils. Luxury, the murderer of real happiness—ignorance, indolence, idleness and slothfulness, as co-operators, predominate.

Shaker—Soldier of the crusade of the present century—teach—learn the worldling how to subdue the love of money—Mammon—the seducer of honest men, women and children. Shaker, make them acquainted, first of all, with crusader's discipline—a requirement of male and female, that they may understand that there is a certain standard of intelligence to be obtained by being obedient to Orders, essentially necessary to be maintained—as Elder William Reynolds says—a solid ground to stand on. Some libertines object to it, calling it absolutism. Nature, itself, is absolute. Time is absolute—therefore, we must have Law—Liberty—God.

Often, I ask myself, Where are you? Among Godly people—or in the serpent's or lion's den?

I care nothing for such a bugbear as anathema and outlawry of a narrow-minded christian professor, a mere pretender, but look upon time as an empty field, wherein nothing good will grow itself. We must, first of all, till and build up, with our own hands and muscles, and whatever we then sow, in that field, we will, with God's aid, then reap. In that field pray—in that field work, and the heavenly blessing will join to labor—and if God be with us, who will be against us?

O, ye wicked ones! tiresome it is to you, through care and labor, to gain your daily bread, that you may live comfortably! Well, then, meet the evil of the time, with the prudence of the wise. Learn to spare, and you will be rich. Learn to be modest with little, and you will observe abundance. Learn to be saving in housekeeping, with what we earn ourselves, and we will never be in pressing wants. But how? Is it hard for us to dispense with certain indulgences? Are we servants to our palates? slaves to our comforts? O, if we cannot break such fetters then are we worthy of only slave wages—worthy to sink into poverty and reproach.

No one will save us, if we do not want to save ourselves, and we, ourselves, will feel it. Our consciences will tell us that. If we don't deny ourselves, we ignore wisdom—we cannot be christians.

True wisdom is in God—comes from God—leads to God—and rests in God. Wisdom makes friends of God. Where wisdom turns in, there is God. Wisdom and Love have Their Habitation. May they inspire and comfort you. Your Brother, in spirit of sympathy and love.

Carl G. Audler, South Union, Ky.

MEDIATORIAL CONFESSION.

—O—

"HE that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy." From whom does man seek to cover his sins? Surely not from Him unto whose eyes "all things are naked and open," but from his fellow mortals.

If the private deeds of a person's life will not bear the scrutiny of a righteous man or woman, who lives innocently before God and mankind, how will they come to Him whose presence is a consuming fire to all iniquity—to Him who dwelleth in the light which no man can see nor approach unto, and retain a carnal life within him?

Would not such feel as did the children of Israel when they said to Moses "Let us not hear again the voice of the Lord our God, neither let us see His great fire any more. Speak thou with us and we will hear, but let not God speak with us lest we die." And the Lord said to Moses "They have spoken well. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their Brethren, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him."

Accordingly, Jesus testified "The Father gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak, and I know that His commandment is life everlasting. Whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." This faithful witness taught "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved," or made manifest.

This is confirmed by tracing the effect of transgression. There was first a sense of shame or guilt; next a desire to conceal their shame from each other; and third a desire to hide from the light of their superior, which would make manifest or reprove their sin. This is history, not only of the first pair in Eden, but of all their posterity to this day. Hence, when the light and knowledge of "the beginning" (termed the Ancient of Days because it is the light of the most ancient principles which existed before all things created) is revived and received in the soul, it first reproves or convicts it of sin; and the first step that can be taken to regain union with God is to voluntarily remove the covering by honestly bringing all sin to the light of God in His witnesses (whose works are wrought in and of the light, or they cannot be true witnesses), with a firm resolution to forsake them forever. This destroys the false covering of hypocrisy by which the enemy tries to hide, not only from others but from ourselves also. For souls to rehearse their evil deeds shamelessly, without desire for repentance, to comrades or confederates is not confession, but only adding darkness to darkness.
